I can especially commend the sketch in this work of Napoleon's administrative and domestic policy; it is admirably complete, narrow as are its limits. In the first months of the First Consul's rule, France was lifted out of financial bankruptcy; the feud between Church and State was, in some degree, healed; and most of the émigrés were wisely amnestied. Yet these statesmanlike measures were but a foretaste of the far-reaching and noble reforms that followed. Napoleon, no doubt, did not rise to the highest conception of the estate of man: he had no sympathy with freedom in the truest sense; his idea of government was that of the benevolent despots, who Mr. Stephens thinks, were failures. But it may well be questioned whether, in 1800-14, France was really fit for national liberty, and the benefits conferred on her by her great ruler were immense. But for Napoleon, indeed, it is not improbable that the good the Revolution bore in its train would have been altogether lost for mankind: the equality before the law, the liberation of the soil, and the establishment of religious freedom, were finally assured by his master hand; and he was at once the champion of order and the stern foe of anarchy. The great measures, too, which were especially his own, mark him out as a splendid creative genius: the Concordat probably saved religion in France; the Code will send him down to the remotest ages; his whole administrative system, if too highly centralised, was a marvel of vigorous and successful energy; and his work, in all that relates to domestic affairs, has stood the infallible test of time. It is unnecessary to dwell on the noble public works which remain monuments of the glories of his reign. They still attract the admiration of mankind from the banks of the Seine to the Alps and the Po; and it is simply astonishing that, in an age of corruption, laxity, and disorder at home, he should have had ministers of the very highest order and a singularly efficient public service. Nor can it be forgotten—this, indeed, is one of Napoleon's titles to world-wide renown—that he extended the blessings he bestowed on France to a considerable part of the old Europe he subdued. His sword was a scourge, yet brought healing with it; in Italy and Germany he put feudalism down, destroyed unjust privileges, diffused equal laws, and raised humanity to a higher level; and his name is still held in reverence by the very races trodden under the feet of his conquering legions.

The Congress of Vienna and its arrangements are clearly and fully described in this work; but it is useless to comment on the vain attempt of old Europe to quench the spirit of the age, and to oppose weak barriers to the march of humanity. Mr. Stephens has well pointed out the general results for the estate of man of the great era of trouble and war, of which he has graphically traced the outlines; but his views are, perhaps, too optimistic; they should, to a certain extent, be qualified. The age of benevolent despots has passed away; the maxim of Joseph and of Napoleon, "Everything for the people and nothing by it," no longer limits the counsels of statesmen; and nations, in these days, are supposed to be allowed to work out their own destinies. Yet, when we survey Prussia, Austria, and even France, we see that self-government, in a real sense, and political liberty are largely mere phrases; military autocracy and a strict administrative régime have, to a considerable degree, replaced the effete feudalism and the paternal government which were characteristic of the eighteenth century. If nationality, too, and all that it implies—a principle that grew out of the French Revolution, and especially out of the wars of Napoleon—is a dominant force in modern politics, it deserves peculiar notice that this powerful impulse has not been successful through its unaided efforts; it has only triumphed when directed from above by statesmen who knew how to turn it to account. It was not Mazzini and his spouters who set Italy free, but Cavour and Napoleon III.; the unity of Germany, such as it is, was the work of Bismarck with his "blood and iron," and not of dreaming "shriekers" at Frankfurt; and Kossuth would have done little for Hungary had not Francis Joseph been taught by adversity. The destruction of privilege, of caste, of exclusiveness, and a large extension of personal freedom, have certainly been generally seen in Europe since the era of 1789 opened. But against these advantages must be set the frightful blood tax of military service, an oppressive burden on the humbler classes from the Niemen to the verge of Brittany; and there is much in the existing social order of the Continent restrictive of true liberty. If the age of the French Revolution, and of the wars that followed, has on the whole contributed to the good of mankind, it has also been attended with many evils—military rule on a scale more large than before, the prevalence of mere brute force in politics, uneasiness and unrest in the frame of society, and a fear of Jacobinism and kindred movements. I am not confident that history will describe the second half of the nineteenth century as a much happier and more golden era than the eighteenth, which it is the fashion to decry.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

Milton's Prosody. By Robert Bridges. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

MR. BRIDGES' book is an important one, certainly the most important on its subject that has yet appeared; but, though it is many months since it was published, it has not received the attention which it undoubtedly demands. This may be partly due to the delay of the Clarendon Press in issuing the ordinary edition—large-paper copies only are at present obtainable—partly, no doubt, to diffidence among reviewers for a somewhat difficult subject.

English prosody has long been a battleground of the critics; and yet, one may safely say, they have invented ten times as many difficulties as they have ever elucidated, if they have elucidated any. Those who have puzzled over laborious works like that of Guest will be astonished to find in Mr. Bridges' slender volume almost all their difficulties easily and delightfully vanishing. Indeed, the author seems at times to fear that his readers will distrust his lucidity; for, after explaining why Milton, in his "Samson," need not have troubled himself about the scansion at all, he adds: "But this seems too simple to be understood." Yet perusal of the whole volume convinces one that English prosody is really much more simple and reasonable a thing than we have been told to believe. Probably, if the present treatise had been written, say, early in the eighteenth century, and had created a sound tradition, we should have been spared many superfluous volumes, and be much more in the way of appreciating what is fine in rhythm. As it is, the pernicious traditions of Pope and the doctrine of "smooth and correct numbers" tyrannise still, if not over poets, over critics and scholars; and ears, which delighted in the natural free rhythms of nursery rhymes, are so sophisticated by school training that numbers of cultivated people find Milton's most wonderful effects "rough," call any divergence from the normal line "incorrect," take terms like Elision literally, and read poetry precisely as they would scan it. This is nothing short of barbarous. Needless to say, it is the precise opposite of Mr. Bridges' attitude.

There are, on the other hand, some who object to all such works as the present, on the ground that they are unprofitable, that those who have ears do not need them, and that they will not convince those who have not. To them Mr. Bridges himself supplies an answer.

"Most persons," he says, "will accept or reject a rhythm to which they are unaccustomed, according as they perceive, or think they perceive, its structure. This attitude towards beauty of any kind is not the best; . . . my undertaking, however, in this particular case, is to indulge it."

One may add, too, that those best able to appreciate Milton's verse will find Mr. Bridges' book anything but superfluous. Study of the technique of so great a master of rhythm as Milton, the greatest in our language, perhaps in any, cannot fail to be interesting. It should also be salutary. The present generation is in no danger of studying Milton overmuch; if it were, it could hardly, for instance, accept the late Laureate's blank verse as of sterling quality, much less as of extraordinary merit. Therefore, if only because he draws attention to Milton's consummate art, Mr. Bridges ought to be widely read: for nothing is better for the correction of false notions about an art, and the establishment of a right standard, than study of a master.

In the eight appendices to this volume there is much that throws light on the whole history of English Prosody; but Mr. Bridges tells us in his preface that his "intention throughout has been confined to Milton's verse . . ." and, he continues, "I have done little more than tabulate the simplest facts." Thus, the first portion of the book, which deals with "Paradise Lost," consists mainly of an account of the variations of the typical line which Milton allowed himself: that is, in the number of syllables, in the number of stresses, and in the position of the stresses. Many of the results which Mr. Bridges gets from his tabulation of the facts on these three points are both fresh and interesting; but space forbids me to cite them. As an illustration, however, let us take a familiar line:

"Burnt after them to the bottomless pit."

Guest accents it in this startling manner:

"Burnt after them: to the bottomless pit."

Mr. Lowell rejects it, and would insert "down" before "to"! Mr. Bridges does not seem to quote the line; but to him it would merely present a case of two inversions of the stress (in the first and fourth feet), and two failures of the stress (in the second and third); and, as his examples show, Milton inverts as well as omits the stress in all the five places possible in a line.

Here, too, Mr. Bridges earns our gratitude by discountenancing the distorted pronunciations long presumed in cases of unusual rhythm—e.g.,

"Which of us who beholds the bright surface," which it has been customary to read with surface accented on the last, and thus take away that beauty of strangeness which the verse seems written to create.

The examination of "Paradise Regained" shows that Milton "approved of the great rhythmical experiments he had made, and extended these"; while in "Samson Agonistes" we have Milton's "most elaborate and artificial versification." Mr. Bridges prefaces his account of "Samson" with some admirable remarks:

"It is not less than an absurdity to suppose that Milton's carefully-made verse could be unmusical; on the other hand, it is easy to see how the far-sought effects of the greatest master in any art may lie beyond the general taste. In rhythm this is specially the case; while almost everybody has a natural liking for the common fundamental rhythms, it is only after long familiarity with them that the ear grows dissatisfied and wishes them to be broken; and there are very few persons indeed who take such a natural delight in rhythm for its own sake that they can follow with pleasure a learned rhythm which is very rich in variety, and the beauty of which is its perpetual freedom to obey the sense and diction."

If such persons be very few, however, there must be many who would get a new insight into Milton's "far-sought effects" from such stimulative and suggestive interpretation as the treatment of the opening of first chorus, pp. 42-43. As to the general structure of the verse in "Samson," Mr. Bridges says:

"If all the lines of falling rhythm (so-called trochaic) be separated from the rest—and there are only 19 in all the 1758—it will be found that the whole of the poem, with those exceptions, is composed in rising rhythm, of regular dissyllabic feet (so-called iambs), with free liberty of inversions, and weak places, and 'elisions,' and extrametrical syllables at the end of the line, all such as we found in 'Paradise Lost.' The whole of the 'dactylic' and 'trochaic' effects are got by the placing of the inversions, elisions, &c.; and where the 'iambic' system seems entirely to disappear, it is maintained as a fictitious structure and scansion, not intended to be read, but to be imagined as a time-beat on which the free rhythm is, so to speak, syncopated, as a melody."

Here is the core of the whole matter, and most persuasively set forth.

Of the interesting appendices to this book, there is only space for mention of two: that on Metrical Equivalence, and that on Greek Terminology. In these, light is shed upon some of the vexed questions of stress and quantity. Here are a few sentences:

"The fact is, our classical verse is a hybrid, and cannot be explained exclusively by English or by classical rule. . . . In Milton's verse the chief metrical rule is the number of syllables; yet it is plain that even here the stress is of at least equal importance, and asserts itself to decide every question, as soon as the syllabic limit is trifled with. In this respect the practice of Shakspeare is full of teaching; for as he threw off the syllabic trammels of his early style, he came to determine his rhythm by stress: and Milton did just the same in 'Samson Agonistes,' though he learnedly disguised his liberty by various artifices."

Again—

"The primary law of pure stressed verse is, that there shall never be a conventional or imaginary stress: that is, the verse cannot make the stress, because it is the stress that makes the verse."

And Mr. Bridges goes on to show that Coleridge, though he stated the laws of stress prosody in the preface to "Christabel," himself violated them in the poem by conventional stresses, e.g.,

"From her ken'nel beneath the ro'ck,
She maketh answer to' the clo'ck."

The same criticism must be passed on some of Matthew Arnold's poems in unrhymed metre. These pages are the more interesting because Mr. Bridges has himself given us many delightful examples of "stressed verse" in his Shorter Poems—in "The Dead Child," in "The Passer-By," in "London Snow." It is a characteristic of verse written in this prosody that it gives to each word its natural and proper value, enforcing often a beautiful epithet, or beautifying a common one, with a kind of caressing emphasis: witness "blue" in this line from a piece in Mr. Bridges' just published Book V. (of lyrics):

"Now ruddy are the elm-tops against the blue sky."

To quote once more from this appendix:

"When English poets will write verse governed honestly by natural speech-stress, they will . . . find open to them an infinite field of rhythm as yet untouched."

Certainly, if we are to develop and extend English prosody—and there are many signs of such a tendency abroad—this seems the right path to strike. Whitman felt the need for more plastic metres, but unfortunately found no better plan than that of giving them up altogether. Praises have been showered on Mr. Swinburne for the wonderful things he has done with verse; but his metres, especially in the hands of imitators, tend to develop a nightmare gallop, in which the delicate values of words are entirely lost. Mr. Bridges points out to us a far truer line of development, in which one may truly enjoy a "law of liberty." Let us hope that many poets will follow in the same path of progress!

LAURENCE BINYON.

Maxime du Camp's Literary Recollections.
(Remington.)

THE late M. Scherer, unless my memory deceives me, once said of these Recollections that he liked them without quite knowing why. And yet it would, I think, be possible, at no undue expense of ingenuity, to discover reasons for finding pleasure in the book. M. Maxime du Camp, if not a strikingly original and brilliant member of the guild of letters, was a conscientious craftsman. He had done his life's work industriously and well—had travelled, and studied, and observed, and written, and fought, had mingled with the literary men and artists of his time; and, best circumstance of all perhaps, he had lived on terms of close and almost brotherly intimacy with one who has left a mark, in strong lines, on the French literature of the middle of this century. Given general equity of judgment, fair insight, and a knowledge of the narrator's art, M. du Camp did not want materials for an interesting book of reminiscences.

Flaubert was, it need scarcely be said, the remarkable writer whom M. du Camp knew so intimately. They had been brought together in March, 1843, when both had just reached their majority, and M. du Camp, having sown some wild oats, was living the life of the literary aspirant in Paris, while Flaubert, under strong paternal compulsion, was studying law—for which, as his friend says, "he had no vocation." Here is Flaubert's portrait at that time:

"With his fair skin and delicate colouring, his soft, flowing hair, his broad-shouldered, tall figure, full beard of pale gold, large eyes grey as the sea, shaded by black eyebrows, his voice like the sound of a trumpet, his violent gestures and resounding laughter, he was like one of those young Gallic chieftains who resisted the advance of the Roman legions. . . . As he sat on the benches occupied by the students, his dress made him remarkable. Even as early as eight o'clock in the morning he always wore a black suit, with white gloves and cravat. Only long experience of Paris life, and our persistent ridicule, finally cured him of this practice, which made him look like the best man at a wedding."

Poor young giant! In the October of the same year (1843) epilepsy struck him down, and stood ever by his side, striking again and yet again to the end of his life. Should M. du Camp have revealed this terrible fact? Should he have allowed us all to look into the cupboard where the skeleton was concealed? Maupassant, speaking as Flaubert's disciple and admirer, thought not. He held that M. du Camp had had "an evil inspiration" when he let "the public" into the secret. But surely this is a strange position to be taken by one of the Naturalist school of writers. If "the many-headed beast" is to know anything at all about great men, it may as well know the truth. Why should the novelist alone be privileged to speak of things as they are? Is not the poor biographer to have his rights?

Here, indeed, the biographer takes his rights freely. It is no conventional portrait that M. du Camp draws of his friend. Not only does he tell us of the terrible disease by which Flaubert was afflicted, but he also attempts to deduce the effect which that disease exercised upon Flaubert's intellect. He shows us a Flaubert given to the most fearful denunciations, and yet inherently very gentle: a Flaubert, who, in his contempt for the bourgeois, often did the most childish and silly things: a Flaubert who, in his art, rigorously eschewed all sentiment, and yet in his life showed great power of affection and self-sacrifice. Occasionally, to tell the truth, I think M. du Camp exaggerates the weaknesses of the author of Madame Bovary. Thus, we are told that, during the war, this great despiser of the follies of men

"believed almost to the end in the free guerilla corps, in the 'avengers to the death'; he believed that all men are soldiers, and every mob an army; he believed in Glais-Bizoin and Crémieux; he believed in the proclamations; he believed in the 'balloon of deliverance'; he believed in 'the oath to conquer or die'; he believed that the retreats of our armies were only 'strategical movements'; he believed that Rouen would blow itself into the air rather than suffer the enemy to enter into its walls; he believed that Paris would never capitulate; he believed in the sorties that were to be as a 'flood overwhelming the besiegers'; he believed in the European intervention, in the arrival of the Americans, in the utter exhaustion of the Germans—he believed in everything, except defeat."

Now Flaubert may have entertained all these beliefs; but it is only fair to say that his letters to George Sand, written during the war, exhibit no such unreason.

Perhaps one of M. du Camp's most striking descriptions is that of Flaubert reading to him, and to Bouilhet, the first version of the Tentation de Saint-Antoine. Flaubert had devoted to this work time, study, labour, artistic enthusiasm, the best part of himself, for three long years; and during that period had foreborne to divulge either general scope or detached passages. When the book was completed, he read it to his two friends with a preliminary flourish, to the effect that, "if they did not make the welkin ring with the roarings of their enthusiasm, nothing would have power to move them!"

"The hours," says M. du Camp, "during which we listened in silence, Bouilhet and I—only exchanging a look now and again—while Flaubert was singing, modulating, chanting his sentences—those hours have remained in my mind as a very painful memory."

It became abundantly clear, as the reading progressed, that the whole thing was a mistake. The book—and the same remark applies, though in a somewhat modified degree, to the version published long years afterwards—the book was utterly amorphous. It had no central coherence, no unity. Situation followed situation, incident incident, episode episode, without any real progression. Nor did the character of the tempted and bewildered Saint afford the slightest central point of interest. He was not a Manfred, not even a Faust. He was the merest weakling, without the slightest "grit" or individuality. That the work contained passages of great power and beauty was almost a matter of course. But striking descriptions and pieces of harmonious prose do not make a book; and as they listened, hour after hour, sadly did M. du Camp and Bouilhet feel that all their friend's labour had been in vain.

Nor, though they rigidly kept silence, was it quite possible that Flaubert, however much intoxicated with the sound of his own rhetoric, should altogether ignore what was passing in their minds. "Now we will have it out together, we three!" he cried, at the midnight of the fourth day, as he turned over the last page of his manuscript. And then began a discussion, grim and great, which lasted far into the next morning, and to which Mme. Flaubert listened surreptitiously, through the closed doors, with poignant maternal interest. Poor Flaubert! all accounts, those of M. du Camp, of M. Zola, and others, agree in describing him as being, like Dickens's Boythorn, a man of thunderous argument, and inflated invective, whose reasons were volleyed, as it were, out of heavy guns. But here his explosive eloquence availed him little. It was in vain that he read passage on passage, saying, "You must at least admit that this is beautiful." Yes, the passages were beautiful, but the book was not a book; and as the night waned, and the next morning wore on, he had to admit himself beaten, and asked sadly: What am I to do? You say I have been hopelessly carried away by declamatory rhetoric; but to be borne on lyric wings is part of my nature: you deny my talent in its very essence. Not so, they replied, we only refuse to accept its exaggerations. Put yourself under severe discipline. Take a subject in which you will be compelled to feel, as you write, that all poetic exuberance would be out of place. Shortly afterwards, Flaubert began Madame Bovary.

Flaubert, more than any other personage, fills M. du Camp's stage, and so, in the above remarks, it is of Flaubert that I have mostly spoken. But M. du Camp brings many others on to the stage also—Gautier, the "Impeccable," Dumas, the inexhaustible, Lamartine, and scores besides. One cannot complain of him as an impresario. And his own figure, now, alas! to be studied in his books only, was assuredly not without interest.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

Labour and the Popular Welfare. By W. H. Mallock. (A. & C. Black.)

MR. MALLOCK would like to be, in England, at the end of the nineteenth century, after the Dock Strike and the Coal Strike, what Bastiat was in France, after July, 1830, and February, 1848. He has certain gifts in common with the French writer. He can use his pen with facility; and his powers of reasoning and illustration are of the same kind, not far removed even in degree. Like Bastiat, he seems to use his economics chiefly to draw therefrom, with undue haste, political conclusions comforting to the powers that be, and giving sanction to things as they are (p. 317).

His premises are founded partly on figures, partly on principles (some very old, some very new), explained and defined by him in a manner peculiar to himself. The figures are those of Mr. Giffen for the national income, as it now is, compared with those of last century's writers for their own times—times when there was no census, and when political arithmetic ruled in place of statistics. By such doubtfully comparable figures he disposes very rapidly of Mr. Henry George and the landlords. The rents of the landlords, especially of the few great landowners, are found to be a small proportion of the whole income, and a proportion which is steadily decreasing.

The employers do not quit his stage so soon. The main effort of the book is to show that "ability" is the great agent of production; and ability, on the whole, is represented by business income (pp. 229, 230), and is synonymous with the middle classes. "The causes of wealth are four—land, labour, capital, and ability," though the third and fourth are really one, capital being the offspring of ability and the instrument by which ability operates (Book II., chap. v., pp. 154-5). "Ability is to capital what mind is to the brain" (p. 153). Labour is an exertion that begins and ends with the separate task of one individual; ability is "a kind of exertion" which affects simultaneously the labour of an indefinite number of individuals. Skilled labour is not ability; it is even less communicable than ordinary labour (p. 149). Mudge's chronometer needed such skill to reproduce that the invention of it was practically valueless. Watt tried to train a generation of workmen to make true cylinders, on which the success of his steam engine depended. But Maude'sley's slide-rest (the offspring of "ability") secured the result at once (p. 186).

Now the men of labour are a large number, the men of ability a very small; yet the latter produce about two-thirds and the former only one-third of the national income (p. 167). There is no room then for any question of the workman's right to the entire product; the chief producer is the man of ability, who as a matter of fact, partly of equity (p. 331), partly under compulsion (p. 303), gives up to labour now far more than it ever produced (pp. 241, 242, 324). If interest is robbery, it is ability that is robbed, not labour (p. 263). The attention of Mr. William Morris should be called to this turning of the tables.

The men of ability having been in the past, and being still in the present, the great producers, and the national income having risen through them from 515 millions in 1843 to 1,700 millions in 1893 (p. 248), the moral is that in the interest of all "ability should never be checked or hampered" (p. 239). There should be a "general acquiescence" in the existing system (p. 317).

Seeing that Mr. Mallock includes in the existing system the continued action of Trades Unions (pp. 319, &c.), the conclusion is not so reactionary as it might seem. Indeed, as our author is accustomed to write for the large body of readers who do not inquire minutely into accuracy and consistency, but rejoice to find amusement and true knowledge hand in hand, it would be surprising if we had been able to interpret his statements literally as they stand. Mr. Mallock no doubt knows perfectly well what he is doing when he writes, "For the psychologist the action of the age is an all-important consideration; for the economist it is a consideration of no importance at all" (p. 206); when he attributes to "the Socialists" the proposition that "one man produces as much as and no more than another man" (p. 174); when he describes ability as "a kind of exertion," and yet refuses to class it with labour (p. 145); and when he says with a light heart that, "had the statistics of industry been recorded as fully [a hundred years ago] as they are now, we should be able to assign to each cause a definite proportion of the product" (p. 157).

For the same reason we need not blame our author for wishing his new born distinction between labour and ability to be "written in letters of fire" on the minds of his neighbours (p. 146), though we may fear that the branding would not be indelible.

We may chide him, however, for falling away from his better traditions by quoting (with the unmistakeable ellipse) a word not mentionable to ears polite (p. 101), and by using base comparisons (for example on p. 325) where inoffensive simplicity would have served his turn as well or better.

JAMES BONAR.

A Random Itinerary. By John Davidson. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

THE considerable reputation which Mr. Davidson enjoys he owes mainly to his verse, and to Fleet Street Eclogues in particular. His appearance as a prose writer has not been infrequent; but this is the first volume of prose in which he has conspicuously striven to prove himself an artist in form and manner. It is to be regretted that his success has not been so great as to make all his pages interesting. London suburbs and the home counties have proved here and there but tedious matter for discussion; and the style is not always sufficiently elevated or sufficiently charming to atone for the dulness of Hackney Marsh, Stratford, and Canning Town. As a set-off against such scenes, we have many paragraphs, and even pages, which will be full of delight to the lover of nature. Keeness of observation, occasional beauty of description, and not the fact that it is mainly composed of "notes and impressions of the remarkable spring and summer of 1893," will save A Random Itinerary from the "charge of irrelevancy" which the author not unnaturally feared. It is neither scientific enough nor systematic enough to make it valuable as a record of a phenomenal season; its success is entirely as an honest attempt at literature.

The Itinerant commenced his journeys with an excursion, early in April, to Epping Forest, "gay with big green leaves already, and blackthorn drenched and dripping with snow-white blossom." More than once does our author return to the image of the "drenched and dripping" blackthorn branches. "As fresh as paint! The Itinerant could think of nothing else that might hint in words the dead, shining whiteness of the blossom. Seen by the voiled light sometimes a straggling bush . . . looked like a plant that had been dipped in whitewash and set up to dry." The simile is hardly a good one, and Mr. Davidson, repeating it often, does well to anticipate objection. Here is a better and more representative passage:

"He took one of the green rides which intersect the forest and quickened his pace; the singing east was chill, but another song delayed him. Behind, out of Chingford Plain, a solitary lark scaled the skies. Some days before the itinerant had heard a lark on a London common; but this was another affair. Compared with the Chingford lark, the London bird was as a street-singer to a heaven-born tenor. There was no fog in the forest bird's throat; smoke never tarnished the dew he sipped; his wings were sinewy; he seemed to soar out of sight of the London bird's highest reach, and his robust and powerful music, unlike the echoless cockney song, reverberated from the ceiling of heaven in cascades of dying sound. Then came the sudden headlong descent in which the lark repeats over and over, with breathless haste and without transitions, the various motifs of his song, as if he were refreshing his memory before attending to his earthly cares; and the itinerant was again free to pursue the woodland path."

"A fruit tree laden with blossom, passionate with fragrance, and resonant with bees" is a sentence typical of Mr. Davidson's mode of description at its best; and there is a noteworthy passage in which, evidently remembering Leigh Hunt's sonnet on Hampstead, he says that "a landscape without water is like the face of a blind man." The section, "In Expectation of Rain," contains much I would like to quote; while "Parks and Squares," with its "vision of the wonderful spring of 1893, marching through the city in green robes, with nodding plumes of lilac, and a great retinue of laburnums bearing lanterns, and chestnuts swinging tapers in their hundred arms," will awaken a flood of pleasant memories in every Londoner's breast. Of the "Suburban Tour," following the six-mile radius, we have no space to speak, nor of the records of the two excursions into the Chilterns; but a word of notice must be given to the all-too-brief passages of conversation on divers subjects, literary, political, and rural, between the Itinerant and his "imaginary disputant."

The ballad with which Mr. Davidson closes his volume may be praised unreservedly. Finer than the ballad that completed Fleet Street Eclogues, it has a subject not dissimilar. A musician, toiling for years in penury, finishes his work at last:

"He thought to copy down his score:
The moonlight was his lamp; he said,
'Listen, my love': but on the floor
His wife and child were lying dead.

"Her hollow eyes were open wide;
He deemed she heard with special zest;
Her death's-head infant coldly eyed
The desert of her shrunken breast."

And so, unconscious of their fate, he recites slowly his music, only to find at its conclusion that what he took for fixed attention was the stiffness of death. The sorrow and the tragic misery of his life overcomes him: "There is no God," he says, and, his heart bursting, he goes straightway to heaven. There his wife and child receive him, and he is welcomed by his own music :

"He doubted; but God said, 'Even so;
Nothing is lost that's wrought with tears;
The music that you made below
Is now the music of the spheres.'"

Were it for nothing else than this ballad, A Random Itinerary would be a notable book.

GRANT RICHARDS.

NEW NOVELS.

The Vicar of Langthwaite. By Lily Watson. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Catherine Furze. By Mark Rutherford. Edited by his friend, Reuben Shapcott. In 2 vols. (Fisher Unwin.)

Earls court: a Novel of Provincial Life. By Alexander Allardyce. In 3 vols. (Blackwoods.)

Into Temptation. By A. Perrin. In 2 vols. (White.)

Two Offenders. By Ouida. (Chatto & Windus.)

"Zorg": a Story of British Guiana. By Vernon Kirke. (Digby, Long & Co.)

The Beauty of Boscastle: a Melodramatic and Psychological Story. By T. Mullett Ellis. (Sonnenschein.)

WE all know the novel of the time of Charles I. in which the Royalist young man falls in love with the Parliamentary young woman, and family feeling prevents the course of true love from running smooth. Sometimes there are two couples in the same predicament, but there is always one; and even when kings come right at the end of the third volume, there is a good deal of preliminary discomfort. Miss Lily Watson writes about the days of Queen Victoria, but she has adapted the old motif to contemporary requirements, her cavaliers being very "advanced" High Church folk, and her parliamentarians rigid Nonconformists. The Rev. Bernard Carfax—the vicar of the title—is an ardent Ritualist, a believer in clerical celibacy, and the holder of very strong views upon the sin of schism; while Gertrude Vaughan is a young Churchwoman with vague ecclesiastical principles, but a firm conviction of the social inferiority and general objectionableness of Dissenters. It need therefore hardly be said that the vicar becomes enamoured of Estelle, daughter of the president of a Nonconformist theological college, or that Miss Vaughan listens with satisfaction to the love-making of Paul Wyndham, one of the students in that institution. So far all is well: in fact, one feels that Miss Watson has found a theme with obvious possibilities of interest. Unfortunately, however, with that love of strong effects natural to the young writer, she has done much to spoil her work by the over-accentuation which always impairs verisimilitude. It is absurd nowadays to represent cultivated Churchmen and cultivated Dissenters living in the vicinity of a large Yorkshire town, belonging to the same social grade, and meeting at the houses of common friends, as glaring at one another like wild beasts and longing to fly, metaphorically, at each other's throats. And this is really a truthful description of several of Miss Watson's characters; for when they meet they forget not merely that they are Christians and gentlepeople, but that they are civilised human beings. In this matter the conduct of Dr. Yorke, the ex-principal of the dissenting college, is simply incredible; so is that of the Churchwoman, Madame St. Just; so is that of the "churchy" set at the Swiss hotel, who boycott Mr. Hawthorne when they discover that he is not a clergyman. The odd thing is that this absurdity of presentation cannot be traced to ignorance. One may suspect that Miss Watson has only hearsay information about Ritualists; but she has evidently sufficient first-hand knowledge of Dissenters to make her aware that Dr. Yorke is a grotesque impossibility. In another way Carfax is equally unsatisfactory. One feels that in the affair with Estelle he would either have stopped short sooner or not stopped short at all, and that therefore Miss Watson has ruined her psychology for the sake of her story without any benefit to the latter. It would hardly be worth while to say all this were The Vicar of Langthwaite the work of an incompetent amateur. But it is nothing of the kind. Miss Watson can delineate a character, she can tell a story, and she can write. What she needs to learn is that truth is great, and that it will prevail; but that in violence of exaggeration there is nothing that is either great or prevailing.

Mark Rutherford has found his public, and Catherine Furze will not disappoint it, though the story will strike some readers as rather wanting in inevitableness. It happens that here, as in the novel just reviewed, the action depends largely upon the love of a clergyman for the daughter of a Dissenter; but Mr. Cardew is a very Low Churchman, and, instead of being a professed celibate, he is, as ill luck will have it, a married man. There is, however, no scandal in the story, nothing "unpleasant" to use the ordinary word. Mr. Cardew shows more backbone than might have been expected from him: he pulls himself up, and restores his allegiance to the neglected wife who has a rightful claim to it; and poor Catherine dies, he and she confessing to each other that they have been "saved" by the "love that never found his earthly close." It is by no means certain that the "plan of salvation," to use a once familiar term, is made very clear; but this matters little. The strength of the book—and portions of it are very strong indeed—lies partly in its fresh and vigorous thought, expressed with the conciseness and some of the point of epigram, and partly in its careful, relentlessly veracious presentation of a narrow, vulgar, sordid life: a life that its empty and utterly unconscious of its own emptiness. Mr. Furze, the dissenting ironmonger, and his wife—he the mere human machine which is thrown out of gear by anything apart from the ordinary routine of activity, and she with her petty ambitions which soar only to "the Terrace," and the intimacy of Mrs. Colston, the breweress—are portraits not unworthy of Balzac, though the author of Père Goriot would have made his outline stronger, his modelling more elaborate and subtle. It is curious that Mark Rutherford, who can strike the right note with such purity of intonation, should strike so wrong and untrue a note as that sounded in the episode of Mrs. Furze's plot to banish the dangerous Tom. The quiet, subdued style does not suffice to hide the fact that her subornation of false witness is merely cheap melodrama; and at this point a character which has been conceived and rendered with painstaking veracity goes to pieces. Mrs. Furze was doubtless capable of the wickedness, for the evil potentialities of moral inertness are almost unlimited; but her wickedness would have been a dull, stupid, hand-to-mouth sort of thing—not the well-planned calculation of the stage villain. Despite other weak points, Catherine Furze is worth reading, because it is an unconventional story which does not cheapen its unconventionality by italicising and advertising it.

Balmoral was a good story; but Earls court is so much better as to suggest the thought that the former was an experimental performance, and that the writer had not quite found himself. The new book has the fine, delicate observation which gives such a charm to some of Mrs. Oliphant's quieter novels, where the story is a means to an end rather than an end in itself. The narrative qua narrative has sufficient organism to stand well upon its feet, though the story in synopsis would hardly look effective; but the novel is made by a most admirable group of those studies in the commonplace which provide perhaps the severest and most satisfactory test of a novelist's power. With the possible exception of old Dr. Sparshott, the driftless, absent-minded, unworldly curator of the museum, there is not a single person in the book who can be called a "character." Lord Earlsfield, the other members of the noble Colpoys family, and the less aristocratic men and women with whom they are in some way or other associated, are as ordinary as they well could be; and yet there is not one of the author's portraits that is not made interesting by strong and delicate individualisation, which is always genial and sympathetic even when the handling is the handling of the satirist. Mr. Allardyce's artistic management of his material is specially good. Even the outbreak of poor Harold Colpoys' homicidal mania, which turns the comedy into a tragedy, is so carefully led up to that there is no lapse from congruity; and indeed everywhere the substance and the form of Earls court are of unusual excellence.

Into Temptation is a creditably written novel of life in India; but it fails to interest because it fails to convince. When Josephine Cameron is eighteen years of age she becomes an orphan, and leaves school to go and live with her aunt Addie, a selfish and exacting valetudinarian. She is so much bored that when the Anglo-Indian, Mr. Boscawen, who is in England on leave, expresses his desire to marry her she at once accepts him, though he is an utterly unattractive person, twenty-five years her senior, who has not taken the trouble to go through any preliminaries of courtship or even to propose in person. Her married life is made miserable by her husband's selfishness and stinginess, the latter being such an absorbing passion that, though a wealthy man, he will not allow his wife to have decent furniture for her house or clothing for herself. Josephine gets up a hot flirtation with Sir Gerald Dainton; and when Mr. Boscawen is considerate enough to die, she follows the baronet to England, only to find that his love-making has been a cold-blooded expedient to draw her attention from his younger brother. She in her turn is followed to England by a Mr. Pierce, who has played the part of a saturnine guardian angel during the perils of her Indian career, and who now proposes marriage; but she prefers her freedom to the love of a man whom she—very rightly—regards as much too good for her, and there the story abruptly ends. One or two of the subordinate characters are fairly lifelike, but as a whole Into Temptation has no strong grip of reality.

Many of Ouida's novels are depressing; but her short stories are nearly always downright harrowing. A man, woman, child, or dog, as the case may be, is physically or mentally tortured with such ingenuity or cruelty that we are thankful when death comes—as it generally does come—to end the poor creature's misery, though the reader's misery remains until he can forget what he has gone through. Superfine critics may sniff at Ouida; but there is much in her work that is beautiful, and much more that would be beautiful were not beauty overpowered by repulsion. In her new book the two tortured creatures are Roscoff, a French painter of genius who, mutilated and helpless, is driven by unendurable goads to avail himself of the cruel charity of mechanical philanthropy; and the Italian peasant farmer, Castellani, who is made a murderer by the young man to whom he has been a father and whose mother he has saved by marriage from the shame of his birth. The latter is one of the stories of unrelieved gloom; but in the former there are some tender and winning touches. "An Assassin" is tremendously powerful, but one wants to get rid of it: "An Ingrate" may be read twice, the second time, perhaps, with more pleasure than the first.

Zorg deals in a somewhat conventional and not very entertaining way with the familiar three—the husband, the wife, and the lover; the only novelty being that number two and number three of the trio, after creating a good deal of scandal and making various worthy people extremely uncomfortable, are convinced of the error of their ways by the ministrations of the member of an Anglican sisterhood. Sarnia returns to her husband who, not unnaturally, refuses to receive her, and, indeed takes refuge in flight. She follows him on board ship and nurses him through the yellow fever. The remainder of the story may be alliteratively described as consisting of recovery, reconciliation, and retribution; for Sarnia dies, which was perhaps best for everybody concerned. Zorg is not a lively book.

The Beauty of Boscastle, on the contrary, would be very lively indeed if liveliness could be secured by a grotesque series of melodramatic absurdities; but Mr. Ellis's gentlemanly murderer, the low-born young woman whom he seduces, and the high-born young woman who wants to marry him though he has confessed to her his little faux pas in a long high-flown letter, are tiresome rather than amusing. There is, however, an adaptation of the Don Juan and Haidée shore-scene which has the merit of courage, for it flings the glove full in the face of the British matron.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME CLASSICAL TEXTS.

Selections from Strabo. With an Introduction on Strabo's Life and Works. By H. F. Tozer. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Mr. Tozer treats with a fitting pietas one who has probably been an old travelling companion of his. Anything but an inane munus is this handsome volume, dedicated to the popularisation of the geographer Strabo. The immense range of the author's work makes him peculiarly fit to be read in selections, and Mr. Tozer does justice to his interest and importance. If we want ancient facts of natural history, here are the elephant, the date-palm, the papyrus, and the banyan-tree. The religion and the folk-lore of many lands are brought together and compared. The historian has the pleasure of reading important episodes, or the thrill of discovering an allusion with no key to it. The student of civilisations may hear of great engineering works, of canal systems, of mines, and of early division of labour. The India of Chandragupta's time is sketched for us after the notes of an explorer. And, last of all, Strabo's credit is good. He is fallible, of course, but he is honest: he is painstaking, and every now and then he is verified afresh (as by Mr. Bent's discovery of the Corycian cave). About Greece he is disappointing, and especially so about Athens. But we cannot believe that he never visited that city, as Mr. Tozer seems to think. The visit was an easy one to pay; and, though a Hellene of old Hellas might conceivably have neglected Athens, we feel sure that an adopted Greek—as we may fairly call Strabo—would have hastened thither. Yet, if his visit be called in question, it is his own fault. He is meagre, and sometimes wrong, on Greek matters, and this fact contrasts strangely with his fulness on Italy. Perhaps his visit to Greece was but a "duty call," and his sympathies lay rather with the solid advantages of Roman government, its good trade, its good police, than with any spiritual headship. At all events, the sneer of Tacitus at the Greeks, sua tunc mirantur, does not touch Strabo. Out of the many and diversified topics which the geographer has touched, Mr. Tozer has made an agreeable and representative selection. In dealing with this he has two objects. For the text, he endeavours to establish it and to explain it. Strabo's language, even where it is certain, is not so easy as it looks; and it urgently requires in many places such corrections as Cobet and Madvig have suggested. Of these corrections Mr. Tozer admits several and notices more; and he so carefully explains the Strabonian senses of words (as ἐπερδέξιος) that we wish he had made his information more accessible by a Greek index. For the matter, he clears up many descriptions and accounts of processes which the concise, technical, or allusive manner of Strabo leaves obscure. But, apropos of Rheneia, which we visit under Mr. Tozer's guidance, we should have liked to hear his opinion about the bridge which Nikias (Plutarch's Life of him, c. 3) is said to have constructed between that island and Delos. The strait is about half a mile across, and how could Nikias have bridged this in a single night? In a note on Book x. 5, 4 (No. 49), where it seems to be said that a tyrant made Delos revolt from Rome in the Mithradatic war, Mr. Tozer justly says that we do not hear of this tyrant elsewhere. We suspect that the place which he caused to revolt was not Delos but Athens, the αἶτην getting an irregular explanation from Ἀθηναίων before. In fact, his name was Aristion, and the change of construction finds a very fair parallel in Book xiv. 5, 13 (No. 67 end). In v. 4, 7, we are not sure that τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς ἀγωγῆς ἐπιδημοῦντων means "of those who sojourn there with a view to the same culture." Perhaps ἀγωγῆς refers to the ἐχρη τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς ἀγωγῆς mentioned a little above as abiding at Naples, and the whole phrase means rather to refer to those who have the culture than those who wish to acquire it. But it is an odd expression, and the very similar matter in the account of Tarsus in No. 67 throws no light upon it. The volume contains several good maps. A full conspectus of the passages selected, such as occurs in the Clarendon Press Selections from Polybius, would add to its usefulness. Misprints in a text issued by the Clarendon Press are so rare that we must draw attention to one occurring on p. 161.

Platonis Protagoras. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By J. Adam and A. M. Adam. (Cambridge: University Press.) "The Protagoras of Plato," say the editors, "is one of the few dialogues whose authenticity has never been called in question by any eminent scholar." So remarkable a position deserves a good commentary, and the Protagoras has fared well at the hands of English scholars. Mr. Turner's edition (1891) deserved well of the manes of the philosopher; further back, Mr. Wayte published a scholarly attempt to deal with the difficulties of the dialogue; and now the compact and useful commentary and introduction of Mr. J. Adam and Mr. A. M. Adam call for a cordial welcome. Their edition is on the same lines as the Pitt Press editions of the Apology, Kriton, and Euthyphron. A short and clear analysis leads on to a consideration of the scope and purpose of the dialogue. Duly instructed on these points: taught that "the conclusion to be drawn is that virtue can indeed be taught, but not by the sophists any more than by the educational system, public opinion, and laws of the Athenians, because in them there is no knowledge," and shown what kind of evidence points to the inference that the Protagoras was written at an early date, the reader is prepared to enjoy the extraordinary vivacity and power with which the dialogue is carried on. The editors' care accompanies him further: points out the fallacious pieces of reasoning; smoothes the path among grammatical and other difficulties; and finally presents him with a bonus or ἐπιμύητρον in the shape of a restored ode of Simonides and a collection of the too scanty fragments of Protagoras' Works. P. 333E has a good note on the literal and the metaphorical uses of παρτερᾶσθαι; and it might have been worth while to have traced the latter use beyond Plato down to M. Aurelius, with whom the sense of stout resistance is passing into that of sheer obstinacy or perhaps of party spirit. In 349A ὕποκρητίζμενος is translated "having had yourself heralded as a sophist"; but we think that the three last words might be omitted, for they are unnecessary there, and will have to follow immediately in another connexion, to translate σοφιστὴν ἐπονιδάσας.

Thucydides Book VIII. Edited by E. C. Marchant. (Macmillans.) Mr. Marchant has spared no trouble in producing a very complete little edition of the Seventh Book of Thucydides. He bases his text on that of Bekker, but admits a good many variations from Bekker due to other critics, and a few of his own making. In the main, his practice is distinctively conservative as regards readings; but he does not shrink from trusting his own judgment, and his suggestions of τῷ δὲ ἄλλῳ <ἔω> τοῦ κυκλοῦ in chap. ii. § 4 and τὸ γ' αὖν, αὐτοῦς in place of τὸ γὰρ αὐτοῦς in chap. xxviii. § 3, seem to us specially happy. On the other hand κατακοιῖσι τὸν πόλεμον for καταλύουσι τὸν π. (chap. xxxi. § 4) is rather bold, and it is not shown that any change is really necessary. We do not see that anything is said of the theory—improbable enough—that the chapters from lxxi. to the end of the book are a later addition by another author. A serviceable map of the operations of the Athenians round Syracuse, and an essay on the political and military life of Nikias, add to the educational value of the work. But to say that Nikias was "elected war-minister" is a perilous way of speaking, and "the election of war-ministers" is still more bewildering. The strong point of Mr. Marchant's edition is its excellent commentary, which leaves little to be desired in fulness or accuracy. We shall however take leave to raise one question, though the sense of our rashness is strong when we find ourselves differing from both Mr. Marchant and Dr. Holden. In chap. lxvi. § 1, these two editors translate ἀπειρητοίμενοι "inexperienced." Is that really the best rendering? "Untrained" or "undrilled" is surely nearer to Thucydides' thought, and it is the sense in which the word is applied to Persian (as contrasted with Greek) troops in Hdt. ix. 62.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that Sir Auckland Colvin has undertaken to write, for the series of "Rulers of India," a Life of his father, John Russell Colvin, the first Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, who died in the Fort at Agra, in the darkest hour of the Mutiny. The son succeeded his father in the same office after an interval of exactly thirty years. No other series of volumes, we imagine, has ever represented such a weight of official experience. Among the contributors are the names of a Governor, three Lieutenant-Governors, a Chief Commissioner, a Governor-General's Agent, a military secretary to a Commander-in-Chief, the son and private secretary of one Governor-General, and the son-in-law of another. We believe, too, that several of the volumes are now in their fourth and fifth thousand.

MR. LEWIS MORRIS'S new volume of poems, to be entitled Songs without Notes, will include the Imperial Institute and the Royal Wedding Odes. It will be published, at Easter, by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.

MR. ERIC MACKAY, who is staying in the South of France, has in preparation on new volume of poems, to be published in May, simultaneously with the ninth edition of his Love-Letters of a Violinist.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have nearly ready for publication a History of Trade Unionism, from 1730 to the present day, by Sidney and Beatrice Webb, founded largely upon material hitherto unpublished.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish, before the end of the present month, the reminiscences of Mr. G. A. Sala, in two volumes, entitled Things I have Seen and People I have Known. Among the chapters will be: Paris Fifty Years Ago, Dickens and Thackeray, Travel in America, the Fast Life of the Past, Pantomimes and Operas, Songs and Pictures, Cooks and Costumes, Noted Usurers, &c.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press, for early publication, a volume to be entitled Middle Temple Table Talk, by Mr. W. G. Thorpe, a barrister of the society. It will contain a chapter in which Mr. Thorpe works out the connexion between Bacon and the Lord Chamberlain's company of players, of which Shakspeare was actor-manager and (to use Greene's words in 1598) "Jack Factotum," and gives reasons why this connexion was shrouded in obscurity.

MR. DAVID NUTT announces for publication, in the course of the summer, a collection of folk-lore monographs, entitled "The Grimm Library." Among the earliest volumes to be issued in this series will be Mingrelian Folk-Tales, translated by Miss Marjory Wardrop; Finnish Proverbs, translated and annotated by Miss Bayley; Perseus, the Virgin-Born Dragon-Slayer, a study upon the diffusion, nature, and archaic significance of this heroic-romantic cycle, by E. Sidney Hartland; The Story of Bran mac Febail, being the oldest Irish version of the visit to the other world, edited and translated by Prof. Knno Meyer, with studies upon the Celtic Paradise and the Celtic idea of re-incarnation by Alfred Nutt; and Birds, Beasts, and Fishes of the Norfolk Broadland, figured and described by P. H. Emerson.

FOR the English edition of M. Yves Guyot's Tyranny of Socialism, which Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. will publish next week, the author has added much new matter.

AN illustrated edition of S. R. Crockett's Stickit Minister will be published this year, probably in the autumn. It will have specially-drawn initial letters and head and tail-pieces, and will contain many drawings by Mr. Ernest Waterlow, Mr. Joseph Pennell, Mr. MacGeorge, Mr. Duncan MacKellar, Mr. James Paterson, Mr. Denholm-Young, Mr. Burn Murdoch, and Mr. Moxon Cook.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK, of Edinburgh, announce a volume on "The Resurrection of the Dead," by the late Prof. W. Milligan.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHIEIN & Co. will issue this month a catechetical explanation of the Nicene Creed, with proofs and illustrations from Scripture, by the Rev. Henry Morton Thomson, with a preface by Canon Carter, of Clewer. The book is intended mainly for students preparing for ordination.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN is about to publish a new "Pseudonym" volume, entitled The Hon. Stanbury and Others, by Two. It will contain three stories—viz., the title one, "Poor Miss Skeat," and "An Indigent Gentlewoman."

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will have ready this week a new novel by Mrs. Robert Jocelyn, in three volumes, entitled Pamela's Honeymoon.

THE first volume of a cheap series of the "Annabel Grey Library," entitled The Ghosts of the Guardroom, a tale of military life, will appear immediately.

A THIRD edition of Part I. of The World of Adventure, which was published a few days ago by Messrs. Cassell & Co., has already been called for.

THE first editions of Q.'s The Delectable Duchy and of Max Pemberton's Iron Pirate have already been exhausted.

AT a meeting of the council of the British Record Society, Limited, held on March 1, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"1. That this society desires to call attention to the present unsatisfactory state and custody of parish registers and other local records, and is strongly of opinion that steps be taken to insure their better preservation and accessibility, by depositing them either in District Record Offices, or at the Public Record Office, London.

"2. That, considering the difficulty in consulting the non-parochial registers now in the custody of the registrar-general, they be removed to the Public Record Office, London."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Oxford, next Tuesday, it will be proposed to confer the honorary degree of M.A. upon Lord Dillon, the new director of the Society of Antiquaries.

DR. J. B. BRADBURY, of Downing, has been elected to the Downing chair of medicine at Cambridge, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Latham.

MR. INGRAM BYWATER delivered his inaugural lecture as regius professor of Greek at Oxford on Thursday of this week, his subject being "Four Centuries of Greek Learning in England."

A COMMITTEE of Council at Oxford has drafted a statute for the establishment of a final honour school of English, in pursuance of the resolution passed in Congregation by a decisive majority last December. The leading principles of the scheme are: (1) that equal weight should be given to language and to literature; (2) that all candidates should be required to show proficiency in both; (3) that opportunities should also be given for the special study of either; and (4) that an essential part of the examination should be the study of original authors, in connexion with the history and thought of the period to which they belong. It is expressly laid down that authors shall be studied, both with reference to the forms of the language, and also as examples of literature; and that every candidate shall show a competent knowledge of the chief periods of the English language (including Anglo-Saxon), of the relation of English to the languages with which it is etymologically connected, and of the history of English literature. It is not proposed that the statute be promulgated for discussion in Congregation before May 1.

OXFORD, of course enjoys a professorship of English, founded by the last Commission, and endowed out of the revenues of Merton College; while Cambridge has not even a university lectureship. To remove this disgrace, Prof. Skeat has issued an appeal for private subscriptions—not for the first time; and he himself offers to give no small contribution.

MR. P. H. COWELL, of Trinity, has been elected to the Isaac Newton Scholarship at Cambridge, which is tenable for a period of three years.

MR. C. R. BEAZLEY, of Merton, has been elected to the geographical studentship at Oxford for the present year. Mr. Beazley has, we believe, made a special study of the colonial history of Portugal, so that he may be expected to devote himself to the times of Prince Henry the Navigator.

MESSRS. GIBBINS & Co. will publish this week vol. ii. of a complete collection of the English Poems which have obtained the Chancellor's Gold Medal at Cambridge, covering the period from 1859 to 1893. Among the poets represented are Mr. Sidney Colvin, Mr. James Rhoades, Mr. J. E. Page, and Mr. J. H. B. Masterman (for each of the last three years).

THE senatus of Aberdeen University has resolved to confer the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Mr. Henry O. Forbes, who was recently appointed director of the Liverpool Museum.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A WOUNDED AMAZON (MUSEO DEL VATICANO).

STANDING apart in dumb deep agony,
With none of all her warring sisters near,
With none to help her or console her here,
She pays the price of those who would be free.

Hast thou, who in thy proud virginity,
A maid to cope with heroes didst not fear,
Found that such glory might be bought too dear
When one, who should have shielded, wounded thee?

Yet, gazing on thee where thou standest now,
He whom no Amazonian arms could quell
Before thine unarmed womanhood would bow.

Until your lifted eyes should re-engage
The strife of which our latest stories tell,
That he and thou for evermore must wage.

ALFRED W. BENN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Contemporary Review for March contains an article by Prof. Driver, suggested by the appearance of Prof. Sayce's new book, entitled "The Higher Criticism and the Verdict of the Monuments." (S.P.C.K.) In it the learned writer undertakes the difficult task of eliciting Prof. Sayce's real opinion on the value of the higher criticism, as distinguished from that sometimes imaginary criticism of which the champion of archaeology speaks so severely. From Prof. Sayce's own statements it is shown (as it appears to the present writer) that the historical facts disclosed by the monuments are not opposed to the "critical view" of the Old Testament. "Along the whole line [archaeology] either leaves intact or actually supports this critical position," and Prof. Sayce himself clearly sympathises with the more cautious and moderate critics. The fears of Christian apologists are therefore needless: the religious view of the Old Testament is still justified, and indeed more safely than before.

THE Expositor for March is mainly popular, but contains two articles (besides the inevitable one by Prof. Bruce, who has reached his fourteenth section) which appeal to the scholar. These are (1) Mr. Wright's attempts to support the "oral theory" (so little held now) of the origin of the Synoptic Gospels, by studying the proper names in Mark; and (2) Prof. G. A. Smith's carefully critical study of the application of the geographical names—Ituraea and Trachenitis. Prof. Smith concludes that the two territories so called were originally distinct. It is very possible, but cannot be proved, that the names ever overlapped.

THE March Theologisch Tijdschrift opens with a delightful critical study by Dr. Knappert, of the Life of St. Gall, which is a valuable "source" for the heathenism of the populations among which St. Gall worked. Dr. Eerdmans discusses afresh the origin of the expression "Son of Man"; Dr. Van Manen replies, and it is pleasant to see how thoroughly these scholars recognise the merits of Mr. Charles's edition of Enoch. Dr. Herderschee reviews a recent sketch of Kuenen's lectures on Ethics, which to many formed the great master's principal contribution to teaching; the author of the sketch is H. Y. Groenewegen. Among the minor notices of books are very full ones of Max Müller's and Edward Caird's Gifford Lectures.

AN important article on the late Professor Milligan appears in the March number of the Expository Times, by Dr. Moulton, of Cambridge.

HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE.

THE following are the speeches delivered by the public orator, Dr. Sandys, in presenting the Earl of Kintore for the honorary degree of LL.D. on March 1, and Prof. Ramón y Cajal for the honorary degree of Doctor of Science on March 6:

THE EARL OF KINTORE.

"Quam libenter salutamus ex alumni nostri unum, qui Britanniae in parte Septentrionali Collegii florentissimi Aberdoniensis a conditore oriundus, inter colonias nostras Australes Academicam Adelaidensem, quam inter filias nostras non sine numero numeramus, sua sub tutela positam esse gloriatur. Ibi provinciae maximae tota Gallia, tota Germania, plusquam quadruplo latius patenti praeposito, regionem tam immensam audacter peragravit, itineris tanti socium insignem nactus medicum Cantabrigiensem, cuius ipsum nomen Caledoniae suae castellum in memoriam revocat. Quid commemorem proconsulis nostri ductu plusquam quadraginta dies inter loca deserta atque arida fortiter toleratos, rerumque naturae solitudines recenditas feliciter reclusas? Quid (ne maiora dicam) etiam talpac genus novum, quod notoryctes nominatur, e latebris suis in lucem protractum? Quid eiusdem auspicio et imperio etiam beluae antiquae, quae diplotodon vocatur, reliquias ingentes saeculo nostro denuo patefactas? Ipsum Sancti Georgii inter equites illustriores numeratum, non draconem fabulosum vi et armis domuisse dixerim, sed monstrorum haud minus horrendorum vestigia immania sumptu et labore maximo detegenda curavisse. Talium virorum auxilio non modo imperii Britanniae provinciae remotissimae vinculis artioribus nobiscum consociantur, sed etiam scientiarum fines, nostris a filiis totiens propagati, per spatia indies latiora extenduntur."

PROF. RAMÓN Y CAJAL.

"Hodie laudis genus novum libenter auspicati, Hispanae gentis civem nunc primum salutamus. Salutamus virum de physiologiae scientia optime meritum, qui inter flumen Iberum montesque Pyrenaeos duo et quadraginta abhinc annos natus et luminis eiusdem in ripa Caesaraugustae educatus, primum ibidem, deinde Valentiae, deinceps Barceonae munere Academico functus, tot honorum spatio feliciter decurso, nunc denique in urbe, quod gentis totius caput est, histologiae scientiam praeclare proficitur. Fere decem abhinc annos professoris munus Valentiae auspicatus, fore auguratus est, ut intra annos decem studiorum suorum in honorem etiam inter exteras gentes nomen suum notesceret. Non fefellit augurium; etenim nuper etiam nostras ad oras a Societate Regia Londinensi honoris causa vocatus, muneris oratorio, virorum insignium nominibus iam pridem ornato, in hunc annum destinatus est. Omitto opera eius maiora de histologia et de anatomia conscripta, praeterea etiam opuscula eiusdem quadraginta intra lustra duo in lucem missa; haec enim omnia ad ipsa scientiae penetralia pertinent. Quid vero dicam de artificio pulcherrimo quo primum auri, deinde argenti ope, in corpore humano fila quaedam tenuissima sensibus motibusque ministrantia per ambages suas inextricabiles aliquatenus explorari poterant? In artificio illo argenti usum, inter Italos olim inventum, inter Hispanos ab hoc viro in melius mutatum et ad exitum feliciorum perductum esse constat. Si poeta quidam Romanus regione in eadem genitus, si Valerius Martialis, inquam, qui expertus didicit fere nihil in vita sine argento posse perfici, hodie ipse adesset, procul dubio popularem suum verbis suis paululum mutatis non sine superbia appellaret:—

"Vir Celtiberis non tacende gentibus, Nostraeque laus Hispaniae....
Te nostri Iberi ripa gloriabitur,
Nec me tacbit Bilbilis."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ATTI della Commissione d'inchiesta parlamentare sulle banche. Milano: Hoepli. 40 fr.
FORSTER, W. Freundesbriefe v. Friedrich Diez. Bonn: Cohen. 2 M.
GILLE, Ph. La Bataille littéraire. Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
GUILLON, Ant. Le Salon de Madame Helvétius: Cabsnis et les idéologues. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
HITZ, P. Der Initialschmuck in den elassischen Drucken des 15. u. 16. Jahrh. 1. Reihe. 8 M. Orig.-Abdruck v. Formschneidersarbeiten d. 16. u. 17. Jahrh. Neue Folge. 8 M. Strassburg: Heitz.
HOUSSEY, Arsène. Le Repentir de Marion. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
HUBER, J. Der deutsche Adel im ersten deutschen Staatsrecht. Lucerne: Bäder. 1 M. 50 Pf.
JAGIE, V. Der erste Cetinjer Kirchendruck vom J. 1494. 1. Hälfte. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 40 Pf.
JULIEN, Ad. Musiciens d'aujourd'hui. 2<sup>e</sup> Série. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 5 fr.
LICHTWARK, A. Herrmann Kauffmann u. die Kunst in Hamburg von 1800–1850. München. 12 M.
MUTHER, R. Geschichte der Malerei im 19. Jahrh. 3. Bd. München: Hirth. 15 M.
PETIT, E. Organisation des colonies françaises et des pays de protectorat. T. 1. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 12 fr.
SCHMIDT, Ch. Répertoire bibliographique Strasbourggeois jusque vers 1630. V., VI. Strassburg: Heitz. 15 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- Aus dem Leben König Karls v. Rumänien. 1. Bd. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
BERICHTE u. Mittheilungen des Altertums-Vereines zu Wien. 29. Bd. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 20 M.
BISMARCK, Fürst, politische Reden. 9. Bd. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
GRUENBERG, K. Die Bauernbefreiung u. die Auflösung des gutsherrlich-bäuerlichen Verhältnisses in Böhmen, Mähren u. Schlesien. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 18 M.
HAFLE, E. Georg Jenatsch. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Bündner Wirren. Davos: Richter. 5 M.
JONNES, Moreau de. Aventures de guerre au temps de la République et du Consulat 1791–1805. Paris: Guillaumin. 7 fr. 50 c.
MITTHEILUNGEN ü. römische Funde in Hedderheim. 1. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Völkner. 4 M.
QUELLENSCHRIFTEN der elassischen Kirchengeschichte. 1. Bd. Strassburg: Le Roux. 6 M.
SARTORIUS FRH. v. WALTERRAUSSEN, A. Die Arbeitsverfassung der englischen Kolonien in Nordamerika. Strassburg: Trübner. 6 M.
SCHIBER, A. Die fränkischen u. alemannischen Siedlungen in Gallien, besonders in Elsass u. Lothringen. Strassburg: Trübner. 4 M.
TOLLIN, H. Geschichte der französischen Colonie v. Magdeburg. 3. Bd. Abth. 1. C. Magdeburg: Faber. 18 M. 50 Pf.
UKUNDENBUCH der Stadt u. Landschaft Zürich. 3. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Zürich: Fisi. 7 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- BLANCHARD, R. Révision des Hirudines du musée de Dresde. Berlin: Friedländer. 3 M.
CATALOGUS insectorum faunae bohemicae. II. Prag: Haerper. 1 M. 20 Pf.
FAULMANN, K. Im Reiche des Geistes. Illustrierte Geschichte der Wissenschaften, anschaulich dargestellt. Wien: Hartleben. 17 M. 50 Pf.
FRANCO, MATTEI, I. matheosolibri VIII. Primum recensuit C. Sittl. Pars I. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
HREPLE, L. Einleitung in die Theorie der linearen Differenzialgleichungen m. e. unabhängigen Variablen. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
KRONFELDER, L. Vorlesungen ü. Mathematik. 1. Bd. Hrg. v. E. Netto. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.
KUPFFER, C. V. Studien zur vergleichenden Entwicklungsgeschichte des Kopfes der Kranioten. 2. Hft. Die Entwicklg. des Kopfes v. Ammonoiten Planeri. München: Lehmann. 10 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- AUGONIUS, D. M., die Mesella. Hrg. u. erklärt v. C. Hosius. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 40 Pf.
CATONIS, M. P., de agri cultura liber. Vol. II. Fasc. 1. Commentarius. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M.
COMMENTATIONES philologiae Ienenses. Vol. V. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
FESTSCHRIFT, Theodor Mommsen zum 10jährigen Doctorjubiläum überreicht v. P. Jörs, E. Schwartz, R. Reitzenstein. Marburg: Elwert. 3 M. 60 Pf.
HARTMANN, M. Die hebräische Verskunst nach Werken jüdischer Metriker. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M. 50 Pf.
LEGER, L., et G. BARBONNAUT. Les racines de la langue russe. Paris: Maisonneuve. 5 fr.
FEISER, F. E. Der Gerandtschaftsbericht des Hassan ben Ahmed el-Haimi. Berlin: Feiser. 5 M.
BIES, J. Was ist Syntax? Marburg: Elwert. 3 M.
SIBAWAINI'S Buch ü. die Grammatik. Uebers. u. erklärt v. G. Jahn. 2. Lfg. Berlin: Reuther. 4 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN UNKNOWN WORK OF SAINT ADAMNAN.

Oxford: Feb. 23, 1891.

I interrupt my letters on North Pictish inscriptions to announce a discovery which will gladden not only every good Gael but all learned Christendom—the discovery of a Latin commentary on the Pentateuch by Adamnan, the great abbat of Iona.

In December, 1891, Mr. Quaritch issued a catalogue in which he advertised a MS., which he called Glossae in Pentateuchum, and dated "about A.D. 780." I sent for it at once, saw that it was indeed of the eighth century, and bought it. I satisfied myself that it was not included in Migne's Latin Bibliotheca Patrum, that it contained a good deal that was in the Expositions on the Pentateuch which Migne inserts among Bede's "exegetica genuina," and that it contained other things which were in Isidore; and I made a memorandum in it that, so far as I had examined, the notes were taken from these two writers.

The only clew to the authorship which I then had was the following postscript at the end of Exodus, which showed that part of the work was dictated just as a vessel was about to sail:

"Hæc adunam lucubрати uncula cum iam fines soluerentur elitore & nautæ crebrius inelamitarent propero sermone dictavi quæ memoria tenere poteram quæ diuinam Inrationale pectoris mei lectione congesceram satis Intellegens magis me loquendi Impetu quam iudicio scribentes fluere & more torrentes turbidum præferre sermonem."

Now it is clear that the author of these words had plenty of Latinity, though he does make from lucubratio a neuter instead of a feminine diminutive: all other errors are obviously due to the person to whom he was dictating, and who ought to have written lucubrationcula, funes, quæ (or quacque), diuina or diuinum (since rationale is an allusion to the sacred breastplate of judgment), pectoris, scribentis, torrentis. The use of a tall I at the beginning of a word, and the union of prepositions with their cases, as in elitore and Inrationale, are habits of the period, not mistakes.

Since purchase, the MS. had been formally catalogued, and the description was waiting to go to press. In this description Mr. Madan, who wrote it, had called attention to the fact that there was something apparently wrong about adunam, and the idea occurred to me that it might contain a further clew to the authorship. If, in the Latin pronunciation of the author or the scribe, funes and fines were confounded, why not Inam and unam, and why should not the commentary have been written for the pious King Ina of Wessex by one of the noted ecclesiastics who were his friends? Investigation did not corroborate this fancy, and I next sought to find in adunam the name of the place at which the words were dictated. Again defeated, I wondered whether it disguised the name of the writer—and instantly Adamnan occurred to me. For if Adamnan were written adēcnā, with the common Irish cc form of a (which is frequent in this very passage of this very MS.) it would quite easily be mistaken for adunā by a scribe who did not know the name; and various errors which are obviously those of a transcriber, and not due to imperfect hearing, prove that this MS. is not the absolute original.

And here it should be said that, after a long examination both of the ordinary writing of the MS. and of its very numerous ornamental initials, I have satisfied myself that it was written in the zone of Northern France.

Unhappily, I had also satisfied myself that the commentary was partly compiled from the Bedan Expositions. As Bede was born in 673, and Adamnan died in 704 at the age of seventy-seven, was the latter likely to have borrowed from the former?

Well, Mr. Madan, in describing the MS., had pointed out that on f. 162 the author, speaking of the ephod, says, "In quadam epistola scripsisse me [erased] niemini & dum scriptum reteneretur sacrum quid esse & solis conueniens pontificibus." I searched in vain the letters of Bede and others for any such reference, but found in a letter of Isidore to Redemptus the words "Domini sacerdotes Ephod lineo excellentiae causa erant superinduti." This, however, is hardly strong enough; and, besides, the letter is under the gravest suspicion of being a forgery. Again, if the words in the MS. were taken from Isidore, why are they not in Isidore's Commentary at this place?

I then read the entire passage in the MS. It goes on:

"nec statim occurat [sic for 'occurrebat'] illut quod samuel qui leuita fuit scribitur Inegrorum [sic for 'regum'] primo libro habuisse ætatis adhuc paruulæ effot.' ad idest superhumera leum cum dauid quoque ante archam domini item potasse fertur."

On turning to the parallel passage in the (atrociously corrupt) printed Bedan Expositions, I read only "quod genus vestimenti solis pontificibus conuenit; sed tamen qui Levitæ. Et adhuc scribuntur habere Ephoth." And, if I prefer the Bodleian twelfth century MS. e Mus. 36 of the Expositions, I find the latter part running "sed tamen samuel; qui leuita. & dauid scribuntur habere ephod."

Now which of these two passages is borrowed from which? Is it not obvious that the author of our Commentary is the original writer, and that the editor of the Expositions is abbreviating him, and is suppressing the personal reference because it would not be true of himself?

I compare the two in other passages, and find the same inference everywhere irresistible. It may be a Greek or a Hebrew word which is wanting in the Expositions, or a remark about Josephus, or a reference to the versions of Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, or the LXX. It is most unlikely that the writer who had and valued this learning should have lived after the writer of the Expositions.

But, you may say, would Bede, on the other hand, who "understood Greek and had some acquaintance with Hebrew," have omitted notes of this kind if he was copying from the book in which they occurred? Well, it turns out that the Expositions are not universally accepted as Bede's at all; for instance, they are not in Giles's edition. Bede does not include them in his own list of his works, unless they are his "capitula lectionum in Pentateuchum." And, if they are that, then their title tells us that they were only meant as "summaries."

I go further, and maintain that such an adaptation by Bede is in the highest degree likely. When Bede, a lad of fifteen, had already been eight years in a Northumbrian monastery under the great abbat Benedict Biscop, Adamnan paid a visit to the Northumbrian king and churches; and he visited Northumbria again two years later. It is hardly possible that Bede should not have seen him and regarded him with the highest reverence. And, after Adamnan had sent his book "De locis sanctis" to the Northumbrian king, not only did the latter cause copies of it to be made, but Bede himself compiled a shorter treatise on the subject, in which he made large use of Adamnan's book.

"Hæc de locis sanctis," he says, "prout potui fidem historie æcutus exposui, et maxime Arculphi dictatus Galliarum episcopi, quos eruditissimus in Scripturis presbyter Adamnans laciniæ sermone describens, tribus libellis comprehendit."

Assuming Adamnan to be the author of the Bodleian Commentary, it was natural that he should send that also to the Northumbrian king, and that Bede should eagerly add to the summaries of his readings on the Pentateuch the greatest part of a Commentary which so amply gratified his own taste for allegorical interpretation.

So that nothing prevents our substituting adēcnā for the certainly corrupt adunam, and so giving the authorship of the unique Bodleian Commentary to Adamnan. His Life of Columba bears evidence of an acquaintance with Greek and Hebrew; by the testimony of Bede he was "eruditissimus in Scripturis," and "scientia scripturarum nobilissime instructus"; and we know of at least four voyages that he made from Iona. Indeed, in those still semi-pagan times the abbat of Iona was in all likelihood continually crossing to neighbouring isles or to the mainland.

It is difficult to compare the language of a Commentary with that of a rapturous narrative such as Adamnan's Life of Columba, or with that of a description based on another's dictation such as his work De Locis Sanctis. But one of the most striking features in the Life is his passion for diminutives, such as consolatiuncula, monasteriolum, pecusculum, to which in the Commentary we get such analogues as explanatiuncula, comentariolus, pectusculum. And the words of the colophon "cum. . . nautæ. . . Inelamitarent" find a parallel in the "inclamitantes. . . nautici" (nautæ is his usual word) of lib. ii. c. 39 of the Life.

Is there yet something wanting to the moral proof of Adamnan's authorship? Then it is supplied in these words on f. 161<sup>v</sup> of the Bodleian Commentary: "Quartū genus uestimtorum rotundus pelleolus qualem picturā Inolexe conspeximus." Here the twelfth century MS. of the Expositions has . . . pilleolus qualē pictū inulixi . . . and Migne's text . . . pilleolus, qualem pictum mulixi . . .

Now it is quite clear that the writer, to illustrate the shape of the cap, refers to a picture which he had seen. Probably, also, those for whom he was writing had seen it also; for otherwise it would not be much use referring to it at all—and he employs the plural number. But does the mysterious inolexe conceal the name of the place where the picture was, the man who painted it, the man who owned it, or the man whom it represented?

Well, if I wanted to illustrate the shape of a tall, soft felt hat, I should not say, "such as that which we have seen in a picture in such a place, or by such an artist, or belonging to such a man"; I should say "such as that which we have seen in pictures of Tennyson." And Inolexe is the corrupted name of a person.

This person was one of the many Irish saints named Colman. He had spent some time at Iona under Columba, and had afterwards become a bishop in Leinster, dying before 598. Of course, he had to be distinguished from other Colmans by a surname; and so in Adamnan's Life of Columba we are told (lib. iii. c. 12) of the death of Sancti Columbani Episcopi, mocu Loigse, "Columbani" being the Latinised form of Colman, and "mocu Loigse" meaning that he was of the Loigse family.

Now Adamnan came from Ulster, and in Ulster- Irish short oi is pronounced as e. And what has happened is almost as clear as daylight. Adamnan dictated "a round little felt cap, such as we have seen in the picture of Mocu Legse." His scribe wrote the last words picturam molexe; and the later continental copyist of the Bodleian MS. (naturally quite ignorant of this Gaelic name) mistook the m for in, and regarded the abbreviating stroke above as properly belonging to the a. In those days there was no dot or stroke to distinguish i, and the confusion between in and m is one of the commonest known; indeed, in this very passage we have a proof of it, in the fact that the Bodleian MS. of the Expositiones reads inulxi, but Migne's text mulixi.

It is, of course, obvious that no one but a Gael writing for other Gaels to whom St. Colman was a familiar person would ever have described him merely by his Gaelic family-name. No doubt the Commentary was dictated at Iona, and probably the picture itself was there also. Perhaps it was one of the illuminations in a book of Gospels; for the Usher Gospels in Trinity College, Dublin, are said by Westwood (Palaeog. Sacra) to have "figures of the Saints . . . introduced into the body of the ornamental page," while the Book of Deer contains numerous undoubted figures of clerics, some with head-dresses.

As regards the time in Adamnan's life when the Commentary was dictated, I would suggest that Exodus, at least, probably dates before his second visit to Northumbria, which was in 688. He was then won over to the Roman practice as regards Easter, and on his return to Iona endeavoured to convert his community to it. But in the Commentary on Exodus xii. I see no allusion to the Christian celebration of the Passover.

I hope that an Oxford editor and the Clarendon Press may give the world the editio princeps of Adamnan's work. The text of the MS., an invaluable monument of Celtic Latin, should be printed without any alteration whatever, and parallel to it should be given a text properly punctuated and with all undoubted errors corrected. The sources of the interpretations should, of course, be indicated as far as they can be ascertained. The absence of such indication is a serious defect in the ordinary patristic commentary; and until it is remedied no proper estimate can be formed of the history of exegesis, or of the position in that history due, either as regards originality or influence, to individual commentators. If the same editor and press will do the same work for the Bedan Expositiones, the current printed text of which is an outrage on their compiler, they will perform an additional service.

I should add that, in speaking of Isidore as one of Adamnan's sources—indeed the only source I have yet detected—I assume that he and Isidore have not (as is possible) borrowed from a common original. The addition to Isidore's list of heresies (on Lev. xiii.) of a reference to the early heretic Lencius ("ut lucius qui dixit apostolus [= apostolus] docuisse duo principia boni & mali," on v. 29) tends to show that even when he borrowed Adamnan was not a mere borrower.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

THE TEACHING UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

Cambridge: March 7, 1894.

In an article in the last number of the ACADEMY on "The Teaching University of London," Prof. Karl Pearson remarks that my Note to the Report of the late Commission illustrates my "characteristic attitude of seeing both sides of a question and ever remaining balanced on the fence." I am glad to be told that it is my characteristic "attitude" to see both sides of a question; but the statement that I "remain ever balanced on the fence" may possibly lead your readers to infer that I have avoided expressing any definite practical conclusion on the question on which I disagree with the majority of the Commission: the question whether the new teaching University should be constituted by a transformation of the present examining University, or on an independent basis. Will you therefore allow me to quote from the concluding paragraph of my Note, the sentences in which I intended to express such a conclusion?—

"If the Senate and Convocation of the existing University of London are willing to accept the transformation now proposed, I think that, considering the strong body of opinion in favour of such a transformation, it should be permitted to take place. But if they should not be willing to accept it, I trust that it will not be forced on them. I trust, therefore, that if Parliament should see fit to carry out the recommendations of this Report by the appointment of an executive Commission, that Commission will have power to establish the new teaching University either in combination with the present examining University or, in the contingency just supposed, on an independent basis. The modifications of the scheme required in the latter case would be comparatively small; and would all, in my opinion, be rather advantageous than otherwise, from the point of view of the teaching University."

H. SIDGWICK.

London: March 5, 1894.

Will you allow me a few words on a point in the scheme for reconstruction of the University of London, to which Prof. Pearson hardly alludes in his letter in the last number of the ACADEMY: the proposed establishment of a Theological Faculty?

All students of the history of the University will know how steadfastly a proposal of this nature was resisted by the founders of the University, even at the expense of losing the support of Dr. Arnold. It is perfectly true that, as a compromise, an optional Biblical examination was offered to those who had taken the B.A. degree, and that this examination has not always been free from a theological bias. But to establish a Faculty not only for examining in but for teaching theology, under whatever phrase it may be disguised, appears to many graduates of the University to be a very wide departure from the traditions and principles on which it was founded, and to be a direct infringement of its Charter.

It is no secret that the agitation for a theological degree comes almost entirely from an influential theological section of the graduates, those who come up from the dissenting colleges. Let these colleges have the privilege of granting a theological degree of their own, rather than that the University should lose that unsectarian character which is so dear to many of us. I trust that a strong protest will be made by influential graduates against this flagrant departure from the foundation-principle of the University.

ALFRED W. BENNETT.

MRS. JAMESON AND LADY BYRON.

London: March 6, 1894.

While thanking you for your appreciative notice of my book, Women Writers, in the ACADEMY of March 3, will you allow me to mention the authority on which I based my statement about Mrs. Jameson's breach with Lady Byron?

I took it from The Memoirs of Anna Jameson, by her niece, Gerardine MacPherson (Longmans, 1879). Mrs. MacPherson says (p. 280):

"I cannot exactly tell at what date the breach between my aunt and Lady Byron took place, which made so great a difference in the life of one, at least, of these devoted friends. The fact was, at the time, explained to no one, except to my aunt's younger sister, Charlotte, who, after a long interval, confided it to the only sister now surviving, from whom I have heard the cause of a severance which had been a wonder and a mystery to me for years. Mrs. Jameson had become, partially by accident, acquainted with some private particulars affecting a member of Lady Byron's family, which had not been revealed to Lady Byron herself. When these facts were finally made known at the death of the person chiefly concerned, Lady Byron became, at the same time, aware of Mrs. Jameson's previous acquaintance with them. We may easily imagine that the sting of finding her friend the actual depository of a secret which had been kept from herself had a great deal to do with the bitterness of Lady Byron's resentment. It is even possible that my aunt may have been too proud to enter into minute explanations of how and why it was. Anyhow, the stern temper of the one was roused and the sensitive pride and high spirit of the other outraged and wounded. She in her turn became the 'one implacable.' I have good reason to know that the wound was one which Mrs. Jameson never recovered. Perhaps the one other person to whom she expressed herself freely was . . . Major Noel. When he went to see his old friend, she received him with much emotion. He wrote, 'She said that our intimacy must now cease because my first duty was to keep on terms with Lady Byron . . . who had broken her heart.'

CATHERINE JANE HAMILTON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, March 11, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Origin and Development of the Dynamo-Electric Machine," by Mr. H. Somerville.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Duty of doing one's best," by Miss E. E. C. Jones.
- MONDAY, March 12, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Decorative Treatment of Artificial Foliage," IV., by Mr. Hugh Stannus.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Montenegro and its Border Lands," by Mr. H. W. Czeana-Hardy.
- TUESDAY, March 13, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," IX., by Prof. C. Stewart.
8 p.m. Colonial Institute.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Liverpool Overhead Railway and its Electrical Equipment."
8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Two Funeral Urns from Loo Choo," by Prof. Basil Hall Chamberlain; "The Bones of the Ancient Assyrians and Egyptians," by Mr. C. J. Longman; "Flint Implements of a Primitive Type from Old (Pre-Glacial) Hill Gravels in Berkshire," by Mr. O. A. Shrubsole.
- WEDNESDAY, March 14, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Fountain Air Brush," by Mr. Charles L. Burdick.
- THURSDAY, March 15, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Vedānta Philosophy," III., by Prof. Max Müller.
8 p.m. Linnean: "Certain Authentic Cyperaceae of Linnaeus," by Mr. C. B. Clarke; "The Development of the Mucilage-Canals of the Marattiaceae," by Mr. G. Brenner.
8 p.m. Chemical: "The Action of Hydroxylamine on Formic Aldehyde," by Prof. Dunstan and Dr. A. Bossi.
8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coastlands of the North Atlantic," X., by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.
8.30 p.m. Historical: "Suffolk and the Villains' Insurrection," by Mr. Edgar Powell.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, March 16, 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "Coal Storage in the United States," by Messrs. S. H. Barracough and L. S. Marks.
8 p.m. Viking Club: "Prehistoric Art in the North," by Mr. J. Romilly Allen.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Scientific Work of Tyndall," by Lord Rayleigh.
- SATURDAY, March 17, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light," VI., by Lord Rayleigh.

SCIENCE.

INDIAN JOTTINGS.

THE quarterly record of the Archaeological Survey of India, known as Epigraphia Indica, will henceforth be published as a supplement to the Indian Antiquary, under the editorship of Dr. E. Hultsch, of Madras. The annual subscription for the two periodicals together is 48s.

THE Trustees of the British Museum have published a Catalogue of Sanskrit, Pali, and Prakrit Books acquired during the years 1876-92, supplementary to the Catalogue of the late Dr. E. Haas. The compiler is Prof. Cecil Bendall, who adds to his experience in the Museum the advantage of having visited India. The principles of transliteration and nomenclature are substantially those laid down by Dr. Haas, which have also been followed in the Catalogues of the vernacular literatures. But there are certain new features in the present work: The publishing activity of the Jains has led to the addition to the title of "Prakrit"; and the list of Prakrit books may be found in the subject index. Special attention has been paid to the publications of learned societies, most of which are placed under the heading of "Academics." Here, for example, may be found the issues of the Pali Text Society; while those of the Benares Sanskrit College must be looked for under "Benares." It is somewhat surprising to notice how small a space is occupied by translations of the Bible. The Baptist missionaries of Serampur alone attempted the whole, but the British Museum does not possess a complete copy. Finally, Prof. Bendall has appended a most useful subject index, which shows at a glance the general character and the relative importance of the several classes of Sanskrit literature. Religion, of course, predominates; but it is closely followed by Philosophy; then come Poetry, Medicine, and Grammar. Pali and Prakrit works are classified separately.

THE proprietor of the Nirnayāsagar Press, Bombay, has just published an edition of the Vedāntasāra, with the Commentaries of Nrisinhasarasvati and Rāmātīrtha. It is edited by Colonel Jacob, of the Bombay Staff Corps, who has appended full notes and indexes.

IN No. 3 of the Philological Part of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1893, Dr. A. F. Rudolf Hoernle gives a detailed description of some of the rarer coins he has examined under the Treasure Trove Act. He deals especially with new types, or new varieties of known types, of the independent Sultans of Bengal, in the fifteenth century. It is curious to learn that a large find of these was made as far east as Sibsagar, in Assam. Another class of coins treated are those of the Kalachuri dynasty of Chedi (twelfth century), of which about sixty have been found recently in the Central Provinces. The figure on the obverse is in every case so obscure that Dr. Hoernle doubts whether it is intended to represent a monkey, an elephant, or a bull. The same number contains an account of eleven Sanskrit MSS. recently acquired by the Government from Nepal. Apart from their age, which ranges from 1026 to 1481 A.D., they are of importance from their contents. One is a complete copy (the only one known) of the grammatical treatise called the "Chandra-vyakarana"; another is a commentary (hitherto unknown) on the Buddhist philosophical work called "Bodhi-Charyavatara," which was possibly written and also copied at the very time of the introduction of the reformed Buddhism from Bengal into Tibet in the eleventh century; yet another, labelled "unknown," appears to be a new redaction or version of the original Paisachi Vrihatkatha by Gunadhya, which may have been copied before either Kshemendra or Somadeva wrote their well-known versions of the same work. On palaeographical grounds, this is judged to be the most ancient of all the MSS.

LAST year the Asiatic Society of Bengal formed a third section or department for the study of anthropological and cognate subjects, of which Mr. H. H. Risley is secretary. Three numbers of the Part of the Journal devoted to this section are now before us. Mr. Risley himself contributes an elaborate code of instructions (with illustrations) for taking anthropometrical observations. Babu Sarat Chandra Das describes marriage customs in Sikkim and Tibet, the most important of which seems to be the drinking of chang (translated "wine," but more probably "rice-beer.") There are traces of the survival of marriage by capture, more especially in Sikkim. Nothing is said about polyandry. There are two papers by Babu Sarat Chandra Mitra, about superstitions regarding drowning and drowned persons in Bengal (illustrated widely from all quarters), and about a being or animal supposed to guard hidden treasures. No. 3 is entirely occupied with an account of modern customs among the Bedouin of the Hauran, printed in Arabic and in a translation, which was procured by Mr. Charles M. Doughty from a school-teacher in the Lebanon.

No. 3 of the Natural History Part of the Journal contains two papers by Mr. Thomas H. Holland, of the Geological Survey. In one, he discusses the petrology of Job Charnock's tombstone, the oldest monument in Calcutta, erected about 1695, and decides that it must have come from Southern India, probably from Pallaveram. As the type of rock has not hitherto been described, he suggests for it the name of "Charnockite."

THE December number of the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.) consists of a single article; but it runs to no less than forty pages of letterpress, and is illustrated with twenty-four photographic plates and a map. Major R. C. Temple, the editor, here describes a short visit which he paid in April, 1892, to the sculptured caves in the neighbourhood of Maulmein, in Burma. In Amherst district alone there are more than twenty of such caves. They are situated in hills of limestone rock, rising abruptly out of the plain, and have evidently been excavated by the sea at no remote period. They are crowded with Buddhist remains, of all sizes, materials, and ages, some of them being carved out of stalactites and stalagmites, which may possibly furnish evidence of date. Major Temple gives an elaborate account of these objects, showing how they explain the forms of many of the small images deposited about the greater pagodas in Burma, still used by the people as objects of worship. Inscriptions are rare. But it is said that some of the caves contain libraries of Talaing MSS., which certainly ought to be at once rescued from destruction. The oldest remains seem, from their style, to go back to the period of Cambodian supremacy (the sixth to the tenth century, A.D.); while others show Siamese influence (thirteenth and fourteenth century). Some are apparently of Hindu type: that is to say, they show Vaishnava or Saiva emblems. But Major Temple argues that the real explanation is to be found in the fact that mediæval Northern Buddhism, penetrated with Tantrik symbolism, once prevailed not only in Burma, but throughout the Cambodian peninsula. He points out that the researches of Brian Hodgson in Nepal seventy years ago, as well as the modern discoveries of Babu Sarat Chandra Das, point to the same conclusion. Finally, we should mention that this number of the Indian Antiquary may be purchased separately for 18s.

THE January number of the Indian Antiquary contains the first instalment of a series of papers on "The Devil Worship of the Tuluvas," mainly based upon some MSS. purchased by Major Temple at the sale of Dr. Burnell's library. The Tuluvas are a very primitive tribe in South Kanara, who have preserved not only their own branch of the Dravidian tongue, but also archaic customs and traditions. Their language has been printed in the Kanarese character by the Basel Mission at Mangalore. One of these missionaries seems to have helped Burnell in making his collections twenty years ago; and another, the Rev. A. Männer (now also dead), supplied Major Temple with a transliteration of the Tulu texts, and with valuable notes. One of the papers is a very interesting account by Burnell of an incantation, at which he was himself present in 1872, which was celebrated by the head-man of the caste of toddy-drawers, corresponding to the Shanars of the Tamil country. Major Temple draws attention to the remarkable likeness, both in form and contents, between these stories of demons of Southern India and those told about saints and heroes in the North. The illustrations include a coloured plate of devildancers, drawn by a native artist and reproduced by Mr. Griggs.

PART III. of the Journal of the Buddhist Text Society of India is less interesting than its predecessors. Babu Sarat Chandra Das is, as usual, the chief contributor. He explains the motives of scientific curiosity which induced him to undertake his adventurous journeys into the heart of Tibet, and describes the doctrine of transmigration as believed by the Lamas. There are also two independent accounts of a Sanskrit treatise entitled "Bhaktisataka," written by a Bengali Brahman in the fourteenth or fifteenth century, which is popular to this day in Ceylon. Its interest is two-fold: as showing that Buddhism was apparently then known in Bengal, and also that communication was open with Ceylon. Among the illustrations is a picture from "The Forbidden Temple" of the Emperor of China at Peking, representing the five visions of Khedubje, a Tantrik myth which had its origin in Bengal as late as the fifteenth century, and passed thence into Tibet.

THE last number of the Journal of the Anthropological Society of Bombay (No. 3 of vol. iii.) contains two articles worthy of mention. One of these is a detailed catalogue of the funeral expenses of a Parsi who died at Bombay in 1763. The prices quoted show an increase of about two-fold, as compared with the present time. The other is an account of the ceremonies practised by the Vaishnava Brahmans of Madras on the occasion of a girl attaining puberty. Oddly enough, this is contributed by a Mahomedan.

WE may also mention here, for the benefit of those it concerns, a little volume of Lectures on Hindu Religion, Philosophy, and Yoga (Calcutta: the New Britannia Press). The author is K. Chakravarti, the founder and secretary of a "psycho-religious" society, styled the Yoga Samaj. Among the subjects treated of are: the spiritualism of ancient India, the Yoga philosophy of Patanjali, the religious and medical aspects of the Tantras, &c.

SCIENCE NOTES.

AT the meeting of the British Association, to be held at Oxford, in August, under the presidency of the Marquis of Salisbury, the presidents of the sections will be as follows: Mathematics and Physics, Prof. Arthur W. Rücker; Chemistry, Prof. Harold B. Dixon; Geology, Mr. Lazarus Fletcher; Biology, Prof. J. Bayley Balfour; Geography, Captain W. J. L. Wharton; Economic Science and Statistics, Prof. C. F. Bastable; Mechanical Science, Prof. A. B. Kennedy; Anthropology, Sir W. H. Flower; and Physiology, Prof. E. A. Schäfer. Prof. J. Nicholson and Mr. W. H. White will deliver the evening discourses. Sir Douglas Galton will be nominated as president of the Association for the meeting at Ipswich in 1895.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution on Friday next, March 16, will be delivered by Lord Rayleigh, his subject being "The Scientific Work of Tyndall."

MRS. RAE has presented to the Royal Institution a portrait of her late husband, Dr. John Rae, the Arctic explorer.

THE old pupils of M. Bertrand, perpetual secretary of the Académie des Sciences, propose to commemorate his jubilee as professor, by having a medal struck.

MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON announce for immediate publication the thirteenth edition of Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Extensive re-arrangements have been effected in the old matter, and Prof. Everett has added four entirely new chapters. Among the additions are: a new chapter on thermodynamics, two chapters dealing with recent investigations in electrical science, a chapter on systems of coaxial lenses, and sections relating to contemporary experiments in heat and electromagnetism. The number of unworked examples in the optical section has also been largely augmented.

THE seventeenth thousand of Sir Robert Ball's Starland is now on sale. Mr. Gladstone, writing to the author a short time since respecting this work, remarked: "I have now finished reading your luminous and delightful 'Starland,' and am happy to be, in a sense, enrolled amongst your young pupils."

TITLES become more and more troublesome among men of science. On page 200 of the second edition of The Two Spheres, by T. E. S. T. (1894), we read:

"Lord Huxley once wrote: 'It is, and always has been, a favourite tenet of mine that atheism is as absurd, logically speaking, as polytheism.' Even on the question of miracles, Argyll writes," &c., &c.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ASIATIC.—(Monday, Feb. 13.)

LORD REAY, president, in the chair.—Mr. R. F. St. Andrew St. John read a paper, entitled "The Story of Thuwannashan, or Suvanna Sāma Jātaka, according to the Burmese Version, published at the Hanthawati Press, Rangoon." A peculiarly interesting feature of this Jātaka is the fact that it has undoubtedly been depicted on the western gateway of the Sanchi Tope (Figure 1 in Plate xxxvi. of Fergusson's Tree and Serpent Worship), and will illustrate what curiously erroneous theories may be evolved from imperfect data. I feel convinced that a complete knowledge of the Jātaka and other stories current in Buddhist literature would enable one to explain most of the scenes depicted on these and other Buddhist ruins. That trees and serpents were, and are, largely worshipped is not to be denied; but I think it will be clearly seen from this and other plates that Fergusson did not draw correct deductions regarding the Sanchi and Amravati Topes. In his second edition he admits this. Fergusson gives the dates of the Sanchi gates as first century A.D.; if this be correct, it proves that this is one of the early Jātakas and that the so-called ten greater Jātakas are not all late compositions. At Plate xxxii. of the northern gate we have the Vessantara Jātaka, and at Plate xxiv. 2 Bhūridatta. Here is what Fergusson says at Plate xxxvi. (p. 138 of the first edition). "The upper portion of the plate represents one of those transactions between the Hindus and Dasyus, which have probably only a local meaning. . . . In the centre of the upper part of the picture a Hindu chief, or Rājā, accompanied by his minister, is conversing with a Dasyu, whose two wives, or daughters, are seen beyond him on his left hand. On the Rājā's right are two of the ordinary circular huts of the Dasyus, in front of which a man and woman are seated naked. They are sitting on their lower garments, and their upper cloaks are hung in their huts. Two monkeys are playing above them. Between these two huts is seen the fire pot, which is almost an invariable accompaniment whenever these Dasyus are represented. Below it is the water-pot, and beside it the ladle or pincers. From their position here they would seem to be the sacred implements of the tribe. Did fire and serpent worship go together?" In his second edition (p. 151), Fergusson says: "Mr. Beal is of opinion that Fig. 1, Plate xxxvi., represents the principal scenes of the Sāma Jātaka as quoted below, and I am not prepared to say this may not be correct; but, if so, the form of the fable must have been considerably altered since the first century, as Sanchi, the king, does not kill the boy by accident. He is being deliberately shot by a soldier. The king is standing unarmed at some distance with his minister beside him, talking to an ascetic, accompanied by his two wives or daughters, and, consequently, not Dakhala, which, otherwise, we might fancy him to be from the repetition of the same figure occurring sometimes in these bas-reliefs. It is probable that the figure in front of the Pansalas are meant to be represented as blind, not only from their being naked, but also from the monkeys stealing the fruit and pulling the thatch off the roof, with other circumstances. The two figures in the centre do look like a reduplication of the boy and the minister; and it is absolutely necessary it should be so, if the Sāma Jātaka is to be identified at all with this sculpture. . . . It is going rather too far to represent the king abdicating his throne and becoming the slave of two blind hermits, because one of his soldiers had shot an innocent boy!" Both Beal and Fergusson quote Hardy, whose summary of the Sāma Jātaka in Eastern Monachism is very brief. Where Fergusson got the idea of a minister and soldiers I cannot understand. Nor can I agree with Beal in thinking that the figure standing between Sāma and the archers is the Devi. It is clearly a man. I would suggest that we must look at this picture as composed of two halves, the one to our right being the ordinary part of Sāma's life, and that to the left the extraordinary. On the right we see the blind Dukūla and Pārikā, and Sāma coming to draw water at the Migasammattā, his usual vocation. On our left the king shoots and then converses with him. Above we see the Devi with Dukūla and Pārikā making the sacca kiriyā, the king, wearing his cloth ungirt in the usual manner, standing behind. He then appears again in the centre, taking leave of Sāma and promising to lead a good life. The head of a duck in the water behind the left-hand group shows that they are on the bank of a bend in the river.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. Chalmers, Prof. Bendall, Prof. Rhys Davids, and Dr. Gaster took part.

HISTORICAL.—(Anniversary Meeting, Thursday, Feb. 15.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president, in the chair.—The secretary read the report of the council on the literary and financial position of the society during the past year. Lord Rosebery, Prof. Max Müller, and Prof. Pelham were elected vice-presidents; Prof. Maitland, Prof. Tout, Messrs. Hubert Hall, Leadam, and Oman, members of council; and Sir J. H. Ramsay, a fellow.—The president then delivered his annual address. Last year, he said, he spoke of the uses of Thucydides to the modern statesman. He was not sure that he could do better on the present occasion than answer the same question with regard to the most interesting of Latin historians, Tacitus. He wished to narrow as much as possible the field of inquiry. He did not propose to enter into the much-discussed question as to the trustworthiness of Tacitus, or as to the value, or want of value, of the materials he used. No ancient writer could come up to the standard of accuracy now insisted upon in historical composition; and we had only to be thankful for what we had got, without sighing over the absence of what would have been better. Nor again, would anything be said about the merit of Tacitus considered purely from the literary side. He stood absolutely alone as the employer of the lapidary style of writing: a style infinitely to be admired, but never to be imitated without extreme peril. The president then took a rapid survey of the historian's writings, merely looking at thoughts which seemed to have a direct modern application, not attempting to be exhaustive, but hoping to suggest to some one the idea of a more complete review upon the same lines. The whole of the narrative of the mutiny of the Pannonian and German legions might have been pondered over at various periods of recent history by those who had to occupy themselves with the discipline of armies. Even at this moment some portions of it might, perhaps, be studied with advantage not far from the scenes in which the story is laid. The most notable thing in the first book of the Annals for the guidance of statesmen was the golden dictum of Tiberius—"Deorum injuriæ diis curæ." What rivers of blood would not its frank acceptance have prevented! As to another point, the care for the verdict of posterity had probably never been so strong an influence with men of action as the historian supposed, and we might doubt whether it had ever been weaker than it was at the present day. Count the men now directing the affairs of this Empire. How many were there whose thoughts went, at the very furthest, beyond the next election? A remark in the Annals—"the Roman state has become so satiated with glory that it desires peace and quietness even for foreign nations"—was not without its application to the England of our own day, as its converse explained to a great extent the unrest of contemporary France. That recalled to the president's recollection a talk he once had with Prévost-Paradol, who spoke of the confirmed dislike of France for England, and who, on being told that the English people had long got over feelings of the kind, said, "Ah, vous n'êtes pas les derniers vaincus!" In conclusion, the president remarked that the main business of the Royal Historical Society was to delve among the records of the past and to bring new knowledge to light. That knowledge, however, could only be made available to the world at large, when it had been worked into a literary form by those who possessed at once the power of separating the true from the false, and of giving to their thought lucid and, if possible, memorable expression. He could not believe that they did ill at these anniversary meetings, especially when they were addressed by one who made no claim to be a specialist, if they paused to consider the works of some of those who could claim with justice to be in the first flight of historians. He was once the possessor of a curious book called Essays by a Gentleman who has left his Lodgings. The author was no less a person than the late Earl Russell; and the best thing in it, the president went to think, was a diary kept at Rome by the Wandering Jew in the days of Tacitus. If any of those present had had the opportunities of that much-travelled person, the great historian, perhaps, would have interested them more by his sketches of character and by his pointed remarks on political events than by political maxims properly so called. For these we must turn to more modern writers, most of whom had, however, profited not a little by the labours of the world-famous historian under notice that evening.—On the motion of Mr. Hyde-Clarke, seconded by Sir Donald Wallace, the president was cordially thanked for his address.

PHILOLOGICAL.—(Friday, March 2.)

PROF. NAPIER, president, in the chair.—Mr. W. M. Lindsay read a paper on "The Accentual Element in Early Latin Verse, with a New Theory of the Saturnian Metre." The Latin accent, he showed, was one mainly of stress, as may be seen from the syncope and reduction of unaccented vowels at all periods of the language, while the Greek accent was one mainly of pitch, though by the beginning of the Christian era the stress-element had begun to assert itself. In the Roman imitations of the Greek quantitative metres the Latin accent, owing to its stress character, forced itself into recognition. The reconciliation of accent and metrical ictus in the various species of metres was illustrated, especially the reconciliation of the sentence-accent in the dialogue metres of the early dramatists. The two characteristics of this early Latin poetry are alliteration and regard for accent; hence the probability that the native Latin metre, the Saturnian, was accentual as well as alliterative. The quantitative theory of the Saturnian metre breaks down, when applied to the extant lines: Naevius makes -a (Fem. Sg. and Neut. Pl.) short in his dramatic poetry, and can hardly be supposed to make it long in his Saturnians; Plautus does not allow an ictus like puleris in the second foot of an iambic line, so that we cannot suppose this ictus in the Saturnian ferunt pulcras creterras, &c.; no Latin poet tolerates the ictus facile, subigit, an ictus required by the quantitative scansion of facile facies superases, &c., subigit omne Loucanum, &c. The mere fact that every extant Saturnian line begins with an accented syllable is enough to show us the true nature of the metre. The metre was accentual, the secondary accent of quadrisyllables being taken into account at the beginning of the line, that of five-syllabled words at any part of the line. This secondary accent was a relic of the earlier uniform accentuation of the first syllable; and that this earlier accentuation had not been discarded long before the time of Livius Andronicus can be seen from a word like dimidius, for the change of e to i in the second syllable shows that the accent still rested on the first at the period when short unaccented e became i. In one class of words, quadrisyllables with the first three syllables short, the accent remained on the first syllable till the second century n.c. at least (e.g., bāl(i)neae). The counting of syllables, a leading feature of Romance poetry, was the third rhythmical factor of the Saturnian metre, seven syllables being required in the first half-line, six (with a permissible five) in the second. Occasionally a word like capitibus (scanned by Ennius as a dactyl), ingenium (like Horace's principium, consilium) might represent a trisyllable. The true scheme of the metre is: A-type:

XX(,) XX, XXX || XXX, XXX (or || XXXX, XX)

e.g., dibunt mātum Metelli || Naevio poetæ (or || adlocutus summi).

B-type:

XX(,) XX, XXX || XXXX, XX (or || XXX, XX)

e.g., prim(a) inēdit Cōreris || Proserpina puer (or || fuisse virum), and its laws of elision and prosodical hiatus more resemble those of Ennius than of Virgil. The paper concluded with a statement of Prof. Stengel's derivation of the Romance decasyllable (originally of thirteen syllables?) from the Latin Saturnian.

FINE ART.

MINOR EXHIBITIONS.

MR. FULLEYLOVE'S "Paris To-day," a series of fifty or sixty water-colours, with here and there a pencil drawing of great character, make, from a certain point of view, not only one of the most interesting exhibitions the Fine Art Society has held, but one of the most comprehensive and artistic records that Paris has ever received. If Mr. Fulleylove, as a colourist, has not quite the subtlety and variety of some of his brethren, his colour is yet invariably harmonious, and his tone is restful, save on the rare occasions when the work is in a high key; and even then he succeeds, at all events, in getting the effect that he has wished to get. But it is by his draughtsmanship of architecture—a draughtsmanship which never ceases to be pictorial or picturesque because it is likewise learned—that Mr. Fulleylove's drawings make their most convincing appeal. Trained originally as an architect, he yet betrays nothing of the dryness of architectural study; nor is it even very easy to perceive what is the architectural style for which he has most affection. It is stated and understood to be broadly "classic"; and if that is so, it is a matter in which he differs from Prout, though he may agree with Turner. But certainly, in the various drawings of "Paris To-day," he displays not unfrequently what would appear to be a sympathy with Gothic work. To this the Notre Dame studies bear witness. Since Méryon himself, no one, probably, has drawn "the Stryge" so powerfully as Mr. Fulleylove. But as good as anything that is architectural at all, whether Gothic, Renaissance, bastard Renaissance, or modern Classic, are the drawings of the Luxembourg Gardens; while outside Paris itself, Mr. Fulleylove has been most happy—adding grace and suavity to all that is decisive and energetic—in his treatment of the Park of St. Cloud and of the wonderful landscape with the Terrace at St. Germain-en-Laye. Altogether, the exhibition is of an uncommon character, and demands a visit. For the new edition of Mr. Frederick Wedmore's Pastorals of France and Renunciations, which was published lately by Messrs. Mathews & Lane, Mr. Fulleylove designed a title-page of unique character in the style of the rococo; and for Mr. Fulleylove's exhibition the author of those stories has supplied "A Note" on the Paris that he loves. We may add that Messrs. Rowney & Co. are to reproduce in colours more than one of the most recent of the Paris drawings.

MR. WILSON STEER'S exhibition of pictures, which include both portraiture and landscape, is more attractive and more individual than some of the shows held recently at the Goupil Gallery; and we are glad that Messrs. Bousod, Valadon & Co. afford the public the opportunity of seeing together in sufficient quantity the work of one of the most interesting, because one of the most refined and sensitive, of our younger painters. Mr. Steer is indeed wholly, but most acceptably, modern.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BOTTICELLI'S "SPRING."

Firth College, Sheffield: Feb. 20, 1894.

MR. Grant Allen will find in Dr. Warburg's Sandro Botticelli's "Geburt der Venus und Frühling" (Hamburg, 1893) abundant evidence to answer his questions and disprove his theory. Dr. Warburg gives a most complete account of the literature on the subject, ancient and modern.

His conclusion is that the source of Botticelli's inspiration is to be found in two passages of Politian. The first is in the ode, "Veris descriptio," dedicated to Zenobio Acciajuoli:

"It ver et Venus et veris prænuntius ante
Pennatus graditur Zephyrus, vestigia propter
Flora quibus mater præsargens ante viai
Cuncta coloribus egregiis et odoribus opplet"
(v. 735 foll.).

The second is in the "Rusticus" (1483):

"Auricomae, jubare exorto de nubibus adsunt
Horae, quae coeli portas atque atria servant,

Et Venus et Venerem parvi comitantur Amores
Floraque lascivo parat oscula grata marito:
In mediis resoluta comas nudata papillas
Ludit et alterno terram pede Gratia pulsat
Uda choros agitat nais . . ."

Another passage in Politian suggests that the original title was "Il regno di Venere." It is in the "Giostra," st. 68-70:

"Ma fatta Amor la sua bella vendetta
Mossei lieto pel negro acre a volo;
E giunse al regno di sua madre in fretta
Ov' è de' picciol auo' fratei lo stuolo
Al regno ove Grazia si diletta,
Ove Belta' di fiori al crin fra brolo,
Ove tutto lascivo drieto a Flora
Zefiro vola e la verde erba infiore."

It is not necessary to point out how great was Politian's influence on the classical knowledge of the time, nor how close was his connexion with Cosimo's court.

These passages show beyond a doubt that the figures on the right are Zephyr and Flora, that Spring is scattering flowers before them, and that the central figure is Venus. The suggestion that the first three are months is impossible, if the central figure is Venus; for April is the goddess's own month. Spring, as described in the Hypnerotomachia Poliphili, closely resembles Botticelli's nymph: "una pulcherrima dea cum volante trece cincte de rose ed altri fiori, cum tenuissimo supparo aemulante gli membri subjecti. . . Fiore et rose divotamente spargeva."

Mr. Grant Allen's further theory, that the figure on the left is not Mercury but Favonius, is easily disproved by the passage from Seneca de benef. 1, 3, quoted by Janitschek, as an explanation of Mercury's presence:—

"Quare tres Gratiae et quare sorores sint et quare manibus implexis et quare ridentem juvenem et virgines solutae ac perlucida veste. Alii quidem videri volunt unam esse quae det beneficia, alteram quae accipiat, tertiam quae reddat. Alii beneficiorum tria genera, promercentium, reddentium, simul et accipientium redditumque. . ."

Ergo et Mercurius una stat, non quia beneficia ratio commendat vel oratio sed quia pictori ita visum est."

That the received interpretation is quite in accord with the current views of the Renaissance is undoubted. Cartari's Le Immagini degli Dei degli Antichi (of which, unfortunately, I only possess a late Paduan edition of 1608), which was a popular book in the sixteenth century, contains the following:

"Oltre alle Gratie e agli Amori scrive Plutarco, che soleano gli antichi mettere con la statua di Venere quella di Mercurio."

"Imagini delle Gratie guidate da Mercurio dinotante che il giovare e la beneficenza deve essere fatta con ragione, &c."

"Il quarto . . . è Zefiro o Ponente secondo i moderni, il quale perco di primavera veste la terra di verdi herbe e fa fiorire i verdeggianti prati. Onde venne, che le favole lo finsero marito di Flora, che già dicemmo adorata da gli antehi come Dea dei fiori la imagine della quale fu di bella ninfa . . . portava ghirlanda in capo di diversi fiori e veste parimente tutta dipinta a fiori di colori diversi, del quali non si adorni la terra quando si fiorisce."

These passages might all have been written as an interpretation of Botticelli's picture; and it would surely be absurd to suppose that he used figures so well known, and so characteristic as those of Flora, Zephyr, and Mercury, to represent Favonius and the months, personifications which are all but unknown in art of this kind.

A glance at the "Venus and Mars" attributed to Botticelli in the National Gallery is sufficient to suggest that the central figure is intended for Venus. She wears almost the same long fine linen garment, and has her hair braided fantastically in long plaits brought round under the arms and clasped between her breasts.

As to Mr. Grant Allen's further theory, that the picture belonged to a series of the Four Seasons. The pictures are, according to Dr. Warburg, not the same size; and we have, besides, Vasari's explicit statement:—

"Per la città in diverse case fece tondi di sua mano e femmine ignude assai; delle quale oggi ancora a Castello, villa del Duca Cosimo sono due quadri figuranti l'uno Venere che nasce, e quelli aure e venti che fanno venire in terra con gli amori, e così un'altra Venere che le Grazie la fioriscono, dinotando la Primavera; le quali da lui con la grazie si veggono espresse."

It is scarcely likely that Vasari could have failed to know of such a series, if it existed.

W. C. F. ANDERSON.

A ROMAN TILE FROM GLOUCESTER.

Christ Church, Oxford: March 8, 1894.

MR. John Bellows has recently made an interesting discovery at Gloucester. In some excavations near the Cross, the centre of the city, remains of some considerable building have been found, and among them a tile, of which Mr. Bellows has very kindly sent me a squeeze. It bears three well-formed letters:

R P G.

After the G is a fracture. Mr. Bellows suggests as an expansion r(es) p(ublica) G(levensis), and I think he is right. Tiles found abroad at Carsoli, Augusta Praetoria, and Dierna bear respectively R P C, R P A, and D R P DIERNA, and provide adequate parallels (see also Wilmanns, 2791). It has long been known that Glevum was a colonia, founded pretty certainly under Nerva; but the existing references to its rank were not so numerous that we are not glad of another. It has been suggested that a tile in the stone screen of Berkeley Church (Ephemeris iii. 123, p. 142) may also refer to Gloucester; but the reading is uncertain, and another specimen of the stamp appears to have been found at Bath, where it is now in the museum (C. vii. 1252—there read wrongly).

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE two following exhibitions will open next week: the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, in Piccadilly; and the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers, in Pall Mall East.

SOME changes have been made this year in the regulations for the British Institution scholarships. The limit of age for candidates is raised to twenty-five years; and £25 will be added to the scholarship in sculpture and to one of the two scholarships in painting, making them of the total value of £75, should the work of the successful candidates be of sufficient merit. The subjects chosen are: for painting, "Diana and Endymion"; for sculpture, "The Flight of Aeneas from Troy"; for drawing, the first stanza of Gray's "Elegy."

AT the meeting of the Anthropological Institute to be held next Tuesday, Mr. C. J. Longman will read a paper on "The Bows of the Ancient Assyrians and Egyptians," with lime-light illustrations.

THE Municipal Art Society of New York invites a competition for the decoration of the court-room ofoyer and terminer in the criminal court building, which is occupied by a judge of the Supreme Court for cases of great gravity only. The entire room is to be decorated, at a cost of 5000 dollars (£1000). The ceiling is to be coloured in flat tints. Three panels on one wall are to be filled with figure compositions of allegorical or historical subjects, appropriate to the character of the room: these are to be painted on canvas, which will be fastened on the wall with white lead. The rest of the walls are to be decorated in flat tints, or with figures and ornament, at the discretion of the artist. We may add that the president of the society is Mr. Richard M. Hunt, the architect; and the secretary, Mr. E. Hamilton Bell, 217, West Fifty-seventh-street, New York.

WE quote the following from the Cairo correspondent of the Times:

"M. de Morgan, chief of the Antiquities Department, claims to have made the discovery of the long-sought entrance to the mysterious brick pyramid of Dashur, near Saqqara. After numerous borings in the ground surrounding the pyramid, he found, 27 ft. below the surface, a gallery 230 ft. long cut in the rock and inclining upwards towards the pyramid. Fifteen chambers were found, containing numerous tombs and sarcophagi of high functionaries (among them the sarcophagus of a queen), all of the XIIth Dynasty, over 2000 years before Christ. It is expected that further researches will reveal the sarcophagus of King Usurtesen III."

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE Saturday programme at the Crystal Palace included a Ballad for Orchestra, "The Legend of Excalibur," by Mr. Walter Wesché, the music of which is smooth, of agreeable quality, and well scored. It is not real programme music; for the composer only wishes it to be known that certain scenes from Tennyson and Mallory suggested the work. It is remarkable how little inclined Beethoven was to indicate his source of inspiration, although he always worked to a mental picture. Once, but only when pressed by one of his friends as to the meaning of a certain Sonata, he replied, "Read Shakspeare's 'Tempest.'" Herr Hugo Becker gave a fine performance of a Concerto for violoncello by Haydn. The father of instrumental music wrote, it is said, six Concertos for that instrument; but, up to now, only the one performed at this concert has appeared in print. It is marked Op. 101. Pohl, in his biography of Haydn, says it was written for Kraft, a member of Prince Esterhazy's band, and some authorities even assert that it was composed by Kraft himself. The music is quaint and pleasing, and showy for the solo instrument. The programme included Wagner's fine "Overture to Faust," and Beethoven's seldom heard Symphony No. 1. Mlle. Rose Olitzka made her first appearance as vocalist, and was most successful.

On the same afternoon, Gounod's "Faust" was given in concert recital form at the Queen's Hall, under the able and vigorous direction of Mr. G. H. Betjemann. The principal vocalists were Mlle. Trebelli, Miss Rosa Green, and Messrs. Lloyd and Santley. It was naturally to be expected that an opera so well known, so much admired, and containing so many lyrical moments, would prove a success; and the result was according to expectation. The revival of some neglected operas would prove an interesting, though at first a somewhat dangerous, speculation.

Miss Eibenschütz played Brahms's two sets of new pieces, Op. 118 and 119, at her piano-forte recital at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. The Intermezzo in E flat minor, omitted when she originally produced the works at the Popular Concerts, is a piece of almost unmitigated gloom, but, by reason of its fine, delicate workmanship, most attractive. Miss Eibenschütz gave a very sympathetic and at times vigorous rendering of the ten numbers. Her reading of Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques" was unequal. Some of the variations were excellent but others lacked poetry; and in the matter of technique there were one or two doubtful moments. Of Schubert's Sonata in D, Op. 53, we only heard the last movement, which was played in a neat, crisp manner. Miss Eibenschütz may be praised for having limited her Chopin selection to two short Etudes; his pieces have been too much played, and often by pianists who cannot see the music for the notes.

Mr. Algernon Ashton gave a chamber concert at Prince's Hall on Wednesday evening. His Sonata in A for pianoforte and violin is a clever work. Of the three movements, the second "Larghetto" is the most inspired; the principal theme is of noble character. Four "Lively Pieces" for violoncello and pianoforte were received with great favour; and Mr. W. H. Squire's admirable cello playing deserves mention, for the composer has written music for the stringed instrument by no means comfortable. Four songs for soprano, sung by Miss M. Eaton, showed no special character as music, while the constant high notes for the voice will not bring them into favour with vocalists. Mr. William Paull, a promising baritone singer, gave Mr. Ashton's Op. 1, a "Legendary Ballad," written many years ago. The music, of Loewe-Schubert type, presents many points of interest. Of the bad policy of giving a whole programme of his compositions we have spoken on a former occasion. Mr. Ashton, however, perseveres. He is clever and deserves success; and it is on that account that we regret perseverance which savours of obstinacy, and, but for the artist's earnestness, might be mistaken for conceit.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

IT is proposed to bring out, in a limited edition, the contents of the important MS. in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, usually, but erroneously, called "Queen Elisabeth's Virginal Book." The publication will be edited by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland and Mr. W. Barclay Squire. This announcement will be welcome to all who know the importance of early English harpsichord music.

At the South Place Institute, on Sunday, March 18, at 3.45 p.m., Mr. E. F. Jacques will give a lecture on "Robert Schumann, Composer and Critic."

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,
WINDSOR CASTLE,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,
PITTI, FLORENCE,
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,
FLORENCE,
AMSTERDAM,
THE HAGUE,

LOUVRE, PARIS,
LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
HERMITAGE, ST. PETERS-
BURG,
PRADO, MADRID,
VATICAN, ROME,
HAARLEM, FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF EXAMPLES OF MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.
NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

Now ready, cloth, prices 1s.

A SYSTEM OF LUCID SHORTHAND.

DEvised BY

WILLIAM GEORGE SPENCER.

With a Prefatory Note by HERBERT SPENCER.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

"VINOLIA" SHAVING STICKS.

Premier 6d., Toilet 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., Vestal 2s.

"VINOLIA" SHAVING CAKES.

Premier 1s., Toilet 2s., Vestal 3s.

"VINOLIA" SHAVING FOAM.

Toilet 1s., 1s. 6d., Vestal 2s. 6d.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES, Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

READY ON MONDAY NEXT.

NEW SECTION OF VOL. III. (EVERYBODY—EZOD), 5s.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, LL.D.

NOTICE.—The present position of the Work is as follows:—

Vol. I., A and B, and Vol. II., C. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d. each. (Published.)

The Parts comprised in Vols. I. and II. are still sold separately.

Vol. III. D and E.

D. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. (In the press.) | E—EVERY. 12s. 6d. (Published.)

E. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. | EVERYBODY—EZOD. 5s.

Vol. IV. F, G, and H.

F. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A.

JUST PUBLISHED, VOL. III.—WEST AFRICA.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Maps, 7s. 6d.

AN HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES.

By C. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, and the Colonial Office, London.

"A work that should be kept at hand for reference to make our colonial problems intelligible."—Literary World.

ALREADY PUBLISHED.

INTRODUCTION to an HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES.

By C. P. LUCAS, B.A. With 8 Maps. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Vol. I. THE MEDITERRANEAN and EASTERN COLONIES (exclusive of India). With 11 Maps. 5s.

Vol. II. THE WEST INDIES. With 12 Maps. 7s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, with Maps, 7s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY of AFRICA SOUTH of the ZAMBESI.

By the Rev. W. PARR GRESWELL, M.A., under the auspices of the Royal Colonial Institute.

"A very useful and opportune publication by a very competent writer. Few men are better qualified than Mr. Greswell to furnish the student or the traveller with the latest and most authentic information."—Times.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HISTORY of the DOMINION of CANADA. By the SAME AUTHOR. With 11 Maps.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

GEOGRAPHY of the DOMINION of CANADA and NEWFOUNDLAND.

By the SAME AUTHOR. With 10 Maps.

FASC. III.

Immediately, small 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d.

Parts I. and II. published, 2s. 6d. each.

A HEBREW and ENGLISH LEXICON of the OLD TESTAMENT.

With an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic. Based on the Lexicon of WILLIAM GESSENIUS. By FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., S. R. DRIVER, D.D., and CHARLES A. BRIGGS.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH-SWAHILI DICTIONARY. Compiled

for the Use of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa. By A. C. MADAN, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford, and Member of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa.

"RULERS OF INDIA."

NEW VOLUME.

Just published, crown 8vo, with a Map, cloth, 2s. 6d.

SIR THOMAS MUNRO and the BRITISH SETTLEMENT of the MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

By the late JOHN BRADSHAW, M.A., LL.D., Inspector of Schools, Madras.

VOLUMES NOW READY.

Akbar. Albuquerque. Aurangzib. Madhava Rao Sindhia. Lord Clive. Dupleix. Warren Hastings. The Marquess Cornwallis. Haidar Ali and Tipu Sultan. The Marquess Wellesley. The Marquess of Hastings. Montagu Elphinstone. Sir Thomas Munro. Lord William Bentinck. Earl of Auckland. Viscount Hardinge. Ranjit Singh. The Marquess of Dalhousie. Clyde and Strathnairn. Earl Canning. Lord Lawrence. The Earl of Mayo. Earl Amherst. [In the press.]

SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES.

By Sir W. W. HUNTER. Eightieth Thousand. 3s. 6d.

JAMES THOMASON: and the British Settlement of North-Western India.

By Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart. 3s. 6d.

"A most valuable series of monographs, full of historical interest, ably and succinctly written."—World.

Completion of the New Edition of Prof. Wallace's "Logic of Hegel."

Now ready, in 2 vols., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

THE LOGIC of HEGEL. Translated from the "Encyclopædia of the Philosophical Sciences." With Prolegomena to the Study of Hegel's "Logic and Philosophy." By WILLIAM WALLACE, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, and Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford. Second Edition, Revised and Augmented.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN ENQUIRY concerning the HUMAN UNDERSTANDING and AN ENQUIRY concerning the PRINCIPLES of MORALS.

By DAVID HUME. Reprinted from the Posthumous Edition of 1777, and Edited, with an Introduction, Comparative Tables of Contents, and an Analytical Index, by L. A. SELBY-BIGGE, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of University College, Oxford.

"There can be no two opinions as to the acuteness and erudition which the present edition brings to his task."—Times.

Just published, 8vo, with a Map, cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE LIFE and TIMES of JAMES the FIRST

the Conqueror, King of Aragon, Valencia, and Majorca, Count of Barcelona and Urgel, Lord of Montpellier. By F. DARWIN SWIFT, B.A., formerly Scholar of Queen's College, Oxford.

THE OXFORD ORIENTAL SERIES.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.; cloth, cut flush, 6s.

GRAMMAR of the BENGALI LANGUAGE

LITERARY and COLLOQUIAL. By JOHN BEAMES, Bengal Civil Service (Retired).

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A BURMESE READER: being an Easy Introduction to the Written Language, and Companion to Jackson's Grammar. For the Use of Civil Service Students and others who wish to acquire the Language quickly and thoroughly. By R. F. ST. ANDREW ST. JOHN, Hon. M.A., Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, Teacher of Burmese in the University of Oxford and University College, London, and late Deputy-Commissioner in Burmah.

FULL-CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1141.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS		PAGE
THE CORRESPONDENCE OF JOSEPH JERRELL, by T. HUTCHINSON		221
STOFFORD BROOK'S EARLY ENGLISH LITERATURE, by Prof. HERFORD		222
RICHARD GARNETT'S POEMS, by WILLIAM SHARP		223
CANON FREEMANTLE'S TRANSLATION OF JEROME, by the Rev. RONALD BAYNE		224
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE		225
SOME BOOKS ON SOUTHERN EUROPE		226
NOTES AND NEWS		227
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS		228
ORIGINAL VERSES: "EPILOGUE TO A FORTHCOMING VOLUME OF SONNETS," by EUGENE LEE HAMILTON		228
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS		228
ETYMOLOGICAL NOTES, by HENRY BRADLEY		228
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS		229
CORRESPONDENCE
The Supposed Work of St. Adamnan, by E. W. B. Nicholson; The Ogham Sign X, by the Earl of Southesk; "Typology," by G. H. Powell		230
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK		230
THREE TRANSLATIONS OF HERODAS, by Prof. ELLIS		230
SCIENCE NOTES		232
PHILOLOGY NOTES		232
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES		232
THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY		232
THE HIMALAYAS, by CONNO MONKHOUSE		234
LETTERS FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE		234
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY		235
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEOLLOCK		235

ADVERTISER is seeking some POSITION of TRUST with light duties, in an Institute, Museum, or Library, to augment a small pension. Speciality—Microscopy. Highest testimonials.—W. B., 48, Darnley Road, Upper Holloway, N.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture, Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Esthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL of EXPRESSION, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEEVER, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set, With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossip." Is. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Bwlch, Breconshire.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—An EXAMINATION for filling up some VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on 4th APRIL NEXT.—For information, apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

TYPE-WRITING. AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.— Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by BAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

JUST READY, NEW NOVEL BY GEORGE MOORE. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

ESTHER WATERS. By George MOORE. (A Novel dealing with the Problems of Betting in low life.)

OTHER NOVELS BY GEORGE MOORE. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

A DRAMA in MUSLIN. (Seventh Edition.)

A MODERN LOVER (New Edition.)

A MUMMER'S WIFE. (Twentieth Edition.)

VAIN FORTUNE. 6s. With Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. A few Large-paper copies at One Guinea.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MODERN PAINTING. By George MOORE.

"Of the very few books on art that painters and critics should on no account leave unread, this is surely one."—Studio. "His book is one of the best books about pictures that have come into our hands for some years."—St. James's Gazette. "A more original, a better informed, a more suggestive, and, let us add, a more amusing work on the art of to-day, we have never read than this volume."—Glasgow Herald.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

READY 26th March. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS, Author of the "Criminal," "The Nationalisation of Health," &c. With numerous Illustrations. An anthropological and psychological study of the secondary sexual differences which recent investigation has shown to exist among civilised human races.

CONTENTS. Introduction—How to Approach the Problem—The Growth and Proportions of the Body—The Pelvis—The Head—The Senses—Motion—The Intellectual Impulse—Metabolism—The Viscera—The Functional Periodicity of Women—Hypnotic Phenomena—The Affectability of Women—The Artistic Impulse—Morbid Psychic Phenomena—The Variational Tendency of Men—Natality and Mortality—Conclusion.

NOW READY.

New and Cheaper Edition, on antique paper, with Index specially prepared for this Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

AUTHORISED TRANSLATION. COPYRIGHT.

THE KINGDOM of GOD is WITHIN YOU; or, Christianity not as a Mystical Doctrine, but as a New Life-Conception. With a Preface for this Edition by Count LEO TOLSTOI. Translated from the Original Russian MS. by A. DELANO.

"There has grown up in our midst a new movement, which can only be called a Russian presentation of Christianity... Of this movement the greatest man of genius now living is the inspirer and guide."—Daily Chronicle.

"Whatever may be thought either of the philosophical value or of the practical bearings of its arguments, the frankness and sincere purpose of the book make it worth a library of professional exegeses of the Sermon on the Mount."—Scotsman.

JUST ISSUED. Crown 8vo, paper cover, price 1s.

FAMILY HAPPINESS: a Novel. By Count LEO TOLSTOI.

JUST READY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

DRAMATIC ESSAYS by LEIGH HUNT. Selected and Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by WILLIAM ARCHER and ROBERT W. LOWE. With an Engraved Portrait of Leigh Hunt as Frontispiece.

This Volume contains the Criticisms collected by LEIGH HUNT himself in 1807 (long out of print), and the admirable articles which he contributed more than twenty years later to "The Tatler," and never republished.

Just ready, crown 8vo, half-antique, paper boards, 2s. 6d.

THE THEATRICAL "WORLD" for 1893. BY WILLIAM ARCHER.

"That the literary drama dealing with social problems made great advance during 1893 is universally admitted, but if proof were wanted, nothing could be more conclusive than Mr. Archer's series of thoughtful and pointed articles."—Daily Chronicle. "As a record of the year's doings in the theatres, Mr. Archer's volume stands unrivalled."—Daily News.

A NEW ISSUE OF THE

WORKS OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

In 12 vols., crown 8vo, antique paper, with Frontispieces in Photogravure, the cover designed by Walter Crane. 2s. 6d. per vol.

LATEST VOL. READY 26th MARCH.

TWICE-TOLD TALES. With Frontispiece by James Torraces.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, 21, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

ANCIENT SHIPS. By Cecil Torr, M.A. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

RHODES in ANCIENT TIMES. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

RHODES in MODERN TIMES. Demy 8vo, 8s.

THE MUMMY: Chapters on Egyptian Funereal Archaeology. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D., F.S.A., Keeper of the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities, British Museum. Demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 12s. 6d.

"A book that no archaeologist can afford to dispense with.... Dr. Budge's work is a solid compendium of accurate information, not very new or original, but precise, trustworthy, and well-ordered, and, as such, is deserving of cordial recognition."—The Athenaeum.

THE STANFORD DICTIONARY of ANGLICISED WORDS and PHRASES. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press, by C. A. M. FENNELL, D.Litt., late Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, Editor of "Pindar." Demy 4to, pp. xvi. 826, half-buckram, 31s. 6d.; half-morocco, 42s.

FOUR LECTURES on the WESTERN TEXT of the NEW TESTAMENT. By J. RENDEL HARBIS, M.A. Demy 8vo, 6s.

ADVERSARIA CRITICA SACRA. With a short Explanatory Introduction, by the late F. H. A. SCRIVENER, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D. Demy 8vo, 10s.

New and Cheaper Edition, fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

The NEW TESTAMENT in the ORIGINAL GREEK, according to the Text followed in the Authorised Version, together with the Variations adopted in the Revised Version. Edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, by the late F. H. A. SCRIVENER, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D.

A NEW MANUAL for CONFIRMATION CANDIDATES.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM EXPLAINED. By the Rev. A. W. ROBINSON, M.A., Jesus College, Cambridge, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Wakefield. Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

OPINIONS. The BISHOP of SALISBURY.—"Contains much useful information and sensible instruction." The DEAN of ST. PAUL'S.—"It will be most useful in assisting those engaged in teaching children the real meaning of the Church Catechism."

A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. By J. GREAVES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Christ's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By S. L. LONEY, M.A., late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. 7s. 6d.

Or in separate Parts.—Part I., up to and including the Solution of Triangles, 5s. Part II., Analytical Trigonometry, nearly ready, 3s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE SERIES.

HEAT and LIGHT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK, M.A., F.R.S., Assistant Director of the Cavendish Laboratory. Crown 8vo, 5s.

The Two Parts are also published separately—

HEAT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK. Crown 8vo, 3s.

LIGHT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK. Crown 8vo, 3s.

"Teachers who require a book on Light, suitable for the classroom and the laboratory, would do well to adopt Mr. Glazebrook's work."—Nature.

A further List of forthcoming Volumes in this Series will be forwarded on application.

NEW VOLUMES of the PITT PRESS SERIES.

Subject for London B.A. Examination, October, 1894.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPAS. By C. E. GRAYES, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

Subject for the Cambridge Local Examinations, December, 1894.

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. With Introduction and Notes by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

TACITUS.—AGRICOLA and GERMANIA. Edited by the Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College. [Nearly ready.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. . . . We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT

(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.)

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £20, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of Head Master.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

OWANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Tiro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—Dr. PREST-

WICH, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., &c., will give his Paper on "A POSSIBLE CAUSE for the ORIGIN of the TRADITION of the FLOOD," at the Meeting of MONDAY, MARCH 19, at half-past 4. The President to the Chair.

House of the Institute, 8, Adelphi Terrace.
*All Candidates for Membership or Associateship will be admissible to this meeting.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, on 14th June next, or some subsequent date, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR to occupy the newly instituted Chair of HISTORY in the University. The duties will begin from 1st October next. Candidates are requested to lodge 20 printed copies of their application (and Testimonials, if any) in the hands of the undersigned, on or before 12th May.

ALAN E. CLAPFERTON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY

CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1894.

London: Macmillan & Co. | Manchester: J. B. CORNISH.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON &amp; SONS, 53, Pall Mall

Price 1s., post free.

INDIGESTION: its Causes and Cure.

By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.

London: JAMES EPPS & CO. (Ld.), 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle Street.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Pasto.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other

Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own innner."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. Maclaren has published. . . . The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other

Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other

Sermons.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

POPULAR EDITION, WITH PORTRAIT.

Large 4to, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,

with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."

Weekly Dispatch.

"We doubt not it will have an immense circulation."—Echo

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.*BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,*TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

SEE THAT YOU USE

VINOLIA SOAP

NOT A SUPERFATTED IMITATION.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS &amp; CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

THEATRES.*ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. &amp; S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 7.50, THE COTTON KING. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, A. Williams, E. O'Neill, Herbert Flemming; Mesdames Alma Stanley, Hall Caine, Dion Boucicault, and Miss Marion Terry.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, DICK SHERIDAN. Messrs. H. B. Irving, Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, Lewis Waller, Sydney Brough, Edmund Maurice, Will Dennis, F. M. Paget, &c.; Mesdames Vane, Pattie Browne, Lena Ashwell, Radcliffe, E. Williams, A. O'Brien, and Miss Winifred Emery.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.55, THE TRANSGRESSOR. Messrs. Fernandez, Brookfield, Hicks, Bucklaw, Cowie, and Arthur Elwood; Misses Coleman, Hatton, Blakiston, and Miss Olga Nethercole. At 8.10, FASHIONABLE INTELLIGENCE. Mr. C. H. Brookfield and Miss Lottie Venne.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, Shakespeare's comedy of TWELFTH NIGHT. Miss Rehan as Viola; and George Clarke, James Lewis, Herbert Graham; Violet Vanbrugh, Catherine Lewis, &c.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CASTLE. Messrs. J. Forbes Robertson, W. L. Abington, Gilbert Balfare, G. W. Anson; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss May Harvey, and Miss Kate Burke. At 7.40, A CASE FOR EVICTION. Mr. O. Scott Buist, Miss Helen Luck, Miss Conti.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, & Willie Warde, George Mudge, Mesdames Millie Hylton, Gladys De Launay, Maria Davis, Louise Montague, Sinden, Earle, Mills, & Henderson, Hamer, Durkin, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Price, &utherland, and Katie Seymour.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Ernest Hendrie, H. F. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Merrick, Clayton, Nina Boucicault. At 8, J. OHN THURGOOD, FARMER.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE CHARLATAN. At 8. SIX PERSONS. Mr. Tree, Messrs. Fred Terry, Fredk. Ker, Nutcombe, Gould, C. Allan, Holman Clark, Montagu Hay, Mesdames Lily Haxbury, Gertrude Kingston, I. Vanbrugh, Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, H. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, M. Marsden, and Miss May Yohé. At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Oraay, Porteous, Rimsa, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Mesdames Decima Moore, Juliette Nesville, Cutler, Studholme, Founds, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, Gorst, and P. Broughton. At 7.45, ADOPTION.

ROYAL PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WORLD. Messrs. Charles Dalton, William Elton, Julian Cross, and Charles Glennay; Misses Olga Brandon, Kate Tyndall, and Agnes Thomas.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Hay, Scott-Fishe, Gridley, S. Russell, Hunt, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Under the Management of Mr. Weedon Grossmith. THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer, H. Dacre. At 8.15, THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE BEST MAN. Mr. J. L. Toole; Messrs. John Billington, Shelton, Lowne, Coventry, Arlton, Bruntton; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Eliza Johnstone, Fordyce, Poole, Kingsley. At 8, HESTER'S MYSTERY. Messrs. Westland, Lowne, Arlton; Misses Carlyon, Fordyce.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Rubie Temple, and Letty Lind; Messrs. Harry Grattan, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, Sidney Howard, Frederick Rosee, and John L. Shire.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, WET PAINT. Mr. H. Sparling, &c. At 8.20, WAPPING OLD STAIRS. Messrs. Courtice Pounds, Richard Temple, Avon Saxon, H. Sparling, H. Boucher; Mesdames Mary Turner, Hannah Jones, Mary Hutton, and Jessie Bond.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class
BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving
on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman
Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holi, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco
in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.;
also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including
H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided
are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art.
The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages,
with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature
Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational
Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole Representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and prices list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

JUST READY. THE STRAND MAGAZINE For MARCH.

EDITED BY GEORGE NEWNES.

CONTAINING

AN ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW with Mr. THOMAS
SIDNEY COOPER, R.A. By HARRY HOW. Illustrations from Drawings, Paintings, and Photographs.

BURGLED and BURGLING: being the Second of a Series of Articles on "Crimes and Criminals."

AN OAK COFFIN. By the Authors of "The Medicine Lady."

MARTIN HEWITT, INVESTIGATOR: The Lenton Croft Robberies.

LOST IN A BLIZZARD. By G. H. LEES.

And other Stories and Articles, with about 150 Illustrations.

Price 6d.; post free, 9d.

ALSO READY.

THE PICTURE MAGAZINE For MARCH,

CONTAINING

THE FIRST ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES OF THE FOLLOWING EMINENT ARTISTS:

NOT DEAD YET. By J. T. NETTLESHIP.

LANCELOT and ELAINE. By Mrs. ERNEST NORMAND
(Miss Henrietta Rae).

A STREET IN BRITANNY. By STANHOPE A. FORBES, A.R.A.

WAITING. By SOLOMON J. SOLOMON.

A DEWY MORNING. By ALFRED EAST, R.I.

And 27 PORTRAITS OF LADY WRITERS.

And about 200 other Illustrations. Price 6d.; post free, 8½d.

NOW READY.

ILLUSTRATED PENNY TALES "The Strand."

No. 4 CONTAINS—

AN EIGHTEENTH CENTURY JULIET. By JAMES MOR-TIMER.

A THING THAT GLISTENED. By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

THE PISTOL SHOT. From the Russian of ALEXANDER PUSHKIN.

With 17 Illustrations.

The Shields Daily Gazette says: "These penny tales, consisting, as they do, of the very best specimens of the short story in fiction, should afford a powerful counterblast to the cheap and nasty order of the penny novelettes."

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Numbers 1 to 4 sent post free for 6d.

GEORGE NEWNES, Ltd., London, W.C.

Now ready, Second and Cheap Edition,
price 3s. 6d.

THE QUICKENING OF CALIBAN.

A Modern Story of Evolution.

By J. COMPTON RICKETT,

Author of "The Christ that is to be."

"Mr. Compton Rickett must be congratulated alike on the daring conception and the skilful execution of his book. A style at once simple and powerful lends distinction to 'The Quickening of Caliban,' and the story itself is one of strong interest.....A weirdly attractive story, cleverly imagined and vigorously told."—Speaker.

"From first to last the book is crowded with incident, dialogue, adventure, and marked personality."—British Weekly.

"Brimful of meaning, suggestion, and fine satire."—Academy.

"We must confess to having derived considerable interest and amusement from its stimulating pages."—Queen.

"The story is readable, and sets one thinking."
Christian World.

"'The Quickening of Caliban' is good, and the book worth reading."—Guardian.

"There is a good deal of good workmanship in the book."—Bookman.

"Contains many clever ideas."—Methodist Times.

"The daring theme is justified by the deft way in which Mr. Rickett has carried out his task."

Public Opinion.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London;
Paris and Melbourne.

SECOND EDITION.

S. R. CROCKETT'S NEW STORY.

THE RAIDERS,

By the Author of "The Stickit Minister," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

*** The first large edition having been exhausted on the day of publication, a second edition has been prepared.

"The new Barrie of yesterday is to-day a second Stevenson—and no had second, let us make haste to add.....
Mr. Crockett writes exceedingly well—crisply, vividly, and above all readably. His Scotch is delightful, and frequent parenthetical translations smooth the thistly path for the Southron. He has a keen sense of humorous character."—Daily Chronicle.

"It is safe to say that this tale of the Galloway of the early part of last century will bring Mr. Crockett at a bound to the front rank of those writers of the day who may be said to have founded among them a new school of Scottish romance. 'The Raiders' is alive and throbbing with the Gallowegian spirit; the strong and wholesome air of the hills and seas of the Stowartry blows through it."—Scotsman.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table
Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen
Table Cloths, 11½d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz.
Fruited Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

Children's Bordered, 1s. 3d. per doz.
Ladies' " 2s. 3d. "
Gentlemen's " 3s. 3d. "

Hemstitched:
Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 8-fold, 3s. 6d.
per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children,
from 5s. 11d. per doz.

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated
Price-Lists
and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

COLLARS, CUFFS, SHIRTS.

Best quality long-
cloth Shirts, 4-fold
Linen Fronts, 35s. 6d. half-dozen.
(To measure 2s. extra.)

BY SPECIAL
APPOINTMENTS TO
THE QUEEN AND EMPRESS FREDERICK
OF GERMANY

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

WOMEN of LETTERS.

Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Barry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Mary Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, Lady Duff Gordon, Elizabeth Inchbald, "Lamb's Duchess," Lady Hervey, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Mrs. Delany, and Mrs. Montagu. By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"These are delightful volumes. The authoress has not only chosen good subjects, but she has the gift of piecing together her information skilfully, and of endowing the characters she depicts with some of her own vigour and vitality."—Spectator.

"A couple of volumes which are sure and deserve to find many readers. It is impossible, in these busy days, for many people to study biographical matter at first hand. The field is too wide; and the average man or woman is grateful to the writer who, surveying that field, brings away from it all that is essential, and presents it in concise, clear, picturesque fashion. That is what the author has done in the present instance. She gives us the concentrated extract of many a memoir, autobiography, diary, and what not; and she serves it up in an appetising way. She eschews, for the most part, literary criticism, dwelling principally upon the lives and characters of her subjects."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

Author of "An Old Maid's Love," "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The name of Maarten Maartens is becoming—indeed, it has already become—one of the most important and significant names in the literature of contemporary fiction. We could point to scenes and situations of exceptional power and beauty, but we leave them to the many who, we hope, will read this admirable and striking novel."—Spectator.

"The book is more than clever—bright and witty, and full of shrewd common sense."—St. James's Gazette.

"Rich in epigram and humour, both incisive and original, this work will rank among its author's best efforts."—Morning Post.

"No review can do justice to the many deep and delicate studies in this careful, brilliant, and picturesque book."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN, Author of "The Scots of Westminster." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Yonge seems to have flung her mantle over the author of 'A Devoted Couple,' and to have found a worthy successor. The story is a family one, full of sweet domesticities of English family life with a spice of Indian adventure thrown in. A most agreeable, clever, and wholesome story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY

The ROMANCE of SHERE

MOTE. By PERCY HULBURD, Author of "In Black and White." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A story of singular ingenuity and power, an album so to speak of brilliant character-sketches, graphic word-pictures, and trenchant epigrams."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE. By M.

DEANE. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

JUST READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the

NEZ PERCÉS. By ARTHUR PATERSON, Author of "A Partner from the West," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER.

THE COUNTRY MONTH BY MONTH.

By J. A. OWEN, Editor of "A Son of the Marshes," and Professor G. S. BOULGER, F.L.S., F.O.S.; and a Cover Design by J. Lockwood Kipling.

1s., paper-printed, stiffened wrapper.

2s., cloth, silk-sewn, inlaid parchment, gilt top.

No. 1. MARCH. Now ready.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

HIGHWAYS, BYEWAYS, AND WATERWAYS.

Written and Illustrated by C. R. B. BARRETT. Over 180 Illustrations, together with 4 Etchings on copper, 21s. net.

There is a Large-paper Edition with extra portfolio.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN AN ORCHARD.

Athenaeum.—"It is needless to say that the author is as successful as usual."

Scotsman.—"As pleasant a tale as has come from its author's pen."

By
Mrs. MACQUOID.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

Daily Telegraph.—"Described with no less artistic skill than pathetic impressiveness."
Daily Chronicle.—"Oraciously told."

VICTIMS.

Athenaeum.—"A good story and strong characters.... deserves infinite credit."

Cloth, gilt top, 2s.

THE MODERN LIBRARY.

"Autumn leaf" tinted hand-made paper, 1s. 6d.

DUST BEFORE THE WIND.

By F. W. MAUDE.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily News.—"A fine study of an unhappy man."
Morning Post.—"It is cleverly written."

THE NEW VOLUME.

"HEAVENS!"

A Bohemian Novel.

BY

Alois Vojtech Smilovsky.

Translated by Prof. V. E. MOUREK, of Prague University; and JANE MOUREK.

By

MAY CROMMELIN

2 vols., 21s.

[Next week.]

INSCRUTABLE.

By ESME STUART.
1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"Sensational from cover to cover. No more suitable book can be found for the Easter Holiday."

A WINTER JAUNT TO NORWAY.

Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"A breezy and entertaining volume....well calculated to induce other travellers to follow her adventurous example, while it will entertain many who must perforce stay at home."—Times.

"Is altogether too racy, too breezy, too observant, and too new to let us part from her with anything but the most sincere compliments."—Spectator.

*.* The First Edition is now nearly exhausted, and a new one is in preparation.

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

CARTIER TO FRONTENAC:

A Study of Geographical Discovery in the Interior of North America in its Historical Relations, 1534-1700.

By JUSTIN WINSOR,

Author of "A Narrative and Critical History of America."
Illustrated with Maps, Plans, &c. 8vo, cloth, 15s.

GREECE: her Present Condition and

Recent Progress. By JAMES SAMUELSON, Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

GLIMPSES OF THE FRENCH

REVOLUTION: Myths, Ideals, and Realities. By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englshmen in the French Revolution," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A deeply interesting and most valuable work."—Daily Chronicle.

A MANUAL OF OBSTETRIC NURSING

By MARIAN HUMFREY, British Lying-in Hospital, London; Diploma London Obstetric Society; Member Royal British Nurses' Association, and of its Registration Board. Dedicated to H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck. Crown 8vo, 300 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTION and AMUSE-

MENTS OF THE BLIND. By Dr. GUILLE. With 23 Engravings. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

A reprint of the translation, published in London, 1819, of the interesting and useful work which was dedicated to the king (of France), and printed by the Blind at the Royal Institution for the Blind, in Paris, in the year 1817.

RAMBLES in BOOKS. By Charles F.

BLACKBURN. Large-Paper Edition of 50 copies only, printed on hand-made paper, each numbered and signed by the Author. With Portrait from a Photograph by W. & D. Downey. 15s. net.

THE WINNING of the SOUL. By the Rev. LEIGHTON PARKS, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, U.S.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SEWAGE DISPOSAL in the UNITED STATES. By GEORGE W. RAFTER and M. N. BAKER. 1 vol., royal 8vo, 600 pp., cloth, 21s. In Two Parts: I. DISCUSSION OF PRINCIPLES; II. DESCRIPTION OF WORKS.

A SCHOOL COURSE in HEAT. (Revised and Enlarged.) By W. LARDEN, M.A., Assistant Master in the R. N. E. College, Devonport; late Science Scholar, Merton College, Oxford. Numerous Illustrations. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CHEMISTRY for BEGINNERS.

Adapted for Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations in Organic Chemistry. By R. L. TAYLOR, F.I.C., F.C.S. Fifth Edition, thoroughly Revised and partly Rewritten. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

FRA PAOLO SARPI: the Greatest of the Venetians. By the Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy." With Illustrations and a Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

ANCIENT ARMS AND ARMOUR:

a Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin and Development of Arms and Armour. To which are appended 183 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection. By EDWIN J. BRETT. Imperial 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound, £5 5s. net.

"A sumptuous tribute to the memory of the age of chivalry."—Standard (Leader), Feb. 20.

"Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—Daily Telegraph.

"We know no authority more thorough and up-to-date."—Daily Chronicle.

"A masterpiece of its kind....Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—Black and White.

"Is noteworthy for the very elaborate series of illustrations with which it is enriched."—Times.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE SERIES.

TWO NEW VOLUMES.

Uniform crown 8vo vols., with Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 8s. 6d. each.

THE DAYS of the SON of MAN. By the Rev. E. J. GOUGH, M.A., of Dundee. [Shortly.]

A CUP of COLD WATER. By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES, of Lewisham. [Immediately.]

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1894.

No. 1141, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Correspondence of Mr. Joseph Jekyll. Edited, with a brief Memoir, by the Hon. Algernon Bourke. (John Murray.)

THESE are the letters of Joseph Jekyll, the "wag of law," King's Counsel and Solicitor to the Prince of Wales (1805)—of Joseph Jekyll, Benchet (1795), Reader (1814), and Treasurer (1816) of the Inner Temple, Lamb's "J—l of the roguish eye which almost invites a stranger to vie a repartee with it"—of Joseph Jekyll, "the scribbler's pride," who assailed Pitt and the Court party with smart squibs in the Morning Chronicle (the same paper in which, fifteen years later on, Coleridge published his fanatical "Abdiel warnings" to the foes of freedom)—of Joseph Jekyll, "the Jackdaw Phoenix," who, as a staunch supporter of Fox and Lansdowne and the advanced Whig party, held the seat of Calne ("sweet Calne in Wiltshire!") for twenty-nine years (1787-1816), having been duly elected as one of their two representatives by the twenty-eight ancient burgesses of that honourable corporation—of Joseph Jekyll, the courtly wit and diner-out, the skilled sayer and experienced eater of good things; lastly, "not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, running it thus"—these are the letters of Joseph Jekyll, the faithful crony of the Prince Regent, on whose behalf, as all the world knows, that somewhat unconscionable personage called upon the Chancellor of England, and, having securely closeted him in his own room, playfully exclaimed: "How I pity Lady Eldon! She will never see you again; for here I remain until you promise to make Jekyll a Master in Chancery." Whereupon, it is needless to add, the fat Adonis of fifty carried his point, though the Chancellor, to show his sense of the impropriety of the appointment, allowed an interval of ten weeks to elapse before filling up the vacant office. (By the way, Mr. Bourke, who edits this volume, quotes in the brief Memoir prefixed to the Letters some remarks from Sir Samuel Romilly's Diary anent this transaction of the Chancery Mastership, but unluckily deprives them of their main point by omitting to add the date of the entry quoted—"Saturday, June 24, 1815.")

Of Joseph Jekyll the lawyer and politician we learn very little indeed from these letters; but of the man himself, both in the early prime of manhood, and again in its autumn and ripe fall, they give a minute and pleasant picture. Four-fifths of the volume are occupied with the letters which, during the closing years of his life, he addressed from his town house in Spring Gardens to Lady Gertrude Sloane Stanley, daughter of Frederick Howard, fifth Earl of Carlisle (Byron's cousin), and wife of Mr. William Sloane Stanley, Jekyll's wife's brother. The remaining fifth contains a small collection of letters, written by Jekyll (then in his twenty-second year) during his stay at Blois in 1775, to his father, Captain Edward Jekyll, R.N., at home in England, which have been placed at the editor's disposal by the writer's daughter-in-law, Mrs. Edward Jekyll, of Godalming.

A timely legacy from an aunt falling in to supply the wherewithal, the young man (who had been educated at Westminster and subsequently at Christ Church) started from Brighton—then an ill-built fishing town, with unpaven streets, one bad inn, and a fortnightly French packet—on March 29, 1775, bent upon obtaining a fluent command of the French language, and upon having therewithal what young persons of the present day describe as "a good time." His letters show him to have been a shrewd and observant youth, with a kind heart and a winning address. His first month was spent at Orleans, where he lived en pension at the rate of four Louis d'ors per month. But, finding both pension and city infested with his fellow-countrymen, he moved on to Blois, where, though the rate of living was a good deal higher, there was no one to distract him by talking English, inasmuch as the only other Englishman in the place had been settled there for over two years, and now "made almost a religious conscience of speaking French." This was a Mr. Burvill, whose father also had been a captain in the navy, and who introduced Jekyll

"so effectually that already I visit all the families of fashion in Blois—the only means of acquiring the best language. I am in company every evening, and the demoiselles are perpetually asking the most ridiculous questions about poor old England, and laughing at me for my blunders. We dine at one o'clock, we join the monde, as it is called, somewhere between four and five, and at six they hand round bread and cakes and wine, play at whist, and walk from seven or eight to supper-time."

Jekyll called at Verrât, the Château of the Duc d'Aiguillon, where he was so fortunate as to meet the Duc and Mme. du Barry, and to be permitted to assist at the mysteries of the lady's toilette. "The duchess makes her own butter every morning at breakfast with a little mill I saw on her toilette table, which pleased me mightily." And on the following day, strangely enough, he called on, and was received by, the Duc de Choiseul (the minister who owed his power to Mme. du Barry's rival, Mme. de Pompadour) at his superb palace of Chaute-loup, about a mile distant from Amboise:

"The centre is very long and joined to the wings by a Doric colonnade, and on the back front is a cascade of a quarter of a mile in length, supplied by an immense basin. The ornaments, the gildings, the glasses, the library, the theatre, and the concert-room are exquisite; but the little cabinet of Madame is a work of witchcraft. It is about ten feet long, totally inlaid with ivory, ebony, and every elegance in miniature. The Duchess herself is the prettiest fairy imaginable, and the chairs and tables in the cabinet are so adapted to four-foot five that I had some doubts whether I was in France or in Lilliput. The stables contain one hundred horses, and many English ones; and the dairy, the cow-house, and even the dog-kennel, are elegant to a proverb."

On June 2 all France kept holiday in honour of the king's coronation, and at Blois there was "a bonfire, a firework, and a procession. We had a masked ball at night, where your humble servant appeared as an English jockey, and the streets were filled with serenades till sunrise." Next month he went on a little walking tour, when he "had the curiosity to ask the price of poultry at Brasseux, and found a fat goose was fifteenpence English, and a fat fowl fourpence, yet, in spite of fat geese and fat fowls, the poor live upon bread and water from Monday till Sunday." What matter, if bread were but plenty! Unhappily, "bread is at the rate of three-halfpence English per pound"; and "the people, particularly at Rouen, murmur at the price of bread, and the regiment de Penthievres is now quartered there in terrorem." Elsewhere he says:—"The peasants of this part of France are miserably poor. The girls who herd the cows are always at work with their distaffs, and the cap is always clean and perhaps laced, while the feet are without shoes and stockings." (One thinks of the hunger-bitten girl whom, some seventeen years afterwards, young Wordsworth and his friend, the patriot-soldier Michel Beaupuy, chanced one day to meet tending a heifer that picked from the scanty herbage of the lane, while with pallid hands she knitted incessantly "in a heartless mood of solitude." "Tis against that," said Beaupuy, "that we are fighting!") Bread being scarce, it followed that crime prevailed among the poor. On May 30th, Jekyll saw "three hundred wretches, chained by the neck like dogs, pass through Blois on their way to the galleys at Brest. Some of them had undergone the torture, and could scarce support themselves on crutches. They were fed on the ground in the market-place." And, worst of all, from the balcony of his lodgings at Orleans he saw one evening a criminal broken on the wheel. He gives the sickening details—one wonders how he could have endured to look upon the devilish work!—for which the reader must, if he pleases, refer to p. 13 of the volume before us; adding that "the crime of the unfortunate creature was burglary, as we learnt from his sentence, which is posted up at every corner in the streets."

On August 19 Jekyll writes:

"I passed some very agreeable days last week at the Château of M. la Vallière. The house was full of company; and as Mlle. Chartier, a very pretty girl of seventeen, was to sleep in the room we supped in, and as Messieurs liked their Burgundy too well to leave it very early, she very fairly retired to the other end of the apartment, undressed, went to bed, and after having sung us two or three songs in her night-cap, fell asleep with all the politeness possible. I believe all this may be right; but such is the affinity between exquisite refinement and exquisite barbarism, that Paris and Otaheite are nearly on a level."

But Jekyll did not confine his investigations to one social class alone. On September 25 he writes to his father:

"Jean Jacques Rousseau has said that to see mankind one must prefer countries to cities. I have done still more than this. I have been dancing with the peasants for these five days. 'Monsieur Anglais,' as a novice, was an object of amusement. He was stripped naked to tread the grapes in the wine-press. He was forced to bleed the reservoir. He was crammed with the galette or cake of the vintage. The men crowned him with vines, and the girls smeared his face with the lees. He was obliged to dance in wooden shoes and was as gay and as dirty as possible."

On the whole, Jekyll was thoroughly pleased with his reception at Blois, though he admits that his visit proved a far more costly affair than he had calculated. "I have been fortunate enough," he writes, "to fall into what is called the first company, at the expense of what less economical young men would term very little gaming, very little dress, and very little gallantry; for such are the prices of la belle société in France." Elsewhere he says: "Old Lady Lambert told us the term for a young Englishman who would not play was Le garçon est inutile"; while, if he showed any backwardness in the matter of gallantry, he was called "Huron, Iroquois, Algonquin, and Albigeois."

We have purposely lingered over the earlier letters, because we think they possess a far fresher interest than those written during Jekyll's declining years. These, however, make, it must be owned, the pleasantest possible reading. The old man had laid aside the cares of official life, and was now busied in cultivating his many friendships, and in devouring the contents (chiefly French novels) of the circulating library, which, he declares, is his "daily bread." Among his friends he numbered (after the King and the Duke of York) the Hertfords, Conynghams, and Jerseys, Lord Alvanley, Geo. Colman (junior) and Luttrell, Byron, Rogers, and Lady Blessington, Mrs. Siddons and Harriet Mellon (the jolly, kind-hearted "Duchess of St. Coutts"), Tom Moore, and Kenney the playwright, and a host of social, artistic, and literary stars besides. For Lady Holland (independently of their quarrel on the subject of Queen Caroline) he expresses a hearty aversion, charging her with gourmandise, and with a longing "to sit with Holland at the secretary's office, to administer the affairs of Europe, and make Sydney Smith a bishop." Jekyll's observations on public affairs are of little consequence: indeed at no time of his life was he a serious politician. We laugh to find him describing himself as "a man of letters": it would be much nearer the truth to say of him, as Hamlet says of Polonius: "He's for a jig or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps." His literary judgments—if indeed they deserve such a name—are curiously perverse: into The Monastery he cannot get twenty pages; he is disappointed with the Heart of Midlothian, but pleased with some of Mrs. Opie's Tales; he doesn't admire The Pirate, thinking it too long and full of plagiarism from the author's other works. Even for Ivanhoe he has but largely qualified praise; Athelstan's revival is useless and ill explained, the Jester fails in humour, and Ivanhoe and the King are too soon discoverable, &c., &c. So, too, "Anthony and Cleopatra" is "one of Shakspeare's worst dramas," and Victor Hugo's Notre Dame is "unintelligible nonsense." Jekyll's "wit" consists chiefly in an inveterate trick of punning. His letters absolutely bristle with puns, often of a very indifferent quality. No matter how inappropriate the occasion, he cannot refrain. Even when his near neighbour, Mrs. Burn, loses her life by fire, he must crack his little joke: "her very name was inauspicious!" He seems to think it excellent fun to twist and distort the names of his friends. Thus Sturges Bourne becomes "Sturgeon Brawn," Lady Petre, "Sal Petre," Lord Dover "Dover Pier," and Lord Harrington (Maria Foote's husband), a hirsute peer with a weakness for the pleasures of town life, "Lord Hair-in-town," and so on. He is convulsed with laughter over Luttrell's story of "the strolling player acting 'Lear' " who called his daughter Cordelia, "Butchess of Durgundy" (surely it must have been the Duke of Burgundy, and not Lear, who made the slip?); and records with glee the blunder of "Sir W. Curtis' lady," who, wishing to pay an impressive compliment, assured one of her fair friends that her house was "a perfect bougie" (bijou).

Jekyll tells many amusing stories. Here is one:

"Kenny said when last at Paris he was seduced by a placard in the Palais Royal signifying that within was to be seen a curious animal, the offspring of a duck and a rabbit. He paid his franc and went in. The master of the show apologised to him for the accidental absence of the prodigy by saying it had been sent that morning to the Jardin des Plantes, for the inspection of Cuvier. 'Mais, Monsieur,' said he, pointing at a cage which contained a duck and a rabbit, 'Voilà ses respectables parens!'"

He mentions that he was counsel for Dubost the painter, who drew Tom Hope of Deepdene and his wife, and showed the pictures publicly as Beauty and the Beast. Hope had quarrelled with Dubost about the price of a picture; and the painter took his revenge in this fashion. (See Byron's Hints from Horace, l. 7, note). "Tom called his friends to prove it could mean nobody else; though I of course termed it a mere fancy picture, wantonly destroyed by a foolish parson, Beresford, her brother." Dubost sued Beresford, and was awarded £5 damages. Hope absurdly cut Jekyll for having acted as his portrait-painter's counsel.

We must add that the Index of this volume is so imperfect as to be absolutely useless.

T. HUTCHINSON.

History of Early English Literature. By Stopford A. Brooke. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

OUR first thought, we confess, on taking up these volumes was that the writer, brilliant and accomplished as we knew him to be, had undertaken a somewhat thankless task in traversing once more a field which Bernhard ten Brink had made his own.

We laid them down with the conviction that no recent book upon Old-English literature exists by a more solid and indefeasible title than Mr. Brooke's. It is not that he offers any revolutionary criticism, that he upsets dates, extinguishes traditional idols, or shows the hand of a great surgeon in disintegrating or recomposing the tormented body of our old poetry. He has, indeed, made himself fairly master of the immense critical literature which has gathered about the subject, and uses it throughout with an amusing mixture of respect and impatience,—the respect that an accomplished rider feels for the serviceable horse that he cannot do without, the impatience with which he regards the same animal should it assume the airs of a Pegasus, and play the dictator to the higher being seated on its back. For Mr. Brooke comes forward here, as in all his previous work, in the name of that criticism which insists that the sense of poetry is not only the highest gift of the critic, but his most delicate and truthful instrument. It is his lasting merit to have brought into a region which has hitherto been predominantly the hunting-ground of the grammarian and (if we may apply without unkind intention Dr. Sweet's somewhat unkind phrase) the "program-monger," a keen and vitalising apprehension of poetry, which must make his book a veritable revelation to most of his readers, and full of suggestion and stimulus to the instructed English scholar.

At the same time, the book is much more than a history of literature. It is, hardly less, a history of the Old-English as seen through their literature, or through that earlier poetic portion of it which is here alone treated. Ever on the watch for the touch of imagination, Mr. Brooke is hardly less alive to the touches of humanity, to the reflections of the life and ways of the English people. How abundant such touches are, no one has yet shown with such insight and in such detail. He has at once, it may almost be said, discovered the field and reaped the harvest. We refer, in particular, to the fascinating chapters in which he works up the rich and comparatively neglected mine of the Riddles—chapters which would form an almost ideal introduction to a (much-needed) separate edition of that choice Germanic Anthologia. Indeed, our principal criticism upon his general method would be, that he is somewhat too impetuous and confident in this pursuit of realia behind the poetic phrase, and allows too little for the distortions introduced into otherwise "realistic" pictures by the traditional elements of myth and formula. "Beowulf," in particular, lends itself less well to his comparatively simple and peremptory methods than the later Christian poems. He does not indeed ignore the mythic aspect of Beowulf and Grendel; and he is far too critical to take the view of the latter, which reaches its reductio ad absurdum in Prof. Skeat's theory that he is a bear (with the glóf, v. 2085, for his paw); but he is somewhat too intent to interpret all the features of the mysterious habitat of Grendel and his mother in terms of natural scenery. Surely nothing in the whole poem is more palpably mythical than the strange light (fýrleóht geseah, blánc leóman beorhte seinan, Beow., 1517 f.) which Beowulf sees gleaming in the subterranean vault.

"I think," says Mr. Brooke, "when we look at all that is said of this light, the writer meant that the light was like fire, and that in reality he thought of the pale daylight that filtered through the rocks above."

This seems to be a gratuitous, though no doubt ingenious, attempt of the critic to make a "realist" of his poet, to force him into the category of those who describe what they have seen and not what they have imagined. Mr. Brooke has hewn away manfully at those obstructing rocks; but, in spite of the vigour of his mining operations, we confess ourselves absolutely blind to his filtrations of "pale daylight." We see in this "fire gleam" simply a parallel to that mysterious flame (vaflogi) that gathers about the hall of the Eddic giant Gymir (Skírnismál, 8, 9), and the illuminating ljósigull of the hall of Ægir (Loka-senna, prose), and thus, in the last resort, the "Wetterleuchten" within the storm-cloud (O.N. grindill "storm"); cf. E. H. Meyer, Germanische Mythologie, §§ 204, 383. Similarly, in the case of Beowulf's swimming match with Breca, after rejecting the "easy way" of mythological explanation, he effects an entrance into the primrose path of naturalism by the aid of a scarcely justified interpretation of the text. The poem tells us that Beowulf and Breca, as young men (v. 536), swam for five days through the sea until, after desperate combats with sea monsters, Beowulf finally came ashore on the Finnish coast. But Mr. Brooke will have it that they were "not swimming, but sailing in open boats (to swim the seas is to sail the seas)," a meaning of sund which has first to be proved. We do not wish to emphasise these points too much, or to suggest that the reader of these volumes will not find the mythic aspects of these tales taken note of and discussed with abundant learning. Indeed, in this very connexion, some very suggestive parallels are pointed out from Celtic legend. But the mythic aspect of the subject seems to be a little alien to Mr. Brooke; and, though he does not deny that it has a legitimate application in the abstract, yet in applying it he is continually beguiled and won over by the instincts of a critic, too profoundly interested in what is lasting and vital in man to care greatly for his fantastic and antiquated dreams. We do not think that Mr. Brooke yields to any man living in appreciation of that high poetic imagination, to have cognisance of which, as he somewhere finely says, "is to have seen the stars"; but it is one thing to glory in the dream-worlds of Keats and Shelley or the irradiated actuality of Wordsworth, and another to penetrate with divining sympathy into the intellectual ways of a primitive race.

It is perhaps a trait of the same critical tendency when we find Mr. Brooke, who has himself (may we venture the suggestion?) parted with so much mythology, seeking to relieve the pagan Anglo-Saxon of the greater part of that burden of mythic belief which he is often supposed to have endured. In a long and interesting appendix (I. 329 f.) he attempts, it is true merely as a "conjecture," to make it probable that the Germanic pantheon scarcely existed for the Angles and Saxons, and, in particular, that Woden was not regarded by them in the age of the English settlement as the "supreme God." The term requires closer definition. It is hardly questionable that Woden never attained among the West-Germanic tribes the supreme importance which he finally reached in the North under the influence of Christianity: that he was not as yet the "All-father." But it by no means follows that he was not worshipped, as Paul the Deacon in the seventh century tells us he was, by all the Germanic tribes as a god. Mr. Brooke, indeed, concedes reluctantly that the Saxons did in some degree so worship him, but will have it that "this worship had not extended northwards among the Angles, Jutes, or Danes, at the time of the English invasion." However, the Vita S. Kentigerni, circa 600 (quoted by E. H. Meyer, Germ. Myth., p. 234), expressly speaks of Woden principalem deum Anglorum. The evidence of the names of the days of the week is put aside far too peremptorily. Their adoption implies the existence in the popular belief of the chief Germanic deities. They must have been adopted at some time after the Germans became acquainted with the Roman calendar, and before they became Christian. They probably belong to the fifth century at latest. They "prove nothing at all as to whom the English worshipped before Christianity," says Mr. Brooke, adding, "Their very forms," Messrs. Vigfusson and Powell say, "prove them to be loan-words." Vigfusson's etymological utterances were, no doubt, often surprising enough; but in this case he happens to be speaking (C. P. B. i. 428) of the Scandinavian names for the days of the week, which are certainly loan-words—from the English. This is, of course, a mere oversight, which we should not notice but for its importance. The Old-English genealogies to which Mr. Brooke appeals certainly show that Woden, who figures in them all, but not as the ultimate ancestor, was not regarded as the "All-father," as in the Scaldic poetry. But the position of "chief god" did not imply that. He was not held to be the ancestor of all men, but only of certain princely houses. Nor is it "a mere assertion" that Geat is a name for Woden. In the Edda it is a regular variant. In Grimnismál, 54, for instance, Óðinn himself enumerates Gautr among his names. And is it so difficult to understand the absence of allusions to Woden in the extant poetry—little of it purely pagan in origin, and all of this conveyed to us through the medium not only of Christianising editors in Anglia, but of Christian and probably also Christianising translators in Wessex? It is not strange that pagan gods should have been, as Mr. Brooke elsewhere puts it, "cleaned out," and nothing left but vague yet significant allusions to heathen worship (such as Beow. 175 f.), or to the birds and beasts associated with, but intelligible apart from it—the raven, wolf, and eagle.

A few other points we can only touch.

The view that the Schwell-vers is specially "Caedmonian" can hardly be maintained in face of the Southern origin of Genesis B with its profusion of such verses, to say nothing of the probably Cynewulfian "Dream of the Rood." The Riddles are somewhat too confidently ascribed en masse to Cynewulf. Mr. Brooke has some very fresh and interesting discussion of the subject, but the explosion of the view that the first Riddle is upon Cynewulf's own name (cf. Sievers Anglia, xiii. 1 f.) throws a very serious burden upon the argument from internal evidence. Here and there some slight exception may be taken to Mr. Brooke's admirably spirited translations. In Beow. 238, Sievers has shown that brantne (céol) means "steep" rather than the "foaming" (Ztschr. f. d. Phil. xxi.), and in 249 seláguma should be rendered with Bugge (Tidskr. f. Phil. viii. 290), "retainer," "huskarl," rather than "home-stayer."

But these are points of criticism rather than of scholarship; and on the whole these versions must be pronounced models of felicitous translation, abounding in vivid and fiery touches, and liable not so much to fall short of the originals as to give these old poets the semblance of a somewhat richer genius than they in fact possessed. Mr. Brooke has conferred a signal service on Old-English studies.

C. H. HERFORD.

Poems. By Richard Garnett. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

THIS handsome volume deserves a welcome from lovers of poetry. True, it is in part a reprint, and many of the poems must be familiar to all who have heed for the best poetry of the later Victorian epoch. Nearly thirty-five years ago the author published a volume entitled Io in Egypt. It was a slim book, but it contained verse that had the rare quality of distinction. The poems appeared at a time when the prevalent taste demanded something either more emphatic in the expression of emotion or more brilliant in colour, or of a music more delicate or more sonorous. But there were many readers even in 1860 who were attracted by the clear-cut dignity and grace of the best of Mr. Garnett's poems: and it is this apparently cold spell, as of moonlight, that is their paramount charm still. This, however, is not to say that these Poems are lacking in passion. A scrupulous austerity seems to have been kept in view by the author from the outset: but this austerity is in the expression of emotion and not in susceptibility to the emotion itself. Goethe is the archetype of those poets of whom Mr. Richard Garnett is a notable living representative. Vividness of intellectual apprehension, lucidity of phrase, a restrained use of words, an epigrammatic alertness, mark the poetry of this school. Mr. Garnett has these qualities, with an air of distinction, a genuine individuality, in a degree that entitles him to a select place. Probably this epithet is one he would value more than the somewhat indiscriminate "high": so, at least, I fancy of the keen appreciator of Landor, the biographer and editor of Peacock, and the author of The Twilight of the Gods, one of the most delightful series of fantasies by which our small modern library of wit has been enriched. If, generally, he seems to me at his best in the sonnet, the quatrain, and short octosyllabic pieces—particularly in his charming renderings from the idyls and epigrams of the Greek Anthology—I have always admired the fine march of his blank verse, and of the haunting music of lyrical poems such as "The Island of Shadows," with its lovely close—

"Seclusion, quiet, silence, slumber, dreams,
No murmur of a breath;
The same still image on the same still streams,
Of Love caressing Death"— or of "Fading-Leaf and Fallen-Leaf," or of the fine "Ballad of the Boat," with its recurrent

"When shall the sandy bar be crossed?
When shall we find the bay?"

There is a distinctive charm, also, in the "classical" pieces, particularly in "The Lost Poetry of Sappho," and in the noble verses inspired by an inscription on a Parthian coin signifying "the friend of Greece." The former is surely the best set of Sapphics, in matter and manner, that we have, and what "music of the larger speech" in these quintains from the other?

"Did Ormus bend to thee, and they
Of Colchis? Did thy arrow strike
The Indian, owned the Scyth thy sway?
We nought can know, and careless say,
'Tis very like.

"This only know we, did thine blaze
A conqueror's sword, or not, 'tis rust!
If ever hosts, to win thee praise,
Contended, then their feet did raise
More lasting dust.

"So far apart thy race was run,
Thy very shade half seems to be
The spectre of another sun,
But Greece! the word is union
For us and thee.

"The friend of Greece! Then friend wert thou
To sacred Art and all her train,
The marble life, the Picture's glow,
And Music and the overflow
Of lyric strain.

"The friend of Greece! Then where of old
Anarchic Licence chariotreed
Curbless, and famished Rapine rolled
Forth hordes athirst for blood and gold,
Thou wouldst have reared

"The Muse and Pallas shrines secure,
Made Themis awful in her hall,
And life a boon God-worthy, sure,
Exalted, comely, cheerful, pure,
And rhythmical."

Still, the ultimate expression of Mr. Garnett as a poet seems to me to be in his sonnets. "Dante," "Age," "The Sands of Time," "Garibaldi's Retirement," are perhaps the finest where all are fine. One of those named is, in my judgment, the most notable sonnet of its kind in all contemporary literature. It is so well known that quotation of it here may seem superfluous, but as the sentiment inspiring it is that which underlies all the author's reflective pieces, "Age" has so apt a relevance that I do not hesitate to reprint it. If there be some readers to whom it is new, I hope it may send them to a book of high poetic merit, distinction, and charm.

AGE.

"I will not rail, or grieve when torpid old
Frosts the slow journeying blood, for I shall see
The lovelier leaves hang yellow on the tree,
The nimble brooks in icy fetters held.
Methinks the aged eye that first beheld
The fitful ravage of December wild,
Then knew himself indeed dear Nature's child,
Seeing the common doom that all compelled.
No kindred we to her beloved broods,
If, dying these, we drew a selfish breath;
But one path travel all her multitudes,
And none dispute the solemn Voice that saith:
'Sun to thy setting; to your autumn, woods;
Stream to thy sea; and man unto thy death!'"

WILLIAM SHARP.

The Principal Works of St. Jerome. Translated by the Hon. W. H. Fremantle. (Parker.)

THE portly volume before us is vol. vi. of the second series of the Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, edited by Dr. Wace and the late Dr. Schaff. It endeavours to collect together in an English dress Jerome's most characteristic and important works, excluding only his Commentaries and works illustrative of the Scriptures. It includes, therefore, all the Letters, nearly all the Prefaces to the Commentaries, and all the miscellaneous treatises, with the exception of the book On Illustrious Men and the Apology against Rufinus. These are relegated to vol. iii. of the series, in which the works of Rufinus occur. Canon Fremantle modestly hopes that the result of his labours will be useful "not to the theologian alone, but also to the historical student." He has, in fact, aimed at making the principal works of St. Jerome accessible to the general reader, in the conviction that to the general reader they will be found full of interest and instruction.

Anyone acquainted only slightly with the Letters of Jerome will sympathise most heartily with Canon Fremantle's object. The interest to the historical student of these Letters it would be difficult to exaggerate. They are the key to the social and religious life of the age in which they were written. That age was one of exceptional excitement. The ancient Roman civilisation was violently agitated by the sudden descent upon it of the northern barbarians. From the midst of this agitation Jerome speaks to us. Of necessity his Letters are crammed with picturesque details and dramatic incidents which lose nothing in Jerome's telling. The great quality of the Saint, which may atone for many littlenesses, is a passionate intensity of interest in the fortunes of his fellow men—a spontaneous sympathy with the finer emotions of his age. This makes him an admirable letter-writer, and an eager unaffected delineator of contemporary men and manners. That his interest is mainly in the religious life and in religious people, is due to the fact that into religious life the best and keenest energies of the times were thrown. The ideals and enthusiasms which animated the priests, the bishops, the hermits, or the virgins of the end of the fourth century are alive again in Jerome's pages, and claim that we shall respect and understand them. Many of us will leave Jerome's Letters with a strong conviction that some of these ideals were temporary and futile; but we shall have read to little purpose unless we perceive how real and genuine—how natural, in fact, they were. All modern attempts to copy bygone enthusiasms, whether of ancient Romans or of early Christians, are tainted with unreality and affectation; these Letters of Jerome describe enthusiasms which are transparently sincere and unaffected. The Saints' literary gifts are those of the good letter-writers of all times. He is copious and vivacious, but can condense into epigram and rise into passion when he is moved. He puts himself unreservedly and easily into what he writes, and delights in the self-revelation. That the Letters as a whole have never before been translated into English surprises us. The only earlier effort with which we are acquainted is the version by the Jesuit, Henry Hawkins, of a few of the Letters and of the Lives of Saints Paul, Hilarion, and Malchus. This was published, probably at Paris, in 1630, and is a vivacious and readable specimen of the English of the period. The preface contains a declaration which translators of Jerome will readily endorse:

"if it were not for the service of God and for that duty which a man owes his friends, he would take no great pleasure in translating the works of such persons as are extraordinary and eminent both in knowledge and in the expression thereof. For when the conceptions are choice, and the power of speech is great in any author, his translator is likely enough to find his hands full of work."

Canon Fremantle has translated "with the assistance" of the Rev. G. Lewis and the Rev. W. G. Martley, and we can heartily praise the results of the collaboration. The two clashing tasks of the translator are conscientiously kept in view and successfully overcome. The translation is scholarly and painstaking. It is also natural and easy, written in an English style which successfully reproduces Jerome's vivacity and picturesqueness, although it occasionally misses some of his force. But this in a translation from Latin into English is unavoidable. It is to be regretted that owing to the printing of the work in America, the revision of the proofs has been partially taken out of the translator's hands. An x, for instance, has been twice dropped out in the preface. We note this merely because throughout the work carefulness and thoroughness are everywhere displayed. The Prolegomena and Chronological Tables are condensed from Canon Fremantle's article on Jerome in the Dictionary of Christian Biography, and carefully brought up to date.

The preparation of the volume has obviously been a labour of love, and, as obviously, a labour of years. It is not often that a scholar of Canon Fremantle's calibre condescends to such work; but when he does, the result has a high and special value. To write a book about Jerome would no doubt have been easier than to produce this large octavo of over 500 pages, but no book about Jerome could teach an intelligent reader as much about the Saint and his age as he will learn if he reads even a selection of the translated Letters. Both the Saint and the British public owe a large debt of gratitude to the modesty and the energy of the Canon.

RONALD BAYNE.

NEW NOVELS.

Lady William. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 3 vols. (Macmillans.)

The Price of a Pearl. By Eleanor Holmes. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Red-House Mystery. By Mrs. Hungerford. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Constable of St. Nicholas. By Edwin Lester Arnold. (Chatto & Windus.)

Only a Woman's Heart. By J. E. Muddock. (George Newnes.)

A Threefold Mystery. By Constance Serjeant. (Elliot Stock.)

Mim's Marriage. By V. Mikoulitch. (Fisher Unwin.)

Darrell Chevasney. By Curtis Yorke. (Jarrold.)

WITHIN the last five years Mrs. Oliphant has published some of her best work since she made her first appearance in literature: one of her stories now running in a magazine ought, unless it falls off, to be her masterpiece. But she cannot be congratulated on Lady William: it is not an interesting story; it is not notable as a work of art; it is at the very best a respectable, painstaking, Trollopian pot-boiler. Mrs. Oliphant might, indeed, have spared us the Rectory and the life of which the Rectory is the centre. She has "done" it so often, and so very much better than here. No doubt new personages are introduced into that life—Lady William, the sweet widow, with her mysterious marriage; the fearfully and wonderfully French Mrs. Swinford; the frank and good-natured adventuress Mrs. Brown, who, in England, has no objection to be a schoolmistress, and in France has no objection to be regarded as a demi-mondaine; and that very mild Bohemian, Jem, who succumbs to no worse attractions than those of Mrs. Brown and the public-house. It is hinted that there is something very terrible in the past relations between Lady William and Mrs. Swinford, if not between Lady William's dead husband and Mrs. Swinford; but it is not discovered even by Mrs. Swinford's very unsatisfactory son Leo, who seems fit for much more than he actually accomplishes, and who does not, however, manage even to marry Lady William. Then, one expects Mrs. Brown to play the deus ex machina at the end of the third volume; and yet it does not fall to her to be anything of the sort. The only folk who really manage to do exactly what is right in the long run are Florry Plowden and her curate, Mr. Osborne. She says "O—oh!" at the right time, and also "My father is out, and so, I am afraid, are mamma and Emmy." But then how very conventional they are, and how very familiar to readers of Mrs. Oliphant!

The conclusion that one inevitably comes to after reading the story of Pearl Merryweather, as told with infinite patience, is that she was not worth the price that was paid for her, and the three volumes that are given up to her. She is of course very charming, and not specially bad-hearted. But she is not at all considerate, and in a sense is even selfish. Her lovers are far too good for her, as even she herself admits—the auld Robin Gray of a Mr. Lewis, the young Jimmie of an Armytage or McAdam, who ultimately secures her, and the chivalrous Bayard of a Lord Bertie Meredith, who is quite worth the other two, good as they are, and whose final self-sacrifice is surely uncalled for. Outside of Pearl and her circle of lovers, there is nothing and nobody in her story that calls for special attention. Mrs. Mandeville is a rather poor specimen of the mischief-making adventuress; and although Mrs. Fursden makes a tolerably good and motherly watchdog, she is essentially vulgar.

The Red House Mystery is a clever experiment. Mrs. Hungerford has evidently got tired of publishing, at regular intervals, stories full of Irish beauty, impetuosity, and warm-heartedness, and has resolved to ascertain whether she cannot "move a horror" with the best of the modern melodramatists. On the whole, she has been wonderfully successful. Probably for the first time in her literary career she has given us, in the worthy Miss Nesbitt and the even worthier Mr. Dillwyn, a Juliet and Romeo in whom it is quite impossible to take any human interest, except in so far as they are the creatures of circumstances and of the bad folk they are fated to come across. All through these two volumes—for Mrs. Hungerford has been far too merciful and far too artistic to write three—one's attention is concentrated upon an idiot boy who loves his poor dead coarse mother, and hates his living and murderous father, and keeps in retentis a certain white cloth with which he has seen the father murder the mother. One waits breathlessly till the white cloth is produced, as of course it is at the end of the second volume. This is art—of a sort—and perhaps Mrs. Hungerford ought to be congratulated upon her easy mastery of it. One is almost certain that one has made the acquaintance in some other novel of just such another as the merciless lover and medical man, Dr. Darkham. But he is a first-rate scoundrel all the same, and the idiot is quite beyond praise.

It makes one rub one's eyes and wonder if the hands of the clock of romance have not been turned back three quarters of a century, to read in every second page of The Constable of St. Nicholas some such superlatively G. P. R. Jamesish sentence as "There in luxurious comfort, under the warm new daylight, lay the comely Saxon heiress in soft white night-gear, her brown hair all down about her shoulders, and stared sleepily around the great room, with its grey walls half hidden in purple tapestries, the white flagstone floor littered with costly Persian mats, the massive oaken benches, set back by the heavy tressel tables, the mouldy pennons waving in the draught, the board-spears crossed under grinning Stridio boars' heads, and piled arms and trophies over the broad archways."

A more turgid piece of writing in the guise of a romance has probably not been published since the days of the author of Darnley. The fustian has the redeeming feature of sincerity, no doubt. So, for that matter, has embroidery. But it spoils what would otherwise have been a good historical story of the struggle between Turks and Christians for the possession of Rhodes. A good story, too, of human passion; for the false, though not utterly bad and not at all cowardly, Oswald de Montaigne—who, with a subtle and cruel Greek at his elbow, is ready for almost any crime, even to the murder and dishonour of Margaret Walsingham, yet can acquit himself like a man in battle—might have been an outstanding figure in romance. But if Mr. Lester Arnold is to compete with any hope at all in the race of historical fiction against competitors of the saner and less sanguinary school, like Dr. Doyle and Mr. Weyman, he must part with his fustian once for all.

Mr. Muddock has, in Only a Woman's Heart, passed from anarchism and lurid joys to idyllic life of the Camberwell breakfast-parlour sort. He allows himself only one of his favourite murders, and only one of his favourite tempestuous chapters to describe that murder in. That is really a very tempestuous chapter, however, in which Abbot Squince, the villain with a heart, is shot down by Reginald Easton, the villain who has no heart at all. For there dominates it "a wild night, a mad night, an awful night," and there is a crescent moon that occasionally peeps through the rents in the ragged clouds, and "calls into being shadows on the earth which neither a Poo, a Doré, a Wiertz, nor a Salvator Rosa could typify." This is, however, but Mr. Muddock's one outbreak of the Old Adam in the course of his quite conventional hunting down, by Robert Boulcourt, a young, "deuced clever," and very impressionable doctor, of Miss Daisy Easton, a rather obstinate as well as lovely and interesting professional singer. Robert has more trouble than falls to the lot of most modern Romeos; for he has to circumvent and defeat a quite exceptional scoundrel—a stronger and more sensual Squeers—in the person of Jakes, Daisy's employer. But Jakes is useful. He prevents this story from becoming too Camberwellish—or, if Mr. Muddock will prefer it, too St. John's Wooden. In other words, Only a Woman's Heart, although not a notable book in any sense, has an air of heartiness about it, and its plot is well worked out.

A Threefold Mystery is surely the work of a school girl, who has been reared on tracts and "good" stories of the kind that were published in such abundance about a quarter of a century ago: it is such a queer jumble of piety and passionate kisses. It is just as well perhaps that the piety acts the chaperon to the kisses. The keynote of the book is—

"It seemed to me in some mysterious, inexplicable fashion, when his lips closed on mine in that long silent kiss, my soul mingled with his in some regions too fair, too delightful, too fragrant for earth. I lifted my heart silently in thanksgiving to God who had given me so much happiness."

This is really delightful, in its way; and so no doubt is the love of the heroine's (and story-teller's) sister for Paul Brereton—the bad man and supposed suicide of the Riviera, who turns up at Bournemouth however just in the nick of time to save Bee from death of lung disease and a broken heart—a great evangelical preacher. In other words, we have

"Paul Brereton, washed, sanctified, with his gloriously beautiful face shining, sometimes when that love and longing to win souls for his Master was strong in him, with a light not of this world."

But this is not good fiction or even the promise of anything of the kind.

Mimi's Marriage is a pleasant proof of the entente cordiale between Russia and France in literature. It is extremely clever, and gives a charming picture of a sensuous (in the end, of course, sensual) Society adventuress, who contracts a loveless marriage and falls in love afterwards, and who, on the whole, is preferable to Mr. Benson's Dodo and John Oliver Hobbes's Grace Provence. Mimi, as a pretty cat, can hardly be excelled.

"What does she care about the Coburgs or about Battenberg? She is twenty-six; she is at an age to enjoy life, to laugh and amuse herself, and not to sit here between her grey-haired mamma and bald-headed Spiridon Ivanovitch, who snuffs, and coughs, and spits, and pours himself out bitters. And Mimotcha, irritated beyond all bearing by Battenberg, capriciously pushes her plate of cutlets away from her as if they had offended her as well as everything else in the house, and says, 'Enfin ce Battenberg, il m'agace à la fin.'"

Mimi is thus all through her story. Having nothing in the shape of spiritual instincts to start with, and no education to bring out such had the germs of them existed, she is bound to be the prey of sensations, and to drift into a liaison with a man who is quite ready to kiss and caress her to any amount, but who is not ready to ruin himself for her sake. It is all extremely unpleasant to anyone who cherishes a foolish belief that human nature is, on the whole, good rather than evil. But Mimi's Marriage is, it would appear, "a masterly if somewhat cynical delineation of Russian society in the present day." It is to take its place beside the writings of "E. B. Lanin." Thus considered, it may, undoubtedly, be read with profit.

Curtis Yorke has sought in Darrell Chevasney to produce an unmitigated blood-curdler, and has succeeded famously. What with murders, highway robberies, crashes of thunder, vivid flashes of lightning, wild ungovernable longings, deadly horrible faintnesses, despairing passionate kisses, the floating of soft baby winds, the pitiless singing of nightingales, and the discordant shrieks of night owls, there is not a dull line in the book, and all because a hundred years ago Maysel Arden broke her promise to Darrell Chevasney, and married Maurice Brackenridge. Thereupon Darrell eloped with Nita, Maysel's sister, listened to the counsels of the terrible Mother Devron, and took to highway robbery and criminal villainy of all sorts. His wife having discovered to some extent the sort of man he is, he at once chokes the life out of her. Somehow, in spite of this achievement, he fails to secure her sister, who is already Mrs. Brackenridge. She and her husband, indeed, survive all perils and attempts at murder; and yet "of the six fair sons who were born to them in the years that came after not one lived to grow to manhood." This is altogether as it should be.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME BOOKS ON SOUTHERN EUROPE.

Histoire de la Marine Militaire de Bayonne. Par E. Ducéré. Première partie: Moyen-Age. (Bayonne.) Bayonne has been happy in its historians. The "Etudes Historiques" of MM. Balasque and Dulaureus is a remarkable work. The lately published Histoire des Juifs de Bayonne, by Henry Léon (Paris: Durlacher, 1893); the illustrated volume Bayonne Historique et Pittoresque (Bayonne, 1893); and the earlier Histoire des Rues de Bayonne, by M. E. Ducéré—these and numerous other publications evidence the patriotic spirit of the Bayonnais, and the pride they take in the story of their city. But after all that has been written there is still room for a special history of the navy of Bayonne; and this history, throughout the Middle Ages, is most closely connected with that of England. The materials for writing it are to be found as much among English records as in the archives of Bayonne. It is this period which is dealt with in the present volume. M. Ducéré opens with a brief description of the coast and a slight sketch of the history of Bayonne under Roman and barbarian rule; but little is known of its navy then. In the subsequent chapters, writing from the best English, French, and Spanish authorities, and from the archives of Bayonne, our author tells the story of the navy of Bayonne, as subject to England, yet perpetually carrying on an almost piratical war on its own account with its neighbours both to north and south, thus furnishing a lively picture of the ruthless barbarity of mediæval naval warfare. He treats also in separate chapters of the construction, armament, and manning of the different types of ships in successive periods. The materials are gathered from all quarters, and armorial bearings and seals furnish illustrations of what mediæval shipping was really like. There is one drawback to the book: the several chapters are not sufficiently welded into a perfect whole. The arrangement is faulty, and thus the course of the narrative is needlessly broken, which entails repetition; and in the repetition the facts are not always given in the same way—e.g., on p. 198 we are told that in a fight with Flemings and Scotch all the Bayonnais were killed "à l'exception de trois hommes"; on p. 213, when the story is resumed, we read, "Ils venaient de tuer trois hommes." The correction of the press, especially in English proper names and in Latin quotations, has not been sufficiently attended to. On the other hand, the tone of the historian is singularly impartial: he seems almost to share the predilection of the Bayonnais for their foreign suzerains in days when Bayonne was an almost independent city under English rule.

La Poésie Populaire. Par Mme. la Comtesse E. Martinengo-Cesaresco. (Paris.) This little book contains two essays—an "Historical Study of Popular Poetry," and "The Idea of Destiny in Southern Tradition." The former essay opens with a singularly appropriate sonnet of Voltaire, beginning—

"O l'heureux temps que celui de ces fables."

It is evident that so large a subject cannot be adequately treated in thirty-three pages. The author does but give outlines and suggestions to show how deep are the sources, and how widely-spread are what seem at first sight the most trivial popular poetry, or even nursery rhymes. The second essay deals chiefly with the poetry of Southern Italy. It is curious to remark how, in the more western peninsula, the gypsies have superseded the Fates or destinies of birth, which are still believed in in Southern Italy. This is especially seen in the Noëls, in the "Pastores de Belén" of Lope de Vega (1613), in various other Spanish and Provençal songs, where gypsies replace not only the Parcae, but also the so-called Christian Sybils. A deeper question is touched in the sentence: "En Italie, les objectifs de la pensée se revêtent, même dans l'esprit des classes inférieures, de formes concrètes et esthétiques." To pass over "esthétique," we should say that the characteristic of the thought of the "classes inférieures," everywhere, as of all early peoples, is to clothe the objects of thought in concrete forms; it is the educated only who can think in the abstract. Mme. Cesaresco sometimes goes too far in deriving Christian beliefs and sacraments from worn down traditions of earlier faiths. The origin of magic we should place in a natural desire to propitiate the evil powers of the universe, as well as the good, rather than in Egyptian, Hebrew, or Platonic ideas. The fundamental notion of magic we take to be this: if such a ritual or prayer propitiates the good powers and brings them over to our side, the reverse of such rite or prayer must equally render the evil powers propitious, and enable us to obtain their help. This little volume is of the class which suggest more problems than they solve; it stimulates to further inquiry, and is not a mere epitome of what has been said or written before.

The Heart and Songs of the Spanish Sierras. By George Whit White. Illustrated. (Fisher Unwin.) This prettily got-up little work is an account of two short tours on horseback, both starting from Jerez—the first to Medina Sidonia, the second to Ronda and back. The Sierras are merely the Sierra de Ronda. The title of the book is far too large for its contents. The slight narrative of travel is used as a peg on which to hang some of the best known coplas, seguidillas, and tales of Andalusia. But we cannot accept literally the assertion that they were taken down from the mouths of those who sang them. They are to be read in the ordinary collections. The coplas of Christmas Eve are all given by Fernan Caballero, and are to be found in more than one of her works. The music is less hackneyed, and may be of real service. Either the writer has been supremely unfortunate in his printers, or his knowledge of Spanish is of the slightest: mistakes or misprints abound, and the translations by no means represent the meaning of the original. The opening verses are wholly misunderstood. "Los ojos de mi morena," translated, p. 21, "The eyes of my brown bread," is one of the oddest literal misrenderings that we have seen for some time. It is true that "morena" does sometimes mean brown bread; but has the writer never heard any of the innumerable coplas in praise of brunettes?

"Moreno pintau á Cristo
Morena á la Magdalena,
Moreno es el bien que adoro,
¡Viva la gente morena!"

The book may be welcome to those who have read no other description of life in Andalusia; all who know either Spanish or Spaniards will be astonished at the presumption of the writer.

Mariñela. Translated from the Spanish of B. Perez Galdos by Mary Wharton. (Digby, Long & Co.) This, though not the most powerful, is one of the most pleasing of the many novels of Perez Galdos. The theme is a taking one. A man, blind from his birth, young, handsome, of superior position and intellect, has had for two years as his guide a plain, stunted, wholly uneducated girl, who has, however, a lovely voice, a most unselfish character, and whose imagination is rich with the wildest uncultured fancies. The blind man, hearing only the sweet voice, enchanted with the poetic fancies of his little companion, endows her in his imagination with beauty of every kind. He tells her this, swears to her that they shall never be separated; and yet does nothing, or next to nothing, for the poor orphan child to whom he is as a god. Then comes a celebrated oculist, and at the same time a visit from a beautiful cousin, Florentina, as charming in character as she is in person. Mariñela takes her at first sight for the Virgin; and, when she knows her mistake, worships her almost as much as she does Paul. She sees that they are fitted for each other, but to conquer her own love is beyond her power. The oculist gives Paul sight; he sees in Florentina a beauty beyond his dreams; he falls madly in love with her, and they are betrothed. But Paul still asks for Nela, and the two arrange that she shall always live with them. But Nela feels that Paul's sight of her will be her death. She shrinks from the interview. Through Florentina's well-meant kindness they meet at last. Paul does not recognise the Nela of his fancy, and cannot conceal his repugnance. The shock kills poor Nela. Such is the story. Galdos has not quite made the best of it. Nela's beautiful voice and singing are only once mentioned, and nothing more comes of them; so, too, of her handing over every penny that is given her to the conceited Celepin. We regret that we cannot praise the translation. Too literal at times, at others it goes hopelessly wrong. In response to a greeting Nela asks: "And you, how are you?" "Yo," is the answer, "tan campante," which means, "I, wonderfully well," but Miss Wharton writes (p. 213), "I was encamping." When the doctor sees that Nela is death-stricken, the Spanish says: "It is hard," he exclaimed, "to stay a drop of water, which is slipping away, slipping away, alas! along the downward slope, and is now only two inches from the ocean; but I will try." The English reads (p. 342), "It is difficult," he exclaimed, "administering a drop of water which ran down, ay! by the declivity below, which was but two inches from the ocean; but he administered it." How is it that the translator did not see that these renderings are nonsense? We imagine that she must have been misled by trusting to international dictionaries. No one, we think, should venture to publish a translation until he or she is able to consult the best native lexicons.

Lady Perfecta. By B. Perez Galdos. Translated from the Spanish by Mary Wharton. (Fisher Unwin.) This is not the first time that Galdos' Doña Perfecta has been translated into English. If we remember rightly, it was done some years ago by the Hon. Miss Bethel. Except in the matter of style, the present version shows no improvement on the translator's Mariñela. The blunders are most irritating. Nearly every Spanish proper name or sobriquet is travestied. The most ordinary phrases of Spanish conversation and the commonest sayings are misunderstood. "Solon" is translated "Solomon," and the point of the jest missed thereby. "Por eso se dijo que uno piensa el bayo y otro el que lo ensilla" is rendered "For 'tis said that one feeds the steed and another saddles it." The common expression of courtesy, "Muy señor mío y mi dueño," is given as "My very good mistress." The heading of chap. vi. is "Where it is seen that misunderstanding may arise when it is least expected"; this is changed into "Where he sees that he can prevent discord where he least expects to do so." These are but samples of faults which recur continually.

Baskische Studien. I. Ueber die Entstehung der Bezugsformen des Baskischen Zeitworts. Von Hugo Schuchardt. (Vienna.) This folio of eighty closely printed pages is from the Transactions of the Imperial Academy of Vienna, of which the writer, the well-known professor at Gratz, is a member. The treatise is addressed to specialists only. Dr. Schuchardt, who has already made his mark as a successful student of the Basque, and of many another tongue, presupposes almost too much knowledge of Basque in his readers. The analysis even of the simplest forms of the Basque verb is still so much a matter of debate, that we constantly long for some closer indications than are here given of the particular view which Dr. Schuchardt may take of its several component parts. We often need to know which of the components of a word of three, four, or five letters he considers to mark the subject, or object, or indirect-object pronoun, and which letters represent the original verbal form. For lack of these closer indications we often remain in doubt as to his real meaning, or to what part of the actual instance his remarks apply. By the "Bezugsformen" he appears to mean the relations to each other of the pronominal forms contained in the Basque verb. In the Basque verb, if we understand him rightly, the transitive or intransitive meaning depends more on these pronominal forms, and on their position in the verb, than on any flexion of the verbal form itself, as It-is-to-me = I-have-it. He shows, too, that, in some cases and in some dialects, both transitive and intransitive forms have been worn down until they are both represented by the same letters. He allows, however, that there still remain elements which he cannot fully explain. Dr. Schuchardt writes with full knowledge of all that his predecessors have done. He heartily appreciates the great abilities of the late Prince L.-L. Bonaparte, and remarks that his power of classification of minute facts was probably a result of his early scientific studies in chemistry; to this, too, we may attribute his great attention to actual sounds and to the spoken language. In this respect the Prince contrasts favourably with Van Eys, who works almost wholly from the written language; but Dr. Schuchardt, though often combating his opinions, does full justice to the Dutch author's scientific methods. Prof. Vinson is spoken of with all respect; and the latest native Basque grammarian, Azkue, is constantly laid under contribution, especially for Bizcayan forms. The work will be of great importance to philologists and advanced grammarians; but we could sometimes wish that more condescension had been shown to the wants of the less initiated. Dr. Schuchardt is one of the few Basque scholars whose works really advance the knowledge of the language.

MR. EDWARD SPENCER DODGSON, who has before now shown his interest in Basque incunabula, has lately had reprinted, at the small Portuguese town of Vizeu, one of the few existing copies of the Basque translation by Capenaga of the Spanish Catechism of Ripalda, which was printed at Bilbao in 1656. So far as possible, he has imitated the typography of the original; and he has appended some explanatory comments, including a list of the five hundred forms of the Basque verb to be found in the book. For the benefit of those who are interested in such curiosities, we may add that Mr. Bernard Quaritch has some copies on sale.

THE Rev. Wentworth Webster has printed in pamphlet form (Bayonne) a paper which he recently read before the Société Ramond. A former paper dealt with the faceries, or formal treaties between village communities in the Pyrenees, concerning rights of pasturage on their boundaries. The present paper treats of another practice of rural economy, which is not confined to the Basque country, but extends from the Landes to Arragon and Galicia. It is an elaborate system for the mutual assurance of horned cattle against death or disease, managed by the peasants among themselves, without any expenses of administration or recourse to legal formalities. In many cases the rules of the association (called konfurdia or confrérie) are not even reduced to writing. The system in its simplest form seems to have arisen out of the primitive custom of mutual help by the loan of cattle for ploughing, &c., and Mr. Webster also connects it with the widespread agricultural contract known as cheptel, according to which cattle are hired upon the terms of an equal division of profits and losses. A similar contract for the hiring of milch cows is not uncommon, we believe, in the West of England. Mr. Webster concludes by printing the rules of several of these associations, both in South-western France and in Northern Spain.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Gifford Lectures, which Prof. P. Leidecker has recently been delivering at Edinburgh, will be published by Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons, in two volumes, under the title of The Philosophy and Development of Religion.

THE new edition of the late Dr. Scrivener's Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament will be ready shortly. It has been thoroughly revised and in many parts rewritten by the Rev. Edward Miller. Many of the chapters dealing with particular versions have been contributed by specialists. In his editorial work Mr. Miller has also had the valuable assistance of the Bishop of Salisbury and the Rev. H. J. White. The work will be published in two large volumes, and will be illustrated with lithographed plates.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a volume entitled The Oracles mentioned by Papias of Hierapolis: a contribution to the criticism of the New Testament, with appendices on the authorship (by Philo) of the "De Vita Contemplativa," on the date of the Crucifixion, and on the date of the martyrdom of Polycarp.

MESSRS. HARRISON & SONS will publish by subscription the Inventories of Christchurch, Canterbury, with illustrative documents, ranging from 1294 to 1780, edited by Dr. Wickham Legg and Mr. W. H. St. John Hope. The inventories include the important one of 1315, from a new transcript of the original in Cott. MS. Galba E. iv., rectifying the numerous errors and omissions of Dart; the hitherto unpublished inventories taken at the suppression in 1540, and at the metropolitical visitation of Archbishop Parker in 1563; and a number of minor documents of very great interest. A copious glossary and index will be added. The work is already in the press, and will be issued during the present year.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. have in preparation a new series of books on political and social subjects under the editorship of Mr. E. J. C. Morton. The first volume, entitled Administrative Reform: What the Government can do without an Act of Parliament, by Mr. J. Theodore Dodd, will be ready shortly.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co. have in the press a new volume by Mr. William Canton, author of "A Lost Epic and Other Poems." It will be entitled The Invisible Playmate: a Story of the Unseen.

THE new volume of poems which Mr. Eric Mackay is preparing for the press, and which, as we announced last week, is to appear in May, will include a re-issue of "The Song of the Flag," and "The Royal Marriage Ode."

MRS. A. M. DIEHL, author of "The Garden of Eden," has written a new novel, which will soon be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., in three volumes, under the title of A Woman's Whim. It will appeal primarily to the musical public.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces, for immediate publication, a new novel by the author of "The Hanleys," entitled A Dish of Matrimony.

THE forthcoming volume of the "Anglo-American Library of Fiction," to be published next week, will be A Sleep-Walker; or, Plotting for an Inheritance, by Paul H. Gerrard, with four full-page illustrations by W. B. Davis.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will have ready immediately a new volume, by C. L. Pirakis, entitled The Experiences of Loveday Brooke, Lady Detective.

MR. F. F. ROGET, lecturer on French literature and Romance philology at St. Andrews, has undertaken to edit for Messrs. Williams & Norgate an "Hommes de Lettres" series of French Classics, with prefaces. This series is to contain works in high repute, which hitherto have been either imperfectly translated, or not edited at all in Britain. The first volume, now in preparation, with the collaboration of Dr. Seele of Leipzig, will consist of Voltaire's Contes en Prose; the Lettres sur les Anglais, the works of Rabelais and Montaigne in their essential parts, the Thoughts of Pascal, &c., are to follow.

THE American Folk-lore Society proposes to issue a special series of memoirs, apart from its Journal. The first will contain the oral literature of Angola, from which part of Africa a large proportion of the negroes of the Southern States originally came. The compiler is Mr. Heli Chatelain, formerly United States commercial agent at Loanda. Subsequent volumes will be devoted to the Creole tales of Louisiana, and to the superstitions still current among the English-speaking population. The London agent for the society is Mr. David Nutt.

MR. EDMUND GOSSE will contribute to the April number of the New Review an article entitled "A Note on Walt Whitman," giving, besides certain critical remarks, an account of his visit to the poet in America.

A NEW serial story by Mr. Max Pemberton, entitled "The Sea-Wolves," will commence in No. 81 of Chums, to be published on March 28.

A GENERAL meeting of the Incorporated Society of Authors will be held on Monday next, at 5 p.m., at 20, Hanover-square, to receive the report of the committee of management for 1893. The number of members is now about 1200, and the total receipts for last year amounted to £1445. The most interesting feature in the report is a legal examination of the incidents attaching to an agreement to publish on the half-profit system. The society has since obtained, and published, an opinion of counsel on the disputed question of copyright in English translations of Count Leo Tolstoi's books. On his own part, Count Tolstoi announces, not for the first time, that he does not consider it right to receive money for his literary work.

THE fifth trade dinner under the auspices of the Booksellers' Provident Institution will be held at the Holborn Restaurant on Saturday, April 14. The Lord Mayor has kindly consented to preside, and Mr. Arthur Blackett will occupy the vice-chair. Several authors and many publishers are expected to be present.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

AN extraordinary meeting of the Convocation of the University of London has been summoned for Tuesday, April 10, to consider the report of the Gresham Commission. Meanwhile, both the council and senate of University College have formally expressed their general acceptance of its recommendations.

THE University of Oxford proposes to confer the honorary degree of M.A. upon Mr. Ernest Gray, president of the National Union of Teachers, which will hold its congress at Oxford during Easter.

MR. G. W. PROTHERO, of King's, has been elected Birkbeck Lecturer at Trinity College, Cambridge, for a term of two years.

DR. CHARLES WALDSTEIN, reader in classical archaeology at Cambridge, has been elected to a fellowship at King's College.

THE two following grants have been made from the Worts Travelling Scholars Fund at Cambridge: £40 to Mr. R. S. Conway, of Caius, towards defraying his expenses in visiting Italian museums, in order to examine Oscan, Sabine, and other inscriptions; and £50 to Mr. V. W. Yorke, of King's, towards defraying his expenses in the exploration of Eastern Asia Minor.

THE Hibbert Trustees have offered to endow a lectureship on ecclesiastical history at Manchester College, Oxford, for a period of six years. The first lecturer, the Rev. J. E. Odgers, will take up his appointment next June. It is understood that he will devote special attention to Free Church thought and life in England.

THE Cambridge University Natural Science Club celebrated its five-hundredth meeting by a conversazione last Monday, in the Physiological Laboratory, at which Prof. Ramón y Cajal, of Madrid, exhibited specimens illustrating his researches in the central nervous system.

THE REV. J. H. LUPTON, surmaster of St. Paul's School, has printed, as a pamphlet, the dissertation which he submitted for the degree of B.D. at Cambridge. In accordance with his usual pietas, the subject is Dean Colet and the Reformation, the special object being to show Colet's influence in shaping religious formularies, on the study of the Bible, on the correction of abuses in the Church, and on education.

PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, vice-principal of Manchester College, Oxford, has accepted an invitation to deliver a course of lectures in the divinity school at Harvard next autumn.

PROF. KARL PEARSON has resigned the lectureship on geometry at Gresham College.

PROF. C. W. EGERTON, of Queen Margaret's College, Glasgow, has been appointed to the chair of English literature at University College, Auckland, New Zealand. Prof. Egerton was formerly a pupil of Prof. Dowden at Dublin.

THE trustees of the Columbia University Press, New York, have made arrangements with Messrs. Macmillan & Co. by which that firm will act as their publishers for a term of years. The imprint will consist of a crown (representing King's College) above an open book, bearing on its pages the words "Columbia University Press, 1754-1893," and the motto "In Litteris Libertas." It will be remembered that Mr. Alexander Macmillan held the post of publisher to the University of Oxford from 1863 to 1880; and that the American branch of the firm are still agents both for the Clarendon Press at Oxford and for the Pitt Press at Cambridge.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

EPILOGUE TO A FORTHCOMING VOLUME OF SONNETS.

I wrought them like a targe of hammered gold
On which all Troy is battling round and round;
Or Circe's cup, embossed with snakes that wound
Through buds and myrtles, fold on scaly fold;
Or like gold coins, which Lydian tombs may hold,
Stamped with winged racers, in the old red ground;
Or twined gold armlets from the funeral mound
Of some great viking, terrible of old.
I know not in what metal I have wrought;
Nor whether what I fashion will be thrust
Beneath the clods that hide forgotten thought;
But if it is of gold it will not rust;
And when the time is ripe it will be brought Into the sun, and glitter through its dust.

EUGENE LEE HAMILTON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary for March is a very good number. Nearly every paper exhibits considerable learning, and there is a far greater variety of treatment than usual. Capt. J. W. Gambier, R.N., continues his important paper on the Guanches, the ancient inhabitants of the Canaries. One of the peculiarities of these interesting people was that they spoke several distinct languages; or, if they were indeed one tongue from the point of view of the philologist, they had become so varied that, to the untrained minds of early observers, they seemed to be different tongues. Capt. Gambier gives a few typical words as specimens. It is dangerous to draw inferences from such a very small amount of evidence: they seem, however, to present analogies with the Aryan family of speech. The samples of ancient Guanche pottery of which we have engravings show rude execution but interesting design. The review of Mr. Charles H. Ashdown's "St. Albans Historical and Picturesque" is worth attention. The writer does not hesitate to express his mind freely as to the irreparable damage that has been done to the noble and historic abbey by one rich man who knows little of architecture, and to whom history, so far as it appeals to higher natures, is a complete blank. Mr. John Ward gives us a very good account of the Museum at Carleon. We gather that it is full of objects of great interest. Mr. F. J. Snell discourses on wassailing apple-trees, a custom which does not seem to be quite extinct. Mr. T. W. Shore has a learned paper on "Traces of the Jutes in Hampshire and the Isle of Wight." We have no hesitation in accepting his conclusions.

ETYMOLOGICAL NOTES.

I.

"TO CURRY FAVEL."

It is generally known—or, at any rate, the information may be found in all the larger English dictionaries—that the phrase, "to curry favour," is a corruption of "to curry Favel," and that Favel is the old French fauvel, a "fallow" horse, here used as the proper name of an allegorical animal typifying hypocrisy or duplicity. It is further known, though not so widely, that the phrase, to curry Favel (French, estriquer, torcher Fauvel; German, den fahlen Hengst streichen) owes its general currency, if not absolutely its origin, to the Roman de Fauvel.*

An account of this romance (which is in two books, the first finished in the year 1310, the second in 1314) is given by M. Paulin Paris in his MSS. français de la Bibliothèque du Roi (I., 306); a promised article on the subject by M. Gaston

* This fact is pointed out by Le Roux de Lincy, Livre des Proverbes; for the reference to this work I am indebted to the kindness of M. Paul Meyer.

Paris in the Histoire littéraire de la France has not yet appeared. In this poem, Fauvel is a sort of counterpart of Reynard the Fox, whose cunning hypocrisy wins for him the homage of all classes, including the highest dignitaries in Church and State.

But why should Fauvel have been taken as the hero of the story? In other words, how did it come to pass that a "fallow" horse was regarded as an emblem of hypocrisy? To this question no satisfactory answer appears to have been given. Heyne's new German dictionary says that "fallow" horses were ridden by great personages, and therefore "to curry the fallow horse" means to ingratiate oneself with the great. But this does not explain why "to ride the fallow horse," both in French and German, meant "to act with duplicity." The answer which I wish to suggest is that Fauvel represents the "pale horse" (equus pallidus) which in the Apocalypse (vi. 8) is ridden by one "whose name is Death." According to patristic exegesis the rider was Antichrist (so in St. Ambrose); and in the twelfth century his "pallid" steed was explained as representing the hypocrites who gain a reputation for sanctity by the ascetic pallor of their countenances. The following quotation from Richard of St. Victor (died 1173)* will make this clear:

Quid est enim equus pallidus, nisi hypocritarum populus, qui, dum ut de religione laudetur, per jejunia, et diversas incommoditates semetipsum coram aspectibus humanis graviter efflxit, viribus exhaustis, et sanguine minorato moribundus pallescit, qui fidelibus eo perniciosior existit, quod ficta religione malitiam suam velans foris se bonum ostendit? (Comment. in Apocalypsin, Opera ed. Migne p. 769.)

I do not know whether fauve or fauvel has been found in Old French applied to the horse mentioned in the Revelation; but the etymological equivalent is used in this passage in Luther's Bible and some earlier German translations (ein fahles pferd), and in Diodati's Italian version (un caval falvo). The following quotation from the English version of the Roman de la Rose may both illustrate what has been said above and receive illustration from it (ll. 7391 ff.).

"That false traitouresse untrewre [Streyned Abstinence]

Was lyk that falowe hors of hewe,
That in the Apocalips is shewed,
That signifiyth the folk beshrewed,
That been al ful of trecherie,
And pale, thurgh hypocryse;
For on that hors no colour is,
But only deed and pale, y-wis,
Of anhe a colour enlangoured
Was Abstinence, y-wis, coloured;
Of her estat she her repented
As her visage represented."

I quote these lines from Prof. Skeat's text in his splendid new edition of Chaucer, only altering salowe, in the second line, into falowe—a change which I think the foregoing remarks sufficiently justify. The French original has merely cheval without any adjective—at least, according to Méon's and Michel's editions. It is probably not admissible to suggest that the MS. followed in the English version may have had fauvel instead of cheval; the supposition is not really necessary, as the English translator may very probably have been acquainted with what may be called the common European rendering of pallidus in the passage of the Apocalypse. It is not surprising that Thynne's edition of 1532 has substituted the then more intelligible word salowe; but probably a "sallow horse" was never heard of before or since. It should be remembered that although, like many other colour-words, the adjective fallow (fahl, fauve) has had various meanings, its primary sense is much the same as that of pallidus, with which, indeed, it is etymologically cognate. Compare Chaucer, Knights Tale 506,

"His hewe falwe, and pale as asshen colde."

I may mention, in conclusion, that an explanation, identical with that of Richard of St. Victor, appears in a marginal note to Rev. vi. 8, in the later Wycliffite version. The words are: "A pale hors, that is, ipocritis shewing hem holie to the peple, though thei be not."

II.

"DEADLY FEUD."

The ultimate etymology of the word feud, meaning "enmity," "vendetta," is perfectly clear: it is the Germanic **faihiþō*, an abstract noun from the word which appears in English as foe. The immediate source in English seems to have been the Old French faide, feide, from mediaeval Latin faida, adopted from the Old High German fēhida; though it is not improbable that the adopted word has coalesced with the representative of the Old English fæhu. This, however, explains only the obsolete forms feide, fede, &c. It is obvious that feide or fede cannot have become feud by any regular process of phonetic development; and the received explanation of the change is that it is due to the influence of the word feud, a feudal benefice. A very brief statement of facts will suffice to show that this explanation is quite untenable.

From the fourteenth to the sixteenth century the word occurs, so far as the material collected for the New English Dictionary shows, only in Scottish use; and its form is invariably feide, fede, or something phonetically equivalent. Shortly after the middle of the sixteenth century it comes into somewhat frequent use in English books, being sometimes expressly said to be a Scottish or Northern word. But what is curious is that the Scotch form was not adopted; instead of feide we find foode (Painter, 1566), feud (Lambard, 1568), foode (Spenser, 1596), fuid, fuide (Stanyhurst, 1583, Preface to Authorised Version of the Bible, 1611), fude (Florio, 1598). Other forms in the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries are feard, feawd, feode. Now I think no one would maintain that these forms can possibly be due to the influence of the anglicised form of feudum, even if that word could be shown to have been in common use in the sixteenth century. But feud in the sense of feudal benefice was never more than a technical term of rare occurrence, and the earliest instance of it known to me is in Selden (1614). And there is no such affinity between the senses of the two words as would account for the one having been assimilated in pronunciation and spelling to the other.

A valid explanation of the modern form is therefore still to seek. The only conjecture that occurs to me is that foode, feode, feud, &c., represent a Northern English (not Scottish) **fæhood* (or -hude) = foe-hood. It is noteworthy that some writers of the seventeenth century actually have the phrase "deadly fohood" synonymous with "deadly feud." I am quite aware that my suggestion is somewhat adventurous, and shall be greatly obliged to any reader who will propose a better solution of the difficulty.

HENRY BRADLEY.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ANDREAS-SALOMÉ, L. Friedrich Nietzsche in seinen Werken. Wien: Koenig. 6 M.
BAILLEFACRE, Marcel de. Souvenirs intimes d'un Lancier de la Garde Impériale. Paris: O. Jendry. 3 fr. 50 c.
BECK, L. Die Geschichte d. Eisens in technischer u. kultur-geschichtlicher Beziehung. 2. Abtdg. 1. Tl. Das 10. u. 17. Jahrh. 4. Lig. Braunschweig: Vieweg. 5 M.
BENRO, J. Erhr. v. Die Reise S. M. "Zriny" nach Ost-Asien, 1890—1891. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 6 M.

- DIEDOW, P. Die Pädagogik Schleiermachers im Lichte seiner u. unserer Zeit. Halle: Niemeyer. 4 M.
DUCROS, L. Diderot: l'homme et l'écrivain. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
DUCZYNSKI, A. J. Ritter v. Beurteilung u. Begriffsbildung der Zeit-Intervalle in Sprache, Vera u. Musik. Leipzig: Schulze. 2 M.
FARNSBOROFF, F. Briefe König Friedrich Wilhelms I. v. Preussen an Hermann Reinhold Pauli. Göttingen: Dieterich. 3 M. 60 Pf.
FÜRST, R. August Gottlieb Meissner. Eine Darstellung seines Lebens u. seiner Schriften. Stuttgart: Göschen. 6 M.
HAYARD, H. La France artistique et monumentale. T. IV. Paris: Lh. Illustrée. 45 fr.
HIRSCHBERG, J. Um die Erde. Eine Reisebeschreibung. Leipzig: Thieme. 12 M.
LOONEN, Ch. Le Japon moderne. Paris: Plon. 4 fr.
MALOT, Hector. En famille. Paris: Flammarion. 15 fr.
NEBELICH, P. Das Dogma vom klassischen Altertum in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung. Leipzig: Hirschfeld. 7 M. 60 Pf.

THEOLOGY.

- KUNZE, J. De historiae gnosticismi fontibus novae quaestiones criticae. Leipzig: Dörfling. 1 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BARRAU, Alb. La Province sous l'Ancien Régime. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
BAUDAILLART, H. Gentilshommes ruraux de la France. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 10 fr.
BRITHA, A. de. François-Joseph et son Règne (1848—1888). 3 fr. 60 c. L'Archiduc Rodolphe. 3 fr. 50 c. Paris: Westhauser.
BUTLER, Pl. Abt Berchtold v. Falkenstein (1244—1272). St. Gallen: Huber. 2 M.
CORPUS papyrorum Aegyptii. Papyrus démotiques du Louvre. 3e Fasc. Paris: Leroux. 18 fr.
CRAMP, R. Philopatris. Ein heidn. Konventikel d. 7. Jahrh. zu Constantinopel. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M. 80 Pf.
CROABON, A. La Science du point d'honneur. Paris: M. Motterez. 15 fr.
DES MICHELS, Abel. Les annales impériales de l'Annam. Fasc. 3. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
GESCHICHTSBLÄTTER d. deutschen Hugenotten-Vereins. II. 9. u. 10 Hft. Magdeburg: Heinrichshofen. 1 M. 10 Pf.
GSELL, St. Recherches archéologiques en Algérie. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. Preussen u. die katholische Kirche seit 1640. Hrg. v. M. Lehmann. Leipzig: Hirzel. 25 M.
SACKUS, E. Die Cluniacenser in ihrer kirchlichen u. allgemainsgeschichtlichen Wirksamkeit bis zur Mitte des 11. Jahrh. 2. Bd. Halle: Niemeyer. 12 M.
UNTERSUCHUNGEN zur deutschen Staats- u. Rechtsgeschichte. 46. Hft. Das germanische Recht im Heland v. Emil Lagenbusch. Breslau: Koebner. 2 M. 50 Pf.
URKUNDEN, ägyptische aus den königl. Museen zu Berlin. 10. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- BONNIER, G. et G. de LAYENS. Flore de la France. Paris: P. Dupont. 9 fr.
SCHULZ, A. Grundzüge d. Entwicklungsgeschichte der Pflanzenwelt Mitteleuropas seit dem Ausgange der Terziärzeit. Jena: Fischer. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- CORNIER, H. Bibliotheca sinica. Supplément: Fasc. II. Paris: Leroux. 12 fr.
HALÉVY, J. Les deux inscriptions hétéennes de Zindjirli. Paris: Leroux. 6 fr.
HERONIAS, Mimamben. Eingeleitet, übers. u. versehen v. S. Mekler. Wien: Koenig. 1 M. 60 Pf.
KRAUS, C. Deutsche Gedichte des 12. Jahrh. Halle: Niemeyer. 7 M.
MUKLER, D. Albrecht v. Johannisdorf. Ein Beitrag zur mittelhochdeutschen Metrik. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
PISCHKE, R. Die Hofdichter des Laksmansena. Göttingen: Dieterich. 3 M. 80 Pf.
SCHULENBURG, A. C. Graf v. der. Die Sprache der Zimshian-Indianer in Northwest-America. Braunschweig: Böttler. 60 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SUPPOSED WORK OF ST. ADAMNAN.

Oxford: March 12, 1894.

I grieve to have taken up so much of the ACADEMY's space with a theory which can no longer be maintained. Mr. Mowat, one of the curators of the Bodleian Library, has pointed out to me that the postscript containing adunam and the passage containing Inolere both occur in St. Jerome's Letter to Fabiola (Ep. 64).

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

THE OGAM SIGN X.

Bournemouth.

As a contribution towards fixing the value of the Ogam sign X, referred to in recent letters in the ACADEMY, I am desirous, with your permission, to submit to those interested in such subjects a detailed and classified list of all the inscriptions known to me in which this difficult figure occurs. For the text of the Irish examples I have followed Mr. Brash (Ogam Inscribed Monuments of the Gaedhil), and in the case of those from Pictland I have used my own readings (Origins of Pictish Symbolism). These versions, of course, may be questioned; but for present purposes I believe they will sufficiently serve, the groups being clear enough in the parts that concern this special inquiry.

* Dante's "Riccardo, Che a considerar fu più che vïro."

As formerly shown, the Ogam X, though equated with diphthong EA in the Ballymote MS.,* cannot in some examples have that value, but can only represent a consonant. This consonant I and others have supposed to be a guttural—not perhaps o pure and simple, for it stands beside that letter in the Aghabulloge, Tinnahally, and Killogrone inscriptions—but possibly G or K passing into semi-vowel sounds, as in the case of one of the Runes (formed like the Ogam X traversed by a vertical line), which, to quote from Canon Isaac Taylor, “had the power sometimes of G, sometimes of H, and often of Æ or A” (Greeks and Goths, p. 98). “These phonetic developments are regular,” continues the writer, “as we see from the Anglo-Saxon ge-mang, which became hi-mong in Northern and a-mong in Southern English. So also Anglo-Saxon be-ge-ondan . . . bi-hi-onda . . . be-y-ond.” As I have elsewhere stated, I am inclined to think that the Ogam sign was a “semi-consonant, with a pronunciation variously combining H guttural with C or G, or softening into Y, . . . compare Talluorrrh, equivalent to Talore or Talorg, in the Aboyne Ogam” (Pict. Sym., pp. 60, 75). In Scandinavian, “ea (ya) . . . though found everywhere, is peculiarly Old English . . . probably often a very rapid ea, rather than a hard and mechanical ya” (Stephens, Scandinavia, i. 137). Among modern letters, perhaps Y, in its various functions, is the nearest general equivalent to the Ogam sign X. It will be found that in few, if any, cases could X equal P, save, perhaps, on the Newton and Aglish Stones, as well as in the familiar Crickhowel example, the authority for that attribution—though even there such a form as Turgil, Turghil, or Turchil (= modern Torquil or Torcul) might furnish a better name than Turpil, if, as some writers think, the Ogams in Wales belonged to a Gaelic race.

I have tentatively classified the inscriptions thus: (I.) Where X may equal a guttural consonant. (II.) Where it may equal a diphthong or vowel. (III.) Where it is abnormally placed in relation to the stem-line. (IV.) Where other figures have been taken for the sign.

CLASS I.

- Ann Corr Xo Maq . . . [Guuddg Xtt].* Aghabulloge, Cork. (Brash, p. 130.)
Cure Xaitauru . . . eo. Roovesmore, Cork. (Brash, p. 150.)
Broinienas Xcinetat Drenalugos. Monattagart, Cork. (Brash, p. 163.)
AXilgado. Aglish, Kerry. (Brash, p. 187.)
Gosuetias Mosac Ma Xcini. Royal Irish Academy—from Kerry. (Brash, p. 190.)
AXefritti. Ballintagart, Kerry. (Brash, p. 201.)
Maqqi Iari Xi Maqqi Moccoe Doffinias. Ballintagart, Kerry. (Brash, p. 201.)
. . . lminagea Xi . . . qqi Mu . . . Ballintagart, Kerry. (Brash, p. 205.)
Dego Maqi Mucoi Toica Xi. Dunloe, Kerry. (Brash, 232.)

* Mr. Macalister reasonably questions the late Mr. Brash's statement that “some writers have asserted that r was represented by the same symbol as ia” (Og. Mon., p. 59). May not this be a misprint or inadvertence, as the author did not live to complete his work? In the Index (pp. 416, 418), the name Ifin or Iphin (gooseberry) is given to the sign; but in the text (p. 59) that name is rightly assigned to the distinctive ia symbol, while the X bears the designation Eabad (aspen).

Maq . . . a Xucc . . . q . . . Kiltera, Waterford. (Brash, p. 260.)
Iddai Qann Forreri Xua Iesii. Newton, Aberdeenshire. (Pict. Sym., p. 71.)

CLASS II.

- [Ann Corr Xo Maq . . .] Guuddg Xtt. Aghabulloge, Cork. (Brash, p. 130.)
Dinis X . . . Coolineagh, Cork. (Brash, p. 131.)
Fegoonai Maqi Xgod . . Cooldorrihy, Cork. (Brash, p. 160.)
Conun Xtt Moqi Conuri. Glenfais, Kerry. (Brash, p. 175.)
Ann TXgann Mac Deglann. Tinnahally, Kerry. (Brash, p. 214.)
. . . nm Mol Xg . . . mir . . . d M. c . . . f . . . Xs. Killogrone, Kerry. (Brash, p. 240.)
Minodor — Muad — Cnaems Xch — CXllach — Ma Xlnair X — Ma Xluadaig — Ma Xlnair X. Silver Brooch; Ballyspellan, Kilkenny. (Brash, p. 290.)

CLASS III.

- Logqi Maqi Er Xnan.* Killeenadreena, Kerry. (Brash, p. 241.)
Tur Xili. Crickhowel, Wales. (Brash, p. 331.)
X Twicnhaatts : Ahaahhtnnnn : Heeff : Ned-tonn. Lunnasting, Shetland. (Pict. Sym., p. 76.)

CLASS IV.

- Naalluorr Ann Uurraadd [Ma ?] effe Aarroces.* Burrian, Orkney. (Pict. Sym., p. 76.)
Maqqoi Talluorrrh Ffennac Abborfihhaan. Aboyne, Aberdeenshire. (Pict. Sym., p. 75.)
Aldall Orraadd Maqq Nuuffhri [A]nn. Golspie, Sutherland. (Pict. Sym., p. 75.)

It will be seen that the Aghabulloge inscription appears both in Class I. and Class II., as in that case the sign occurs twice with apparently differing values. In Class III., the sign is below the stem-line in the Killeenadreena and Crickhowel inscriptions. At Lunnasting the X is not on the stem-line, but precedes it, as if a mere initial sign—as sometimes in Runic inscriptions (Stephens, Scandinavia, ii. 792). In the Burrian Ogam the form is a vertical line across the stem, diagonally crossed by a long slanted line, not the common X, but perhaps M, A. In the Lunnasting, Burrian, Aboyne, and Golspie inscriptions, there is a form consisting of two angled scores across the stem-line with their angle-points opposite. This has been taken for the X sign; but the scores are entirely separate, and I have always read them as A, A. In the Bressay (female) inscription—Crro[e]sec : Nahthfiddadds : Dattrr : Ann (Pict. Sym., p. 75)—the initial letter in the recognised word “Ann” is a single A of this description. In the Burrian Ogam we have a group composed of six similar angled vowel-scores—three on either side, angles opposed—which cannot well be anything but U, U; and, if so, by analogy the two opposed angled vowel-scores should no doubt be A, A.

SOUTHESK.

“TYPOLOGY.”

London: March 2, 1894.

In the ACADEMY for August 29, 1885, there appeared a description of an impression left in an early printed book (a Psalter, Venice, 1487) of a type which had accidentally slipped from its place (or been drawn out by a hasty application of the “dabber.”)

I have just discovered, in a fine copy of the first edition of Trissino's Italia Liberata (Venice and Rome, 1547-8, 3 vols.), another example of this curious phenomenon, which may perhaps interest students of what must be called “Comparative Typology.”

It is on the back of p. 107 in vol. iii. A full length impression of the type is left.

It is a shade less than three-quarter inches long, less than one-eighth inch wide, and must have been thin, since the accident of its slipping has only destroyed the impression of three letters on each side of it. The end touches the left margin and top of the page.

GEO. H. POWELL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, March 18, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: “Recent Discoveries about the Sun,” by Sir Robert Ball.
 7.30 p.m. Ethical: “Women in the Family and in the Community,” by Miss M. S. Olliland.
 MONDAY, March 19, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: “A Possible Cause for the Origin of the Tradition of the Flood,” by Prof. J. Prestwich.
 5 p.m. Incorporated Society of Authors: General Meeting.
 8 p.m. Aristotelian: Symposium—“The Relation of Language to Thought,” by Miss E. E. Constance Jones, Mr. J. S. Mann, and Mr. G. F. Stout.
 8.30 p.m. Society of Arts: “Indian Railway Extension,” by Mr. Joseph Walton.
 TUESDAY, March 20, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: “Statistics of Pauperism in Old Age,” by Mr. Charles Booth.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, “The Prevention and Detection of Waste of Water,” by Mr. Ernest Collins.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: “The Myology of the Sciaromorphine and Hystriomorphine Rodents,” by Mr. F. G. Parsons; “Notes on Cynogale bennetti,” by Babu Ram Bramha Sastry; “The Osteology of certain Cranes, Rails, and their Allies, with Remarks upon their Affinities,” by Dr. R. W. Shufeldt.
 WEDNESDAY, March 21, 8 p.m. Geological: “The Origin of Certain Novaculites and Quartzites,” by Mr. Frank Rutley; “The Occurrence of Perlitic Cracks in Quartz,” by Mr. W. W. Watts.
 8 p.m. Microscopical: “The Uropodinae,” by Mr. A. D. Michael.
 8 p.m. Meteorological: “Relation between the Mean Quarterly Temperature and the Death Rate,” and “Duration and Lateral Extent of Gusts of Wind, and the Measurement of their Intensity,” by Mr. W. H. Dines; “Effect on the Readings of the Dry Bulb of the Close Proximity of the Reservoir of the Wet Bulb Thermometer,” by Mr. F. Gaster; “The Calculation of Photographic Cloud Measurements,” by Dr. K. G. Olsson; “Sudden Changes of the Barometer in the Hebrides on February 23, 1894,” by Mr. R. H. Scott.
 8 p.m. Folk-Lore: “P. lish and Serbian Demonology as exemplified in their Folk-Tales,” by Mr. J. T. Naske.
 8 p.m. Elizabethan: “The Elizabethan Sonneteers,” by Mr. J. E. Baker.
 THURSDAY, March 22, 8 p.m. Chemical: Anniversary Meeting.

SCIENCE.

THREE TRANSLATIONS OF HERODAS.

- I mimi di Heroda.* By G. Setti. (Modena.)
Die Mimiamben des Herondas. Deutsch mit Einleitung und Anmerkungen. By Otto Crusius. (Göttingen.)
Les Mimes d'Herondas. By G. Dalmeyda. (Paris.)

THE first of these three small volumes is a translation into Italian prose of the newly-discovered Mimes of Herodas. Twelve engravings from the antique illustrate the various scenes which the mimographer has placed so vividly before us. Among them is the well-known picture of a schoolroom with boys seated conning their lessons, each watched by his attendant pedagogue; while on the right of the painting a young man, switch high in air, is administering corporal chastisement to a delinquent, whose arms are supported on the shoulders of a somewhat older youth, while his feet are held up from the ground by a boy behind him.

Setti's work was mostly written before the publication of Crusius' Untersuchungen; and the translation would probably have been considerably modified by a careful study of that work. But the translation is only a part, and not the best part, of the book. In sixty-five pages of Introduction (Proemio) Setti speaks of the discovery of the papyrus, its publication almost simultaneously by Kenyon and Rutherford, the state of our knowledge of Herodas before the discovery, the new light in which he is now presented, the character of his poetry, his probable date, the writers of Alexandrian or subsequent epochs with whom he may be compared, or who seem to have been modelled upon him. Each Mime is analysed, and the accompaniments of each scene in these little dramas of everyday life sketched. Of the introductions to Herodas which I have read, this appears to me the best as regards its judicial, and at the same time interesting, estimate of the Mimes as a literary product. Setti is inclined to rank them very high. Herodas (such he considers the better spelling of the name, as it is certainly the form which MSS. most frequently present) is "a new star rising on the horizon of poetic idealism," not, indeed, comparable with Theocritus, whose enchanting pictures of rustic life and scenery find no parallel in the Mimes, but unique in the delicacy and clearness with which he has represented and idealised the varieties of common and everyday existence. Of his types—the procuress, the pander, the incorrigible boy, the women in the temple of Asklepios, the jealous lady, the women in confabulation, the shoemaker—Setti inclines to prefer the fifth, herein agreeing with Piccolomini; allowing, however, that others—e.g., Weil and Crusius—rank the second (Battarus) higher. A larger number of readers, I fancy, will agree with me that Cottalus (III.) is the best sketch of an idle boy that has ever been drawn. In some cases, as in VI. and VII., the lacunae in the papyrus unhappily mar the effect, and leave an imperfect impression. Over these two, which are obviously connected, an animated controversy has been raised; but there can be little doubt, as Setti shows, that the prevailing view, which Rutherford was the first to propound, and this alone, gives an adequate explanation of the mystery. Readers of the Mimes will do well to refer on this point to pp. xiv., xvii. of the Proemio. That Herodas not only pleased his contemporaries, but was conscious of his success, is probable from the fragment in which he compares himself with Hipponax, the minstrel of old time, as singing choliambi to the listening Ionians. As illustrating the Mimes, Setti considers Lucian—especially the Dialogues of Courtesans and the Letters of Alciphron—the most fruitful field. He emphasises, very justly, the fact, hardly yet weighed adequately, particularly in its connexion with the epoch of Herodas, that women are the central figures of almost all the Mimes. II. is, of course, an exception, yet even here Battarus produces his maltreated girl, to work more effectively upon the feelings of the judges. At least half of the humour of III. is the representation of Cottalus' enormities by his distracted mother.

Setti pays a well-deserved compliment to England, and specially to the authorities of the British Museum, for the re-discovery of the two finds, unequalled in importance—the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία and Herodas. Were Leopardi alive, he would repeat, with better reason, his verses to Mai. Yes, Mai's discoveries alone, in the early part of this century, can be compared with these, and with the earlier discovery (about 1850) of Hyperides: all alike the fruits of English enterprise and activity.

The new German translation of the Mimes by Crusius is in blank verse, occasionally varied by lines of shorter length. This form of verse he selected, in preference to the choliambi of the original, from a conviction that Schlegel's criticism on German experiments in this metre—

"Der Hinkiambus ist ein Vers für Kunst | richter,
Die immerfort voll Naseweisheit mit | sprechen,
Und eins nur wissen sollten, dass sie nichts | wissen"—

is justified by fact. The new version, the first, I believe, in blank verse which has been attempted, is spirited and very faithful to the Greek; more than this I do not venture to say. It is regrettable that so accomplished a poet as the late J. A. Symonds did not experiment on Herodas: his version, drawn up under the superintendence of Mr. Walter Headlam (whose edition, it is to be hoped, will not much longer be delayed), of course, exhibits his unrivalled command of our language; but, alas! it is in prose. It will be found in the second of Symonds's two volumes, now greatly expanded, on the Greek poets.

The Introduction, which Crusius has drawn up mainly for those who cannot read the Mimes in their Greek form, gives a résumé of his own and other researches. Much of the more recent criticism on them is noticed and sometimes adopted; in particular, the edition of Meister and the French work of Dalmeyda are hailed with the recognition which they justly claim. Chap. ii. gives an analysis of each poem in succession. The only point on which I feel inclined to quarrel is Crusius' acceptance of Diel's opinion that the anger or fury of Cottalus' mother is exaggerated. I can find in this exquisite sketch nothing that is not strictly true to nature. A few lashes more or less from a schoolmaster who knew his trade would hardly do much harm; and Cottalus is nowhere represented as a delicate or tender boy: on the contrary, he plays with porters, is not afraid of getting his back abraded, sits on the roof of the house with his feet dangling, and is known to the whole neighbourhood as Metrotime's scapegrace.* Chap. iii. reviews the arguments of date. It is provoking that they are, to my judgment, all unconvincing: that is to say, they are of a kind which only amounts to establishing a probability: of a kind which a single distinct chronological statement from antiquity would outweigh. Such, particularly, are the arguments drawn from the line, I. 30—θεῶν ἀδελφῶν τέμενος, ὃ βασιλεὺς χρηστός, and from the mention of the town Ἄκη in II. 16. To an Englishman the readiness with which Herodas is accepted on the continent as belonging to the era of the early Alexandrian poets and the first Ptolemies, is surprising. I say nothing of Maron, though I see that Mr. E. M. Thompson, in his work on Palaeography, adds his weighty authority to the supporters of the Augustan date. But, as yet, to my knowledge, no one has suggested that Herodas may have lived 100 or 150 years later than the Germans agree to place him—that is, about 150 or 100 B.C. This, indeed, would be necessary if, as occurred to me in reading the epigram, the words of A. P. ix., 519.3, 4—

* Has any one noticed the resemblance of the page-boy in Sir W. Scott's Fortunes of Nigel, c. xi. "He is by this time playing at hustle-cap and chuck-farthing with the most blackguard imps upon the wharf."

Πίομαι, ὡς ὕφελόν γε καὶ ἔγκαρον ἀνδρὸς ἀράξας
Βρέγμα Φιλίππειος ἐξέπιον κεφαλῆς—

might be taken as a basis for restoring II., 73, reading there Φίλιππος, and explaining in both cases of Philip V., king of Macedonia from 220—179 B.C., a view which I hope to state more at length elsewhere.

Chap. iv. sketches the gradual development of the Mimiambus, the name from which Herodas seems to have himself designated his book of poems, Mimiambi, or Mimi in iambi. The first appearance in Greek literature of character-types corresponding to those of Herodas is, perhaps, to be found in the Sicilian Epicharmus, then, somewhat later, in Sophron, another Sicilian, whose Mimes were written, as the too scanty fragments show, in a kind of rhythmical prose. Sophron is believed to have largely influenced the form of Plato's Dialogues, as well as the greatest creation of the Hellenistic age—the New Comedy. It is probable that from Sophron was borrowed the main outline of Herodas' Mimiambi, alike in their short compass and their coarse, realistic humour. For the actual metre, however, he himself states that he had made Hipponax his exemplar:

μεθ' ἱππώνακτα τὸν πάλαι [κλεινὸν]
τὰ κύλλα' αἰδεῖν Ξουθίδαις ἐπάρουσιν.

Crusius shows how admirably this metre suited the poet's purpose, by the prose-like and matter-of-fact character which the spondee in the sixth foot gives; and how the halting rhythm (choliambus), which is too marked to please in a lengthy composition, is highly effective in a short sustained scene. On this point much has still to be said. The two great masters of choliambic in Roman literature, Catullus and Martial, seem to have bound themselves by far stricter rules than Herodas. A line like II., 10—οὔτε νόμον οὔτε προστάτην οὐρ ἔρχοντα—

pure prose, and almost directly taken from some orator, has few parallels in these; though Catullus' Oratorem in Antium petitorem is a pretty close approximation.

Chap. v. touches on the question, whether the Mimiambi were meant for acting or merely for reading; chap. vi., on the translator's aim in his version. The volume concludes with some notes in which the American J. H. Wright's interesting article on Herodas in Harvard Studies for 1893 is criticised; and new views from the later writers on Herodas are discussed or adopted. Some fluctuation of opinion is perceptible here, as compared with Crusius' earlier views in his Teubner edition and the Untersuchungen; but this is inevitable in the damaged and lacunose condition of the papyrus.

The French work of Dalmeyda is on the same lines as that of Setti. There is an introduction, a prose translation, and notes on the readings and interpretation. The characterisation of his Mimes is excellently done, and may be quoted :

"L'art du poète consiste à leur (i.e., les femmes) prêter un naturel, une aisance qui nous confond. Elles ne sont pas cyniques, car le cynisme implique bravade et défi: leur ton et leurs manières n'ont rien d'étudié, elles vivent pour elles-mêmes. C'est là le grand art du poète. Il crayonne des personnages à leur insu, le modèle pose sans le savoir."

Higher praise of the poet would be impossible. But I do not agree with Dalmeyda in finding misogyny in Herodas. In the first poem the procuress is only an average type of the class, and sets off by contrast the virtue of Metriche. In III., Cottalus' mother is perhaps somewhat peremptory in the number of lashes she orders the school-master to give him, but at heart she is a true mother: certainly no fury, no Megaera. In IV., the women in the temple of Asklepios chatter after their kind, but without a trace of anything vicious or corrupt. It is only in V., VI., VII. that the more sensual side of Greek life steps forward, and in a very marked way; but the text of the two last is in many places so wholly irrecoverable that we can only arrive at an imperfect idea of the real impression conveyed. Nor is it legitimate to infer from the eight specimens which accident has preserved that the far greater number lost must have dealt either mainly or exclusively with the characters of women. It would be a fairer inference that they were all drawn from common or low life. And here is our loss. Who does not recall the low-life sketches of Petronius in the Cena Trimalchionis as the best samples of pure comedy that Latin literature has preserved? They have a reality far beyond Plautus. Similar is the loss of Herodas. We cannot doubt, from the excellence of what has survived, that our knowledge of Greek life has suffered immeasurably from the destruction of the remainder.

Again, I dissent from Dalmeyda when he says that the Mimiambi have all the qualities of good familiar prose, and quotes Horace's nisi quod pede certo Differt sermone, sermo merus. If it were so, the occasional lines of mere prose would not stand out in such marked relief from the main body of each poem, nor would the effect produced be so distinct. To me it would never occur to compare them with the trimetres of Plautus, nor, indeed, with comedy at all. That is to say, they are exquisitely finished, and whatever carelessness is admitted is intentional. But the art of Herodas need not be Alexandrian, nor is much gained by the comparison with Callimachus and Apollonius Rhodius on pp. 59, sqq. The newly found fragment of the "Hecate," which Dalmeyda does not seem to have heard of, no doubt introduces occasional homely touches, as in the description of morning (p. 12, ed. Gomperz, 1893)— ἡδὴ γὰρ ἑωθινὰ λύχνα φαίνει, αἰδεῖται καὶ ποῦ τις ἀνὴρ ὑδατηγὸς ἱμαῖον ἔγρει καὶ τιν' ἔχοντα παρὰ πλόον οἰκίον ἔξω τετριγῶς ὅπ' ἔμαζαν, ἀνιδρῶντες δὲ πυκνὰ διμῶλι χαλκῆς κωφώμενοι ἔνθον ἀκούειν.

But no real conclusion can be drawn from this or similar poetical realisms as to the co-existence of Callimachus and Herodas.

We might as well say that realism in poetry was a special phenomenon of the third century B.C. The most that can be said on this head is that it became then a resource of poetical art more consciously than before.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will shortly publish a new book by Mr. J. W. Tutt, under the title of Woodside, Burnside, Hillside, and Marsh. It will consist of a series of illustrated literary sketches, on somewhat similar lines to the author's "Random Recollections of Woodland, Fen, and Hill," and will describe a series of natural history rambles in various parts of Kent and the Scotch Highlands, dealing with the natural objects and phenomena observed (geological, ornithological, entomological, botanical, and geographical) in a popular way, yet from the standpoint of the most recent scientific knowledge.

THE anniversary meeting of the Chemical Society will be held on Wednesday next, when an address will be delivered by the retiring president, Dr. H. E. Armstrong, and the officers and council for the year will be elected.

At the meeting of the Victoria Institute, to be held on Monday next, at 4.30 p.m., in the house of the Society of Arts, Prof. J. Prestwich will read a paper, entitled, "A Possible Cause for the Origin of the Tradition of the Flood."

A PORTRAIT of the late Sir Richard Owen has been presented to the Geological Society by Mr. Ernest Swain.

THE Easter excursion of the Geologists' Association this year will be to Bournemouth, the director being Mr. John Starkie Gardner. The president for the current year, elected at the last meeting, is Lieut.-Gen. C. A. McMahon.

THE council of the Royal Meteorological Society have arranged to hold, in the rooms of the Institution of Civil Engineers, at 25, Great George-street, S.W., from April 10 to 20, an exhibition of instruments, photographs, and drawings relating to the representation and measurement of clouds. They will also be glad to show any new meteorological instruments or apparatus invented or first constructed since the exhibition of last year, as well as photographs and drawings possessing meteorological interest.

THE Journal of Physiology will henceforth be published by Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons, at the Cambridge University Press Warehouse. The editors are Prof. Michael Foster, and Mr. J. N. Langley, both of Trinity College, Cambridge.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE are glad to hear that the lectures which Mr. T. G. Pinches has been delivering at the rooms of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, on the Assyrian language and the cuneiform inscriptions, have been well attended and the interest well sustained. It is announced that, after Easter, Mr. Le Page Renouf will resume from last year his lectures on Egyptology.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK, Edinburgh, announce a new Hand-Dictionary of the Syriac Language, by Dr. C. Brockelmann, of Breslau, a pupil of Nöldeke. The printing is being executed in the well-known establishment of Drugulin, of Leipzig. For the "root-words," Lagarde's Syriac type is used; and for the "derivatives" a smaller size of the same fount has been specially prepared for this work. It will contain about 800 crown quarto pages, and will probably be issued in Parts, No. I. of which will be ready early this year. Prof. Nöldeke is to contribute a Preface.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN.—(Wednesday, Feb. 21.)

FREDERICK ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Arthur C. Hayward read a paper on "Elizabethan Slang." Mr. Hayward said that we must be careful, in dealing with Elizabethan slang, not to judge it entirely by present-day standards; much of it is now recognised English, while much of our modern slang was good Elizabethan English. The word "slang" is of comparatively modern origin. The older word, which "slang" to some extent replaces, is "cant," the name given to the secret language of thieves, rogues, and vagabonds, introduced into England by the gipsies in the reign of Henry VIII. Harrison, in his description of Elizabethan England, records that the first deviser of "Canting" or "Pedler's French," was hanged by the neck. The "cant" language was a strange medley of Hebrew, Latin, Sanskrit, Greek, Wallachian, Spanish, Flemish, Dutch, Celtic, and bastard Italian. The practice of such speech is world-wide. We have the French "argot," the Spanish "Germania," the Italian "gergo," and even the vagabonds among the Hottentots have their secret language, known as "curse-cat." The first lexicographer to recognise the word "slang" in its present sense was Grese, in 1785. Thomas Harman, in his Caveat or Warning to Common Cursitors (1566), describes twenty-three varieties of rogues and vagabonds, and gives a list of cant-words and their meanings. The twenty-three divisions of the "canting-crew" are as follows:—Men: Rufflers, Upright Men, Hookers or Anglers, Rogues, Wild Rogues, Priggers of Prauncers, Palliards, Fraters, Jarkmen or Patricoes, Freshwater Mariners or Whip Jackets, Drummers, Drunken Tinkers, Swaddlers, Abrams, and Kinchin Coes. Women: Demarders for Glimmer or Fire, Bawdy Baskets, Morts, Autem-Morts, Walking Morts, Daxies, Delles, Kinching Morts. One of Harman's descriptions contains a delightfully naïve remark. Says Harman: "Priggers of prauncers be horse-stealers, for 'to prig' signifieth, in their language, 'to steal'; and 'a prauncer' is a horse, so, being put together, the matter was playn. . . . I had the best gelding stolen out of my pasture that I had amongst others while this book was first a-printing." It was worth notice that the rogues and vagabonds, in revenge for his exposure of their professional secrets, seized upon Harman's name to enrich their vocabulary: "Harman" became a cant word for a pair of stocks. A careful perusal of Harman's list yields us some interesting results. Compare, for example, "Abram-man" with "to sham Araham," or "play the old soldier"; "beck," for a constable, with our own slang word "beak." "Commision" is still the slang term for "a shirt," generally in the abbreviated form: "mish." The word is found in this sense in the works of Taylor, the Water-Poet. "Cofe" or "cove" occurs with its present slang meaning in the "Witt's Recreation" (1654). Our present slang words, "nab," meaning to steal, and "nob," meaning the head, are good old English words having the same meanings. "Nab-chete" meant a hat or cap. "Chete" was a kind of suffix with no apparently definite meaning, till its frequent use led to the present word "cheat." Mr. Hayward introduced a large number of other examples, and quoted specimens of "cant" conversation and "cant" verse from Harman, J. Awdeley, ("Fraternitie of Vagabonds") S. Rowlands, Beaumont and Fletcher, and other authorities. He then dealt at some length with the Elizabethan equivalents for modern slang words and phrases. Most of the slang terms were called into use to express the common wants and failings of every-day life: money, drink, its takers and its consequences. Numerous examples were quoted from the Elizabethan poets and dramatists. In connexion with slang terms for money, it was recorded that Dean Swift once got into the pulpit and gave out as his text: "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord." His sermon was short. "Now, my brethren," said he,

"if you are satisfied with the security, down with the dust." "Legem Pone," as a slang term for money, had its origin in the two Latin words which head the first Psalm for the twenty-fifth morning of the month: March 25 being the first great payday of the year. And as ready money was not always to be had in those days any more than at the present time, we find in Sedley's "Mulberry Garden" (1668) one of the characters saying: "I confess my tick is not good." Ticket formerly meant, among other things, a tradesman's bill; and taking things on credit and having them entered on a bill was called "taking them on ticket." The expression is found in Cotgrave's "English Treasury":

"Your courtier is mad to take up silks and velvets On ticket for his mistress; and your citizen Is mad to trust him."

When, however, neither "ready rhino" nor "tick" was obtainable, the Elizabethan still had one resource left. He could "lay something in lavender." "Good faith! rather than thou shouldst pawn a rag more, I'd lay my ladyship in lavender—if I knew where," exclaimed one of the characters in the old play of "Eastward Ho." The origin of this phrase was, of course, due to the fact that lavender was placed among the pawned goods to preserve them. Among other interesting slang terms dealt with by Mr. Hayward was that of "ragomofin." It was first met with in "Piers Plowman," and meant "one of the demons of hell." In "Piers Plowman" they also met with "ragman"—made from "rage-man"—meaning "the devil." "Rag-mad's Roll," of Scotch origin, came into use as a slang term for a lying document or "rigmorale." Elizabethan slang terms for personal chastisement were fairly numerous, and most of them are still in use. "Oyl of whip," for instance, will be recognised in its modern equivalent "strap-oil." Slang terms for hanging were also plentiful; that useful contrivance known as a derrick being traced to a celebrated hangman named Derrick. "Get-penny," of the same meaning as our "catch-penny"; "green," meaning gullible; "brown-study;" "blin-bottle," meaning policeman; "peck," for meat; "pash," meaning to strike heavily, or "bash"; "drab," "frump," to speak by the card; "to cool one's heels"; "Jericho," meaning a place of banishment; "to put anyone's nose out of joint," "to come in pudding-time," "not worth a rush," "strike me luck," meaning to conclude a bargain; "to get the canvas"—or as latter-day slang has it "to get the sack"; "to lie with a latchet"; "to give the Whetstone," or, as the modern version runs, "give the biscuit" for the biggest lie (aptly illustrated by Bacon's remark to Sir Kenelm Digby on the latter boasting that he had seen the philosopher's stone), and compound words such as "bibble-babble" and "helter-skelter" were among the numerous slang expressions used in Elizabethan times. In conclusion, Mr. Hayward said that slang in the sixteenth century was by no means so general as at the present time. That slang has its use as well as its abuse, a very little consideration will, I think, show us. It is always pithy, and it is often witty. It enables us to express in a few words ideas and opinions which would otherwise necessitate the use of a great many, and which sometimes could not even then be adequately expressed. It is a training school wherein words and phrases can serve for a probationary period before being admitted into the language.—A discussion followed, which was opened by the chairman and continued by Messrs. W. H. Cowham, J. A. Jenkinson, W. F. Aitken, R. J. Parker, Edgar Ham, W. Rickard, Nugent Chaplin, and James Ernest Baker.

SOCIETY OF HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.—(Oxford, Thursday, March 1.)

PROF. DR. O. PFLEIDERER, of Berlin, read a paper on "The Sources of the Theology of St. Paul, with especial reference to its Hellenic Elements." After analysing the psychological conditions of the apostle's conversion, the writer dealt with the processes of thought by which he became the creator of the doctrinal form of the Christian faith. From Gal. i. 11-12, it was inferred that, apart from the facts of the death on the cross and the appearances after the resurrection, other traditions concerning the life or the teaching of Jesus contributed nothing to the theology of Paul. Even where he sets forth Christ as a moral example, he reflects only on his incarnation and death, not on his earthly conduct in life. Only by this abstraction from all externality could the ideal principle of the religion revealed in Jesus be set forth as holding universally good for all peoples and times. But even as the Apostle of Christ he could not deny the Jewish theologian. His thinking remained positive, a reflecting on the basis of given authorities; and he followed the method of the Jewish schools in his conviction of the verbal inspiration of Scripture, which resulted on the one hand in bondage to the letter of the individual passage taken out of its connexion, and treated as a divine oracle, and on the other, in the freest interpretation of the letter by the substitution of a quite other so-called spiritual sense. This had long been practised in both Palestine and Alexandria. These two schools of Jewish theology further furnished other important contributions. (1) The Pharisean theology construed the religious relationship from legal points of view throughout, and elaborated a theory by which the superfluous merit of the eminent just might be imputed to sinners for the covering of their own defects. This doctrine was not applied by the Pharisees to the Messiah, as the worldly direction of their Messianic idea excluded the thought of his suffering and death. But it was natural that Paul should apply the universal theory of his school to the special case of the martyr death of Jesus, and should see in this death an expiation contrived by God for the atonement of the sinful world (Rom. iii. 25, 2 Cor. v. 19 ff., Gal. iii. 19). This idea, starting from the juristic theory of the Pharisees, and operating with its categories, came to the remarkable result of abrogating the legal religion of Judaism, and putting in its place God's universal will of grace. (2) Whether Paul was acquainted with the writings of Philo could not be proved; but he doubtless knew and used the "Wisdom of Solomon." The view of man in 1 Cor. ii. corresponded with that in Wisdom viii.-ix.; but the dualism between the flesh and the spirit was subdued with Paul in the one person of Jesus Christ, the spiritual man who sprang from heaven, and was elevated to heaven. "The heavenly pre-existence of Christ was for Paul the logical postulate for the explanation of what Christ became through his death and resurrection. But this had its point of attachment in the Alexandrian distinction between the ideal heavenly man created after God's image: and the earthly man, a sensibly dimmed and sensually differentiated likeness of that image, a theory which, resting on the Platonic idealism, appears even before Paul to have had an influence on the Rabbinical interpretation of Scripture. Here was the natural frame for one of the profoundest ideas in the history of religion. In two special points the further dependence of Paul on the Alexandrian Wisdom might be shown, (1) the judgment of heathenism, and (2) the eschatology. The author of Wisdom wavers between a milder and severer judgment of heathenism (cp. xiii. 1 and xiii. 8-9, ii. 21). The same discordance is found in Paul (cp. Rom. i. 20 ff. and Gal. iv. 1-9), according to which latter passage heathenism is not the consequence of a falling away from the true faith in God, but is a still imperfect childlike stage of development of the human knowledge of God, which forms a necessary stage of transition to the true religion (compare the sketch in 1 Cor. xv. 4, 5 ff., of the ascending process of humanity from the sensuous to the spiritual, a fundamental thought of Hellenism, in distinction from the Pharisean judgment of sin in general, and of heathenism in particular, as a free and punishable offence). The influence of the Alexandrian doctrine of immortality strengthened the apostle's wish for a union with the Lord Christ immediately after death, in place of the earlier conception of an interval of sleep followed by a general resurrection (cp. Wisd. ix. 15, 2 Cor. v. 1 and 4, Wisd. vi. 20, Phil. i. 23). In the decline of the expectation of the Parousia, this idealistic hope of the individual blessedness was of the utmost importance for the future of Christianity. The connexion with the heavenly world effected through faith in the risen Christ needed, however, an embodiment in visible signs and acts of the kind that heathenism had in the symbolism of the mysteries. And the paper concluded with a brief treatment of Baptism and the Lord's Supper in their analogy with the Eleusinian Mysteries, the writer expressing his general concurrence with the theory of the origin of the Lord's Supper recently developed by Prof. Gardner, in which he found the complement to his own previously published hypothesis, that the Pauline doctrine of baptism stands in historical connexion with the Mysteries. Thus the Pauline theology had its sources in Judaism and Hellenism, their synthesis being effected for him under the inspiration of the Spirit of Christ.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY.

THE Royal Scottish Academy have resolved to make their exhibition of the present year exclusively a display of Scottish art. None of such loan works by English painters as have given diversity to the walls on former occasions have been sought for; and all the prominent pictures that are shown are either current work painted in the North, or the productions of Scottish painters settled in London, and more or less closely connected with the Academy of their native country.

Considering that they have depended altogether upon their own resources, the exhibition is an interesting and attractive one. The president, Sir George Reid, is admirably represented by four examples of his portraiture, so firm in draughtsmanship, so expressive of personality as revealed in form and feature. The half-length of the Rev. Dr. Walter Smith, the poet of "Olrig Grange," depicted in his robes as Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, is admirable in the forcible modelling of the head; not less successful as a likeness is that of Prof. Grainger Stewart; while the standing full-length of Lord Mountstephen is distinguished by well-marked and characteristic individuality of attitude. A delicate and pleasantly spontaneous and unlaboured example of the artist's landscape work, "A Highland Pastoral," also hangs on the walls of the great room.

Among the figure pictures, we have an important work of historical genre, by Mr. G. O. Reid, representing the reception by the English Jacobites assembled in the Smyrna Coffee-house, London, of the news of Prince Charles's victory at Prestonpans. The scene is imagined in a dramatic and telling manner: the party that enter reverently lifting their hats as they proclaim the tidings, and the inmates of the antique panelled room rising in eager haste as they receive the welcome intelligence: and the gay, old-world costumes of the figures are rendered with a delicate touch and much charm of subtly-blended colour. Mr. C. Martin Hardie portrays effectively the meeting of Burns and Scott at the house of Prof. Ferguson in Edinburgh: and by Mr. Allan Stewart is a vigorously handled, if rather coldly toned, figure-picture, representing survivors of the Spanish Armada landing on the island of Mull, and soliciting shelter from the Highland chief of the district. Among the landscapes with figures, the first place is held by Mr. Robert McGregor's "Returning from the Market," in which the forms of rustics, and their ass laden with vegetables, are placed in very true and harmonious relation against a background stretch of sand and sea, and beneath a delicately painted grey sky.

In pure landscape Mr. W. D. McKay renders the full green leafage of summer in two of his pictures; but the best of his works is a little subject of "Cattle Feeding—Early Winter," distinguished by delicate refinement in the portrayal of a misty morning effect. By Mr. MacWhirter is a large and effective, if rather spectacular, view of "Edinburgh from St. Anthony's Chapel," under a richly-coloured sunset effect. Mr. A. D. Reid has been at work in Holland, and sends a couple of renderings of the old buildings and quays at Campveere, which, in their skilful composition and their quietly harmonious tonality, are eminently pleasing and restful. Mr. J. Campbell Noble is represented by several vigorous sea pieces, painted from the Northumberland coast, rendering with keen perception the forms of storm-tossed waves. The landscape art of Mr. Robert Noble possesses something of the dignity and quietude that distinguished the early English school. The finest among his five exhibits is a view of "Esher Heath, Surrey," a dark stretch of richly toned moorland, dominated by a sky of singular brilliancy. In his "Woodside Path, Torr, Galloway," Mr. David Farquharson shows a pleasant, softly-coloured evening effect; and in his "Fresty Morning" Mr. G. W. Johnstone is successful in his rendering of tone and atmosphere, and in catching a sense of extended space.

In addition to the work shown by the president, we have three important examples of portraiture by Mr. W. E. Lockhart. His characteristic half-length of the Speaker of the House of Commons has already been seen at the Royal Academy; his portrait of "Miss Anita Lockhart," a study in various tones of white and flesh-colour, is one of the most successful works of the kind that we have seen from his brush. The chief success this year of Mr. M'Taggart—an artist always fresh and daring in his work, always original in his view of nature—is a powerful full-length of a child on the sea shore, remarkable for its forcible brush work, and for its brilliant use of potent tones of blue and orange. Mr. C. Martin Hardie shows a graceful portrait of a lady in green velvet. Mr. Robert Gibb is represented by portraits of "The Rev. Thomas Kennedy, D.D.," and "Miss Jean Robson"; and Mr. James Guthrie, in addition to a clever character-study of a villager, has a seated half-length of an unnamed gentleman, excellent in its quietude of tone and sense of atmosphere.

Among the animal-pictures of the exhibition is one of exceptional quality: Mr. Robert Alexander's rendering of terriers, grouped in a wood, beside a game-basket filled with rabbits.

In the Water-Colour Room is one of Mr. Arthur Melville's clever impressionistic colour-studies, "A Moorish Procession, Tangiers." Mr. H. W. Kerr shows a portrait on a scale unusual in this medium, a life-size half-length of Ex-Provost Aitken, of Leith; and a bit of excellent character-painting, "The Minister's Man." Here the most accomplished of the landscapes are by Mr. R. B. Nisbet and Mr. Thomas Scott.

Among the works of sculpture are a graceful bust of Zélie de Lussan as "Carimen," and a powerful bronze of "Thomas Carlyle," by Mr. Pittendirgh Macgillivray, who also shows a dignified decorative panel in bas-relief of a procession of musicians. Mr. Birnie Rhind has reduced models for the statues of the late Thomas Coats and Sir Peter Coats at Paisley, which include admirable symbolical reliefs to be executed in bronze on the pedestals. Mr. D. W. Stevenson is represented by busts of the Rev. Dr. McGregor, the late Bishop of Carlisle, and Principal Cairns. Mr. John Hutchison sends his bust of Her Majesty, modelled at Windsor Castle in 1888; and several reliefs and wax models for goldsmith's work by the late Clark Stanton are included.

THE HIMALAYAS.

It is no disparagement to the artistic ability of Mr. A. D. McCormick to say that the exhibition of his drawings at the Japanese Gallery in Bond-street derives a great part of its interest from its connexion with Mr. Conway's recent expedition to the Himalayas. The appearance of the mountains which compose the loftiest range in the world and the longest glacier, the sketch produced at the highest altitude at which artist ever drew: these are sufficient attractions in themselves. From this point of view, the main defect in the collection is the absence of any drawing of the Pioneer Peak, the ascent of which was the crowning feat of the expedition; but this was unavoidable, as the party did not see it till they were right under it.

The drawings of Mr. McCormick present a tolerably consecutive series, from the time the party entered the Straits of Gibraltar to their return to Srinagar via Leh, the capital of Ladak. As pictures, some of the most charming are from the neighbourhood of Srinagar, and on the Dal Lake, as the Corot-like "From the Chinari Bagh, Srinagar," and "Boats on the Dal Lake," which, though very small and slight, "vibrates," as the French would say, with light and colour. To climbers, perhaps, the sketches of K2 (28,250 feet), of Nanga Parbat (26,630 feet), and the Chiring Chish buttress of Rakipushi (25,550 feet) will have greater charms, or the glimpses of the Baltoro Glacier, and of that snowfield at the head of it which the artist managed to sketch 20,000 feet above the level of the sea, while his companions were climbing the Pioneer Peak.

The sketches are necessarily slight and fragmentary; but they are never empty or uninteresting, as they seize the character of the strange peaks and record a great variety of beautiful effects of light and colour on rock and snow. Possessed naturally with the good gifts of an artist—the sense of form and colour, Mr. McCormick's experience in the Himalayas has most usefully developed his skill in swift record of transitory sights; and the happy way in which he has introduced figures with a few lively and picturesque touches is one of many reasons why we may look forward to his future work as an artist with more than usual confidence and interest.

Several of these sketches will be reproduced as illustrations to Mr. Conway's account of his expedition, which will shortly be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Dahabiyeh Istar, Assuan: Feb. 20, 1894.

I HAVE returned from Nubia with a goodly amount of epigraphic spoil. This has accumulated largely since my last letter was written, as we spent some time at each of the temples of the ancient Dodekaschoenos which still remain above ground. We have also discovered the remains of two other temples which were hitherto unknown. One of these occupies the north-western part of the enclosure of a large fortress of mud-brick which we found about three miles to the north of Dakkeh, and opposite Koshtemneh, near which I copied a graffito stating that the place was called "the Good House." The fortress resembles that of Matuga, though on a smaller scale; and the bulbous bases of the columns of the temple, which stand on a great platform of crude brick, indicate that it was built in the time of the XVIIIth Dynasty. It was at Dimri, between Qertassi and Debot, that we came across the relics of the second temple, in the shape of large cut stones, the fragment of a royal cartouche, and an inscribed block of gray granite. The latter seems to show that the place was called "the Temple of Shet."

On our way to Maharraqa we explored the so-called Roman city of Mehendi and found that it was of Coptic origin, without a vestige of anything Roman about it. On the rocks I observed some Christian emblems, including Noah's dove with the olive branch in its mouth, the Good Shepherd, and the cruz ansata used for the Christian cross. The southern gate of the city has been constructed with stones from some old Egyptian temple, and the sculptures on them show that it must have belonged to a good period of art.

We examined the temple of Dakkeh pretty thoroughly from both an architectural and an epigraphic point of view. On one of the blocks which have fallen from the north wall of the sanctuary of the Ethiopian king Arq-Amon, I found some later additions to the inscriptions of the latter, which contain not only the name of Tiberius Caesar, but also the name of a Cleopatra, not, however, enclosed in a cartouche. The wife of Arq-Amon, it may be noted, was a Cleopatra. I may add that the scene in which Arq-Amon is represented offering worship to the deified Per-aa, or Pharaoh, of Senem cannot bear the interpretation commonly assigned to it. There can be no question of an act of homage performed by the Ethiopian prince to the reigning Ptolemy of Egypt, since at Kalabsheh Augustus is similarly represented adoring "the Pharaoh of Senem," who is here identified with Horisiesis, and at Philae Ptolemy Philadelphus—the contemporary of Arq-Amon or Ergamenes according to Diodorus—also offers adoration to "the Pharaoh of Senem, the great god of Abaton." Last year I discovered a stèle of Ra-mer-en of the VIth Dynasty, which stated that he had received the homage of the Nubian princes in the island of Senem or Bigeh; and it is therefore possible that in Ra-mer-en we are to see the original of the deified "Pharaoh of Senem."

At Kubbân, opposite Dakkeh, Mr. Wilbour bought a statue of a hitherto unknown "royal son of Kush" called Haq; and about a mile to the north of the old fortress I found some hieroglyphic inscriptions on a rock, in one of which mention is made of "the 12 schoeni." In the ruined town of Qirsh or Sabagura, opposite Gerf Hosain, we found nothing, and went on to Dendûr, where we copied all the texts. Among them is the well-known Coptic inscription, which refers to the Nubian king Eirpanome and the bishop Theodore, who transformed the temple of Philae into a church. The text of the inscription published by M. E. Revillout in the Revue Egyptologique (iv. 3, 4, pp. 167, 168), needs several corrections. In some of the hieroglyphic inscriptions of Dendûr the sacred name of the place is given as "the city of the divine brothers," who, as Mr. Wilbour pointed out to me, are clearly the two deified sons of the Ethiopian prince Kupa who were worshipped there. It is noticeable that, in the Greek verses copied by Prof. Mahaffy and myself at Kalabsheh, mention is made of another pair of deified brothers, Breith and Mandoulis, who are identified with the twin stars Castor and Pollux. Among the ruins of the ancient city to the north of the temple of Dendûr, I discovered the image of either Kupa or Petisis, the elder of the two brethren, which long ago had been dragged out of the shrine. In spite of the barbarous character of the art, the image is interesting, as it combines a coarse reproduction of late Roman workmanship with the details of Nubian dress as exhibited in the figures on the dado of the Roman chamber at Dakkeh. Thus, a girdle with pendants attached to it runs under the naked stomach, and the waist is bare except for a belt. On the other hand, a cloak is thrown over the shoulders, which covers the left breast but leaves visible a collar round the neck. Near the statue is a fragment of an altar in the Roman style.

Kalabsheh again detained us for some time, and I discovered there a somewhat long inscription in cursive Latin dated in the twelfth year of Nerva Trajan. One of the hieroglyphic texts copied by Mr. Wilbour mentions "Amon-Ra of Perem" or Primis. Primis Parva is usually identified with Ibrim, though according to Ptolemy it ought to be higher up the Nile. I have already noticed that the Greek proskynēmata make it impossible to accept the suggestion of Lepsius, that the long inscription in Ethiopian demotic which adorns one of the columns of the court at Kalabsheh contains the same text as the celebrated Greek inscription of the Nubian king Silco which is engraved on the adjoining column. The proskynēmata which belongs to the time of the Antonines were painted on the stone after the Ethiopian inscription was engraved, whereas Silco flourished subsequent to the age of Diocletian. Whether, however, Silco was a Christian, as is commonly assumed, is doubtful. Prof. Mahaffy sees nothing in his inscription which necessitates such a conclusion; and under it I have found a picture of the king representing him on horseback, in a costume partly Roman partly Nubian, with a fallen enemy beneath the front legs of his horse, and a flying Victory offering him a wreath. To the left is the Horus hawk. The whole design, it will be seen, is distinctively pagan.

At the entrance to the temple is a mutilated inscription, stating that it was changed into a church and dedicated to Arkhilas (Archelaus) and other martyrs by Epimakhos, "bishop of Talmis." The name of Epimakhos occurs in a long text, written in Coptic letters, but apparently in the "Nubian" language, which I copied at Gebel Addeh, south of Abu-Simbel. Epimakhos may have lived shortly after Theodoret of Philae; at all events while at Philae we are told that "the cross has triumphed," at Kalabsheh the word σταυρος "cross" is repeated four times. I rescued from destruction at Kalabsheh another Christian monument, a rude seated figure of stone, with an inscription on the throne recording the name of a certain βελητρίης or "veredarius." Before parting from the early Christians of Nubia, I must not forget to say that one of the texts I copied at Faras is an early Coptic version of a letter of Abgarus (Αβγαρος) "king of Edessa." A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

Albert Moore: his Life and Works, is the title of an illustrated volume which will be issued in the early autumn, under the editorship of Mr. Alfred Lys Baldry, who was a pupil and personal friend of the deceased artist. With a view to making the book as complete as possible, the editor will be grateful for the co-operation of the owners of pictures, sketches, or other material of interest. Communications should be addressed to the care of Messrs. George Bell & Sons, York-street, Covent Garden.

A LECTURE delivered at South Place Chapel, by Mr. Frederick Rogers, President of the Vellum Binders' Society, on "The Arts of Bookbinding," will be published this week in pamphlet form, by Messrs. Sonnenschein.

THE Trustees of the National Gallery have just acquired, an important diptych, by Fra Angelico, representing "the Annunciation." It was painted for the Church of San Francesco, near San Miniato, Florence.

THE widow of the late Frederick L. Ames, of Boston, has given to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts two magnificent Rembrandts, which had been lent for exhibition at the time of his death. They are life-size portraits of Dr. Tulpp and Mrs. Tulpp, both dated 1634. She has also presented a crystal from Japan, which claims to be the largest in the world, weighing nineteen pounds; a large jade vase, set on a gold base and studded with precious stones; and a Persian rug, made in the early part of the sixteenth century.

THE last number of L'Anthropologie contains the conclusion of M. Solomon Reinach's article entitled "Le Mirage Oriental," to which we have already called attention in the ACADEMY of February 24. He here deals with the Aegean civilisation: that is to say, with the discoveries of Schliemann and Prof. Flinders Petrie, in connexion with all the other archaeological evidence. His main thesis is that the culture represented is not due to Egypt or Chaldaea, though it may show contact with both; but that it is essentially Western and European. He admits that there must have been in the remote past periods of progress, affected by external stimulus, and also periods of stagnation and even of decadence. But, on the whole, he maintains that the greater part of Europe in prehistoric times shared a common civilisation, which was not derived from Egypt or from Phoenicia. The original source of it he would place in Central or perhaps in Northern Europe, whence it radiated south in all directions—to Spain, Italy and Sicily, Greece and Asia Minor. He goes so far as to fit into his theory such intractable material as the Hittites, the Etruscans, and the Pelasgi. Apart from its boldness, a special feature of his theory is the allowance it makes for the flux and reflux of hostile influences, and for successive waves of migration. Following Prof. Petrie, he would date the first contact of Europe with Greece as early as the twenty-eighth century B.C.

WE quote the following from the Cairo correspondent of the Times, under date of March 11:

"The excavations by M. de Morgan at the brick pyramid of Dashur have yielded a large find of jewelry and gold ornaments bearing cartouches of Kings Usertesen II. and III. and Amenemhat III. Brugsch Bey, who is now arranging them in the Ghizeh Museum, considers that they far surpass in beauty and exquisite workmanship anything previously found in Egypt. The kings' tombs have not yet been found, and the broken condition of the sarcophagi indicates that the place had been rifled. The pyramid building itself does not contain any chamber, but an extensive necropolis for royal personages is cut out of the rock on which the pyramid stands, and a large extent is still unexplored, which is expected to yield still more valuable treasures."

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. HENSCHEL held his seventh concert last week, and with great success. M. Sauret gave a brilliant rendering of Moszkowski's Violin Concerto in C, a work more remarkable for dexterity than for depth. The programme included, by the way, Beethoven's greatest Overture, the "Leonore" No. 3, and, in the opinion of many, his greatest Symphony, No. 5, in C minor; and at the concluding concert, after Easter, the whole programme will be devoted to the Bonn master. Dr. Richter, for special reasons, favours Wagner, and Mr. Henschel thus restores the balance. Beethoven and Wagner may throw their predecessors into the shade, but not each other: they worked on different lines, and it is quite possible to hold to the one without despising the other. Mrs. Henschel's excellent singing of her husband's "Spring" song, with orchestral accompaniment, deserves mention.

Dr. Joachim paid his annual visit to the Crystal Palace on Saturday, and performed his Violin Concerto (Op. 77), also Beethoven's Romance in F, and, by way of encore, a Bach solo. He attracted an immense audience, and played magnificently. There are days when the eminent violinist seems to bear light marks of the finger of time; at other times, as on Saturday, he displays the vigour of ripe manhood. By way of compliment, the Palace programme opened with Dr. Joachim's "Elegiac" Overture, produced at Cambridge in 1877, when the degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon the composer.

At the Saturday Popular Concert, Mr. Santley sang no less than six songs by E. Wright, a lady composer. In the first three she seems to have tried to write in the simple old English Ballad style, and in the other three more after the manner of Schumann or Grieg. The music is unequal: it often shows taste and real feeling, but there are some dull, not to say commonplace moments. The setting of the first stanza of "When I awake" is particularly refined. Mr. Santley was in good voice. The name of Thalberg is rarely seen nowadays on a programme. Miss Eibenschütz played three of his studies, and played them remarkably well. As practice, they may be highly recommended, for they were written by one who was master of the keyboard. But the music is formal, and therefore cold. There are many pianoforte pieces far more deserving of a hearing.

The Monday concert included no novelty, but the exceedingly fine rendering of Brahms's Sextet in B flat under the leadership of Dr. Joachim deserves record. One cannot, however, but regret that an encore was accepted for the Scherzo. Herr Schönberger's reading of Chopin's Ballad in F major (Op. 38) was, on the whole, good; but in the storm-and-stress passages, the quality of tone was slightly harsh. The pianist manfully resisted the encore. Miss Schidrowitz and Miss Zagury contributed vocal duets, singing in a pleasing, artistic manner.

A morning concert for the relief of the distressed in the metropolis was given at Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. There was a fair audience, and the programme included the names of many popular vocalists and instrumentalists. Recitations were also given by Mrs. Clement Scott and Mr. Charles Warner.

The Tchaikowsky Symphony in B minor was performed for the second time at the second Philharmonic Concert—a special honour, and one of which the work is well worthy. The music may not be all on the same high level; but there is such vis viva in it, such structural skill, and such picturesque orchestration, that the interest never flags for a single moment. The first and third movements are scarcely equal to the other two, as regards perfection of form. In the opening Allegro the composer seems to linger lovingly, but too long, on the second beautiful theme, while in the Scherzo the Coda is too prolonged. Whether Tchaikowsky, had he lived, would have revised his work one cannot say; but, such as it is, it remains a noble memorial of the Russian composer, which will secure for him a high place in the annals of Russian musical art. The performance, under the direction of Dr. Mackenzie, was, with exception, perhaps, of the Scherzo, which required a little more dainty reading, very fine. Miss Fanny Davies gave a most able and sympathetic performance of Beethoven's Concerto in G; she was, in fact, at her best. M. Emile Sauré gave a thoroughly artistic rendering of Dr. Mackenzie's "Pibroch"; and Mme. de Vere Sapio was enormously applauded for her clever singing in Ambrose Thomas's "Scène et Air" from "Hamlet." J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Just published, 2 vols., 8vo, price 32s.

LETTERS OF HARRIET COUNTESS GRANVILLE, 1810-1845.

Edited by her Son, the Hon. F. LEVESON GOWER.

"There are a number of pretty stories... The writer shows herself on every page not only a most fond mother, but a most womanly woman, full of native shrewdness, and knowing more than she says. This will be one of the great books of the season."—Daily Chronicle.

"This most delightful and most discursive letter-writer... All kinds of figures appear, not only great people like George IV. and the Duke of Wellington, and the Duke de Broglie and Lord Brougham—to say nothing of Queen Victoria herself—but a wonderful variety of lesser lights, men and women who were for the notice the social rage, or who had done something to amuse or shock, irritate or excite, inflame or depress, the circle in which they moved."—Daily Telegraph.

The Badminton Library.—New Volumes.

BIG GAME SHOOTING. 2 vols., crown 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

Vol. I. AFRICA and AMERICA. By CLIVE PHILLIPS-WOLLEY. With Contributions by Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER, W. C. OSWELL, F. J. JACKSON, WASSINGTON PINK, and F. C. SELOUS. With 20 Plates and 57 Illustrations in the Text by Charles Whymper, J. Wolf, and H. O. Willink, and from Photographs.

Vol. II. EUROPE, ASIA, and the ARCTIC REGIONS. By CLIVE PHILLIPS-WOLLEY. With Contributions by Lieut.-Colonel R. HERBER PERRY, ARNOLD PIKE, Major ALGERNON C. HERBER PERRY, W. A. BAILLIE-GROHMAN, Sir HENRY POTTINGER, Bart., Lord KILMOREY, ADEL CHAPMAN, WALTER J. BUCK, and ST. GEORGE LITTLEDALE. With 17 Plates and 56 Illustrations in the Text by Charles Whymper, and from Photographs.

SHARPS and FLATS: a Complete Revelation of the Secrets of Cheating at Games of Chance and Skill. By JOHN NEVIL MASKELYNE, of the Egyptian Hall. With 62 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

This book constitutes a complete exposure of the methods and devices employed in cheating at the present day, and a revelation of the whole of the secrets of the modern gaming sharp. It is a work absolutely unique of its kind, nothing at all approaching it having ever before been published in any language.

PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT in the BRITISH COLONIES. By ALPHIEUS TODD, LL.D., C.M.G. Second Edition. Edited by his Son. 8vo, 30s. net.

The IDYLLS of THEOCRITUS. Trans- lated into English Verse. By JAMES HENRY HAL- LARD, M.A. Oxon. 8vo, 6s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF BISHOP CREIGHTON'S
"HISTORY OF THE PAPACY."

HISTORY of the PAPACY during the REFORMATION. By MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Peterborough. Vol. V. (1517- 1527), THE GERMAN REVOLT. 8vo, 16s.

* * Vols. I. and II. (1378-1464), 32s. Vols. III. and IV.
(1461-1518), 24s.

WAYMARKS in CHURCH HISTORY. By WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GOD'S CITY and the COMING of the KINGDOM. By HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, M.A., Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

Ready next Wednesday—Fifth Vol. of the

ANGLO-AMERICAN LIBRARY OF FICTION.

Crown 8vo, 320 pp., with Four Full-Page Illustrations, paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

A SLEEP-WALKER;

OR, PLOTTING FOR AN INHERITANCE.

By PAUL H. GERRARD.

London: JAMES HENDERSON, Red Lion House, Red Lion Court,
Fleet Street, E.C.

New York: Robert Bonner's Sons.

BY FRANCIS AIDAN GASQUET, D.D.

Henry VIII. and the English

MONASTERIES. An attempt to illustrate the History of their Suppression, with an Appendix and Maps showing the situation of the religious houses at the time of their dissolution. 2 vols., demy 8vo, Fifth Edition, 12s. each, or in half-Persian morocco, with 33 Page Illustrations, and 5 Maps, 30s.

"We may say in brief, if what we have already said is not sufficient to show it, that a very important chapter of English history is here treated with a fulness, minuteness and lucidity which will not be found in previous accounts, and we sincerely congratulate Dr. Gasquet on having made such an important contribution to English historical literature."—Athenaeum.

Edward VI. and the Book of COMMON PRAYER. Its Origin illustrated by hitherto unpublished Documents. With 4 facsimile pages of the MS. Third Thousand, demy 8vo, price 12s.

"A more accurate history of the changes of religion and the motives of the statesmen of the reign of Edward VI. than has ever before appeared."—Athenaeum.

A Chronicle of the English Bene-

DICTINE MONKS, from renewing of their Congregation in the days of Queen Mary to the Death of James II.; being the Chronological Notes of Dom. BENNETT WELDON, O.S.B., a Monk of Paris. Edited from a Manuscript in the Library of St. Gregory's Priory, Downside, by a Monk of the same Congregation. Demy 4to, handsomely printed, price 12s. 6d.

A Sketch of the Life and Mission

of ST. BENEDICT. 8vo, sewed, Third Thousand, 1s.

Historical Portraits of the Tudor

DYNASTY and the REFORMATION PERIOD. By S. HUBERT BURKE. 4 vols., demy 8vo; Vols. I., II., and IV., 16s. each, Vol. III., 12s. Second Edition. "Time unveils all Truth."

"I have read the work with great interest, and I subscribe without hesitation to the eulogy passed on it by the Daily Chronicle, as making, as far as I know, a distinct and valuable addition to our knowledge of a remarkable period."

From a Letter by Mr. GLADSTONE.

"We do not hesitate to avow that, in his estimate of character and events, Mr. Burke is seldom wrong.... We heartily wish it a large sale and an extensive circulation."—Academy. Signed NICHOLAS POCOCK.

Hancock, T.—Christ and the PEOPLE. Sermons on the Obligations of the Church to the State and to the People. By THOMAS HANCOCK, M.A., Lecturer at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Dark Ages: a Series of Essays

illustrating the State of Religion and Literature in the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Centuries. By the late Dr. MAITLAND, Keeper of the MSS. at Lambeth. Fifth Edition, with an Introduction by FREDERICK STOKES, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"The Essays as a whole are delightful; although they are full of learning, no one can find them dull or heavy; they abound in well-told stories, amusing quotations, and clever sarcasm. Whatever the previous knowledge of a reader may be, he will be stirred up by these essays to learn more of a subject they treat so pleasantly."—Saturday Review.

Religion and the Present Hour:

an Essay. Demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

Order in the Physical World and its FIRST CAUSE, ACCORDING TO MODERN SCIENCE. From the French by T. J. SLEVIN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Now Ready.]

Dishonest Criticism. Being a

Chapter of Theology on Equivocation, and Doing Evil for a Good Cause. An Answer to Dr. RICHARD F. LITTLEDALE. By JAMES JONES, S.J. Professor of Moral Theology in St. Benno's College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. "Nothing like it has appeared since Newman's reply to Kingsley."—John Bull.

The Relation of the Church to SOCIETY. A Series of Essays by EDMUND J. O'REILLY, S.J. Edited, with a Biographical Notice, by Rev. MATTHEW RUSSELL. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"Among the many interesting chapters of this book, perhaps the most interesting is that entitled 'The Clergy and the Law of Elections.' Here the author discusses with clearness and ability the somewhat vexed question concerning the part that priests may take in politics and public elections. There are many other topics treated in this vol. which will well repay the trouble of careful reading."—Dublin Review.

* * All the above are net prices, on receipt of which any will be sent post free.

JOHN HODGES, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW BOOKS.

LADIES in the FIELD. Edited by the Lady GREVILLE. Articles on Sport by the Duchess of Newcastle, Diane Chasseresse, Mrs. Chaworth Musters, Miss Anstruther, Lady Greville, Mrs. Martelli, Lady Boynton, Mrs. Pennell, Miss Leale, Mrs. Jenkins, and Miss Salaman. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The book has our heartiest praise. No sportswoman should deny herself its perusal.... Written with a lively sense of the delights of the sport each is concerned with."

Black and White.

"The several chapters are entrusted to skilful hands, and deal with sport as practised by ladies in a very sensible and business like fashion."—Times.

"It is to be hoped that 'Ladies in the Field' will be well and widely read, and that it will be an incentive to emulation."

National Observer.

"It is not often one comes across such a tempting book.... We cannot too strongly recommend 'Ladies in the Field' to our readers, and think that it is a book to be on every sports-woman's library table."—Sporting Life.

V A R I A: the Smallest Church in England (Greenstead, Essex)—Benvenuto Cellio—Child-hood's Drama—Samuel Pepys, &c. By JOHN ASHTON, Author of "Social England under the Reveney." With numerous Illustrations. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"An agreeable collection of strange histories and essays on little-known subjects, and is just the book to take up at odd moments."—St. James's Budget.

MOLTKE: a Biographical and Critical

Study. By W. O'C. MORRIS, Author of "Napoleon." With Portraits, Maps, and Plans. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"It is a careful, lucid, and deserving work, very useful as a manual to its subject, and is illustrated with particularly excellent maps."—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE GHOST WORLD. By T. F.

THISELTON-DYER, Author of "Church Lore Gleanings." Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The literature of what may be called ghost-lore is familiar to him. So far as we know there is no book in our own or any other language which exactly corresponds with Mr. Dyer's book."—Notes and Queries.

OUR VIANDS: Whence they Come

and How they are Cooked. By A. W. BUCKLAND, Author of "Anthropological Studies." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A book that should find grateful acceptance at the hands of housewives of every social class."—Daily Telegraph.

FROM KITCHEN to GARRET: Hints

for Young Householders. By J. E. PANTON. A New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo cloth, 6s.

This work of Mrs. Panton on the furnishing and decorating of houses, and the management of a household, was first published in December, 1857. It has since been seven times reprinted. The work has now been closely revised by the Author, new information on many subjects has been incorporated in the text, and many new illustrations have been added.

NOW READY.

SHE SHALL BE MINE! By Frank

HUDSON, Author of "Running Double," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. VERE CAMPBELL.

THE SHIBBOLETH. By Mrs. Vere

CAMPBELL, Author of "Of This Death," "The Crime of Keziah Keene," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY JOHN DAVIDSON.

BAPTIST LAKE. By John Davidson,

Author of "Perfidy," "Fleet Street Eclogues," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.

"The book is fantastic, extravagant, often irritating in its absurdities; but it abounds in marvellous descriptive passages, it pulsates with life and wit, and it is undeniably clever."

"A book to read."—Athenaeum. [Glasgow Herald.]

"Abounds with real, live folk; people that act naturally and talk sense with cleverness.... A sane, bright, and wholesome novel."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"One of the best things in the book is the conception of 'The Middle-Class Club.' This is a really regal effort.... The book is full of good things."—Star.

SHORTLY WILL BE PUBLISHED.

THE REAL CHARLOTTE. By E. A.

SOMERVILLE and MARTIN ROSS, Authors of "An Irish Cousin," "Through Connemara in a Governess Cart," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

LONDON: WARD & DOWNEY, LIM., 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1142.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S NEWEST BOOKS.

MONUMENTS OF EARLY CHRISTIANITY.

THE ACTS OF APOLLONIUS AND OTHER MONUMENTS OF EARLY CHRISTIANITY.

Edited, with a General Preface, Introduction, and Notes, by F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A., Late Fellow of University College, Oxon. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—Apology and Acts of Apollonius—Acts of Paul and Thecla—Acts of S. Phocas—Acts of S. Polyenctes—Acts of S. Eugenia—Acts of S. Codratus—Acts of Theodore—Acts of S. Thalelaeus—Acts of S. Hitzibouzit—Acts of S. Callistratus—Acts of S. Demetria—Index.

A series of vivid pictures of the practical working of Christianity during the first three centuries of its history.—DAILY CHRONICLE. "Certain to attract attention, especially as bearing on the much-discussed but still obscure question of the relation between Christianity and the Roman Empire."—GLASGOW HERALD.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH LANDED

INTEREST: its Customs, Law, and Agriculture. By J. RUSSELL GARNIER. Vol. I. EARLY PERIOD; Vol. II. MODERN PERIOD. 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

"He writes with a living knowledge of the Rural England of to-day."—TIMES. "Full of careful and far-reaching erudition."—SCOTSMAN. "Eminently readable."—GLASGOW HERALD.

THE SKEPTICS of the FRENCH

RENAISSANCE. By JOHN OWEN. 8vo, 10s. 6d. Montaigne, Ramus, Charron, Sanchez, Le Vayer, Pascal. Of the previous work, SKEPTICS of the ITALIAN RENAISSANCE, a SECOND EDITION is now ready, at 10s. 6d.

THE BIBLE and its THEOLOGY as

POPULARLY TAUGHT: a Review and Restatement. By G. VANCE SMITH, Ph.D. 5s.

MODERN MYSTICS and MODERN

MAGIC, containing a full Biography of the Rev. W. Stainton Moses, together with Sketches of Swedenborg, Boehme, Madame Guyon, the Illuminati, the Kabbalists, the Theosophists, the French Spiritists, the Society of Psychical Research, &c. By ARTHUR LILLIE. 6s. "Extremely interesting."—TWO WORLDS.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

NEWEST VOLUMES. Each 2s. 6d.

- (72) LAND SYSTEMS of AUSTRALASIA. By WM. EPPS, Sec. to National Association of N.S.W.
- (71) THE RISE of MODERN DEMOCRACY in OLD and NEW ENGLAND. By CHARLES BORGEAUD. With Introduction by C. H. FIRTH, M.A.
- (70) HOURS and WAGES in RELATION to PRODUCTION. By L. BRENTANO.
- (69) DWELLINGS of the PEOPLE. By T. LOCKE WORTHINGTON, A.R.I.B.A. Plates.
- (68) THE RIGHTS of WOMEN: a Comparative Study in History and Legislation. By M. OTROGORSKI.
- (67) HISTORY of the ROCHDALE PIONEERS, 1844-1832. By G. J. HOLYOAKE Tenth Edition.
- (66) THEORY of POLICY of LABOUR PROTECTION. By Dr. A. SCHAFFLE.
- (65) ENGLAND'S FOREIGN TRADE. By A. L. BOWLEY, B.A.

SOCIAL PEACE. By Professor SCHULZE-GAEVERNITZ. Edited by GRAHAM WALLAS, M.A. (Oxon) Double vol. 3s. 6d. "A study by a competent observer of the industrial movement in England and the later developments of trade-unionism."—TIMES.

SECOND EDITION.

RIDDLES of the SPHINX: a Study

in the Philosophy of Evolution. By F. C. S. SCHILLER, M.A. (Oxon), Instructor in Logic and Metaphysics in the Cornell University. Second Edition. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"A complete system of philosophy in outline. Highly interesting and will repay careful study.....We hope the student will not neglect such an earnest and careful study of metaphysical problems."—PHILOSOPHICAL REVIEW.

THE ETHICAL LIBRARY.

Vols. I., II.

Each 4s. 6d.

1. THE CIVILISATION of CHRISTENDOM. By BERNARD BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon), LL.D. (Glasgow), late Fellow of University College, Oxford.

2. STUDIES in CHARACTER. By SOPHIE BRYANT, D.Sc.

DILETTANTE LIBRARY.

RICHARD JEFFERIES: a Study. By H. S. SALT. With Portrait. 2s. 6d. Large-paper, with 4 Full-Page Plates of "Jeffries Land," by B. Newcombe, 10s. 6d. net.

MENDELSSOHN.—SELECTED LETTERS. Preface by Sir GEORGE GROVE. With Portrait. 2s. 6d.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. By WALTER JERROLD. With Portrait. 2s. 6d.

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

THREE NEW AUSTRALIAN STORIES.

THE NEW ARCADIA. By Horace TUCKER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

'TWTX SHADOW and SHINE. By MARCUS CLARKE, Author of "For the Term of his Natural Life." 2s. 6d. "Will compel appreciation."—NOTES GUARDIAN.

OUR ALMA. By Henry Goldsmith. Large Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEUROMIA: a New Continent. A Manuscript delivered by the Deep. By G. McIVER. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE BEAUTY of BOSCASTLE. By T. MULLETT-ELLIS. 5s. "A powerful and fearless piece of work."—DAILY CHRONICLE. "There is not a dull page in the story."—SCOTSMAN. "Mr. Ellis knows well how to tell a story."—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. "It is a strong story; a singularly ingenious and intricate plot."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

SOCIALISM: its Growth and its Outcome. By WILLIAM MORRIS and E. BELFORT BAX, 6s. Also Large-paper (limited to 250 Copies for Sale), 15s. net. "Speculations upon so interesting a subject, unexceptionable in form and temperate in expression, will not fail to attract readers."—TIMES.

A CANDIDATE'S SPEECHES. By ONE WHO HAS NEVER BEEN A CANDIDATE. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. "He shows wide knowledge and the capacity of handling political questions."—WESTERN DAILY PRESS. "A handy 'crib' for candidates at the next General Election."—BROFORD OBSERVER.

AN ENTIRELY NEW AND ORIGINAL WORK.

THE STUDENT'S BOTANY. By S. H.

VINES, M.A., D.Sc., F.L.S., Professor of Botany in the University of Oxford. With 279 Illustrations. First Half. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"In saying that Dr. Vines' is a worthy successor to Sachs' volume, we are awarding his book the highest praise we can bestow on any botanical text-book."—GLASGOW HERALD.

TWO NEW SHILLING BOOKS.

1. BLIZZARD: a New Dog Story, and another Fantasy. By THOMAS PINKERTON. Second Edition. "A capital sketch of the effect of involuntary dog-keeping on a mild and unoffending curate. Undeniably clever."—ACADEMY. "We have known Mr. Pinkerton as the spirited romancer and satirist, and have found him original and incisive in touch. There is some genuine fun in the idea [of this book], and it is comically worked out."—ATHENAEUM. "A piece of hearty, rollicking, and uncommon humour."—NATIONAL OBSERVER.

"Infinitely superior to 'Looking Backward.'"

2. PICTURES of the SOCIALISTIC

FUTURE. By EUGENE RICHTER. Second Edition.

"Professes to be a description of the coming socialistic revolution and its results as described in the diary of an ardent Socialist who gradually becomes disillusioned."—TIMES. "By Herr Richter, the prominent Radical member of the Reichstag."—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

THE BUCCANEERS of AMERICA:

a True Account of the most Remarkable Assaults committed of Late Years upon the Coast of the West India by the Buccaneers of Jamaica and Tortuga (both English and French). By JOHN ESQUEMELING, one of the Buccaneers who was present at those Tragedies (1684-5). Edited by HENRY POWELL. With Maps, Sieges, and Portraits. Includes the very scarce Fourth Part. Royal 8vo, 15s. "A handsome edition with excellent facsimiles of the fine engravings."—BOOKMAN.

THE SOUTHEAS ISLANDERS:

Voyages and Experiences in the Western Pacific, 1875 to 1891. By WILLIAM WAWN, Master Mariner. With Illustrations and Maps. Royal 8vo, 18s. "Abounds with valuable information."—CHRONICLE. "Graphic and amusing accounts of little known places and people."—TELEGRAPH.

NEW SOLUTION OF AN HISTORICAL MYSTERY.

THE STORY of LOUIS XVII. of FRANCE. By E. E. EVANS. With 5 Engraved Portraits. 8vo, 10s. 6d. THE AMERICAN MINISTER AT ST. PETERSBURG (Mr. Andrew D. White) writes: "It is a beautiful and interesting book, and must take the leading place in the literature of the subject.....It makes out a strong case."

SUICIDE and INSANITY. By J. A. K.

STRAHAN, M.D. 5s. "Deals exhaustively with the psychological, historical, and ethical aspects of the question."

REFORMED LOGIC. A System Based on Berkeley's Philosophy, with an entirely New Method of Dialectics. By D. H. MACLACHLAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. "The strictly logical chapters are written with great clearness and undoubted ability. Many a good point is made, especially in the criticism of the syllogism."—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

BY THE NEW DEAN OF ELY.

CHRIST and DEMOCRACY: on the Relations of Christianity to Social Questions of the Day. By the Rev. CHAS. W. STUBBS. Third Edition, 3s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAOR

MISS CARTWRIGHT'S LIFE OF HENRIETTA OF ORLEANS, by F. HAWKINS	241
SCARTAZZINI'S COMPANION TO DANTE, by PAOLO TOYNBEE	242
YEATS'S THE CELTIC TWILIGHT, by ERNEST RHYS	243
TOLSTOY'S THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS WITHIN YOU, by ROGER DE GOEIL	244
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	245
SOME VOLUMES OF VERRE, by NORMAN GALE	247
NOTES AND NEWS	248
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	248
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	248
ORIGINAL VERSE: "DECAOENCE," by MAY SINCLAIR	249
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	249
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	249
CORRESPONDENCE—
Tatton's Dictionnaire et a Dutch Harmony , by Prof. Ambridge Robinson; The Etymology of "Barly," by Prof. Skeat; Mr. Slater's "Early Editions," by C. M. Falconer and J. S. C.	249
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	251
COL. ELLIS'S SLAVE COAST OF WEST AFRICA, by Prof. KEANE	251
SCIENCE NOTES	252
PHILOLOGY NOTES	252
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	251
THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS, by F. WEDMORE	254
CORRESPONDENCE—
Roman Britain , by F. Haverfield	254
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	254
BACU'S "MATTHEW PASSION," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	255

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS IN SPEECH

Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,

Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Esthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. THE CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STONE, 5, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to H. J. BEZVON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN

MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY IN ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Fanny and "Gossip." Is. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Bwlch, Breconshire.

ADVERTISER is seeking SITUATION

in a Provincial Public Library; 18 years of age; educated at a public grammar school; some knowledge of French and Latin, Typewriting; is learning Shorthand, and preparing for Examination of Library Association.—L. 11, Oakley Street Flats, Chelsea, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

AND BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

Fourth Edition, pp. 309, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 53, Pall Mall

GOUIN'S SERIES METHOD.—

CENTRAL SCHOOL OF FOREIGN TONGUES.—Directors: HOWARD SWAN and VICTOR BETIS.—HOWARD HOUSE, ALHONDEL STREET, STRAND.—A Holiday TRAINING COURSE for Teachers of Languages will be held in London during Easter (School) Holidays, April 17 to 27.—For Syllabus, &c., address, with stamped envelope enclosed, to Secretary. Also NEW CLASSES for Students in FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, RUSSIAN, Modern GREEK (leading to Ancient) will be started at the beginning of April. Invitation to Free Lecture (April 4, at 7.45 p.m.) will be sent on receipt of stamped envelope.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1894.

A COURSE OF EIGHT LECTURES ON "CHRISTIANITY IN ITS MOST SIMPLE AND INTELLIGIBLE FORM" will be delivered by the Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, at the PORTMAN ROOMS, BAKER STREET, on the following days—viz., MONDAY 16th, Thursday 19th, Monday 23rd, Thursday 26th and Monday 30th, April; and Thursday 3rd, Monday 7th, and Thursday 10th May, at 5 p.m. Admission to the Course of Lectures will be by ticket, without payment. Persons desirous of attending the Lectures are requested to send their names and addresses to Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C., not later than Saturday, 7th April; and as soon as possible after that date, tickets will be issued to as many as the Hall will accommodate.

The same Course of Lectures will also be delivered by Dr. DRUMMOND at OXFORD, in the large LECTURE-ROOM of MANCHESTER COLLEGE, on each of the following days—viz., Tuesday 24th and Friday 27th, April, and Tuesday 1st, Friday 4th, Tuesday 8th, Friday 11th, Tuesday 15th and Friday 18th, May, at 5 p.m. Admission to the Oxford Course will be free without ticket.

P. LAWSON, Secretary to the Hibbert Trustees.

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, on 14th June next, or some subsequent date, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR to occupy the newly instituted Chair of HISTORY in the University. The duties will begin from 1st October next. Candidates are requested to lodge two copies of their application (and Testimonials, if any) in the hands of the undersigned, on or before 12th May.

ALAN E. CLARKE, Secretary to the Glasgow University Court, 91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT

(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £20, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—An

EXAMINATION for filling up some VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on 4th APRIL, NEXT.—For information, apply to the BISHOP, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

PROPOSED MEMORIAL to PROFESSOR MINTO.

At a meeting held in Marischal College, Aberdeen, on 6th December, 1893, on the motion of Sir William D. Geddis, Principal of the University of Aberdeen, seconded by the President of the Students' Representative Council, it was unanimously resolved:—"That it is desirable that a Memorial be instituted to the late Professor Minto," and a large and influential committee was thereafter elected to carry out the scheme.

The subscriptions already intimated amount to £150 7s., and it is intended to institute a Scholarship or Prize in memory of the late Professor Minto, in connection with either the English Class or the Logic Class at the University of Aberdeen.

All desirous of contributing will please intimate their subscriptions to the Honorary Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. D. M. A. CHALMERS, Advocate, 24, Golden Square, Aberdeen.

1st March, 1894.

Just published, price 1s.; per post, 1s. 4d.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY

CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1894.

London: Macmillan & Co. Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

THE FAUNA OF BRITISH INDIA,

including Ceylon and Burma. Published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council. Edited by W. T. BLANFORD. Medium 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts.

MAMMALIA. By W. T. BLANFORD, F.R.S. 1 vol., complete, price £1.

FISHES. By F. DAY, C.I.E., LL.D. 2 vols., price £1 each.

BIRDS. By EUGENE W. OATES F.Z.S. Vol. I., price £1; Vol. II., 10s.

REPTILIA and BATRACHIA. By G. A. POULENGER. 1 vol., complete, price £1.

MOTHS. By G. F. HAMPSON. Vols. I. and II., price £1 each.

London: TAYLOR & FRANCIS, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, Coleman; Thacker, Spink & Co., Bombay; Thacker & Co., Limited, Berlin; R. Friedländer & Sohn, Carlstrasse 11.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES, Also,

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON, LOUVRE, PARIS, BUCKINGHAM PALACE, LUXEMBOURG, PARIS, WINDSOR CASTLE, ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN, UFFIZI, FLORENCE, HERMITAGE, ST. PETERSBURG, PITTI, FLORENCE, PRADO, MADRID, ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS, VATICAN, ROME, FLORENCE, HAARLEM, AMSTERDAM, FRANKFORT, THE HAGUE,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF EXAMPLES OF MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM, ROUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTO TYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, of Munich, the leading Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary

Book Illustrations.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. devote attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and

SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

5th Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE. By F. Marion Crawford. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK. Statistical and Historical

Annals of the States of the World for the Year 1894. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTY, Assistant Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Thirtieth Annual Publication. Revised after Official Returns. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

ATHENÆUM.—"The Statesman's Year-Book," although it has always been the best of books of reference, continues to improve where improvement seemed hardly possible.... It is, and we hope will long remain, a credit to the country of its production."

NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"An easy first in the keen race of reference books"

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"The work continues to be what it has long been, a statistical and historical annual of the States of the World, which for fulness and accuracy has no rival."

THE LIFE OF SIR HARRY PARKES, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., sometime

her Majesty's Minister to China and Japan. In 2 vols. Vol. I. by STANLEY LANE-POOLE. With a Portrait and Maps. Vol. II. by F. V. DICKINS and S. LANE-POOLE. With a Map. 8vo, 25s. net.

STANDARD.—"A work of the highest interest and value."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A valuable and faithful record of an eminent career and of an important chapter in the development of our Eastern possessions."

THE HISTORY OF HUMAN MARRIAGE. By Edward Wester-

MARCK, Lecturer on Sociology at the University of Finland, Helsingfors. Second Edition. 8vo, 11s. net.

GUARDIAN.—"Not only profoundly learned, but delightfully readable."

POPULAR LECTURES and ADDRESSES. By Lord Kelvin,

F.R.S. In 3 vols. With Illustrations. Vol. II. GEOLOGY and GENERAL PHYSICS. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each volume. [NATURE SERIES.

ALREADY PUBLISHED—
Vol. I. THE CONSTITUTION OF MATTER. Second Edition.

Vol. III. PAPERS on NAVIGATION.

LECTURES on MATHEMATICS. Delivered from August 28 to September 9, 1893, before Members of the Congress of Mathematics held in connection with the World's Fair in Chicago at North-Western University, Evanston, Ill. By FELIX KLEIN. Reported by ALEXANDER ZIWET. 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

A TREATISE on HYDROSTATICS. By Alfred George Greenhill,

F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics in the Artillery College, Woolwich. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

OXFORD and her COLLEGES. A View from the Radcliffe

Library. By GOLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L. Pott 8vo, 7s.

ENGLISH PROSE. Selections, with Critical Introductions by various Writers, and General Introductions to each Period. Edited by HENRY CRAIK. In 5 vols. Vol. II. THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY to the RESTORATION. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each volume.

ALREADY PUBLISHED—
Vol. I. THE FOURTEENTH to the SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THIRD EDITION, thoroughly Revised and in great part Rewritten, with 150 Illustrations, medium 8vo, 24s.

A MANUAL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

For the Use of Officers of the Navy, the Mercantile Marine, Shipowners, Shipbuilders, and Yachtsmen.

By W. H. WHITE, C.B., F.R.S.,

Assistant Controller and Director of Naval Construction, Royal Navy.

In this work an endeavour is made to place before readers, including those whose mathematical knowledge may be limited, a comprehensive outline of the accepted theory of Naval Architecture. It contains an account of the most recent investigations of the CONSTRUCTION, STABILITY, BEHAVIOUR, STRAINS, STRENGTH, PROPULSION, and STEERING OF SHIPS; practical rules for TONNAGE, DRAUGHT and TRIM, STOWAGE, SAIL-POWER, ENGINE-POWER, &c.; based upon modern practice in Warships, Merchantships, and Yachts; Descriptions of the principal Structural Arrangements in WOOD, IRON, and COMPOSITE SHIPS; and a Sketch of the Theory of WAVE-MOTION, with a Summary of the Results of Observations on OCEAN-WAVES.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

Now ready, 8vo, 12s.

A POLICY OF FREE EXCHANGE.

Essays by various Writers on the economical and Social Aspects of Free Exchange and Kindred Subjects.

Edited by THOMAS MACKAY,

Author of "A History of the English Poor," Editor of "A Plea for Liberty," &c.

CONTENTS.

1. ON the SCIENCE of ECONOMICS and its RELATION to FREE EXCHANGE and SOCIALISM, by HENRY DUNNING MACLEOD.
2. THE COMING INDUSTRIAL STRUGGLE, by WILLIAM MAITLAND.
3. NATIONAL WORKSHOPS, by ST. LOE STRACHEY.
4. STATE SOCIALISM and the COLLAPSE in AUSTRALIA, by the Hon. J. W. FORTESCUE.
5. THE INFLUENCE of STATE BORROWING on COMMERCIAL CRISES, by WYNNARD HOOPER.
6. THE STATE in RELATION to RAILWAYS, by W. M. ACWORTH.
7. THE INTEREST of the WORKING-CLASS in FREE EXCHANGE, by THOMAS MACKAY.
8. THE PRINCIPLE of PROGRESSION in TAXATION, by BERNARD MALLET.
9. THE LAW of TRADE COMBINATIONS, by the Hon. ALFRED LYTTELTON.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS'*NEW BOOKS.*THE ENGLISHMAN at HOME :

His Responsibilities and Privileges.

By EDWARD PORRITT.

Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"By an experienced journalist, painstaking, and fairly accurate."—Times.

"Our author undertakes to fulfil a very 'large order,' and fulfil it he does, on the whole, with much judgment and ability.... Altogether, Mr. Porritt is to be congratulated on his compendium."—Daily Chronicle.

"The plan upon which he has gone is good, and it has been well executed."—Globe.

THE SOCIAL CONTRACT ;

Or, the Principles of Political Rights.

By JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU.

Translated by ROSE M. HARRINGTON. With Introduction and Notes by EDWARD L. WALTER.

12mo, cloth, 5s.

SECULARISM, ITS PROGRESS*AND MORALS.

By JOHN M. BONHAM,

Author of "Industrial Liberty," &c.

Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AUTHORS and their PUBLIC*in ANCIENT TIMES :

A Sketch of Literary Conditions, &c., from the Earliest

Times to the Invention of Printing, in 1450.

By GEO. HAVEN PUTNAM.

Post 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Every author ought to be compelled to buy and read this bright volume, and no publisher worthy of the name should be without it."—Publishers' Circular.

"By all authors and publishers this volume will be read with curiosity and pleasure."—Globe.

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS*PAINE.

Political, Sociological, Religious, and Literary.

Edited by MONCURE D. CONWAY,

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," &c.

Vol. I. 1774-1779, 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s. 6d.

To be completed in Four Volumes.

THE VENETIAN PAINTERS*OF THE RENAISSANCE.

With Index of their Works.

By BERNHARD BERENSON.

Illustrated with Frontispiece, Head of Shepherd, by Giorgione

Feap 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

THE EVOLUTION of WOMAN :

An Inquiry into the Dogma of her Inferiority to Man.

By ELIZA BURT GAMBLE.

Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

STUDIES OF TRAVEL IN*GREECE AND ITALY.

By the late Professor E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L.

With a Preface by Miss FLORENCE FREEMAN.

With Portrait. 2 vols., 16mo, cloth, 5s.

"Travellers in Greece and Italy will do well to possess themselves of these two small volumes."—Review of Reviews.

"Two charming little volumes."—Daily Graphic.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND; AND NEW YORK.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS for APRIL, 1894.

- I. A BEGINNER. By RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c. Chaps. X.—XII.
- II. LORD CHIEF BARON ABINGER and the BAR.
- III. A HUNTING LAY.
- IV. A CANOE VOYAGE on a FRENCH RIVER.
- V. ROD and STAFF.
- VI. ONE of the GARGOYLES.
- VII. ATHENS and its ACROPOLIS.
- VIII. TO AN OPTIMIST.
- IX. BY FAIR WOODCRAFT.
- X. THEODORE DE BANVILLE.
- XI. AN INTERLOPER. By F. M. PEARD, Author of "Near Neighbours," &c. Chaps. X.—XII.

NOW READY.

WOMEN of LETTERS.

Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Mary Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, Lady Duff Gordon, Elizabeth Inchbald, "Lamb's Duchess," Lady Hervy, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Mrs. Delany, and Mrs. Montagu

By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 2s.

"These are delightful volumes. The authoress has not only chosen good subjects, but she has the gift of piecing together her information skilfully, and of endowing the characters she depicts with some of her own vigour and vitality."—Spectator.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

Author of "An Old Maid's Love," "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The name of Maarten Maartens is becoming—indeed, it has already become—one of the most important and significant names in the literature of contemporary fiction. . . . We could point to scenes and situations of exceptional power and beauty, but we leave them to the many 'who, we hope,' will read this admirable and striking novel."—Spectator.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON.

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.
2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN, Author of "The Scots of Westminster." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Yonge seems to have flung her mantle over the author of 'A Devoted Couple,' and to have found a worthy successor. The story is a family one, full of sweet domesticities of English family life with a spice of Indian adventure thrown in. A most agreeable, clever, and wholesome story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY

The ROMANCE of SHERE

NOTE. By PERCY HULBURD, Author of "In Black and White." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A story of singular ingenuity and power, an album so to speak of brilliant character-sketches, graphic word-pictures, and trenchant epigrams."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE. By M.

DEANE. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY. RECTORIAL ADDRESSES DELIVERED AT THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

1863-1893.

Sir William Stirling-Maxwell to the Marquis of Bute.
Edited, with an Introduction,
By WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.,
Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of St. Andrews.
Demy 8vo, price 10s 6d.

SANTA TERESA:

Being some Account of her Life and Times, together with some pages from the History of the last great Reform in the Religious Orders.

By GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.
In 2 vols., illustrated with Two Autographs from the original.
Demy 8vo, price 3s. [Next week.]

AN INTRODUCTION to STRUCTURAL BOTANY (FLOWERING PLANTS).

By D. H. SCOTT, M.A., D.Sc.,
Crown 8vo, illustrated, price 2s. 6d. [Next week.]

INVESTIGATIONS

MICROSCOPIC FOAMS and on PROTOPLASM.

By Professor O. BÜTSCHLI.
Translated by E. A. MINCHIN, B.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.
Demy 8vo, illustrated with 12 Lithographic Plates.
Price 18s. net.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY of MAMMALS, LIVING and EXTINCT.

By Sir W. H. FLOWER, K.C.B., and RICHARD LYDEKKER.
Demy 8vo, cloth, 768 pages, and illustrated with 350 Wood Engravings, Cheaper Edition, price 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF FISHES.

By A. C. L. GÜNTHER,
Keeper of the Zoological Department in the British Museum.
Demy 8vo, cloth, 720 pages, and illustrated with 320 Wood Engravings, Cheaper Edition, price 12s. 6d.

LIFE IN MOTION;

Or, Muscle and Nerve.

By J. G. MCKENDRICK,
Professor of Physiology in the University of Glasgow.
Crown 8vo, illustrated, New Edition, price 2s. 6d.

CAP and GOWN COMEDY:

A Schoolmaster's Stories.

By ASCOTT R. HOPE.
Large crown 8vo, New Edition, price 3s. 6d.

MARGARET DRUMMOND, MILLIONAIRE.

By SOPHIE F. F. VEITCH.
1 vol., crown 8vo, price 6s.

DRYBURGH EDITION OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

Vol. 18. REDGAUNTLET.
Illustrated by GEORGE HAY, R.S.A.
Now ready, crown 8vo, price 7s., cloth, and 6s., half-bound.

London: A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square.

Preachers of the Age.

Uniform Crown 8vo Volumes.

With Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

Volumes already Published:

1. By His Grace the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Living Theology. Second Edition.
"Full of wise counsels and generous sympathies."—Times.
2. By the Rev ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.
The Conquering Christ. 2nd Edition.
"Sermons no man could hear without profit, and every man may read with advantage."—Spectator.
3. By the LORD BISHOP of DERRY.
Verbum Crucis. Second Edition.
"The man of culture, thought, trained observation, and holy life, reveals himself in every line."—Glasgow Herald.
4. By the Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, M.A.
Ethical Christianity.
"The volume is admirable as an illustration of the forceful style which has made him so powerful as a religious preacher and social reformer."—Christian World.
5. By the LORD BISHOP of WAKEFIELD.
The Knowledge of God.
"He has the rare power of making deep things plain, and the sermons often assume the form of a talk to his hearers."—Scotsman.
6. By the Rev. H. R. REYNOLDS, D.D.
Light and Peace: Sermons and Addresses.
"One of the finest contributions to sermon literature which this generation has received."—British Weekly.
7. By the Rev. W. J. KNOX LITTLE, M.A., Canon Residentiary of Worcester Cathedral.
The Journey of Life. Second Edition.
"The best volume of sermons which has yet come from Canon Knox Little's pen."—Newbury House Magazine.
8. By the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON
Messages to the Multitude.
"Deserves a wide popularity."—Times.
9. By the Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, M.A.
Christ is All.
10. By the Rev. J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.
Plain Words on Great Themes.
11. By the Rev. EDWARD A. STUART.
Children of God.
"Sound, practical, sympathetic, forcible, these sermons should be read."—Record.
12. By the Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.
Christ in the Centuries.
"Principal Fairbairn is one of our most vigorous thinkers, and the latest volume of 'Preachers of the Age' is perhaps the best of the series that has yet appeared."—Pall Mall Gazette.
13. By Dr. LEFROY, Dean of Norwich.
Agony Christi.
14. By the Rev. W. L. WATKINSON.
The Transfigured Sackcloth.
15. By Dr. THOROLD, Lord Bishop of Winchester.
The Gospel of Work.
16. By the Rev. CHARLES A. BERRY, of Wolverhampton.
Vision and Duty.
17. By the Right Rev. W. BOYD-CARPENTER, D.D., Lord Bishop of Ripon.
The Burning Bush, and other Sermons.
18. By the Rev. CHARLES MOINET, M.A.
The Good Cheer of Jesus Christ.
19. By the Rev. E. J. GOUGH, M.A., of Dundee.
The Days of the Son of Man.
[In April.]
20. By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES, of Lewisham.
The Cup of Cold Water, and other Sermons. [Immediately.]

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

London: SAMUELSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1894.

No. 1142, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Madame; a Life of Henrietta, Daughter of Charles I. and Duchess of Orleans. By Julia Cartwright. (Seeley.)

It has been reserved for Miss Cartwright to supply a rather marked want in English historical literature. Henrietta of Orleans, the most attractive and influential woman of her time at the Court of Louis XIV., has received less attention from writers in the country of her birth than might have been expected. Hitherto we have had only sketches of her too brief career, though Mrs. Everett Green, in her Lives of English Princesses, did more than any other student of the Stuart period to prove the importance and interest of the subject. No doubt she would have done much better if that portion of Charles II.'s correspondence which is preserved in the archives of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs had been among her materials. As Miss Cartwright points out, some fragments of these letters of the English monarch to his sister were included by Sir John Dalrymple in his Memoirs, and by Mignet in his Négotiations relatives à la Succession d'Espagne. Nevertheless, they remained virtually unknown until about ten years ago, when most of them, translated into French, were printed by M. de Baillon in his Henriette d'Angleterre. Miss Cartwright, thanks to Lord Dufferin, more recently obtained leave to copy all the originals at the archives, and, provided further with several documents from the collection of State Papers in the Record Office on French affairs, has given us quite an elaborate account of the duchess and her immediate surroundings.

The story of Henrietta's youth reads like a chapter of romance. The youngest daughter of Charles I. and Henrietta Maria, she was born at Exeter in 1644, at the height of the great Civil War. It is probable that she did not see enough of her unhappy father to remember him. Her mother finding it necessary to take refuge in France, the child was confided to the care of Lady Dalkeith, afterwards Countess of Morton. The victorious Parliamentarians wished to place her with her brother and sister, the Duke of Gloucester and Princess Elizabeth, at St. James's Palace; but her custodian, unable to believe in their good intentions, resolved to put her beyond their reach. The intrepid lady "disguised herself in a shabby cloak and gown, placed a hump of old rags on one shoulder to conceal her graceful figure, and, dressing the little princess in a ragged suit of boy's clothes, walked to Dover with the child on her back. None of the household at Oatlands were in the secret, excepting two servants named Lambert and Dyke, and a French valet, who passed as Lady Dalkeith's husband. The only risk of detection lay in the angry exclamations of the little princess herself, who resented the shabby dress she wore as much as the name of Pierre, which had been given her for the time, and told everyone they met on the road that she was not Pierre but the princess, and that these rags were not her real clothes. Fortunately her baby language did not arouse suspicion; and Sir John Berkeley, who, following at some distance, kept his eye on the travellers all the way, saw them safely on board the French boat for Calais."

Henrietta Maria, then a pensioner at the Louvre of the French court, was overjoyed to recover possession of her child, who soon became necessary to her very existence, and whom she brought up as a Roman Catholic. Poverty was to be no stranger to that little household. The mother had parted with all her money and jewels in helping the royalist cause; and during the troubles of the Fronde her pension was unavoidably stopped. "Posterity," says the Cardinal de Retz, in his Memoirs, "will hardly believe that a Queen of England and a granddaughter of Henri Quatre were without firewood at the Louvre in the month of January."

In marked contrast to this temporary misery was the position to which Henrietta presently rose at court. Pretty, graceful, clever, accomplished, vivacious, warm-hearted, and endowed with her father's refined tastes in literature and art, she became a conspicuous figure there at a very early age. It is impossible to read the memoirs and correspondence of that period without feeling that she exercised a sort of fascination over those about her. But for a slight deformity, says Beaumelle, she would have been a masterpiece of nature. "As it was," he adds, "there was no one at court to be compared with her." Anne of Austria wished her to be the wife of the young Louis XIV., who, however, turned a deaf ear to the suggestion, and soon afterwards espoused Marie Thérèse. In the following year, 1661, Henrietta was united to his only brother, the Duc d'Orléans, otherwise Monsieur. It is not surprising to learn that her life with him was anything but happy. In the words of Saint-Simon, "he was a woman with all the faults of a woman, and none of her virtues—childish, feeble, idle, gossiping, curious, vain, suspicious, incapable of holding his tongue, and taking pleasure in spreading slander and making mischief." The echoes of the wedding bells had scarcely died away when scandal was busy with her name. Louis, at length sensible of her charms of mind and person, showed a distinct preference for her society, as she did for his:

"His natural ascendancy of character might well captivate the fancy of a maiden barely seventeen years old. Here was a prince, full of great schemes and noble ambitions, ready to share his dreams with her and to seek her sympathy. The friendship which sprang up between them had all the flavour of a romance. They wrote verses that were read and applauded by the whole court, and sent each other little notes, innocent enough in themselves, but which raised suspicions in other breasts. Significant looks were exchanged, and mysterious whispers passed from one to another. Courtiers ventured to express their regret that Madame did not have a more exalted place at court, and to hint that, had the king known her better a year or two ago, he would have made her his queen. . . . On hot afternoons, Madame would drive out, attended by all the ladies of the court, to bathe in one of the clear streams which flow through the forest, and then ride back in the cool of the evening. The king himself, followed by his suite, would come to meet her and escort her home. . . . There were hunting expeditions in the woods, moonlight serenades prolonged far on into the night, and lonely rambles into the depths of the forest. . . . In all of these hunting parties or moonlight walks, the king was Madame's companion. She shared all his tastes, and entered into all his plans, with a spirit and a vivacity of which the poor, dull queen was utterly incapable. . . . They spent whole days together, and took long rambles in the woods, which lasted until two or three o'clock in the morning."

Naturally enough, all this gave rise to a good deal of uneasiness among the royal family, and Anne of Austria felt it necessary to have a voice in the matter.

"Madame was indignant with her mother-in-law, and complained of her unjust accusations to the king. Louis consoled her with assurances of his unalterable friendship. But they both felt the need of greater caution, if family peace was to be preserved; and for the first time Madame's eyes were opened to the dangers which threatened her youth and inexperience. Henceforth she took care to show the world that the king was no more to her than a brother-in-law for whom she had a sincere regard, and whose affection and good opinion she valued as they deserved."

At a later period, when the king had become the slave of Louise de la Vallière, Madame might have been found flirting with the Comte de Guiche, the most ardent and persevering of all her admirers. Burnet, perhaps remembering that she was a Roman Catholic, adopted the least charitable interpretation of her conduct; but there is no good reason to suppose that she was ever guilty of more than culpable thoughtlessness. La Faro, assumably not one of her friends, describes her as "vertueuse mais un peu coquette," which may be accepted as the fact. That she played a rather important part in current politics there can be no doubt. Probably to the annoyance of the English Ambassador in Paris, she became the chief means of communication between Louis XIV. and Charles II. Her royal brother-in-law had faith in her judgment, and intrusted her with state secrets of which it was not thought expedient that her narrow-minded husband should know anything. The object of her last visit to England, it will be remembered, was to induce Charles to join Louis in a league against the Dutch. In the same year, at the age of twenty-six, she was laid in her grave, Bossuet pronouncing over it the most superb of his funeral orations. Her too-early death, which occurred somewhat suddenly, is ascribed by Miss Cartwright to natural causes, though it is difficult, in view of all the evidence on the subject, to reject the suspicion that she was poisoned, not by the Duc d'Orléans, as was once supposed, but at the instigation of the Chevalier de Lorraine.

Charles's letters to his sister are about a hundred in number, and have been printed with all their eccentricities of spelling. Miss Cartwright must be congratulated upon her good fortune in having obtained access to them. Taken as a whole, they are eminently characteristic of the man. His indolence, his quickness of perception, his easy good-nature, his cynical humour, his laxity of morals, and, last but not least, his affection for his "dearest Minette," as he called Henrietta, whom he first saw during his visit to Paris in 1650—all this is brought before us in his correspondence with her. The depth of that affection is really beyond question. "Her influence over him," writes Colbert from the French Embassy in London, "was remarked by all; he wept when he parted with her, and whatever favour she asked of him was granted." From the first letter he is known to have sent her—this was before the Restoration—we take the following:

"I begin this letter in French by assuring you that I am very glad to be scolded by you. I withdraw what I said with great joy, since you scold me so pleasantly; but I will never take back the love I have for you; and you show me so much affection that the only quarrel we are ever likely to have will be as to which of us two loves the other best. In that respect I will never yield to you. . . . For the future, pray do not treat me with so much ceremony, or address me with so many Your Majesties, for between you and me there should be nothing but affection."

Nor did the Restoration make any difference in him respecting her:

"I hope you believe I love you as much as 'tis possible, I am sure I would venture all I have in the world to serve you, and have nothing so neere my harte, as how I may finde occasions to expresse that tender passion I have for my dearest Minette. . . . The kindness I have for you will not permit me to loose this occasion to coniuire you to continue your kindness to a brother who loves you more than he can expresse, which truth I hope you are so well persuaded of, as I may expect those returns which I shall strive to deserve. Deare sister, be kinde to me, and be confident that I am intirely yours.—C. R. For my Deare Sister the Princesse Henriette."

Again:

"I have been in very much paine for your indisposition, not so much that I thought it dangerous, but for feare that you should miscarry. I hope now you are out of that feare too, and for God's sake, my dearest sister, have a care for yourselfe and believe that I am more concerned in your health than I am in my owne, which I hope you do me the iustice to be confident of, since you know how much I love you. . . . I am very glad to finde that the King of France does still continue his confidence and kindness to you, which I am so sensible of that if I had no other reason to grounde my kindness to him but that, he may be most assured of my frindship so long as I live; and pray upon all occasions assure him of this."

In those days brothers and sisters were less reserved with each other than they are now. In 1665 the King learnt that she was enceinte:

"I hope you will have better lucke than the Duchesse (of York) here had, who was brought to bed, Monday last, of a girlie. One part I shall wish you to have, which is that you may have as easy a labour, for shee dispatched her business in little more than an houer. I am afraid your shape is not so advantageously made for that convenience as hers is: however, a boy will recompense two grunts more, and so good night, for feare I fall into naturale philosophy before I thinke of it. I am entirely yours, C. R."

The "girlie" here referred to was Princess Anne, afterwards queen. The king's annoyance at the clandestine marriage of Frances Stewart, whom he wished to make one of his mistresses, and for whom Henrietta put in a word, is not to be mistaken:

"If you consider how hard a thing 'tis to swallow an injury done by a person I had so much tendernesse for, you will in some degree excuse the resentment I use towards her. You know my good nature enough to beleve that I could not be so severe if I had not great provocation, and I assure you her carriage towards me has been as bad as breach of frindship and faith can make it; therefore I hope you will pardon me if I cannot so soon forgett an injury which went so neere my hart."

For the rest, the king's letters, while adding nothing of importance to our knowledge of the period they cover, are not without historical interest. Here is his account of the fall of Clarendon:

"The ill-conduct of my L<sup>d</sup> Clarendon in my affaires has forced me to permitt many inquires to be made which otherwise I w<sup>d</sup> not have suffred the parliament to have done, though I must tell you that in themselves they are but inconvenient appearances rather than real mischives. There can be nothing advanced in the Parl. for my advantage till this matter of my L<sup>d</sup> Clarendon be over, but after that I shall be able to take my mesures to with them, as you will see the good effects of it; I am sure I will not part with any of my power, nor do I beleve that they will desire any unreesonable thing."

Other letters show his anxiety for a good understanding with France, his efforts to detach Louis XIV. from the Dutch alliance, and his occasional regard for the honour and interests of his country. His personal and political profligacy can never be excused; but it may be freely admitted that the general effect of this correspondence with that well-beloved sister is to make us think a little better of him than before.

Miss Cartwright's style, if not always marked by strict grammatical accuracy, is clear and unaffected. Her admiration of Henrietta does not go to unreasonable lengths, and the picture she sets before us may be accepted as substantially true. With the literary history of the Golden Age, however, she has but a superficial acquaintance. In regard to Molière, for instance, she is frequently astray. Take this reference to his position in or about the year 1661:

"His Précieuses . . . had been applauded by the whole society of the Hôtel Rambouillet, whose extravagances were the object of the poet's satire. 'In fact,' wrote Ménage, after being present at one of these performances and describing its extraordinary success, 'we are doing what Clovis was told to do of old by St. Rémi—we burn what we have adored, and we adore what we have burned.' Les Femmes Savantes and Sganarelle met with a still larger share of popularity."

In these three sentences there are no fewer than four errors. The Rambouillet ladies, far from applauding the "Précieuses Ridicules," looked upon it with ill-suppressed fury; Ménage's remark (made in a conversation with Chapelain after the first performance) was anticipatory of the effect of the piece: "We shall have to burn what we have adored, &c."; and the "Femmes Savantes," which by implication is here held to be contemporary with "Sganarelle," did not appear until ten or eleven years later. Then, too, we are told that the "Misanthrope" was "not a success at the time," whereas it is known to have been played in its nouveauté for the then considerable number of twenty-one nights. Miss Cartwright must also be reproached with a fault of omission. Long after 1667, when "Andromaque" came out, the playgoing world in Paris was divided into two camps as to the comparative merits of Corneille and Racine. While the controversy was at its height, Henrietta, struck by the analogy between her relations with Louis XIV. and the story of Titus and Berenice, persuaded the two dramatists to write a tragedy upon that story without each other's knowledge. The hero "sacrificed his feelings to a stern sense of duty," as the king had done in her case. What she may have deemed excellent sport was to be a source of bitter mortification to Corneille, the subject being one which he could not treat with so much command of pathos and tenderness as his brilliant young rival. It is certainly strange that in a well-nigh exhaustive biography of Henrietta, as Miss Cartwright's is, such an incident should have been recorded in less than a dozen lines.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

A Companion to Dante. From the German of G. A. Scartazzini. By Arthur John Butler. (Macmillans.)

MR. BUTLER has done good service in bringing Dr. Scartazzini's latest work upon Dante within reach of English readers: The Dante-Handbuch, of which the present volume is a translation, was undertaken in response to repeated demands for a German version of the author's long-awaited Prolegomeni della Divina Commedia, published three years ago after a delay of more than ten years. Dr. Scartazzini, instead of merely translating the latter, availed himself of the opportunity thus offered of expounding his matter afresh by the light of further study, and of the numerous additions to Dantesque literature that had made their appearance since the publication of his Italian work. The Handbuch, therefore, may be regarded as something more than a new edition of the Prolegomeni; and as such it is entitled to independent notice, the former work having already been reviewed in these columns (ACADEMY, Jan. 3, 1891).

Those who are acquainted with the Prolegomeni will, as Mr. Butler observes in his preface, trace in the present volume a distinct advance in the direction of scepticism or "negative dogmatism." This sceptical tendency, which is characteristic of a certain class of continental scholars, marks the inevitable reaction against the uncritical and unscientific methods of the school of Dantists who flourished a generation or two ago. The best known representative of this school in England was probably the late Dean of Wells, whose two substantial volumes on Dante, the work of a man of undoubted scholarship and learning, are full of extravagant hypotheses and fantastic theories, based as often as not upon the airiest of assumptions. For a typical instance of what we mean, we need only refer the reader to the passage (vol. ii. p. 528), in which Dean Plumptre complacently pictures Dante worshipping in his own cathedral at Wells—the germ from which this bold conception sprang being neither more nor less than the casual mention by Dante of a clock in one part of the Divina Commedia, and of Wissant (the usual port of departure for passengers to England) in another. Like many other reactionaries, Dr. Scartazzini shows a decided inclination to rush into extremes. His present tendency, indeed, is manifestly towards the assumption of what we can only describe with Dr. Moore as an attitude of simple agnosticism in Dantesque matters. In dealing with the details of Dante's biography, for example, he is not content with a wholesome scepticism, but must needs go the length of treating as practically disproved everything that he considers unproved—a system of destructive criticism which, if universally applied, would result in the rejection of nine-tenths of the so-called facts of history.

As was to be expected, he expends a considerable amount of argument and ingenuity (which, we are bound to say, on one occasion at least comes perilously near being disingenuousness) on the much discussed questions as to the reality and identity of Beatrice. His latest pronouncement on the subject is an excellent illustration of the tendency referred to above. In the Prolegomeni he was satisfied with the conclusion that Dante's Beatrice was not Beatrice Portinari, but some Florentine maiden, who probably died unmarried, and whose name may or may not have been Beatrice—("non sembra potersi inferire con certezza che tale fosse veramente il nome di battesimo della fanciulla"). He now confidently asserts that Dante's Beatrice was not only not Beatrice Portinari, but that she was certainly not even called Beatrice at all! And as a proof "to every unprejudiced mind" that she died unmarried, he actually adduces the sentence, "ove nacque, vivette e morio la gentilissima donna," from the Vita Nuova (§ 41), which, he says, implies that she had never left her parent's house. A reference to the context shows that he has entirely misrepresented Dante's words. Well may Mr. Butler exclaim: "Will it be believed that the antecedent to ove is la cittade, and that the words quoted are merely Dante's way of indicating the city of Florence?"

Dr. Scartazzini is much more interesting and instructive when he is dealing with non-controversial matters; and we cannot help wishing that Mr. Butler had hardened his heart and cut out some of the argumentative portions of the book, which, though thoroughly characteristic of the writer, were hardly worth reproducing in English. However, it was perhaps unreasonable not to expect some tares among the wheat; and after all, as Mr. Butler observes, conclusions are not of much importance in a work of this sort. The essential thing is that the reader should be presented with the facts in such a way as to enable him to form conclusions of his own. This Dr. Scartazzini may fairly claim to have done; and if he has given us a good deal with which we would willingly have dispensed, we cannot, on the other hand, complain that he has neglected to supply us liberally with what we did want.

The work is excellently planned and well arranged. It consists of a general "Introduction" (comprising a most useful chronological view of the history of the period) and five "Parts," which deal respectively with "Dante in his home," "Dante in exile," "Dante's spiritual life," "Dante's minor works," and lastly "the Divina Commedia." Under each of these heads a vast amount of information is given, which we may safely assert is not to be found in any other single work of the kind. We may add that, in the original German edition, there is a copious bibliographical appendix at the end of almost every chapter. In the present volume, which has been to a certain extent modified in order to suit the requirements of the general reader, the greater part of the bibliographical matter has been omitted—wisely, we think, as the majority of the books named would be interesting only to a specialist, who would naturally be provided with the original work. The English edition has an excellent index, and is further enriched with a preface by the translator. Mr. Butler here gives expression to the conviction, which is shared by every serious student of Dante, that the process of illustrating Dante from his own works—spiegare Dante con Dante, as the Italian commentators put it—has now been practically exhausted; and he suggests that, if the many remaining obscurities are to be cleared up, it is from the outside that the light must be brought to bear for the future. In order to be able to do this, the student must try to place himself as far as possible in the same mental atmosphere as that which Dante himself breathed: he must make himself familiar with the authors whom Dante studied, and with the society in which Dante moved. Something has already been achieved in this direction, but a great deal yet remains to be done.

It has often struck the present writer what an interesting object to a collector, who happened also to be a Dantist, or to a Dante society, would be the formation of a Dante Library, to consist, not of books about Dante, nor of editions of Dante—more or less complete collections of this kind have already been formed—but of the books read by Dante: such a collection as we may assume to have been included in one or other of the libraries, monastic, scholastic, or private (belonging to a powerful noble like Can Grande, for instance), to which Dante must have had access. We cannot picture him as the possessor of many books at any time during his troubled career—perhaps in the more prosperous days of his youth he may have owned an Aeneis, or a De Amicitia, or a De Consolatione, "quello non conosciuto da molti libro di Boezio" (we can almost fancy a touch of the pride of ownership in this otherwise rather strange remark about a book, which, though it may have happened to be rare, was assuredly not little known—but free access to books he must have had at most times. Of course, an ideal library of the kind we are imagining would possess the various works, not only in early printed editions, but also in MS. form, in the shape in which they were familiar to Dante's hand and eye; some few indeed, such as the old French Lancelot (in its entirety),* are as yet accessible only in this form. The acquisition of MSS. however, even if they were procurable, would probably involve a large outlay, so that we should have to content ourselves with the printed editions. We think there can be no question as to the immense usefulness, to say nothing of the peculiar literary interest, to a Dante student of a collection of this kind. It is obvious, for example, that there would often be a much better chance of getting at Dante's meaning in passages where he refers to Aristotle, if the latter were to be read in the old translations used by Dante (to which he refers in the Convito), instead of in modern critical editions of the original Greek. To understand Dante aright, we must work with the materials he worked with. A commentator who attempted to explain, say Purg. xxxiii. 49 (where Dante follows an old misreading, Naiades for Laiades, in Metam. vii. 759), by the light of a modern edition of Ovid, would be about as hopelessly at fault as an antiquary who should go to Sheffield for an explanation of the manufacture of flint arrow-heads. We trust that some day our visionary library may have a substantial existence. Meanwhile we make a present of the suggestion to the members of the Oxford Dante Society, or the curators of the Taylor Institution at Oxford. The latter already possesses a valuable collection of Dante literature, and might appropriately initiate such another collection as we have described.

But to return to our immediate subject. Mr. Butler has acquitted himself well of a task which must at times have proved somewhat tedious; for, as we have hinted above, Dr. Scartazzini's disquisitions are occasionally wearisome and unprofitable in the extreme. Mr. Butler is an experienced translator, and thoroughly understands the art of manipulating German so as to make it presentable to the English reader: indeed his version reads as smoothly as an original work. We have, however, one or two complaints to make. There are more misprints than we were prepared to find in a book of this kind: we may instance "actorem" for "auctorem" (p. 167), "lightly" for "rightly" (p. 270), "collection" for "collation" (p. 482), "Ordilaffi" (p. 119), "Vellutillo" (p. 140),

* It was precisely through reading this romance in the MS. version, instead of in the garbled printed editions, that the present writer had the good fortune some years ago to discover the key to the previously unexplained allusion in Par. xvi. 13-15, as was announced in the ACADEMY at the time.

"Mancettum" (p. 366), and "Maria Filelfo" for "Mario," wherever the name occurs. And we must enter a protest against Mr. Butler's rendering of proper names, about which there is no manner of consistency: thus we have "Luxembourg" and "Aachen" (p. 14), the Councils of "Lyons" (p. 8) and "Constanstanz" (p. 126), "John Boccaccio" (we should prefer to write with Lydgate "John Bochas," if the name is to be Englished at all), and, most intolerable of all, "Peter della Brosse" (p. 8), who has to pass through England and Italy before reaching his native France. We may add that the date of Lombardi's edition of the Divina Commedia is given wrongly (1871 for 1791) in the bibliographical list on p. ix., and that, though a Franciscan, his name was not Bonaventura (p. 473), but Baldassare.

PAOET TOYNBEE.

The Celtic Twilight: Men and Women, Dhouls and Faeries. By W. B. Yeats. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

It was Math the Magician—the same Math that formed the maiden Blodeuwedd from the blossoms of the oak and the broom and the meadow-sweet—who made a boat once out of a little sedge and seaweed, and set sail on another sea than we know to-day. Mr. Yeats is perhaps the one true follower of Math that we have left, and he proves his daring as a magician in nothing so much as in this last book of his. In it he dares to show us the materials of his craft—the little sedge and seaweed from which he built his magic bark of Oisín and Cúchulain. And if we are no nearer the secret at the end of this book than we were at the beginning, it is assuredly our fault and not his. The Celtic Twilight will still remain, to the Saxon intelligence at any rate, as much a mystery as ever. Its men and women will remain—only men and women; the dhoul and faeries will be no more intelligible or conceivable than before. But to those who believe in Math: that is, in the Imagination before all, it is different. They soon fall under the spell; a rhyme or so, and the thing is done. And Mr. Yeats knows his art, and begins with rhyme:—

"The host is riding from Knocknaree,
And over the grave of Clooth-na-bare;
Caolte teasing his burning hair,
And Niam calling, 'Away, come away;
"And brood no more where the fire is bright,
Filling thy heart with a mortal dream;
For breasts are heaving and eyes a-gleam:
Away, come away, to the dim twilight.'"
.....

This invocation is only too effective. It makes one expect other ghosts, and enchantments more rare and elusive, and more mediaeval, than can possibly belong to this latter end of the Celtic twilight. On the very next page, it is true, Mr. Yeats determines his boundary explicitly in prose. But the promise of his verse is not to be gainsaid, and its effect is to make one keep hoping for all the ancient mystery of Celtic tradition, still lurking, as one half ventured to believe, in the fields and watersides of Connaught and Leinster. That, unhappily, no longer exists as it did. Only the merest fragments remain; and this book is a melancholy witness of how little that is. For Mr. Yeats makes no effort to build up these fragments; he takes them as he finds them, as they appear to him. To give his own account of himself and his book:

"Next to the desire," he says, "which every artist feels, to create for himself a little world out of the beautiful, pleasant, and significant things of this marred and clumsy universe, I have desired to show in a vision something of the face of Ireland to any of my own people who care for things of this kind. I have, therefore, written down accurately and candidly much that I have heard and seen, and, except by way of commentary, nothing that I have merely imagined."

This distinction between the writer's impressions and his imaginations is worth noting, seeing how much Impressionism, as against the purely imaginative use of subject-matter, is now in vogue. Mr. Yeats is not the only one among our younger contemporaries, perhaps, who has implied a difference between the two; but none other that I know of has elected to make it in actual practice a question betwixt prose and verse. However, like many other poets, his impressions, though expressed in prose, will be found often to end in imaginations—even in lyrical imaginations. In some passages of the book, indeed, the reader who has known Mr. Yeats hitherto only as poet and rhymist, will be very likely to hesitate, and wonder whether this thing had not been better adapted to another vehicle: as, for instance, in the striking conclusion of his second apologue:

"When all is said and done, how do we not know but that our own unreason may be better than another's truth? For it has been warned on our hearths and in our souls, and is ready for the wild bees of truth to hive in it, and make their sweet honey. Come into the world again, wild bees, wild bees!"

But in the main the form is excellently well-fitted to the subject-matter of the book, as in the opening chapter, which gives a characteristic account of one Paddy Flynn. A little bright-eyed old man, he lived in a leaky and one-roomed cabin in the village of Ballisodare, which is, he was wont to say, "the most gentle"—whereby he meant faery—"place in the whole of County Sligo":—

"He was a great teller of tales, and unlike our common romancers, knew how to empty heaven, hell and purgatory, faeryland and earth, to people his stories. He did not live in a shrunken world, but knew of no less ample circumstance than did Homer himself. Perhaps the Gaelic people shall by his like bring back again the ancient simplicity and amplitude of imagination. What is literature but the expression of moods by the vehicle of symbol and incident. And are there not moods which need heaven, hell, purgatory, and faeryland for their expression, no less than this dilapidated earth?"

An "impressionist," in the ordinary sense, it is clear, of course, as any reader of his previous books must know, Mr. Yeats could never be; and though in this book he pretends to give us impressions, rather than imaginations, of the twilight of the Gael, his natural temper of idealism is such that not one of these sketches but is constantly turning its matter of fact into matter of imagination.

There is no want of humour either in the tales of the "gentry" or fairy people, or of the ghosts, who range so delightfully through Mr. Yeats's pages. There is an excellent set of them in a chapter on "Village Ghosts," in whose doings the villagers, with true Irish philosophy, have even learnt to take a humorous pleasure. Of these ghosts, one was a wicked sea-captain, who "stayed for years inside the plaster of a cottage wall, in the shape of a snipe, making the most horrible noises. He was only dislodged when the wall was broken down; then out of the solid plaster the snipe rushed away whistling."

How much more original this is than most of the ghosts in Borderland. So, too, with others who inhabit the same village of H— in Leinster, which is so well described by Mr. Yeats that we cannot resist stealing the passage:

"History has in no manner been burdened by this ancient village, with its crooked lanes, its old abbey churchyard full of long grass, its green background of small fir-trees, and its quay, where lie a few tarry fishing-luggers. In the annals of entomology it is well known. For a small bay lies westward a little, where he who watches night after night may see a certain rare moth fluttering along the edge of the tide, just at the end of evening or the beginning of dawn. A hundred years ago it was carried here from Italy by smugglers in a cargo of silks and laces."

There is a curious, half-ghostly fascination about this elusive moth, that makes one at once expect Mr. Yeats to turn it to account as a symbol of the tricky spirit of Celtic lore which he pursues. But no! singularly enough, he severely discounts both moth and moth-hunter in a way that is quite unlike him. For every poet is, in a sense, a moth-hunter; though, indeed, it is not given to many to have so rare a moth of a muse as that which haunts Mr. Yeats's Celtic twilight.

ERNEST RHYS.

The Kingdom of God is Within You. Translated from the Russian of Count Leo Tolstoy by Constance Garnett. (Heinemann.)

The Kingdom of God is Within You. By Count Leo Tolstoy. Authorised translation from the original Russian MS. by A. Delano. (Walter Scott.)

COMPARATIVE criticism, in contemporary literature, falls so rarely to the share of the critic, that we hailed with something like exultation these two translations of Tolstoy's latest work. We anticipated the pleasure of being able to discover, by careful investigation, which of the rivals had best fathomed the author's meaning and followed it most closely: we assumed, in fact, that both translations would have an equal claim to literary merit, or, as is too often the case, to the want of it.

As we already knew the contents of Tolstoy's work, having had occasion to make its acquaintance both in its German dress and in a French disguise, we proceeded to dip into Mr. Delano's pages, and the first lines that met our eyes were these:

"Yet more. In 1891 this same Wilhelm, the enfant terrible of State authority, who expresses what other men only venture to think, in a talk with certain soldiers, uttered publicly the following words, which were repeated the next day in thousands of papers."

Somehow, it seemed to us that the German Emperor was not in the habit of "talking" publicly with his soldiers, and that Tolstoy, once himself a soldier, could not be so ignorant of military etiquette as to write thus.

Turning to Mrs. Garnett's version, we read:

"And even this is not all. In 1892 the same William, the enfant terrible of State authority, who says plainly what other people only think, in addressing some soldiers, gave public utterance to the following speech, which was reported next day in thousands of newspapers."

Now, we understood: William had addressed some of his soldiers publicly. Notice, further, that Mr. Delano makes the newspapers "repeat" the Emperor's utterances. From this we might have concluded that the sheets he alluded to were phonographic ones, had it not been that Mrs. Garnett's translation rectified the blunder, and showed that Mr. Delano really meant "reported" when he wrote "repeated."

To point out errors of this kind is not hair-splitting, but log-cleaving, a performance little to our taste. A man guilty of such slipshod writing puts himself out of court, by his own action. Still, à tout péché, miséricorde: let us try Mr. Delano again. Reverting to his title-page, we find:

"Christianity, not as a mystical doctrine, but as a new life-conception."

"Mystical doctrine" and "Life-conception" are fine combinations of words, no doubt; but the first seems rather out of place applied to Christianity, and the latter sounds so very Teutonic that, were it not for Mr. Delano's statement to the contrary, we should have inferred that his translation had been made at second hand, as is the case with the French rendering. If we refer to Mrs. Garnett, we read:

"Christianity not as a mystic religion but as a new theory of life."

This is intelligible: it renders the meaning of the Russian text in sensible English.

But Mr. Delano's shortcomings are not merely errors in translation: they are such as to make us question whether his literary acumen is not of the flimsiest kind.

Take, for instance, this single sentence:

"This would seem perfectly plain and simple, if we did not veil with hypocrisy the truth that is indubitably revealed to us," and compare it with Mrs. Garnett's version,

"It would be perfectly simple and clear if you did not by your hypocrisy disguise the truth which has so unmistakably been revealed to us."

It is, perhaps, unfortunate for Mr. Delano that Mrs. Garnett's translation was not kept back for a little while. He might, then, have passed muster with the many would-be renderers into English who deluge the book market with travesties of foreign productions; as it is, he can claim no place among the ranks of those who, like Mrs. Garnett, know the mysteries of une écriture artiste. If we add that Mrs. Garnett's volumes have the further advantage of thicker paper, clearer headings, and better type, we shall have justified our using it exclusively for an understanding of Tolstoy's latest dicta.

Tolstoy's Christianity is of the hysterical type, blended with a strong tincture of scholastic logic. He assumes, without an atom of serious proof, that the teachings of Christ centre in the doctrine of non-resistance; and, starting from this basis, he works out a series of logical deductions after the most approved academic pattern, all tending to show the necessity of complying with the assumed duty; but whenever he tries to show us non-resistance in operation, he really describes the most powerful resistance of all—passive resistance. It seems to us that Tolstoy has never even dreamed of the possibility of there being a difference between the two. So much for his philosophical knowledge.

To us the great, the immense value of his book lies elsewhere—in the picture of Russian misrule at this latter end of the nineteenth century, drawn by a man bearing no ill-will to the petty tyrants whose doings he so dramatically unveils. We can but quote one example, but it is typical:

"This is what took place in Orel. Just as in the Toul province, a landlord here wanted to appropriate the property of the peasants, and just in the same way the peasants opposed it. The matter in dispute was a fall of water, which irrigated the peasants' fields, and which the landowner wanted to cut off and divert to turn his mill. The peasants rebelled against this being done. The landowner laid a complaint before the district commander, who illegally (as was recognised later even by a legal decision) decided the matter in favour of the landowner, and allowed him to divert the watercourse. The landowner sent workmen to dig the conduit by which the water was to be let off to turn the mill. The peasants were indignant at this unjust decision, and sent their women to prevent the landowner's men from digging the conduit. . . ."

The italics are ours. They "sent their women!" What a tale of down-trodden manhood it tells, and how it explains the abject way in which the men, later on, take their flogging? The atrocious scene—too long for quotation here—is described with a simplicity and directness of purpose which is the very acme of art in narratives of this kind. To these pages of historical value the future student will turn with pleasure, when the author's vapourings about non-resistance are no longer remembered of men, "for they deserve it not."

ROGER DE GOEIJ.

NEW NOVELS.

The Common Ancestor. By John Hill. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Yellow Aster. By Iota. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

The Tiger Lily. By G. Manville Fenn. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Marriage Ceremony. By Ada Cambridge. In 2 vols. (Hutchinson.)

A Bush Girl's Romance. By Hume Nisbet. (White.)

Beyond the Ice. By G. Read Murphy. (Sampson Low.)

Not Angels Quite. By Nathan Haskell Dole. (Gay & Bird.)

In Love with the Czarina. By Maurice Jókai. (Frederick Warne.)

MR. JOHN HILL is always a smart and incisive writer, with just a slight inclination to alarm the British matron; but The Common Ancestor is by far the best thing he has yet achieved. There is more approach in it to the true principle of novel writing: that is, the determination to allow the characters to interpret themselves, and not to treat them as mere pegs upon which to hang all the various ideas of the author himself. The story seems to open somewhat unpromisingly; for we are introduced to Sergeant Dick Scanlan, as he is performing his duties on the parade-ground of Wellington Barracks, and then to his sister, Nora Scanlan, in the show-room of Messrs. Whitehall & Westgrove. By and by, however, the prospect widens for the brother and sister, for the distant "common ancestor" dies in Ireland and leaves Dick a large fortune. Scanlan is a good-hearted sort of fellow; but Nora is a very superior creature indeed, whom nobody really understands until another superior creature, Andrew Cunningham, comes along. Then there is Johnny Smalley, who shares with the Scanlans whatever honours attach to the "common ancestor"; and, acting upon his advice, they buy a property near his father's at Redcliff, a summer seaside resort. Mr. Hill sketches with singular facility the chief inhabitants of Redcliff. We know them all well, from the scholarly rector (Cunningham's relative) to General Barker, of the Laurels, "who was an amateur astronomer, and an interpreter of the Book of Revelation, the various vials, trumpets, and beasts of which he applied to contemporary politics and celebrities." Into the quiet and inoffensive life of Redcliff intrudes that snake in the grass, Mr. Leopold Scheiner, another Hebrew who spoils the Egyptians, for he entices the good people into a financial speculation, which ends in the discomfiture of the investors, but to the manifest advantage of Leopold Scheiner. He is aided by his foreign wife, who acts as a decoy duck, and there are some very miserable passages between the pair. Meanwhile, Andrew Cunningham has conveyed the Scanlans abroad on their travels, and, as he is a kind of Admirable Crichton, the brother and sister find their tour quite a "liberal education." What might have been foreseen occurs—Cunningham and Nora fall desperately in love with each other. After they return to England, stories are set afloat to Cunningham's detriment, but they are proved to be baseless; and Cunningham turns the tables so neatly upon the Scheiners that they are obliged to flee from Redcliff. There are many interesting subsidiary incidents in the novel, and two or three of the minor characters are remarkably well drawn. Besides being clever, The Common Ancestor is one of the most enjoyable stories we have read for a long time.

The mystery, quickly dispelled, about the identity of "Iota," led us to expect greater things than we have found in the novel entitled A Yellow Aster. True, in the third volume there are one or two powerful and pathetic scenes; but as a whole, the story does not manifest a very high order of talent. Many readers, too, will be repelled by its subject. To Henry Waring and his wife are born two children, but for any affection or tenderness shown to them they might have been born in Timbuctoo. They are put utterly out of the lives of the parents, who spend their time in the composition of drivelling philosophical treatises which are to correct the ignorance of the world on every point. Meantime, the girl grows up to be remarkably beautiful. She hungers for a mother's love, but it never comes, and her own heart grows dead and cold. Then she marries Sir Humphrey Strange, but although he loves her madly and devotedly he cannot touch her heart. The best part of the book is that which reveals the awakening of Mrs. Waring to the terrible truth that she has lost the best sweetness of life. She has strange yearnings for baby touches and baby kisses when it is too late, and she has to find "the pale ghosts of them amongst her lost children's baby clothes." On her death-bed she has one brief glimpse of a mother's happiness, and she dies kissing and fondling the hands of her child whom she never kissed before. Philosophy breaks down utterly with Mr. and Mrs. Waring, and Nature reigns. Then comes the awakening of Lady Strange. A child is born to her, and through her love for it her soul opens towards her husband, and they become one in thought and affection. This part of the narrative is beautifully worked out, but the general effect of the novel is not a pleasing one. The minute analysis of sacred feelings and the most delicate sensations rather jars on one's nerves. A Yellow Aster is a clever study on the special subject of maternal love—though by no means so clever as some critics would have us believe. As one swallow does not constitute a spring, so it remains to be seen whether "Iota" is a woman of one book, or whether she has the makings of a novelist in her. We have noticed two agonising misprints in the first volume: the famous French painter of infantine beauty is spoken of as Greuse, and the title of one of Browning's best known poems appears as "Caliban on Cetebos."

Mr. Manville Fenn's latest story, A Tiger Lily, is not quite so strong as the one which we recently reviewed, In an Alpine Valley; but it is decidedly better than the generality of novels which come before us. He calls it "a story of two passions"—the passions in question being the immortal ones of love and art. Armstrong Dale is a young American artist who has left the States to study in Europe. He has immense genius—indeed his brother artist Pacey, who is an indifferent painter himself, but an excellent judge, says to him on one occasion, "Here you are, gifted by nature with ten times the brains of an ordinary man; you can paint like Raphael or Murillo; fame and fortune are at your feet; and you have the love waiting for you of one of the sweetest, most angelic women who ever stepped this earth." This female paragon, Cornel Thorpe, has loved Dale since his boyhood, and they are betrothed. The highest hopes are formed of the rising artist, when, alas! in London he falls a victim to the beauty of the Comtesse Dellatoria, a magnificent, Juno-like woman, who is cruelly treated by the Italian reptile who calls himself her husband. She is madly in love with Dale. To enable him to complete a great work he has on hand she even sits to him as his model, with a mask on her face to disguise her. Dale becomes completely enthralled, and Cornel and her brother, Doctor Thorpe, come over from America to recover him to sanity and his old love. Very dramatic scenes ensue in Dale's studio; but after some bitter and all too sensuous experiences the earlier and purer love conquers. There is nothing intricate in the plot, but the story is well developed, and one or two chapters exhibit a wonderful amount of concentrated, if sometimes unwholesome, passion.

The idea of a wealthy old curmudgeon leaving a large fortune to a young couple, on condition that they marry within a given time, is not new; but Miss Cambridge has treated it with originality in A Marriage Ceremony. When Rutherford Hope and Betty Ochiltree were ordered to marry within three months, or the whole of the testator's money would go to a charity, they were just beginning to experience tender sentiments towards each other. A complete revulsion of feeling now came over them, but at Hope's urgent request they married and separated on the same day. Hope was not long in discovering that he really loved his wife, and that he would willingly have sacrificed all his fortune to woo her as a poor suitor: but it was too late—gold had raised a barrier between them. Betty was a charming but wilful creature. She resented Hope's love-making, and even went to the other end of the world to escape his importunities; but do what she would, she could not crush him out of her existence. She put him through an unnecessarily long probation, however, before she would admit to herself that he was not indifferent to her. But love is capable of many sacrifices, and Hope won his wife's affections at the last. Both felt that the final reward was worth waiting for. The episode of the gifted little Hilda Penrose, and her secret love for Rutherford Hope, is very tenderly related; but we cannot quite see why Miss Cambridge should have wedded her to a selfish clod like Donne. If she had to die, she might have been spared this. The narrative altogether is well worked out, and the reader will be interested in tracing the fortunes of the hero and heroine from their formal marriage ceremony to their real union.

Mr. Hume Nisbet is a vigorous writer, but not always a pleasant one. Take, for example, the awful horrors described in A Bush Girl's Romance, and especially in the chapters headed, "Crocodile Station" and "Dispersing the Natives," which we hope, for the sake of humanity, are considerably exaggerated. There is also something creepy in the diabolical humour of Captain Wildrake, just before he pays the last penalty for his crimes. By the way, the bush girl herself is charming; but, though she furnishes the title of the story, there is a good half of it in which she makes no appearance at all. But, whatever objections may be taken to the sketch, on the ground, mainly, of its almost unmentionable horrors, it is, undoubtedly, written with great spirit.

Visions of a Utopian state, in which things will be better managed than they are on this discredited planet, have been rather common in novels recently. We cannot say that Mr. Murphy impresses us favourably by his story of this type, Beyond the Ice. It professes to be edited from Dr. Frank Farleigh's diary, describing a newly-discovered region past the North Pole. The people in Undara are bigger than those in the middle world, and they dress a little differently, and call one another by their Christian names; otherwise the differences are not very great. We are shown how the new civilisation deals with social problems, domestic economy, science, agriculture, morals, religion, &c.; but there is nothing very striking in the narrative. The hymn composed by Parson Hamer is terrible stuff when contrasted with the majestic simplicity of Bishop Ken's stanzas on the same subject. There is a marriage bureau in Undara, so that matrimonial agents who find it incompatible with the law to pursue their calling here might perhaps pick up a wrinkle or two from this new method. War also, we regret to see, is not only possible in Undara, but is carried on with a murderous precision that would satisfy the scientific instincts of a von Moltke. There are some points of real interest in the story; but, judged as a whole, we are not struck by its newness of suggestion, or its ability.

There are two pairs of lovers in Mr. Dole's Not Angels Quite, and in each case they are unsuited to each other. The main incidents of the narrative, which are not very exciting, relate to the breaking-off of long-standing engagements rashly entered into, and the proper sorting of the lovers. Alma Doubleday and Harry Carburn are, it must be admitted, quite a superior couple to the ordinary run of young people; and we are glad when their acquaintanceship—which began in a very quaint manner—ends in happiness and marriage. There are some smart things in this volume, and various snatches of original poetry. Some of these are indifferent; but the hexameters descriptive of New England scenery towards the close of the story are really stirring and vigorous. Mrs. Carburn and Mr. and Mrs. Priestley are well-drawn characters, and the tragic death of Mr. Priestley is described with true feeling. May we again draw the attention of an American writer to one of those mistakes so common with his class? An English baronet does not "find his name in the British peerage."

It would have given a better impression of the great Hungarian writer Jókai, if Messrs. Warne had added to their Library of Continental Authors one of his sustained works, instead of the collection of short stories headed In Love with the Czarina. Still, even here we perceive the power and intensity of the novelist shining through. The sketches are founded on historical incidents, and all, except the last, deal with painful or ghastly subjects. They are spiritedly translated by Mr. Felbermann, though we may remind the translator that such phrases as "I shall lay in his bed" are not English.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Lyric Poems. By Lawrence Binyon. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.) From the London Hippocrene, the Bodley Head in Vigo-street, there comes yet another singer for the judgment of those who are fleet enough to be at the heels of modern poetical literature. Mr. Lawrence Binyon has done his utmost for the critic by arranging his poems, so far as possible, in order of composition or conception; and as the present volume contains presumably the choice clusters from the author's literary vineyard, it is possible to contrast the vintage of 1890 with that of 1893. Perhaps the palate of the present writer is not fine enough for a task so delicate; perhaps the alteration is inexplicably slight; in any case the gap of time is, comparatively speaking, sufficiently small to be disregarded. Three years makes a momentous difference in a Shelley; in the sonnets of Brown or the odes of Smith they make precious little effect. In 1890 a slender volume of verse entitled Primavera attracted notice. Mr. Binyon was one of the contributors to its success. In Lyrical Poems there are reprinted the four poems which first saw the light in Primavera. Of these, "Testamentum Amoris" has an undoubted charm, despite two disadvantages. Such a couplet as the following is clumsy, since to make it tolerable for the ear a heavy stress must be put on the second syllable of "straightway":

"I cannot put away life's trivial care,
But you straightway steal on me with delight."

The quatrain next to be quoted is, in thought, very Lovelace of very Lovelace:

"You are the lovely regent of my mind,
The constant sky to my unresting sea;
Yet since 'tis you that rule me, I but find
A finer freedom in such tyranny."

Mr. Binyon is often extremely commonplace, apparently of set purpose. But he must remember that nothing is harder than in poetry to successfully treat the commonplace. Platitude must have glorious presentment, else is platitude but a dull dog! It is not easy to be sure why Lyrical Poems is somewhat of a disappointment. Poets are notoriously impatient, and, doubtless, Mr. Binyon is no exception. When he has learnt restraint, he will in all probability make perfect the imperfect, yet partly lovely, song which is given below:

"I have too happy been.
Some sad fate envia me.
An arrow she, unseen,
Has fitted to her bow,
And smiling grim, I know,
Let the drawn shaft leap free.

"Deep in my side it pierced:
With sudden pain I shook,
And gazed around, the accurst
Perfidious foe to espy.
Lo, only thou art nigh
With sweet and troubled look!"

Here the pen has betrayed the brain. "Accurst perfidious" is dreadful, and the rhyme "pierced-accurst" more dreadful still. The two last lines of the second verse are surprising and beautiful.

Dante: a Dramatic Poem. By G. H. R. Dabbs and Edward Righton. (Macmillans.)

This dramatic poem, so brief that an industrious reader can finish it in twenty minutes, has been performed by the Independent Theatre Society at St. George's Hall. True literature is so seldom present in plays, that the spectator is glad to be weaned from words by action; but Dante seems to us to be more fitted for the library than for the footlights. In other words, it is of good literary quality. From beginning to end this little play glows. It gives opportunities for ranting, but the authors have always been ready with the right feeling for the right moment. The thought of the following excerpt is a commonplace of oppressed genius, but it is hard to see how it could be better stated; for it is both temperate and trenchant:

"Gemma. Our children know not Florence, think on this.

Dante. And Florence knows not me—consider that.

The city of my fathers—fairest—first—
Queen-lily of the garden of the world:
And yet the time will come—I know it well—

A time not far away, nay, very near—
When hands that would not clasp my own to-day

Will scramble for my ashes, and the crowd

That fain would tear me limb from limb
but now,

Will then swear Heaven away to keep my dust.

Wife, in the coming kingdoms of the earth,

The genius that must shine will shine through clouds;

The hand that writes a truth down for mankind

Will be the bony hand that want has made

A shadowy skeleton; the thoughts that burn

Will flame from souls of starving citizens,
And only from the garrets of the world

Will gleam the star-fire of the Spirit of God."

In Various Moods. By M. A. B. Evans. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.) To be beautifully slight in literature: how hard a task! To few, indeed, is it given to write the lovely nothing. Now the author of In Various Moods would rather be airy than metaphysical, showing by such a choice that he sets out on his poetical journey in company with wisdom, paradoxical as it may sound. He has the requisite high spirits, the ready quip; but the lyrical gift whereby to trick out his fancies charmingly has been withheld. The obvious resource is to imitate, to make the most of a good ear for rhythm, and use the successes of others. In the first part of this book we have high spirits clumsily translated into words. It would be interesting to see a treatment by Mr. Austin Dobson of the idea contained in "The Modern Rachel":

"Priscilla leaned back in her well-cushioned pew,
With a smile on her winsome young face,
As she heard the old story of Rachel anew,
She yawned 'mid her ruffles of lace.

"One man for seven years!" thought this gay young coquette,
'How awfully stupid and queer!
Now I should prefer, without one regret,
Seven men for a single year!'"

The poem is a nothing, but it is not airy. All the epithets are deadly ordinary. The swing of the second stanza is defective—in a word, it is a fair sample of the quality of the first fifty pages in the volume under notice. The second section shows as plain as plain can be the most potent influence of Mr. Austin Dobson and (since posterity may not name them apart) Mr. Edmund Gosse. We hasten to say that the disciple has not shamed the masters, for some of the rondeaux and triolets are gracefully managed. This is amusing:

"With rich pumpkin-pie
And turkey give thanks.
Feel your heart mollify
With rich pumpkin-pie.
In your neighbour's desecry
A man first in the ranks.
With rich pumpkin-pie
And turkey give thanks."

Two Lives. By Reginald Fanshawe. (Bell.) In the afternoon of a man's life it is no uncommon thing for him to turn with loathing upon the idols of his youth. In the fiery days of conclusions too rapid it seemed easy to deny all spiritual help. Youth is not the season for crutches, be they material or immaterial. But then comes the armchair period of life, when the radiant phases have passed away, when those old friends of the bright eyes and eager hearts possess only so much of the earth as their coffins occupy. It is in these days, when thought is the only exercise remaining, that so many enter upon a pilgrimage from the wilderness of doubt to the Canaan of hope. Such a journey Mr. Reginald Fanshawe seeks to describe in Two Lives, an incomplete poem of great interest, although, from its strangely monastic nature, so contrary to the modern drift of poetry, something hard of both perusal and classification. Austerity is not the note of the day. The powder-puff and skirt-dancing are subjects that more deeply thrill the rhymesters of the hour. Two men pipe of the music hall, and lo, they become a School. Two men sing of the cradle and the spouse, and lo, they become a School. But here is Mr. Fanshawe, with a poem so foreign to the jingles of the modern muse that he must be a School all by himself. We cannot but admire the audacity with which Mr. Fanshawe revels in difficulties. He has an almost Homeric largeness. His theme is of the hardest; his measure far from easy. What is the result of so much daring? To be candid, we are not greatly impressed, save by the fact that we have to deal with a courageous poet. Mr. Fanshawe turns out stanza after stanza scrupulously correct, scholarly, and, not seldom, beautiful; but at last the reader (unless his appetite be Gargantuan) is likely to tire. We confess to our fatigue. It may be our fault, it may be Mr. Fanshawe's.

The Rescue, and other Poems. By Henry Bellyse Baildon. (Fisher Unwin.) Recalling the days gone by since they composed rival verse-renderings of Ovid, Mr. Baildon, in a merry preface, dedicates his book to Robert Louis Stevenson. It is a volume of poems unequal in merit to a degree quite remarkable. Mr. Baildon should shun the love-song. As far as he is concerned, his lady's eyebrow should go unsung; for foolscap is evidently a bad conductor of his emotions. All of erotic in The Rescue is unsatisfactory; the fervour seems forced. If one God more than another should be easily lyrical, he is Cupid. In many of the pieces not touching upon love between man and woman there are some fine phrases, but too often a defective verse spoils the effect for a reader. The success of the book, to our thinking, is "Jael and Sisera," with its strange eastern atmosphere so cunningly rendered. We should like to quote from this poem, but think that such a course would be injurious to it. We give "Auriculas" as an example of Mr. Baildon's fancy:—

"Grave grandees from pageant olden,
Purple, crimson, primrose, golden;
Yellow-hearted, tawny-tuckered
Velvet-robed, and flounced and puckered,
Golden-eyed and garnet-breasted,
Cherry-rimmed and velvet-vested,
Silver-powdered, golden-dusted,
Damsel-dyed, or orange-rusted,

Pencilled, painted, grained and graded,
 Frilled and brodered and brocaded,
 Ye should move in gilded coaches
 While some gorgeous prince approaches
 (Let the Polyanthi then Run as dapper liverymen!)
 Till your dames on polished floors
 Sail, live splendid Pompadours!"

The end justifies the beginning. We shall never see Auriculas again without thinking of compound adjectives.

NORMAN GALE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. W. J. HARVEY, the editor of Alumni Cantabrigienses, has now ready for the press his Bibliography of Privately-printed Books, for which he has been collecting materials during many years, and which will supersede Martin's, the only other work on the subject.

GEORGE EGERTON, the author of Keynotes—which showed strong Scandinavian influence—is now engaged upon the translation of a book by Ola Haussen, one of the most striking writers of the new school in the North. It is a series of critical essays, entitled Tolke og Seere ("Interpreters and Seers").

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish, on April 9, a new story of modern society, by Mr. E. F. Benson, in two volumes, entitled The Rubicon. We understand that Dodo, by the same author, is now in its thirteenth edition, and that its popularity shows no sign of decrease.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a volume of Shakspeare Studies by the late Prof. T. Spencer Baynes, editor of the Encyclopædia Britannica, to which Prof. Lewis Campbell, his colleague for many years at St. Andrews, will contribute a biographical sketch. The contents include the article on "Shakspeare" in the Encyclopædia, and three articles entitled "What Shakspeare learned at School," which appeared about fourteen years ago in Fraser's.

AMONG the contributors to Vox Clamantium, the new "Gospel for the People," which is to be published directly after Easter by Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co., will be: Mr. A. R. Wallace, Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. S. R. Crockett, Mr. Lewis Morris, Prof. Shuttleworth, Mr. A. E. Fletcher, Mr. Richard Le Gallienne, Mr. Grant Allen, the new Dean of Ely, the Rev. J. C. Adderley, and Mr. Tom Mann.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER announce for early publication an historical romance by the Rev. J. D. Craig Houston, entitled The Daughter of Leontius; or, Phases of Byzantine Life in the Fifth Century.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will shortly publish a semi-humorous account of a hunting-trip among the Red Indians of the Sioux Nation, by Mr. Price Collier, of Boston, now resident in England. The author, and also the artist who furnishes the illustrations, lived for several months on the plains of the North-West, riding, shooting, and becoming familiar with the daily life of the Sioux Indians, who are almost the sole inhabitants of this particular part of the prairies. The book is written from the standpoint of one who has no political or sectarian prejudices, and pictures the Red Indian from the rather unusual point of view of the man of the world of literary tastes.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication Chapters on Church Music, by Mr. R. B. Daniel.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will publish immediately a new humorous book, entitled Abroad with Twitty, by Mr. Ernest Mulliner, author of "Declined with Thanks."

MR. J. T. BAILLIE, of Edinburgh, has in the press a little illustrated book, by Mr. J. Wilson McLaren, to be entitled Tibbie and Tam: or, the Upcomes, Dooncomes, and Ongauns o' Twa Cannie Scots.

MESSRS. ISAAC PITMAN & SONS announce the early publication of a handbook, entitled Commercial Terms, Phrases, and Abbreviations, by Mr. W. G. Cordingley, author of "Cordingley's Guide to the Stock Exchange."

THE three following have been elected members of the Athenæum Club by the committee: Mr. Charles Booth, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, and Mr. A. S. Murray.

AMONG the arrangements at the Royal Institution after Easter, we may specially mention a course of two lectures on "Literature and Journalism," by Mr. H. D. Traill.

MESSRS. METHUEN have moved this week from Bury-street, Bloomsbury, to 36, Essex-street, Strand, where they will be neighbours of Messrs. Seeley.

MR. BERNARD QUARITCH, we are glad to find, has not been deterred from continuing his Dictionary of English Book-Collectors, though it must be admitted that the new Part does not altogether realise the promise of the original prospectus. By force of circumstances, the work has tended to become rather a catalogue of collections than a biography of collectors. We have here a brief account of five great libraries that were dispersed within the last ten years, including those of two dukes and two earls; but though it is well known who sold the books, hardly anything can be ascertained about those who first brought them together. The only untitled collector is Mr. Frederick Perkins, whose birth and death are equally unrecorded. Nor do we feel at all sure that the library of the late Earl of Buckinghamshire was formed by himself; part of it, such as the volumes of Civil War Tracts, may conceivably have been inherited from the Hampdens. But so far as Mr. Quaritch is concerned, we have nothing but gratitude. To him are due the illustrations, consisting of an admirable reproduction in colours and gold (? by Griggs) of the binding of the presentation copy to James V. of Boece's Croniklis of Scotland (1536), and of two pages from that book, which are alone worth the eighteen-pence asked for the Part. To him, too, is due the information that the Golden Gospels (written in the time of Charlemagne, and once owned by Henry VIII.), which he bought for £2500 in the Hamilton sale, are now in a private library at Oswego, being "the most precious book in the whole New World."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE editors of the Pall Mall Magazine, which has now completed its first year of existence, make the following announcements for their new volume: a serial novel, by Mr. Rider Haggard; three articles on "The Rise of Wellington," by Lord Roberts; a paper on "Copenhagen and Other Famous Battle Horses," by Mr. Archibald Forbes; short stories by Bret Harte, Thomas Hardy, Q., Mrs. Oliphant, W. E. Norris, and W. Clark Russell; poems by Lewis Morris, the Hon. Roden Noel, Alfred Austin, Rudyard Kipling, Norman Gale, and R. Le Gallienne; as well as contributions from Walter Besant, Grant Allen, W. H. Mallock, Ouida, Prof. Lanciani, &c.

THE forthcoming number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain the following articles: "Oriental Art and Archaeology," by Mr. William Simpson, the veteran artist of the Illustrated London News; "The Eucharist of the Lamas," by Dr. L. A. Waddell, whose researches in Tibetan Buddhism have more than once been noticed in the ACADEMY; "The Progress of Anthropology in India," by Mr. H. H. Risley, the secretary of the newly founded section of Anthropology in the Bengal Asiatic Society; "Assyria and Nineveh," by Dr. A. Lincke; and "The True Nature and Interpretation of the Yi-King," by Prof. C. de Harlez, of Louvain, who does not agree with any of his brother Sinologists on this vexed question.

MR. W. W. YATES, of Dewsbury, who has been mainly instrumental in starting the Brontë Museum in that town, will contribute to the April number of the New Review an article on "Some Relics of the Brontës," accompanied by photographs illustrating original works of art and needlework by Charlotte Brontë.

MR. J. ASHCROFT NOBLE will contribute to the April number of Atalanta an essay on "The Dramatic Novel, as represented by George Eliot."

THE forthcoming number of the Reliquary will contain a continuation of Mr. Clement Hodges's articles on the "Pre-conquest Churches of Northumbria," and of Mr. T. M. Fallow's "Notes on the Cathedral Churches of Sweden." Canon Atkinson writes on "The Roman Road through East Cleveland: its Terminus and Object"; and Miss A. W. Buckland on "Neolithic Trepanning." There are also articles on "Old Municipal Corporations of Ireland," "A British Idol at Aldborough," and "The Brass of Dorothy Turner at Kirkleatham."

DR. KARL BLIND will contribute to the next number of the Pall Mall Magazine an article on "Anarchism, Old and New," with personal reminiscences, treating of the views of Louis Blanc, a forgotten work of Proudhon, as well as the writings of English and foreign Anarchist leaders in this country.

THE Hon. E. Lyulph Stanley contributes an article entitled "Are our children being over educated?" to the April number of Cassell's Magazine, which will also contain a paper on "Preparation for the Navy," by Mr. Raymond Blathway in which he describes a visit to H.M.S. Britannia, and the first of a series of articles on "People who face Death."

Good Words for April will contain articles on Tycho Brahe, by Sir Robert Ball; "The City of the White Walls," by the Dean of Gloucester; "Assisted Sight," by Sir Herbert Maxwell; "Dean Stanley," by the Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod; "The Skipper's Bible," by Eden Phillpotts; and "The Love of Christ in the Life to Come," by the Bishop of Winchester.

The Quiver for April will contain a paper entitled "Mr. Moody in his Native Air," with illustrations of his surroundings at Northfield; an article on "Vipers—and Public Opinion," by the Rev. Michael Eastwood; and also contributions from the Bishop of Winchester, Archdeacon Sinclair, A. K. H. B., and Mrs. Weigall.

THE April number of the Sunday Magazine will contain an illustrated interview with the Rev. Dr. Hunter, of Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. J. R. SEELEY, author of The Expansion of England, has been appointed a knight commander of the order of St. Michael and St. George.

WE hear that Prof. Robinson Ellis has chosen as the subject of his inaugural lecture, to be delivered at Oxford next term, "The Fables of Phædrus."

PROF. EDWARD DOWDEN announces a course of six lectures, on "The French Revolution and English Literature," to be delivered by him at Cambridge next term, as Clark lecturer in English literature at Trinity College.

PROF. F. J. SYLVESTER has been elected one of the twelve foreign members of the Italian scientific academy called "Dei Quaranta." The two other English members are Lord Kelvin and Mr. Huxley.

THE University of Aberdeen has conferred the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Dr. Fairbairn, principal of Mansfield College.

EXAMINATIONS for the diploma in agricultural science and practice will be held at Cambridge during the first week of July. The examination, which is open to persons who are not members of the university, will be in two parts: (1) Botany, chemistry, engineering, entomology, geology, physiology, and book-keeping; (2) Agriculture (in part conducted in a farm) and surveying.

DR. DONALD MACALISTER has been appointed Linacre reader in physic at St. John's College, Cambridge, in succession to Dr. Bradbury, the new Downing professor of medicine.

MR. G. M. LANE has resigned the Pope chair of Latin at Harvard, after a service to the college extending over forty-three years. The corporation has voted him a retiring pension of 3000 dollars (£600), with the title of Professor Emeritus. It appears that this is the first pension that has been bestowed at Harvard, though there is now a capital sum of about 280,000 dollars (£54,000) available for the purpose.

MR. HENRY W. SAGE, the benefactor of Cornell University, recently celebrated his eightieth birthday. On this occasion, the board of trustees presented him with a memorial vase of silver; and the museum of classical archaeology, his latest gift to the university, was formally opened. It contains more than 500 casts, and is said to be second only to the collection in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

M. MAX COLLIGNON, the archaeologist, has been elected a member of the Académie des Inscriptions, in succession to the late M. Waddington.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

DECADENCE.

EPIC POET (speaks).

The song of nations and their overthrow,
Of mighty men that drank the earth's new wine
Mingled with tears and blood; that song is mine,
That ancient tale of love and wrath and woe.
The darkness lifts along the battle-line,
And there are lightnings from the upper skies,
And voices of the gods in mortal guise
Speaking with heroes only less divine.

DRAMATIC POET.

Mine is the song of life, the song that stirred
The soul of Athens—down the listless years
For ever falls the singing rain of tears,
Rings the immortal laughter—by my word
I shape the breathing form, the rhythmic heart
Of terror and desire, of love and hate,
The hands that hold, the feet that follow fate.
Then from their busy throng I stand apart,
And 'mid their voices mine is never heard.

IDYLIC POET.

Mine are the songs of sunlight, songs whereof
The chords are delicate colours; as I sing,
I dream and waken, waken, dream, and still
Can hear the footsteps and the voice of love,
Can see the happy shepherd wandering
Along the fields, or sleeping on the hill
At noonday, with the noon's white sky above.

LYRIC POET.

And I would sing of love, of love alone,
For love is loveliest of all things that are,
And songs of love the sweetest of all song,
With many chords and one sweet monotone;
Having known many loves, and seen from far
One love victorious over change and wrong.

DECADENT.

The gods and heroes they are dust, and none
Knoweth their place, and love and light are gone
Where none can follow; they have left behind
For us the wiser heart, the sadder mind;
And we can hear no other voice save one,
Out of the dark, the voice of one who sings
Of life forgotten and of dying things;
Whose song, brought hither by the sorrowing wind,
Enchants the soul of him who listeneth—
So sweetly sing the lips of lyric Death.

MAY SINCLAIR.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for March prints several reports of old date relating to the continuation of the España Sagrada, and the composition of its later volumes. Jimenez de la Llave catalogues the documents in the municipal archives of Talavera, containing papers of great interest, especially concerning the Hermandades; and Vicente de la Fuente examines the smaller archives of Tarazona, Veruela, and other neighbouring towns. In Veruela is a copy of the proceedings in the divorce between Catherine of Aragon and Henry VIII., held at Zaragoza in 1521. Padre Fita has notices of the little-known councils of Palencia (1100) and of Gerona (1101); and, in conjunction with Señor Paz y Espeso, deals with the earliest MSS. in the National Library relating to the monastery of San Millán. García Sanchez of Navarre calls himself King of the Spains (hispaniarum rex) already in 929.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BARAIL, Général du. Mes Souvenirs. T. 1. 1820—1851. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
CHEVILLON, A. Sydney Smith et la renaissance des idées libérales en Angleterre au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
CORNELIS DE WITT, M<sup>me</sup>. Six mois de guerre 1870—71. Lettres et journal. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
HARTUNG, O. Die deutschen Altertümer des Nibelungenliedes u. der Kudrun. Göttingen: Schulze. 9 M.
KNAUTH, P. V. Goethe's Sprache u. Stil im Alter. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 60 Pf.
NAOSADOFF, W. J. Moderne russische Censur u. Presse vor u. hinter den Censur-n. Berlin: Cronbach. 8 M.
RICHSPIN, Jean. Mes Paradis (poésies). Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BACHMANN, P. J. Textus palmarum massoreticus. Pars I. Psalmi i.—xx. Appendix: Fragmentum de psalmis gradualibus aethiopice scriptum. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 8 M.
BACHMANN, J. Alttestamentliche Untersuchungen. 1. Bd. Berlin: Calvary. 4 M.
VETTER, P. Der apokryph. 3. Korintherbrief. Tübingen: Fues. 4 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- FORST, H. Maria Stuart u. der Tod Darnleys. Bonn: Heibicht. 1 M.
FROMONT et MEUNYNEC. Histoire des Canoniers de Lille. Lille: Quarré. 25 fr.
HAUTCOEUR, E. Cartulaire de l'église collégiale de Saint-Pierre de Lille. Lille: Quarré. 30 fr.
JAEGER, J. Beiträge zur Geschichte des Erzstifts Mainz unter Diether v. Isenburg u. Adolf II. v. Nassau. Osnabrück: Schönigh.
MAYR, M. Wolfgang Lazius als Geschichtsschreiber Oesterreichs. Innsbruck: Wagner. 1 M. 80 Pf.
PAFFATAVA, B. Studie üb. den Theilbau in der Landwirtschaft besonders in Dalmatien. Innsbruck: Wagner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
PIEFER, A. Zur Entstehungsgeschichte der ständigen Nuntiaturen. Freiburg-i. B.: Herder. 3 M. 50 Pf.
URKUNDEN u. Actenstücke zur Geschichte d. Kurfürsten Friedrich Wilhelm v. Brandenburg. 15. Bd. Hrg. v. K. Breysig. Berlin: Reimer. 20 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- GLÜCKMANN, J. Kritische Studien im Bereiche der Fundamentalanalyse u. der theoretischen Chemie. 2. Thl. Ueber die Molekularhypothese. Wien: Deuticke. 2 M. 50 Pf.

- KOGANEI. Beiträge zur physischen Anthropologie der Aino. I. Untersuchungen am Skelet. Berlin: Friedländer. 12 M.
RADLOFF, W. Arbeiten der Orchon-Expedition. Atlas der Alterthümer der Mongolei. 2. Lfg. Leipzig: Voss. 24 M.
RETOWSKI, O. Die tithonischen Ablagerungen v. Theodosia. Berlin: Friedländer. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BESCHREIBUNG der Antiken Münzen in den künigl. Museen zu Berlin: 3. Bd. 1. Abth. Italien. Die geprägten Münzen von Etrurien bis Calabrien. Berlin: Spemann. 27 M. 50 Pf.
BUECHNER, W. Ueb. den Aias v. Sophokles. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
KOESTERS, H. Quaestiones metricae et prosodicae ad Valerium Flaccum pertinentes. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
PAPYRUS Erzberg u. Rainer. Wien: Holder. 10 M. 80 Pf.
VISMATRE, Ch. Dictionnaire d'argot, fin de siècle. Paris: Charles. 6 fr.
WINCKLER, H. Altorientalische Forschungen. II. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 6 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TATIAN'S DIATESSARON AND A DUTCH HARMONY.

Christ's College, Cambridge: Feb. 20, 1894.

Dr. Zahn, of Erlangen, who by his indefatigable labours and sober judgments has done more than any other scholar towards the reconstruction of Tatian's Diatessaron, has just published in the Neue Kirchh. Zeitschrift (v. 1), an account of his examination of two Munich MSS., which throw fresh light on the problem of the Latin Tatian, which Victor of Capua found and employed in his famous Codex Fuldensis. One of these is a Latin MS. (of the thirteenth century), in which the Harmony commences with Jn. i. 1, and not as Victor's with Lc. i. 1. The arrangement often differs both from Victor's and from that of the Arabic Tatian, and there are points at which it certainly preserves features of the original Diatessaron which are lost in Victor's Codex. Its text is Hieronymian.

The other MS. is a German Harmony of the fourteenth century, which has hitherto been regarded as ultimately based, like the St. Gall one published by Sievers, on the Codex Fuldensis. Dr. Zahn shows that it has an independent value. It stands nearer to the Codex Fuldensis than does the Latin MS. above mentioned, but it has important differences in which it is supported by the Arabic and Ephrem's Commentary. It opens with Jn. i. 1-5; Lc. i. 5-80; Mt. i. 1-18; i. 18-25; Lc. ii. 1-40. Thus it has not got Lc. i. 1-4, nor the insertion of Lc. iii. 34-37 before Mt. i. 17; both of which are features of Codex Fuldensis.

Last October I examined a MS. in the Cambridge University Library, of which I give the following (abbreviated) description from the Catalogue: Dd. xii. 35. 12mo, parchm., 74 leaves, about cent. xvi. (1) ff. 1 to 59, A Harmony of the Gospels in Dutch. Begins: "In deme beghinne was dat wort. . . ." Ends: ". . . hare warde met nae volghenden teyken. Amen." (2) ff. 60 to 74, Prayers and a Litany also in Dutch.

As I knew that Dr. Zahn was on the track of an earlier Latin form of Tatian, I waited to see whether his Latin MS. might not throw a light on this Dutch Harmony, which, for a person unskilled in the language, is not easy to read. I now find to my surprise that, while it has nothing to do with his Latin Harmony, it tallies exactly with his German one, and ought certainly to be printed simultaneously with that. The German Harmony is suspected by Dr. Zahn of later modifications at certain points—e.g., in the introduction of "Tabor" in Mt. xxviii. 16, and in certain added matter at the close. Both of these modifications are absent from the Dutch Harmony, which may therefore at other points preserve an earlier tradition. Unfortunately the MS. of the Dutch Harmony is imperfect, having lost, as Mr. Bradshaw's pencilled note shows, about five quires in the centre after Lc. vii. 13 and before Jn. x. 22. What remains, however, is no inconsiderable portion of the whole, and certainly deserves attention.

One reading I may note as of special interest. In Mt. i. 25 Ephrem's Commentary gives us as the reading of the Diatessaron, "He dwelt with her in purity until she brought forth the first-born," and this interesting paraphrase of οὐκ ἐμίσηκεν αὐτήν is found also in the Curetonian Syriac; but no further evidence of it is cited. The Dutch Harmony has "En hielt si in hoede bis sighebar erē eerste ghebarē son," i.e., "and he kept her in watch (or care, or safety: German hut) until," &c. This may be the independent paraphrase of a translator; but it may be a modified survival of the reading of the Diatessaron. It would be interesting to learn what the German Harmony has at this point.

J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON.

P.S. (March 8).—Since I wrote the above, my attention has been called by the Master of Clare College to another Dutch Harmony, published by G. J. Meijer in 1835, under the title "Het Leven van Jezus." This has very much in common with the MS. of which I have spoken. It appears to me to be an independent translation of the same Latin Harmony, with various modifications and glosses introduced by the translator, who justifies this mode of treatment in his preface. Mt. i. 25, where the interesting reading above mentioned occurs, is entirely omitted, perhaps from a sense that something was wrong with the text. But I have observed two readings of exceptional interest. At Lc. i. 27, we read, "Dese man en dese magt waren beide van Davids gheslechte." That a sentence to this effect occurred in the Diatessaron is made certain by Ephr. Comm. in Diat. 16 (Moes.), where we have, "Concerning Joseph and Mary, that they were both of the house of David." Compare Aphrahat, p. 472, l. 20 (Wright), p. 388 (Bert's translation): "As it is written that Joseph and Mary, his wife, were both of the house of David." And in Ephrem's Commentary on the Pauline Epistles, 2 Tim. ii. 8 (p. 260 of the new Latin translation): "Either that which is said concerning Mary and Joseph, that they were both of the house of David." It seems scarcely likely that the appearance of these words in the Dutch harmony is due to the gloss of the Dutch translator. The MS. Harmony has the ordinary reading here.

Again, in Mc. x. 21 Ephrem, Comm. 171-173, quotes more than once the words, "He looked on him with love," and this reading (instead of "beholding him loved him") has also the support of Aphrahat. In Meijer's Harmony at p. 129 we read, "Doe sach Ihe liefec op hem." It is hard to believe that this is merely accidental coincidence. The MS. Harmony is defective at this point.

I have said enough to show that these various relics of the Latin form of Tatian deserve fuller investigation. Such an investigation should not lose sight of Clement of Llanthony's Harmony, of which there is one MS. in the University Library and another in Pembroke College Library. It is probable that Clement based his work on this older Latin Tatian, though he has changed the order a good deal, and elaborated the details throughout with extraordinary minuteness, so as to show to which Evangelist every word belongs.

J. A. R.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "BURLY."

Cambridge: March 15, 1894.

The etymology of the English adjective "burly" is unknown. In the New English Dictionary, Dr. Murray practically gives it up, remarking that "no plausible etymon for the first element has yet been found." However, he identifies it with the provincial English "bowerly," which is duly explained.

Here, then, is the solution. It is merely a compound of "bower," with the suffix -ly, as I now proceed to explain. The Anglo-Saxon form of "bower" was būr. If the long u be retained, the modern English form comes out as "bowerly," thus accounting for one of the forms. But it frequently happened that the long u was shortened by accentual stress or by a double consonant following. Examples are seen in "Thursday," "southern," "hustings," "dust," "rust," "husband," "thumb," "utter" (as a comparative adjective), "busk" (to get oneself ready). In all these cases the original vowel was long u; whereas the modern sound is the modern short unrounded u. Hence the Anglo-Saxon form **būrlic* would produce "burly," with vowel-shortening, with perfect regularity. And inasmuch as the said Anglo-Saxon form would thus produce both the modern forms, it is obvious that there is a strong probability that we are here on the right track.

But Dr. Murray rightly draws attention to the Middle English borli, and says that it is difficult to reconcile this with the modern forms. This is true; but the difficulty is not great. It all arises from the well-known habit of the Anglo-French scribes, who used the symbol o to denote the short u; and who thus introduced an element of great confusion, which, in a dozen cases or more, is extremely puzzling. Dr. Sweet has pointed out how commonly this occurs when the short u adjoins m or n; so that, to this day, instead of writing munk, huney, wunder, tung, we all have to write "monk," "honey," "wonder," and "tongue," though the symbol o never indicated a short o at any time in the history of these words.

Now the same scribes frequently did the very same thing when short u occurred before r. Examples will be found in Stratmann, where the forms forther, corsen, torf, scorf, spornen, tornen, tortel correspond, as a matter of course, to the modern "further," "course," "turf," "scurf," "spurn," "turn," "turtle." Hence the Middle English forms of "burly" should be burli and borli; or, if the u be long, bourli. These forms, burli, borli, and bourli, are precisely the forms that are found. This is a further indication that we are on the right track; and I thus establish my first thesis—viz., that the supposed Anglo-Saxon **būrlic* gives an etymology which satisfies all phonetic requirements.

But how about the sense? Here, again, I see no great difficulty. A bower (see New English Dictionary) was, usually, a lady's chamber or private apartment; and "bowerly," or "burly," meant, originally, suitable for such an apartment: cf. "homely." King Solomon was, we read "a borli [v.r. burli] bachelere," i.e. a bachelor suitable for a lady's bower, a handsome, presentable man. In the Morte Arthure we find that some one is to "greet well the queen and all the burly birds (handsome ladies) that belong to her bower." Can anything be more suitable?

In Rauf Coilyear, there is a most telling quotation. We there read of "a burly bed," i.e., a bed suitable for a lady's bed-room. Once more, I ask, can anything be more suitable?

The various developments really present no great difficulty. The modern "bowerly" is well defined as meaning "stately and comely." Such a woman adorns her own boudoir. A knight is "burly," if he is handsome, presentable, young, strong, valiant, goodly, comely, noble, and the like. The sense, like that of "stout," easily degenerates into large and corpulent. I need not enlarge upon this, as I believe there is nothing that a careful man cannot easily work out for himself, from the hints that I have given.

The fact is that Dr. Murray had not all the evidence before him. There is more to be got under the form "unburly," which is, in fact, the word that gave me the clue. In Rauf Coilyear (l. 807) we read of a knight riding on a camel, which is described as being "unburly, broad, and over high." Here "unburly" actually seems to mean "small," whereas this huge creature was "broad and over high." Yet he was "unburly" enough, being ugly, unhandsome, and unrepresentable; not at all the creature suitable for a lady's bower. When all the quotations for "unburly" are duly worked out, I think the last difficulty in the way of the proposed etymology will disappear.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

MR. SLATER'S "EARLY EDITIONS."

Dundee: March 3, 1894.

There must be a general feeling of disappointment with this book, more especially as book-collectors—amateur and professional—looked for a work of real value from one whose reputation stands so high as an authority on the auction value of books. The author admits that he is not himself a collector, but a fair inference from the whole is that he intended his book to be a guide to collectors. He, in many instances, gives elaborate descriptions of the outsides, and minute collations of the insides, which go to support this inference. But if this work was worth doing, it was worth doing well; and it is on the crucial test of accuracy that the value of his work will stand or fall. I do not profess to have examined every chapter, but I have "sampled" it sufficiently to come to a very decided opinion as to its value to book-collectors, and I propose to give a few "samples." It is, perhaps, another fair inference that Mr. Slater has got a great amount of his data at second-hand: not being a collector, he has been indebted to others for his information, and not being able, of his own knowledge, to check this information, he has committed himself to statements, many of which will not bear examination.

Taking the chapter which deals with the writings of Mr. Andrew Lang, we soon come to this sentence (p. 151): "Another introductory essay, from Bolland and Lang's Politics, appears in the edition of the Politics of Aristotle, published by Longmans in 1886." As it stands, this reads very like nonsense, although the "Lang" collector may surmise that it is a distorted reference to the separate publication, in 1886, of Mr. Lang's Introductory Essay which first appeared in "Bolland and Lang's Aristotle" (1877). The same sentence continues "and in 1879 Messrs. S. H. Butcher and Andrew Lang translated [rather, published their translation of] the 'Odyssey' another edition of which appeared in 1887." The novice would not learn from such a statement that "another edition" was really the seventh of a deservedly successful book.

Coming now to the detailed list:

(No. 1) Ballads and Lyrics is described as "bound in white parchment"; while in the next paragraph "good copies in the original cloth" serves but to puzzle the reader, who, however, may safely decide to look for cloth. The pagination also is slightly incorrect.

(No. 2) Oxford. "Value about £4" can have reference only to large-paper copies, though Mr. Slater leaves the point in doubt. The same remark applies to the 1889 edition of Theocritus (No. 3).

(No. 7) The Library. "Those [illustrations] of bindings are printed in colours in the large paper copies"—and in the small paper copies as well.

(No. 12) Ballades and Verses Vain. This being a New York publication and therefore not often met with in this country, it was right to give a description of it, provided it were a correct description. Unfortunately such is not the case. The pagination is given as "3-165" while even page 1 is numbered in the book. Where Mr. Slater says "from verses previously unprinted and not collated" [whatever that may mean], the book says "from verses previously imprinted or not collected"—a very different thing. Again, "after title follows 'Table of Contents' (on four un-numbered pages)" is inaccurate in two respects "Contents" (not 'Table of') appears on p. iii. and the other three pages are duly numbered iv.-vi.

In passing over (No. 15) The Mark of Cain, it is enough to remark that large paper copies were published at 5s. each, not 1s. 6d.

(No. 16) Lines on the Inaugural Meeting of the Shelley Society. In reading the minute collation of this pamphlet, one wonders whence Mr. Slater got it. There were only thirty copies printed (this information is not given), and it is therefore very unlikely that the copies differed from one another to the extent that Mr. Slater's differs from the copy before me. He says it is "stitched in green paper wrappers"; my copy is in original boards of a pale blue colour. From the two collations following it may be inferred that some one has blundered, or that, both being correct, Mr. Slater's is not a sure guide:—

Mr. Slater's.	Mine.
Blank leaf.	Flyleaf, blank.
Blank leaf.	1st page, "The Shelley Society" half-title.
Title.	2nd ,, blank.
Half-title.	3rd ,, blank.
Second half-title.	4th ,, certificate of copies printed.
Prefatory note ix. x.	5th ,, title-page.
Third half - title	6th ,, blank.
("Lines").
Text, pp. 13-19.	7th ,, "Prefatory note" half-title.
	8th ,, blank.
	9th and 10th pp., Prefatory note.
	11th page, "Lines" half-title.
	12th ,, blank.
	13th-19th pp., The Shelley Society.

After which the collation is fairly correct. It may be urged that all this is of no importance, and perhaps it is not; but as Mr. Slater has taken the trouble to print his collation, it is to be presumed he thought it worth while to do so.

In leaving the chapter on Mr. Lang's books I have to say, deliberately, that it positively bristles with errors and misstatements, and is nearly worthless as a guide to collectors. Mr. Slater is apparently ignorant of Mr. Lang's introuvables, a list of which would have been a real gain to the volume.

Dipping now into the Thackeray chapter, we come to No. 38, "Thackerayana" (p. 333), and read, "This work . . . was suppressed as infringing copyright in certain particulars, and, though issued with alterations, no variation is observable in the title-page." Having a genuine copy of each issue (1874 and 1875) before me, I notice at once—

- (a) "Notes & Anecdotes." (b) "Notes and Anecdotes"
 (a) "Illustrated by nearly Six Hundred Sketches" (b) "Illustrated by Hundreds of Sketches"
 (a) "Chatto and Windus" (b) "Chatto & Windus" besides which the careful collator would "note" seven punctuations more in the (b) than in the (a).

The note to No. 36 (The Student's Quarter), p. 332, does not show much knowledge of Thackeray's works: "Published in cloth, . . . with coloured illustrations, but whether by Thackeray or not is uncertain." If the writer had turned up his (b) "Thackerayana," he would probably have found that the illustrations in both books were identical, and that they are "signed" by the well-known "Spec-tacles." At any rate, they are so in the copies before me.

C. M. FALCONER.

[If it be thought that Mr. Falconer's notes relate only to the "mint, anise, and cummin" of bibliography, we venture to append two blunders in the book in question which seem to show real ignorance of literary history.

(1) Of Rossetti's Poems Mr. Slater writes (p. 218):—

"In 1881 a third edition of these poems appeared, the contents being almost, though not quite, the same as those of the edition of 1870. A few poems were omitted; and one or two others added."

The truth is: that from the new (not third) edition of 1881 were omitted, not only the entire sonnet-sequence entitled "The House of Life"—No. V. of which has never been reprinted, at least in this country—but also seven sonnets in the closing section; while, on the other hand, there were added "The Bride's Prelude"—extending to fifty-seven pages—three other poems in the first section, and three translations from the Italian; and, moreover, the entire contents were re-arranged in a manner most confusing for comparison. The broad facts are stated in the Advertisement to the new edition, though it is there implied that all the sonnets of "The House of Life" reappeared in the contemporaneous volume of Ballads and Sonnets.

(2) With regard to the famous first series of Swinburne's Poems and Ballads, Mr. Slater tells us (p. 292) that "it was suppressed by the author." Is it necessary to say that, on the withdrawal of this book by Moxon, it was immediately re-issued in the same style by John Camden Hotten, with no other change than the correction of a Greek misprint?

The entire treatment of Tennyson is grossly inadequate. We must be content to mention (on the authority of the New York Critic) that the original MS. of Poems by Two Brothers has already returned to this country.—J. S. C.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

THURSDAY, March 29, 8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Discussion, "Parallel Working through Long Lines," by Mr. W. M. Mordey; "A Universal Shunt Box for Galvanometers," "Transparent Conducting Screens for Electric and other Apparatus," and "An Astatic Station Voltmeter," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton and Mr. T. Mather; "The Best Resistance for the Receiving Instrument with a Leaky Telegraph Line," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton and Mr. C. S. Whitehead.

FRIDAY, March 30, 8 p.m. Amateur Scientific: "The Ascent of Water in Trees," by Mr. L. A. Boodle; "The Occurrence of Gold in Eruptive Rocks from South Africa," by Mr. G. Holbrook; "Some Facts about Parasitism and kindred Phenomena in Plants," by Mr. J. Reeves.

SATURDAY, March 31, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Yoruba-Speaking Peoples of the Slave Coast of West Africa. By Col. A. B. Ellis. (Chapman & Hall.)

No writer has done better work in the field of African ethnology than Col. Ellis, whose brief but brilliant military and literary career was abruptly terminated at Tenerife on March 5 of the present year. He had been removed to this place after his successful expedition against the Sofas, of whom so much has been heard of late, in the hope that the change might enable him to recover from the fever contracted during that arduous campaign. But the disease could not be shaken off by a constitution debilitated by some years of active service in the enervating climate of West Africa; and by the death of Col. Ellis, still in the prime of life, England loses a valiant and skilful captain, and anthropological science one of its ablest exponents in recent times.

Of his numerous writings—West African Sketches, South African Sketches, The Land of Fetish, West African Islands, History of the First West India Regiment, History of the Gold Coast, The Tshi-Speaking Peoples of the Gold Coast, The Ehwe-Speaking Peoples of the Slave Coast, The Yoruba-Speaking Peoples of the Slave Coast—the last three are by far the most important, entitling the author to rank among those rare students of primitive man, such as Logan, Bleek, Dalton, Bastian, im Thurn, Schweinfurth, Junker, whose writings, based on original observation, have thrown real light on the beginnings and growth of human culture. These three works, one of which, The Tshi-Speaking Peoples, was somewhat fully noticed in the ACADEMY of January 28, 1888, form a sort of trilogy, in which the three great ethnical groups of Upper Guinea serve as the theme of so many object lessons on the origin and development of religious and social institutions among some of the most typical members of the negro race. The lessons in this instance are all the more instructive that the three groups themselves—Ashanti and others of Tshi speech, Dahomeans of Ehwe speech, and Egbas and others of Yoruba speech—undoubtedly spring from a common stock, and speak languages belonging to the same linguistic family; while all three represent different stages of culture, progressively advancing from the rude Ashantis in the west, through the somewhat less barbarous Dahomeans in the centre, to the relatively semi-civilised Yorubas in the east. Their comparative study thus affords an excellent opportunity, of which the author takes full advantage, to study the lines that religion and society may take in their upward development.

The general conclusions are singularly instructive, and are on the whole in accord with those that other observers have arrived at, especially as regards the origin and growth of religious beliefs, and the constitution of the social community in its evolution from the clan through the tribe to the nation. Thus Col. Ellis, like Mr. im Thurn, traces to the influence of dreams the first notions of primitive man on spirit life, immortality, and cloud-land beyond the grave. In the first stage, as among the peoples of Tshi speech, all nature is believed to be animated: every conspicuous object in the environment has its indwelling spirit, analogous to the indwelling spirit of man himself, the existence of which is proved to the savage mind by the fact that during sleep it wanders from the body to great distances, passes through many adventures, and for the time being lives a life apart. But some of the objects, such as the thunder-storm, the sea, the rapids, sharks, crocodiles, are dangerous and destructive, while others are harmless; consequently, the indwelling spirits of the former are to be dreaded as more powerful than that of man, and must be propitiated by acceptable offerings. These spirits, begotten of fear, thus take high rank, and with them are associated those of the departed who were also powerful and dangerous in life. Thus arise nature-worship and ancestry worship, the lines between which it is often difficult to draw, for both have had a common origin.

Then comes the next stage, transitional in Ehwe-land, more fully developed in Yorubaland, in which the indwelling spirit, for the convenience of worship, becomes embodied in an image or simulacrum, whereby the tie is weakened between the god and the object he animates. The object itself falls more and more into the background, and the personality of the god becomes more pronounced, as the image, made of the material obtained from his habitat, is moved about, set up in the public place, enshrined in an enclosure, tended by special ministers. Thus arise temples, priests, regular sacrifices, and ceremonial rites.

Then the time comes when, as already for the most part in Yorubaland, the original nature of the god, as an indwelling spirit of a natural object, or as the spirit of some formerly dreaded chief, is entirely forgotten, and he becomes a god pure and simple: that is, an abstraction associated with myths and legendary lore.

"Let us imagine that the inhabitants of a village who have been in the habit of worshipping the indwelling spirit of a precipitous cliff in the neighbourhood, find it more convenient if they were to bring him into the village. They accordingly make a figure of clay taken from the cliff, and set it up in the village in a miniature hut erected for its protection. This hut then becomes the sacred place, as the sacrifices and sacred dances are performed before it, instead of, as heretofore, at the cliff. Generations are born and die, and are succeeded by others, all of which have been accustomed to perform religious ceremonies before the miniature hut; and the inevitable result is that, sooner or later, the connexion of the god with the cliff, of which he was the animating principle, is completely lost sight of, and he is regarded as the tutelar deity of the village, pure and simple" (Yoruba, p. 280).

Thus we see how the religions of primitive man are not degraded forms of a higher revelation, but upward growths which gradually acquire the sanction of such a revelation, partly through fraud, partly through the mystic element inherent in human nature. It is also seen that these religions arise out of the whole complexity of man and his surroundings, and not merely through a solar myth, or through a few forgotten etymologies, all necessarily later developments.

Equally instructive are the remarks on kinship, inheritance through the female and male lines, matriarchal and patriarchal institutions, origin and evolution of the clan system, and its final fusion through the tribe in the nation. Here also the progress has been from west to east; and while the clan, based on uterine ties and descent through the mother, still persists in the Tshi, and to some extent in the Ehwe group, inheritance through the father, with a corresponding expansion of the tribe, already prevails among the Yoruba peoples.

"Among the Yoruba tribes the blood-tie between father and child has been recognised; and the result of this recognition has been the inevitable downfall of the clan-system, which is only possible so long as descent is traced solely on one side of the house, as may be readily shown. Since two persons of the same clan-name may, under the clan-system, never marry, it follows that husband and wife must be of different clans. Let us say that one is a Dog and the other a Leopard. The clan-name is extended to all who are of the same blood; therefore, directly the blood-relationship between father and child comes to be acknowledged, the children of such a pair as we have supposed, instead of being, as heretofore, simply Leopards, would be Dog-Leopards, and would belong to two clans. They in their turn might marry with persons similarly belonging to two clans, say Cat-Snakes, and the offspring of these unions would belong to four clans. The clan-system thus becomes altogether unworkable, because, as the number of clans is limited and cannot be added to, if the clan-name still remained the test of blood-relationship and a bar to marriage, the result in a few generations would be that no marriage would be possible. Consequently, the clan-name ceases to be the test of consanguinity, kinship is traced in some other way, and the clan-system disappears. The Yorubas have adopted what appears to have been the usual course, and blood-relationship is now traced both on the father's and on the mother's side as far as it can be remembered, and marriage within the known circle of consanguinity is forbidden" (Yoruba, p. 176).

There is a great deal of linguistic matter in this series, but by a regrettable oversight much of this will be of little use to the philologist. The languages of all the groups under consideration are largely monosyllabic, most words being in fact reducible to a limited number of primitive verbal monosyllables, answering to the "roots" of Sanskrit grammarians, and by the author regarded as such. But so far from being roots in the sense implied, these monosyllables are the outcome of profound phonetic decay, as is evident from the large number of homonyms distinguished in the spoken language by their proper intonation. In fact, the Upper Guinea, like the Indo-Chinese and for the same reason, are strictly toned languages, in which the tonic element is of primary importance, and should be indicated by diacritical marks of some kind. Unfortunately, little attention has been paid to this essential feature, and no attempt at all has been made to distinguish the tones, of which there are at least four, probably more. Thus, in the list of Yoruba verbal monosyllables, ro has six entries, to which are assigned about a dozen different meanings (to excite, sound, toll, wrong, drip, write, crash, rain, &c.), but not a single discriminating mark of any kind. Apart from this serious drawback, the grammatical data will be found useful in comparing the Upper Guinea languages with those of the surrounding Sudanese populations. There are also collections of Yoruba proverbs and folk-lore, some of which betray a considerable degree of natural shrewdness.

A. H. KEANE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

WE have received the first number of Science Progress: a monthly review of current scientific investigation, which is published by the Scientific Press, at 428, Strand. It opens with a characteristic article, by Prof. Fitzgerald, of Dublin, indicating the directions in which the future advance of physics may be expected to throw light upon the problems of other sciences. Mr. W. J. Rodger states the new theory of solutions, or osmotic pressure, founded by Van 't Hoff. Next follows a more popular article, by Mr. W. Botting Helmsley, of Kew, summarising the latest facts with regard to insular floras. Very interesting is his account of the new flora that grew up on Krakatoa within three years after the eruption, and the statement that the flora of Ceylon exhibits much stronger Malayan affinities than that of the Indian peninsula. Mr. A. C. Seward, of St. John's, Cambridge, summarises in a similar way the latest discoveries of fossil plants, in support of the importance of palaeo-botany. Dr. G. A. Buckmaster, of St. George's Hospital, writes on the origin and nature of certain bacterial poisons. In the next article, which is perhaps the most striking of all, Prof. Howes, of the Royal College of Science, emphasises the reaction against the excessive importance attached but a little while ago to comparative embryology, and points out how promising is the outlook of vertebrate morphology on the old lines. (We may remark, however, that the last term we should ourselves have thought of applying to the mammalian remains lately discovered in America is that of "a galaxy"). Finally, Prof. Haliburton, of King's College, summarises recent research on chemical physiology, or physiological chemistry.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE March number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) opens with an article by the Headmaster of Westminster, entitled "A New Fount of Greek Type." No one will deny the exceeding ugliness of the Greek type almost universally used in England at the present day, about whose pedigree we should like more information. Is it true that it represents the handwriting of Porson, as the Aldine type represented that of the fugitives from Byzantium? Mr. Rutherford speaks well of the Greek type used in Holland; we have ourselves been better pleased with some of the many varieties used in Greece itself. But Mr. Rutherford's chief object is to introduce an entirely new fount, which has been specially designed for his forthcoming edition of the Scholia of Aristophanes. The designer is Mr. Selwyn Image, of the Century Guild Hobby Horse, who has based himself on the square semi-uncial calligraphy of the tenth century. As an artistic experiment, it is very interesting; but we must suspend our judgment, before recommending universal adoption. We are again struck by the large proportion of theological matter in the Classical Review. Dr. Edwin A. Abbott contends that the verse—"Forty-and-six years was this temple in building" (John ii. 20)—refers not to the temple of Herod, but to that of Ezra; Mr. E. N. Bennett reviews the "Apocrypha Anecdota" of Mr. James, specially referring to the passage in the Acta Philippi, which seems to throw light on the talking cross in the Gospel of Peter; and Mr. A. Robertson draws attention to the Studies of Dr. Loofs on the so-called "Sacra Parallela." In philology proper, Mr. G. Dunn propounds an original explanation of the long sonants; Prof. A. N. Jannaris shows that νερό, the modern Greek word for "water," is simply a phonetic modification of νεαρόν = "fresh"; and Mr. W. R. Paton, writing from Asia Minor, suggests why classical πηγή = a spring has come to mean a "well," in its modern form of πηγάδι. Under archaeology, there are three articles: Mr. W. E. Heitland argues, against Diodorus and Freeman, that the city quarter of Syracuse, known as Tyche, did not exist before the Athenian siege; Mr. Edward Capps, of Chicago, criticises a German treatise on the vexed question of the early Greek stage; and Mr. Cecil Smith reviews an important work by Hartwig on Greek vases, with special reference to the evidence afforded by the names of the painters and the use of the word καλός.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Feb. 24)

MISS LOUISA MARY DAVIES, president, in the chair.—Mr. Arthur S. Way read a paper on "The Sacred Drama in England." Amid all the dispraise so often heaped upon the medieval monkish orders, it is well to remember that they were not so far aloof from the world as to disregard the spiritual darkness of the common folk, or so lacking in worldly wisdom as to miss the most effective method of communicating such light as they possessed. In an age when books were, for the general public, practically non-existent, when the speech of the common people was a jargon strange to consecrated lips, and the universal language of the clergy was an unknown tongue to their flocks, there was a real danger that the communication of religious instruction might be regarded as impracticable; and it speaks well for the inventiveness and enterprise of the good fathers that they devised and elaborated a method of imparting spiritual enlightenment which made the average artisan of the middle ages more familiar with Biblical incidents and personages than are thousands of working-men in this nineteenth century. The miracle plays date back to within a few years of the Norman Conquest. These representations, which were multiplied fast during the succeeding hundred years, were at first confined to the inside of the churches, and seem to have been adjuncts to the service of the liturgy. The Nativity, the Passion, the Resurrection, were thus as tableaux vivants made real to the perceptions of the worshippers. Then in the churchyard, afterwards in the street, lastly in the town-meadows, the scaffolding was set up for the unfolding of the ecclesiastical pageants. The dialogue was at first in Latin, with an occasional refrain in the vernacular. Preliminary and concurrent explanations were given by the "Expositor," which, with the action and gestures of the performers, made it all at least as intelligible to our unlettered ancestors as are the Greek and Latin plays at our universities and public schools, at which throngs of gentle ladies and honest citizens are now wont to be present, with much apparent appreciation, not to say edification. Early in the fourteenth century, the miracle plays were commonly represented to the people in their own tongue. Then the representations passed out of the hands of the clergy, though the plays were doubtless still composed by monkish scribes. The trade guilds of the large towns had taken them up, and exerted themselves to the utmost to produce them with a magnificence which had the effect of attracting the country-folk, labourers, yeomen, and gentry from around by thousands, so that the city of the celebration became a huge fair. To obviate inconvenient crowding of the spectators, the pageant was performed in travelling sections, the triple stages representing Heaven, Earth, and Hell, mounted on wheels, following each other round the town, and stopping at definite points for the performance. No expense was spared: guild vied with guild in the magnificence, the upholstery, the decoration, the costuming of the special pageant allotted to it. As for the dialogue, it was by no means so crude and bald as might be hastily inferred by the ordinary reader of the literary history of those primitive times. The composers recognised—made it a cardinal principle, we might say—that the audience must be interested and amused. Solemn as were the themes, neither sacred actors nor profane beholders would accept any necessary affinity between solemnity and boredom. The childish and straightforward art of those old monkish dramatists felt no repugnance in following with strict literal accuracy every circumstance, recorded or inferred, of the original narrative which they dramatised; and the simple faith of their audience saw no impropriety in the introduction of the most sacred or awful supernatural beings. The drama, generally written in octo-syllabic verse (especially affecting the metre of Chaucer's Rime of Sir Thopas), though abounding in anachronisms and absurdities both of character and dialogue, sometimes contains passages of simple and natural pathos, sometimes scenes which must have affected the uncritical beholders with high-wrought reverence and awe, or with the deepest horror; and, on the other hand, they are often relieved by bursts of the broadest comedy. Of the three elements of dramatic success—brilliant staging, spirited acting, and effective diction—we have seen that the first was amply secured. Of the second, we have evidence in Chaucer and other writers that the actors performed their parts con amore. As for the diction of the plays, if we were to say that much of it compares favourably with a great deal that seems to go down with modern audiences, we should be well within bounds. It is, of course, archaic and rude in versification; yet as a vehicle for the vigorous homespun wit, the simple pathos, the insight into human nature, the keen appreciation of what will tickle the audience, it is marvellously good. There is a swing and go, a perception of melody, a lavish richness of rhyme in the short, swiftly-rushing lines, which recalls the best work of Skelton, and the effect of which can be realised by one who calls to mind the immense success attained through precisely similar metrical effects in the "Gilbert comic operas" of to-day. That our forefathers took all these representations in serious good faith is evidenced by the manifest traces of them in medieval literature and art. Symonds has pointed out that the miracle plays provided in some sense an education for the Elizabethan dramatists and their audiences; it is, however, somewhat remarkable that so few attempts were made to re-cast the old themes in the new moulds. Greene's "Looking Glass for London and England" (a dramatization of the story of Jonah) and Peele's "David and Bethsabe," seem to be, if not the only specimens of Elizabethan sacred drama, at least all that have escaped the limbo of oblivion. Peele's is by far superior to the other, and perhaps superior to the rest of Peele's work. Yet it cannot be claimed that his success was such as to encourage others to essay a similar task. To treat such a subject adequately, so that, while dramatic interest is maintained, the reader should not be struck with the falling off from the simplicity and majesty of the Scripture narrative, would require high poetic genius, a mind saturated with the spirit of the psalmists and prophets, and a reverent touch like that of Milton. Peele possessed none of these; his work was a mere literary essay, embellished with glowing description, fanciful images, and turgid declamation; but no character really lives, unless, by a paradox, we except that of Absalom when he dies. Peele made no second attempt, nor does it seem that any of his contemporaries tried their hands at a similar theme. From what had seemed so easy to a host of authors during the pre-Reformation period, the contemporaries of Shakspeare shrank as from a hopeless task. The very cause which might have been expected to kindle them to the task, acted as a deterrent; for it had created, what previously had no existence—a critical audience, an audience whom no faults in treatment, no errors of taste in this special department of literature, would escape, and whose criticism would probably have taken a merciless practical form. And, owing to the popularity of the recently issued translation of the Bible, the dramatist could in the matter of religious instruction impart nothing to an audience saturated with Biblical lore; and his resources of diction would be severely strained to improve upon the habitual speech, the natural language of devotion and of high-wrought feeling, of many of those who might be present. Before the splendour of the risen sun, the flickering lamps of miracle play and morality straightway died down, and the poets felt how futile would be the attempt to kindle new torches. Both on literary and on ethical grounds a revival of the sacred drama was impossible. On literary grounds; for to recreate the characters of sacred story, in all the depth and earnestness of their humanity, in all the height of their heroism and their sanctity, to set forth worthily the truly human in their weakness, the divine in their upward strivings, and at the same time to endue them with such sublime simplicity of speech, such unearthly music of utterance, as should not seem incongruous with the model that was now in all men's hands, should not make a discord with the harmonies that now rang in all men's ears, was a task from which a Shakspeare or a Milton might well have shrunk. It was impossible on ethical grounds; for the people were so impressed with the loftiness of the sacred ideals, the priests were so jealous of profane hands touching the ark, the whole surroundings and associations of the new theatre were so out of keeping in the eyes at least of the more serious part of the community, that the attempt would to many have seemed like desecration. At the best it would only have been tolerated, and would have been felt to be superfluous. The nation was teaching itself, and had, moreover, no lack of spiritual guides; and the dramatists, with true literary and ethical instinct, turned to themes to which mortals might hope to do justice, to fields where their presence would be unchallenged. It was a hundred years before Milton essayed to walk in that charmed circle. In majesty and melody of utterance, in reverence of spirit, in saintliness of soul, he was qualified for the mighty venture; but in the dramatic instinct, the unerring touch which can make the past live again, in the clear vision which "sees life steadily and sees it whole," he was deficient. His "Paradise Lost" is like a glorified, etherealised, miracle play; but since Satan is its hero, and our first parents shadowy puppets by comparison, since Hell is made the scene of greatness in calmity, and the war in Heaven a burlesque, we cannot regard it as a solution of the problem. Nor was "Samson Agonistes" calculated to inaugurate a sacred drama. It reads like a transcript from Euripides; it is a noble copy from the antique, it reminds us of the statue of Jupiter Olympus which medieval piety renamed Peter the Apostle; it is a sacred poem, but not a play; not the morning star of a new day for the drama, but rather a Hesperus reflecting the light of a long-set sun. Milton failed and Shakspeare stood aloof; and till a poet shall arise who combines the gifts of Shakspeare and Milton, we are not likely to see a sacred drama at once worthy of its origin and commensurate with our preconceptions of the necessary conditions. Should the Titan appear, it will be but a transient glory, for he could not found a "school."—Mr. Leo H. Grindon, in a paper which dealt with the figurative language and the botanical allusions in "David and Bethsabe," said that figures different from those of our ordinary colloquial speech are exceedingly rare in the drama, and that the botanical allusions consist only of citations or adaptations of a few Old Testament trees—the cedar, the olive, the almond, the oak, and the mulberry. "Oak" ought to be "terebinth," the Hebrew being elah, not allon; and "mulberry" ought to be "poplars," the Hebrew being békham.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—(Monday, March 19.)

SIR G. G. STOKES, president, in the chair.—A paper by Dr. Prestwich, on "A Possible Cause for the Origin of the Tradition of the Flood," was read by Prof. Rupert Jones. The paper described at considerable length the various phenomena which came under the author's observation during long years of geological research throughout Europe and the coasts of the Mediterranean. He concluded by giving the reasons why he considered that these were only explicable upon the hypothesis of a widespread and short submergence of continental dimensions, followed by early re-elevation; and this hypothesis satisfied all the important conditions of the problem. The age of man was held to be divided into palaeolithic and neolithic, and he considered rightly so. He concluded by saying that thus there seemed cause for the origin of the widespread tradition of a flood.—A communication was also read from Sir W. Dawson, who welcomed the paper as confirming his conclusion, come to on geological and palaeontological grounds, as to a physical break in the anthropic age. The evidence for this was afforded by the cave remains and from a vast number of other sources.—A discussion ensued, in which Dr. Woodward, Prof. T. R. Jones, Prof. T. McK. Hughes, Dr. E. Hull, and Sir Henry Howarth took part.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS.

THIS year the society of original engravers, known at present under the name which heads my notice, opens an exhibition large, creditable, and sufficiently varied. The show, besides including a great array of interesting work wrought with the etching needle and aqua fortis, permits to us the sight of here and there an aquatint, here and there a mezzotint, here and there an original engraving in line, such as those wonderful book-plates by Mr. Sherborn, whose praises I have been sounding these many years, by reason of the fact that not only is the technical quality of his work unique, but his taste in design of the finest. Lithography alone has now to be added to the possible exhibits of the society, for it to include substantially every form of autographic art that is dependent upon the printer—dependent upon him, I mean, not only for its multiplication and diffusion, but for its very existence in the completed phase in we can recognise and enjoy it. For until the printer has come upon the scene—the man with the printing-press, that is, whether he be the servant of the artist or the artist himself—neither line-engraving, etching, aquatint, mezzotint, or lithograph can reach the point at which it fittingly engages the attention of the amateur. This thing at least they have in common, all these different and so interesting arts.

It would be unreasonable, perhaps, to expect that every year the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers should distinguish itself by the revelation of some new and striking talent: enough if but occasionally it presents to us the work of some new artist of skill. We count more regularly upon noting a progress in the work of men whose names are already familiar to the students of their art. Of English exhibitors, perhaps Mr. Oliver Hall is the etcher whose progress is this year most visible, though Mr. D. J. Cameron (hitherto, indeed, industrious and careful, but somewhat imitative) runs him hard; while, among the few foreigners who send, M. Helleu makes himself remarked and most justly admired. Mr. Hall's prints (which, albeit independent in detail, owe something, one supposes, in their general effect to a study of Mr. Seymour Haden) deal in the main with the ordinary rural landscape of England. Most of his subjects might have been discovered within twenty-five miles of the capital, in a broad belt, just beyond the limit that is known as "Greater London." A heath, perhaps, for it is heath rather than moor, and suggests a home county rather than Yorkshire or Wales: Surrey is probably the scene of it. An "Edge of the Forest": Surrey too, most probably, or is he this time as far a-field as Hants? a road, a group of trees, such trees as bow in westerly winds over the modest uplands of Redhill or Hendon. The feeling of that uneventful country, with something of its accidents of weather, with the passage over it of shower and gust—that Mr. Hall skilfully and freely conveys. And when by chance he addresses himself to something seen in more remote wandering in excursions to Conistow, or to the little land on whose "bravery" it was so often Mr. Gladstone's pleasure to insist, the result, so far as I know, is not the exhibition of any new phase of his talent. Mr. Cameron's important landscape, in which I note an effort more sustained and independent than any he has hitherto made, is a view of Haarlem and its outskirts. You stand away from the town, a great windmill is to your left; the middle distance, and the distance also, is filled, plane beyond plane, by house and tower. Not the scene only—something, at least, in its sentiment—recalls now the art of Ruysdael in its least romantic mood, and now the art of De Koningk. Those sympathetic painters of the Dutch country have dropped, it seems, a hint to Mr. Cameron as to its appropriate treatment. M. Helleu—the third artist of whom, to some extent to the exclusion of more familiar exhibitors, I wish, on this occasion, to speak in a certain detail—is, as he is, perhaps, best known to be in France, an eminent artist in pastels. He is likewise the master of the dry-point sketch. The two mediums, properly understood, have a good deal in common: the spontaneity, the impulse, the effect gained at once, or lost beyond retrieving. Mr. Helleu's art deals in the main with the liveliest and most graceful of his own contemporaries—his vivacious fellow townswomen: not "Montmartroises de Montmartre" indeed, but "Parisiennes de Paris." Now one of them, seen from behind, is examining those drawings of Watteau, "aux trois crayons," which if among the minor are certainly among the most real delights of the Louvre. Now another of them "se chauffe" before the open fire—"se chauffe," be it understood, not quite à la Besnard. Now, again, in the print which is artistically the most audacious, we have nothing in the picture but a cup and a raised hand, in bed, that holds it, and, above the cup, the wave or toss of lightly-lying hair. "Femme à la Tasse," he calls it, and one puts it, in one's mind, by the side of last year's most exquisite plate, "Profil de Jeune Fille." Original and modern, in a high degree, is this bold yet dainty observer—none the less modern because it is but of few things that his art achieves, or even attempts, a full and perfect expression. We must allow him his deficiencies; his qualities we must be grateful for.

No transition could be more sudden than that which one makes in passing from this art of M. Helleu's—light, dexterous, brilliant, essentially and charmingly French—to that art of Mr. Legros's and of two other men who owe him much, though they have much of their own to place beside that which in their work reminds us of him: I speak, of course, of Mr. William Strang and Mr. Charles Holroyd. Mr. Legros goes upon his old and honoured way. Both of the younger men deal vigorously, yet not always luminously, with allegory. Their best work lies, I think, outside its bounds. Mr. Strang has at least a couple of dignified portraits of men—one of which, that of Mr. Reginald Blomfield, is in the spirit of Van-dyke. But a child's portrait—wholly original, so far as I am able to discern—the portrait of Ian Strang, seated, dressed in a blouse or smock, is yet more engaging, and is indeed of sterling excellence. The dignity of Mr. Holroyd's art finds natural expression in "The Monk at the Organ," nor, of course, is the dignity necessarily less in that "Landscape with Diana," which is touched with classic charm.

I would that time and space suffered me to do justice to the works of the many other very interesting etchers whose names are in the catalogue, and whose prints are on the wall—from the veteran chef d'école whose final "Fragment," wrought a dozen years ago, is now exhibited in the gallery over which he presides, to the youngest recruit whom the fascinating art of etching has known how to press into its service. And, between these two, how many worthy artists—Mr. Herkomer, Mr. Watson, Mr. Frank Short, Mr. East, Mr. Macbeth, Mr. Holmes May, and others, of whose achievements nothing can at the present moment be said.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROMAN BRITAIN.

Christ Church, Oxford: March 17, 1894.

I ask a little space in which to protest against the treatment of Roman Britain in Dr. Traill's Social England. Six contributors have there described the various aspects of "England before the English": all have naturally said much about the four centuries of Roman rule, and the result is most surprising and unsatisfactory. The pages due to Mr. F. T. Richards, of course, contain competent work, even if they hardly reach the best level of this able scholar: the rest is a melancholy spectacle.

Of errors in fact, the following may serve as miscellaneous specimens. Richard of Cirencester's provinces, cities, roads, even his views on Druidism are adopted as historical truth, though every scholar knows they are forged. The date of the Roman invasion is given in four places: in three it is given wrongly. We are told that Bokerley and Wansdyke were Belgic works, that Pliny wrote before A.D. 43, that Camulodunum became a colony after A.D. 61, that the "Histories" of Tacitus are an authority on Roman Britain, that Jupiter Dolichenus (sic) was a Gallic god, and so forth. The occurrence of Christian symbols on Roman imperial coins is adduced to prove that Britain was Christian; the occurrence of two devotiones and various objects lettered utere felix, to prove that the land was above other lands addicted to magic; and both arguments illustrate a familiar and elementary misuse of evidence. This inadequacy in the matter of details seems to me to be matched by equal inadequacy in general statements. Trades and industries are wrongly inserted or omitted, religious worships are misnamed and misappreciated, and that most important aspect of Britain, its military organisation, is misdescribed out of all recognition.

Dr. Traill, I suppose, aims at supplying scholarly summaries of the best results connected with his subject; and it is very probable that, in most parts of the book, his contributors have come reasonably near this aim. The part to which I have been alluding is a striking exception, against which it seems fair to put forward a protest and a warning.

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

It is announced that the trustees of the British Museum have obtained the consent of the Treasury to the purchase, from the Duke of Bedford, of about five-and-a-half acres of ground, immediately adjoining the present buildings. The ground is now occupied by houses, of which all the leases will shortly expire. In the result, the trustees will have at their disposal, for future extensions, the entire area extending over nearly fourteen acres, from Russell-square on the east to Bedford-square on the west, and from Montagu-place on the north to Great Russell-street on the south. The price agreed upon is £200,000.

THE chairman of the Palestine Exploration Fund has received a letter from the Foreign Office informing him that a Firman has been granted by the Sultan for permission to excavate in Jerusalem for two years on the usual conditions. The committee will, therefore, be able to resume the excavations which proved so successful under Sir Charles Warren in the years 1867-1870. The task of superintendence has been entrusted to Mr. Frederiek Jones Bliss, who is already at Jerusalem, and will commence work without delay.

THE Royal Birmingham Society of Artists, of which Prof. H. Herkomer is president, will open next week its spring exhibition. The special feature on this occasion is a loan collection of pictures and drawings by Frederick Walker and Mr. J. W. North.

THE fourteenth Easter exhibition of pictures at St. Jude's, Whitechapel, under the auspices of Canon Barnett, was formally opened by Prof. Herkomer on Tuesday of this week. Lord Dudley has sent his Murillo series, "The Prodigal Son"; the Sheffield Corporation their collection of Petties, recently on view at Burlington House; and Mr. H. Keene a number of drawings by the late Charles Keene. Sir J. E. Millais is represented by his early Pre-Raphaelite work, "The Carpenter's Shop"; and Mr. G. F. Watts by "Sic Transit." There are also works by Madox Brown, D. G. Rossetti, Mr. Holman Hunt, and Sir E. Burne-Jones. The exhibition, which is entirely free, will remain open until April 8.

AMONG the arrangements at the Royal Institution after Easter, we may mention a course of two lectures on "The Etching Revival," by Mr. F. Seymour Haden; and a course of three lectures on "Egyptian Decorative Art," by Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie.

THE last number of the American Journal of Archaeology for 1893 (Kegan Paul) is devoted to a single article, entitled, "A History of the Akropolis of Athens," by Mr. Walter Miller, which was originally read before the archaeological seminary of Leipzig University, under Prof. Overbeck. Most justifiably, special attention has been given to the condition and development of the Akropolis before the Persian invasion, as revealed by recent excavations, and to its history after the Peloponnesian War. We are surprised to find that there is no agreement as to the date of the Tower of the Franks, now destroyed. Hertzberg ascribes it to the Burgundian or French Dukes (1205-1311), our author to the Florentine Dukes of the Acciaiuoli family (end of the fourteenth century), while Bohn thinks that it was built by the Turks. The paper is illustrated with four plates.

MUSIC.

BACH'S "MATTHEW PASSION."

THE performance of this great work by the Bach Society at the Queen's Hall last Thursday week was one of considerable interest. It was sung, we believe, for the first time by that society, and in the original German. The trying part of the Evangelist was interpreted by Mr. Robert Kaufmann, who came expressly from Germany. He sang in an artistic manner, although the quality of tone of the voice seemed rather dry. In forming an opinion of him, however, the very high music, the difference of pitch, and an appearance in a new hall must certainly be taken into consideration. The choir was scarcely at its best; and the vocalists, Miss Fillunger, Miss Brema, and Messrs. Salmond and Bispham, also failed to do themselves full justice. Dr. Joachim, an enthusiastic admirer of Bach, played the violin obbligati, and Miss Dolmetch the part for viola da gamba. In spite, however, of shortcomings, one could not but feel the solemn dignity of the music. And one could not help wondering why, after all, it did not seem to create a deeper impression. The hall was crowded, but there were many empty seats before the close. True, the performance lasted from eight o'clock to midnight; but operas could be named of equal, or even greater, length, which do not thus decimate the audience. But an opera, say "Faust," or "Die Meistersinger," is given—making certain allowances for imperfections in the rendering—as intended by the composer. Not so, however, the mighty Matthew Passion. An attempt is made to give it with eighteenth century orchestration, but it is not a successful one. The public, accustomed to the rich, sonorous orchestra of Beethoven and Wagner, grows weary of the quaint and often queer effects. If the world were a palace of truth, many persons would be content to speak highly of the old master, yet carefully avoid listening to his works. When will an end be put to a wretched farce? Bach's orchestration is not given, but only a caricature of it. It is no fault of Dr. Stanford's that the Passion was not performed according to Bach's intentions. There are many reasons, which it is impossible now to discuss, why Bach's combinations and colouring cannot be reproduced. No one has ventured to deny this, although so many seem to take a pleasure in disguising the fact. The old has partly disappeared, and something has to be put into its place. That something was attempted by Robert Franz. Why is his "Bearbeitung" of the Matthew Passion never given? Has the discussion respecting the relative merits of Mozart's and Franz's "additional" accompaniments, as they are foolishly called, to the "Messiah" thrown the name of the latter into discredit? The case here is not a parallel one. It is open to any one to say he prefers Mozart's version of the "Messiah" to that of Franz. But, as far as we are aware, Franz is the only man who has prepared a score of the Passion. And, as he himself said to the writer of these lines in reference to this very Matthew Passion a few months before his death: "I have tried to reproduce Bach's ideas and developments. I have evolved my score from Bach. I have merely tried to express in full what is only hinted at in the master's score." Why, then, should not a hearing be accorded to Franz's version? The public could then listen to the grand music under more favourable conditions, and critics could discuss how far Franz's written accompaniments were in the spirit of Bach's unwritten, or obsolete, parts. Or else let someone try to improve on Franz.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

- (1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.
- (2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.
- (3) ANYBODY go one better?

Ready next Wednesday—Fifth Vol. of the

ANGLO-AMERICAN LIBRARY OF FICTION.

Crown 8vo, 320 pp., with Four Full-Page Illustrations, paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

A SLEEP-WALKER; OR, PLOTTING FOR AN INHERITANCE.

By PAUL H. GERRARD.

London: JAMES HENDERSON, Red Lion House, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

New York: Robert Bonner's Sons.

"VINOLIA" SOAP

CONTAINS NO ADHESIVE FATS OR FATTY ACIDS.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

APRIL, 1894.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. XXIII-XXVII
THE EYE of the GREY MONK. By Mrs. W. E. H. LECKY.
MORTMAIN. By A. H. BEESLY.
REMINISCENCES of INDIAN SAURIANS. By C. T. BUCKLAND.
A COMMONPLACE MAN. By KETH KENYON.
THE PLEIADES. By W. SCHOOLING.
IN AMBUSH at the LAKE SIDE. By F. WRISHAW.
AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANO.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND:

AN ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW. By ARTHUR WARREN. With many Photographs. See the

WOMAN AT HOME. APRIL.

Now ready.

THE WOMAN AT HOME.

Profusely Illustrated. Price 6d.

CONTENTS.

1. PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND: an Illustrated Interview. By ARTHUR WARREN.
  2. A TRAY of DIAMONDS.
  3. LITTLE DIXIE. By the Rev. S. BARING-GOULD. An Idyll of Dartmoor. Fully Illustrated.
  4. LUCY GERMAINE'S MARRIAGE. By ANNIE S. SWAN. Fully Illustrated.
  5. ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW with the COUNTESS of WINCHILSEA and NOTTINGHAM. By RAYMOND BLATWYAT.
  6. ONLY a MATCH-BOX. By HEADON HILL. With many Illustrations.
  7. "WHY MAKE YE SUCH ADO!" By the DEAN OF ARMAUGH.
  8. THE LADY'S FROLIC. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS, Bart. Fully Illustrated.
  9. A PAGE of CONFESSIONS. By the Hon. Mrs. HENNIKER.
  10. THE MYSTERY of the HALF-MAST FLAG. By HEADON HILL. Illustrated.
  11. BRIDES and BRIDEGROOMS. With Portraits.
  12. ORIGINAL FASHION DESIGNS. By MILDRED HARRIS (formerly designer to Messrs. Liberty).
- LIFE AND WORK AT HOME.
13. Over the Teacups. By Annie S. Swan—14. Dress and Fashion—15. Cookery—16. House Furnishing—17. Health and Personal Appearance—18. Women's Employments—19. Mothers and Children—20. Smiles.
- Prize Awards, Title and Index to Volume I.

THE WOMAN AT HOME. Sixpence monthly.

LADY WINCHILSEA on VILLAGE NURSES and the ## ORDER of CHIVALRY for the YOUNG of all CLASSES, see the ## WOMAN AT HOME. Monthly 6d. Profusely Illustrated.

London: HODDER & STROUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

E P P S 'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

“Cadbury’s”

“The Typical Cocoa of English Manufacture—Absolutely Pure.”—The Analyst.

“A small spoonful of Cadbury’s Cocoa, with boiling water or milk, will make a large breakfast cup of the most delicious, digestible, absolutely pure, and nourishing Cocoa of the greatest strength and the finest flavour, entirely free from any admixture.”

---

Cadbury’s Cocoa provides a refined daily beverage for the robust, the young, the old, and particularly those of weak and impaired digestion.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1143.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

AMONG THE MOORS: Notes and Sketches of an Artist. By G. Montbard, Author of "En Egypte," &c. Fully Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.
LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 190 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese Vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net. [Shortly.]

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT Viewed in Relation to the Problems, Tendencies, and Purposes of Modern English Art. By Mrs. J. W. WOOD. With 8 Photogravure reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth. [Shortly.]
The book contains some unpublished reminiscences of Rossetti's student days and career in art, and describes the Founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood and its long conflict with academic traditions.

Through the courtesy of Lord Battersea, Mr. Theodore Watts, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, and others, several important drawings and studies are reproduced for the first time, and they appear in the book as Full-Page Photogravure Illustrations.

ON SHORT LEAVE to JAPAN. By Capt. G. J. Younghusband, Queen's Own Corps of Guides, Author of "Eighteen Hundred Miles on a Burmese Tat," &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Next week.]

Preachers of the Age.

Uniform Crown 8vo Volumes.

With Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

TWO NEW VOLUMES.

By the Rev. E. J. GOUGH, M.A., of Dundee.
The Days of the Son of Man.

By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES, of Lewisham.
The Cup of Cold Water, and other Sermons.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

THE WINNING of the SOUL. By the Rev. LEIGHTON PARKS, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, U.S.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just ready.]

EVENING TALES: done into English from the French of M. FREDERIC ORTOLI, by JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS (Uncle Remus). Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]
"Will be much appreciated by young children."—Morning Post.

A MANUAL of OBSTETRIC NURSING

By MARIAN HUMFREY, British Lying-in Hospital, London; Diploma London Obstetric Society; Member Royal British Nurses' Association, and of its Registration Board. Dedicated to H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck. Crown 8vo, 200 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just ready.]

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS FOR 1893.

A List of Books Published in Great Britain and Ireland in the Year 1893, with their Sizes, Prices, and Publishers' Names; also of the Principal Books Published in the United States of America, with the addition of an "Index to Subjects." Royal 8vo, 6s.

GLIMPSES of the FRENCH REVOLUTION: Myths, Ideals, and Realities. By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just ready.]

"No writer has done more thorough work in the investigation of the personal side of the Revolution than Mr. Alger, whose 'Englishmen in the French Revolution' commanded, not long ago, general attention and critical approval. The present work is even more interesting, dealing, as it does, with many aspects of the Revolution, always from a personal point of view; and, like its predecessor, it shows signs of careful and accurate research. ... A deeply interesting and most valuable book."—Daily Chronicle.

TRAVELS amongst AMERICAN INDIANS: their Ancient Earth-works and Temples. Including a Journey in Guatemala, Mexico, and Yucatan; and a Visit to the Ruins of Patinamit, Utatlan, Palenque, and Uxmal. By Vice-Admiral LINDESAY BRINE (Member of Council of the Royal Geographical and Hakluyt Societies), Author of "The Laping Rebellion in China: a Narrative of its Rise and Progress." With 2 Maps, 8 Plans, 28 Full-Page and 12 Text Cuts. 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth. [Shortly.]

LANDMARKS of a LITERARY LIFE, 1820-1892. By Mrs. Newton CROSLAND (Camilla Toulmin). Author of "Mrs. Blake," &c. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth 7s. 6d.

"Seldom has it been given to an author to chronicle the Accession and Jubilee of a Sovereign. More rarely, if possible, to have known personally the eminent men and women of a period extending to seven decades."—Yorkshire Herald.

FRA PAOLO SARPI: the Greatest of the Venetians. By the Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy." With Illustrations and Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The book brings together into one view more about 'the Greatest of the Venetians' than will be found in any one English book; while the versatility of Sarpi's genius, his acknowledged pre-eminence in politics, theology, science, and a craft so practical as anatomy, make it a good specimen of the class that tell the stories of great men for their moral value as examples."—Scotsman.

HECTOR BERLIOZ: a Critical Monograph. By Sydney R. Thompson. With Photogravure Portrait. Dedicated to Signor Arrigo Boito. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

CARTIER to FRONTENAC: a Study of Geographical Discovery in the Interior of North America in its Historical Relations, 1534-1700. By JUSTIN WINSOR, Author of "Christopher Columbus," "A Narrative and Critical History of America," &c. Illustrated with Maps, Plans, &c. 8vo, cloth, 15s.

RAMBLES in BOOKS. By Charles F. Blackburn. Large-Paper Edition of 50 copies only, printed on Hand-made paper, each numbered and signed by the Author. With Portrait from a Photograph by W. & D. Downey. 16s. net. [Just ready.]

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and Federation of the Empire. By F. P. DE LABILLIÈRE, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." Crown 8vo, cloth. [Shortly.]

GREECE: her Present Condition and Recent Progress. By James SAMUELSON, Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

HISTORY of ENGRAVING in ENGLAND. By Louis Fagan. Illustrated by One Hundred Typical Examples reproduced from Rare and Unique Prints in the British Museum, exemplifying the progress of the art from the end of the Sixteenth Century to the Earlier Years of Her Majesty's Reign.

Mr. Fagan has prepared a catalogue raisonné of the art works of the engravers represented. He has also enriched the work with Biographical Memoirs and Critical Notes on individual style and technique, and by this means has traced the rise and progress of the art of Engraving in England.

The edition is strictly limited to One Hundred Copies. The price for the whole will be £45 net, and no order will be received but for the complete work. Sections I. and II. are now ready. Section III., shortly.

PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT in ENGLAND: its Origin, Development, and Practical Operation. By the late ALPHRUS TODD, LL.D., C.M.G., Librarian of Parliament for the Dominion of Canada. New Edition, Abridged and Revised, by His Excellency SPENCER WALPOLE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, half-bound, gilt top, 15s.

"A work of unquestionable value to one who would study the machinery of the English Government in all its parts. Indeed, for giving an insight into the practical affairs of the politics of England, there is no other work of so great value."—Prof. ADAMS' Manual of Historical Literature.

NEW NOVELS.

THE STORY of MY TWO WIVES, by One of their HUSBANDS. By Mr. TIMOTHY MOLESKIN. Edited by ELDON PHEWEESE, Esq. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

SARAH. By Sydney Christian, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. [Shortly.]

TWO REMARKABLE COLLECTIONS OF SHORT STORIES.—Vide Press.
THE WAY THEY LOVED at GRIMPAT. By E. RENTOU, ESQER. 1 vol., 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"Should score one of the most solid literary successes of the season."—Daily Telegraph.
"A book of peculiar charm."—Speaker.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.
TALES of the YORKSHIRE WOLDS. By J. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"A welcome new-comer, Mr. Snowden's book gives a keen insight."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Mr. Snowden handles humour and pathos with equal skill, whilst he is not afraid to touch with a firm hand some of the saddest problems of life."—Yorkshire Post.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, ST. DUNSTON'S HOUSE, FETTER LANE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

KIDDO'S SOCIAL EVOLUTION, by A. W. HENN	261
GRANT ALLAN'S THE LOWER SLOPES, by E. PURCELL	263
JUNIUS REVEALED, by W. P. COURTNEY	264
HUGH ROMILLY'S LETTERS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE	264
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	265
CURRENT LITERATURE	266
NOTES AND NEWS	267
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TWO HANDS," by M.	268
OBITUARY: J. M. GRAY, by F. W.	268
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	269
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	269
CORRESPONDENCE—
The North-Pole Inscrptions IV., by E. W. B. NICHOLSON; Hugh Audley: Cyril Toulson, by Gordon Goodwin; Mr. Slater's "Early Editions," by J. H. Slater	269
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	271
LOCKYER'S THE DAWN OF ASTRONOMY, by ROBERT BROWN, JUN.	271
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	273
PELASGIC ITALY	273
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Tharais Museum, by E. S. DODGSON	274
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	274
STAGE NOTES	274
DR. PARROT'S ART OF MUSIC, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	274
MUSIC NOTES	275

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH

Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,

Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEENOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

TO LECTURERS, AUTHORS, &amp;c.—

Lectures or Addresses on any subject; terms moderate; experience and excellent references. Literary work of any kind done. Plots for Novels or Short Stories from 2s. 6d.—RYLAND GROVES, Leyburn, R.S.O.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN

MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossip." 1s. 6d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CAWSHAY, Bwlch, Breconshire.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYRON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &amp;c.—

Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

• and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BELFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

Just published, price 1s.; per post, 1s. 4d.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY

CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1894.
London: Macmillan & Co. Manchester: J. E. COXSON

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

NEW CHAIR OF HISTORY.

The UNIVERSITY COURT will, on MONDAY, 18th JUNE next, or some subsequent day, appoint a PROFESSOR to this CHAIR.

While any portion of History will be within the scope of the Chair, special regard will be had to the attainments of the Candidates in the department of Modern History.

The Professor will be required to deliver annually at least one full Ordinary Course of 100 Lectures, and one full Honours Course of 50 Lectures, and to discharge the other duties of a Professor.

The Lectures will extend over either a continuous Winter Session of six months, or should the Court so determine, over half of the Winter Session, together with the Summer Session of any three months.

The salary attached by Ordinance to the Chair is £2000, subject to abatement in the event of the University Fee Fund at any time failing to provide the normal salaries of the Professors.

The appointment will be made "ad vitam aut culpam," and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance. Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 28th May next, sixteen copies of his application, and sixteen copies of any Testimonials he may desire to submit. One copy of the application should be signed.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary, Edinburgh University Court.

University of Edinburgh,
10th March, 1894.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1894.

A COURSE OF EIGHT LECTURES on "CHRISTIANITY in its MOST SIMPLE and INTELLIGIBLE FORM" will be delivered by the Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, at the PORTMAN ROOMS, BAKER STREET, on the following days—viz., MONDAY 16th, Thursday 19th, Monday 23rd, Thursday 26th and Monday 30th, April; and Thursday 3rd, Monday 7th, and Thursday 10th May, at 5 p.m. Admission to the Course of Lectures will be by ticket, without payment. Persons desirous of attending the Lectures are requested to send their names and addresses to Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C., not later than Saturday, 7th April; and as soon as possible after that date, tickets will be issued to as many as the Hall will accommodate.

The same Course of Lectures will also be delivered by Dr. DRUMMOND at OXFORD, in the large LECTURE-ROOM of MANCHESTER COLLEGE, on each of the following days—viz., Tuesday 24th and Friday 27th, April, and Tuesday 1st, Friday 4th, Tuesday 8th, Friday 11th, Tuesday 15th and Friday 18th, May, at 5 p.m. Admission to the Oxford Course will be free without ticket.

P. LAWSON, Secretary to the Hibbert Trustees.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, on 14th June next, or some subsequent date, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR to occupy the newly instituted Chair of HISTORY in the University. The duties will begin from 1st October next. Candidates are requested to lodge 20 printed copies of their application and Testimonials, if any, in the hands of the undersigned, on or before 12th May.

ALAN E. CLAPPERTON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dunfermlie, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT

(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £20, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—An

EXAMINATION for filling up some VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on 4th APRIL NEXT.—For information, apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-

ETCHERS.—ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society, with a Selection from the Etched Works of the Old Masters, NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 55, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6.

A. STEWART, Secretary.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Slickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

THEATRES.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, Shakespeare's comedy of TWELFTH NIGHT. Miss Rehan as Viola; and George Clarke, James Lewis, Herbert Gresham; Violet Vanbrugh, Catherine Lewis, &c.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15. Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnien, John F. Sheridan, P. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alicia Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, M. Mersden, and Miss May Yohé. At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Orsay, Porteous, Bluma, Fomerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Mesdames Decima Moors, Juliette Neville, Cutler, Studholme, Pounds, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, Gurst, and P. Broughton.

ROYAL PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WORLD. Messrs. Charles Dalton, William Elton, Julian Cross, and Charles Glenney; Misses Olga Brandon, Kate Tyndal, and Agnes Thomas.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rulland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Hay, Scott-Flahie, Gridley, S. Russell, Hunt, and C. Kennigham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE BEST MAN. Mr. J. L. Toole; Messrs. John Billington, Stetson, Lowne, Coventry, Arlton, Bruntton; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Eliza Johnstone, Fordyce, Poole, Kingsley. At 8, HESPER'S MYSTERY. Messrs. Westland, Lowne, Arlton; Misses Carlyon, Fordyce.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Robie Temple, and Letty Lind; Messrs. Harry Grattan, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, Sidney Howard, Frederick Rosse, and John L. Shine.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, WET PAINT. Mr. H. Sparring, &c. At 8.20, WAPPING OLD STAIRS. Messrs. Courtice Pounds, Richard Temple, Avon Saxon, H. Sparring, H. Boucher; Mesdames Mary Turner, Hannah Jones, Mary Hutton, and Jessie Bond.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., or 5s. 11d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each, 21 yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10ft. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 3 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 81d. per yard; Nursery Paper, 41d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 3d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. &amp; E. M'HUGH &amp; CO., Limited, BELFAST.

"VINOLIA" SOAP

CONTAINS NO ADHESIVE FATS OR FATTY ACIDS.

TO H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class
BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned
Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving
on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman
Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holi, R.A., Oulens, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco
in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.;
also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including
H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided
are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art
The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 181 pages,
with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature
Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational
Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 942.—APRIL, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—A BIRD OF PASSAGE, by Beatrice Harraden.
—ENEAS'S MEETING WITH DE QUINCEY, by P. L.—
THE RICH MISS RIDGELL, by Dorothea Gerard.—RABELAIS
AT HOME, by R. E. P.—A LOST ENGLISH CITY, by H. M.
Doughty.—MECHMET THE WRESTLER, A BRIGAND OF TURKEY.—ON ACQUIRED FACIAL EXPRESSION, by Dr. Louis
Robinson.—THE SHADOW OF DEATH: A TALE OF THE ASHANTI WAR.—TROUTING TATTLE, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—A LEGEND, by H. Fielding.—THE GLADSTONIAN MYTH.—BIG GAME SHOOTING.—ROSEBURY'S RIDDLES.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH and LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

APRIL.

THE GOVERNMENT and the EVICTED TENANTS. By T. W.
RUSSELL, M.P.
CONSTANTINOPLE as an HISTORIC CITY. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
ARE OUR PRISONS a FAILURE? By the Rev. W. D. MORRISON.
MR. MALLOCK'S TRUMPET PERFORMANCE. By G. BERNARD SHAW.
FLY-FISHING. By BASIL FIELD.
THE ITALIAN BANK SCANDALS. By NAPOLEONE COLAJANNI.
WOMEN as STUDENTS in DESIGN. By Mrs. J. E. H. GIBSON.
THE SERPENT'S STRANGENESS. By W. H. HUDSON.
THE FRENCH IN TUNIS. By COUNT GELEICH.
LABOUR REPRESENTATION. By FRED HANMILL.
TWO POEMS. By PAUL VERLAINE.
THE TRUE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA. By STODDARD DEWEY.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

Now Ready for APRIL, price Sixpence.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

Edited by Rev. JAMES HASTINGS, M.A.

CONTENTS include—Notes of Recent Exposition: "The Theology of Isaiah," by Prof. A. B. Davidson, D.D.; "The Parables of Zechariah," by Rev. James Stalker, D.D.; "The Parable," by Rev. J. Rolson, D.D.; The Books of the Month; Short Expository Papers; The Great Text Commentary; Requests and Replies; Contributions and Comments, &c., &c.

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 38, GEORGE STREET.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIOSER DEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer
Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS 59, Pall Mall.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, price 10s.

THE OUTLINES OF QUATERNIONS.

BY

Lieut.-Colonel H. H. L. HIME,

Late Royal Artillery.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table
Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen
Table Cloths, 11½d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz.
Frisled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated
Price-Lists
and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

COLLARS, CUFFS, SHIRTS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 2-fold, 3s. 6d.
per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children,
from 5s. 11d. per doz.

Best quality long-
cloth Shirts, 4-fold
Linen Fronts, 35s. 6d. half-dozen.
(To measure 2s. extra.)

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Children's Bordured, 1s. 3d. per doz.
Ladies' " 2s. 3d. " Hemstitched:
Gentlemen's " 3s. 3d. " Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

BY SPECIAL
APPOINTMENTS TO
THE QUEEN AND EMPRESS FREDERICK
OF GERMANY

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 414. APRIL. Price 1s.

CONTENTS.

1. PERLYCROSS. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Chapters XXXIII-XXXV.
2. FRANCIS PARKMAN and his WORK. By A. G. BRADLEY.
3. AUSTRALIAN ROUGH-RIDERS. By ROLF BOLDBREW.
4. A FRENCH CRITIC ON ENGLAND.
5. CHAPTERS from some UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS. By Mrs. RICHIE. X.—At Menecy.
6. AT STRATFORD FESTIVAL. By R. WARWICK BOND.
7. THE OLD COLLEGE at GLASGOW.
8. A MASTER OF WOODCRAFT.
9. THE WATERS of CASTALY.
10. GLORY of WOMAN. By Mrs. STEEL.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE NEW REVIEW.

APRIL, 1894. Price One Shilling.

THE SETTING and the RISING SUN.
1. The Personalities. By ALICUIS.
2. Lord Rosebery's Opportunities. By OCTIS.
THE PACIFICATION of NYASALAND. By W. LAIRD CLOWES
HANNELE; a Dream-Poem. II. By GERHART HAUFMANN. Translated by WILLIAM ARCHEL. (Illustrated.)
A NOTE on WALT WHITMAN. By EDMUNDO GOSSE.
OUR NEW PROTECTORATE for CHILDREN. By the Rev.
BENJAMIN WAGH.
PARTIES in IRELAND and the MINISTRY. By T. M. HEALY, M.P.
SOME RELICS of the BRONTES. (Illustrated.) By W. W. YATES.
A CONFESSION of CRIME. By JANET ACHURCH and CHARLES CHARRINGTON.
AN ILLUSTRATED LOVE-EPIC. (Concluded.) By W. M.
THACKERAY. With Notes by GERARD FIENNES.
AUSTRALIAN CRICKET and CRICKETERS. By F. R. SPOFFORTH
IN A POOL'S PARADISE. (A Short Story.) By OSWALD CRAWFURD.
CHESS. (With Problems.) By I. GUNSBORO.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUBUBS.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labeled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—THE TEMPLE BAR

MAGAZINE for APRIL, 1894, contains, among other articles of interest:—A Beginner, by Rhoda Erington, Author of "Nancy," &c. Chaps. X.-XII.—Lord Chief Baron Abinger and the Bar.—A Canoe Voyage on a French River.—Red and Staff.—One of the Gargoyles.—Athens and its Acropolis.—By Fair Workcraft.—Theodore de Banville.—An Interlaper, by F. M. Pearl, Author of "Near Neighbours," &c. Chaps. X.-XII.

The Second Edition Ready on Tuesday next. THE PRIVATE LIFE OF NAPOLEON.

From the French of ARTHUR LEVY by STEPHEN LOUIS SIMEON.
Translator of "The Youth of Frederick the Great," &c.
2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

"The work is of exceptional interest, and sheds real light on the life and character of the first Emperor. It deserves a welcome in this country. We can commend the book as one that can be read with profit and enjoyment."—Scotsman.
"These valuable volumes are in every way well turned out; all we regret is the want of space to do them fuller justice. They will be in every historical library."—Speaker.

NOW READY.

WOMEN of LETTERS.

By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"These are delightful volumes. The authoress has not only chosen good subjects, but she has the gift of piecing together her information skilfully, and of endowing the characters she depicts with some of her own vigour and vitality."—Spectator.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

SECOND EDITION NOW READY. THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

Author of "An Old Maid's Love," "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Filled from end to end with sketches of character, satirical, ironical, humorous, poetic, tender, and infinitely amusing."—Saturday Review.

"No review can do justice to the many deep and delicate studies in this careful, brilliant, and picturesque book."—Daily Chronicle.

"Has high merits of pathos, of humour, of artistic colour, and pictorial suggestion."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Rich in epigram and humour, both incisive and original, this work will rank among its author's best efforts."—Morning Post.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATTERSON.

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE. By M. DEANE.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

"The book teems with thrilling incident and vivid description."—Daily Telegraph.

"Most admirably written, the style has the grace and ease which comes of ease and thought. The author has placed a fascinating personality in the thick of an interesting period. Vivienne de Roseaubeau is a triumph of artistic creation."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN, Author of "The Scots of Westminster." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Yonge seems to have flung her mantle over the author of 'A Devoted Couple,' and to have found a worthy successor. The story is a family one, full of sweet domesticities of English family life with a spice of Indian adventure thrown in. A most agreeable, clever, and wholesome story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY

The ROMANCE of SHERE

MOTE. By PERCY HULBURD, Author of "In Black and White." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A story of singular ingenuity and power, an album so to speak of brilliant character-sketches, graphic word-pictures, and trenchant epigrams."—Daily Telegraph.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SOME OF CASSELL & COMPANY'S NEW VOLUMES.

BY G. A. SALA.

THINGS I HAVE SEEN AND PEOPLE I HAVE KNOWN.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Ready shortly.]

BY JOHN PENDLETON.

OUR RAILWAYS:

THEIR ORIGIN, DEVELOPMENT, INCIDENT, and ROMANCE.

With nearly 300 Illustrations.

2 vols., 24s. [Now ready.]

LORD A. LOFTUS.

THE DIPLOMATIC REMINISCENCES OF LORD A. LOFTUS,

P.C., G.C.B., 1862 to 1879.

Demy 8vo, Second Series, 2 vols., 32s.

[Ready shortly.]

The Second Series of these Reminiscences covers the period of Lord A. Loftus's residence at the Courts of Bavaria, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

Now ready, price 6s.

STATESMEN, PAST AND FUTURE.

Vol. I. now ready of the Popular Edition of ### PICTURESQUE AMERICA.

With Twelve Exquisite Steel Plates and about 200 Original Wood Engravings.

Royal 4to, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, gilt edges, 18s.

BY STANLEY WEYMAN.

THE MAN IN BLACK.

With Twelve Full-Page Illustrations by Wal Paget and H. M. Paget. 3s. 6d.

[Now ready.]

THE STORY OF FRANCIS CLUDDE.

6s.

BY STANDISH O'GRADY.

LOST ON DU CORRIG

OR, 'TWINT EARTH AND OCEAN.

With Eight Full-Page Illustrations. 5s.

[Now ready.]

BY E. W. HORNING.

TINY LUTTRELL.

6s.

[Now ready.]

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST

Will be published shortly.

A NEW WORK BY JOHN RUSKIN.

VERONA, and other Lectures.

Delivered principally at the Royal and London Institutions, between 1870 and 1883. Illustrated with Frontispiece in colour, and about 11 Photogravure Plates from Drawings by the Author. Medium 8vo, cl. th. 15s.

This volume consists of five chapters, four of which were prepared by the Author to be delivered as lectures during his tenure of the Slade Professorship at Oxford, and one has been written since his resignation.

There will be 250 Large-Paper Copies of Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper, with India Proofs of Plates, large post 4to, 33s.

The publication is being delayed in order to issue simultaneously in America.

NOW READY.

BY AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE,

Author of "Memorials of a Quiet Life," "Walks in Rome," &c.

THE STORY of TWO NOBLE LIVES:

Charlotte, Countess Canning, and Louisa, Marchioness of Waterford. In 3 vols. of about 450 pages each. Crown 8vo, 81s. 6d.

The Illustrations consist of 2 Portraits Engraved on Steel, 9 Portraits in Photogravure, 21 Plates in Photogravure from Lady Waterford's Drawings, 8 Full-Page Wood Engravings, and 24 Woodcuts from Sketches by the Author, &c.

The Special Large-Paper Edition consists of 300 Copies, with India Proofs of the Plates. Crown 4to, £3 8s. net.

A NEW COMPLETE EDITION OF HANS ANDERSEN'S STORIES and

FAIRY TALES. With an entirely new Translation by

H. OSKAR SOMMER. Ph.D. Illustrated with over 100 Pictures and newly designed Initial Letters by Arthur J. Gaskin, Master at the Birmingham School of Art. In 2 vols. of 410 and 440 pages, large crown 8vo, 6s. each. Sold separately.

A few of the Large-Paper Copies on a special make of Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper still remain. Crown 4to, £1 2s. net. The 2 vols. not sold separately.

".....Much the most luxuriously equipped translation of Andersen's delightful stories that has yet appeared. The paper is pleasant to touch, the print pleasant to read, and the illustrations are excellent. The translation is eminently readable, and the book so daintily sent forth that it is a joy to have it in the hand."—Athenaeum.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of THOMAS

PELHAM DALE (sometime rector of St. Vedast, Foster Lane, Cler, London). Edited by his Daughter, HELEN PELHAM DALE. With 4 Photogravure Portraits, 6 Plates in Colour from Mr. Dale's own Sketches, Facsimiles of Letters from John Wesley, and other Illustrations. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.; about 650 pages.

There is a limited Edition of 250 Copies on Large Paper, with India Proofs of Plates. Crown 4to, 20s. net.

BY SIR HENRY ACLAND.

THE OXFORD MUSEUM. With

Letters from John Ruskin. A Reissue, with new Preface by Sir HENRY ACLAND, and a Message from Mr. RUSKIN. With New Photogravure Portrait of Mr. Ruskin taken in August, 1893, an Engraving of one of the Museum Capitals, and a New Plan. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. net.

There are 150 Large-Paper Copies on Hand-made Paper. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

BY JOHN RUSKIN.

SESAME and LILIES. A Small Complete Edition, containing the Three Lectures, "King's Treasures," "Queen's Gardens," and "The Mystery of Life," with long Preface and new Index. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; roan, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

THE BIBLE of AMIENS A Guide

to Amiens Cathedral. Being a Pocket Edition of Chapter IV. from the larger Work. Second Edition. Red leatherette, 12mo, 10d.

THE STONES of VENICE: Selections

for the Use of Travellers. 2 vols., cloth, 5s. each. Crown 8vo. Fifth Edition.

ST. MARK'S REST. The History of

Venice, written for the help of the few Travellers who still care for her Monuments. 12mo, complete in cloth, 6s.

GUIDE to PICTURES in the

ACADEMY of FINE ARTS, VENICE. New and Complete Edition, Revised and Corrected. In One Part. 8vo, 1s.

MORNINGS in FLORENCE. Being

Simple Studies of Christian Art, for English Travellers. Third Edition. 12mo, cloth, 4s.

Ruskin House, 156, Charing Cross Road,
London.

SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1894.

No. 1143, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Social Evolution. By Benjamin Kidd. (Macmillans.)

THE object of this able and powerfully written volume is to exhibit the necessary dependence of social evolution through all its phases—past and future—on religious belief, and the tendency of evolution in its turn to favour the religious in preference to the intellectual type of character. In biology Mr. Kidd is a Darwinian of the school of Prof. Weissman. He believes in the all-sufficiency of natural selection as the cause by which organic species have been raised to higher and higher grades of perfection, up to the appearance of man on the earth. But with the advent of the human race, endowed as it is with reason, there comes into play another power often opposed to natural selection and capable, unless held in check, of reversing its effects. This is the power, possessed by a rational individual, of foreseeing the consequences of his own actions, and of estimating their influence on his own happiness. For, in order to the operation of natural selection as an improving agency, it is necessary that the species should multiply beyond the means of subsistence, that in each successive generation more individuals should be born than can subsist and propagate their kind: in other words, a number of individuals must be periodically sacrificed to preserve the efficiency of the species. Variations for the better do not present themselves in each new creature; on the contrary, if Mr. Kidd is to be believed, they are exceeded in number by variations for the worse, a phenomenon which he attributes to atavism, the tendency to reproduce the original type (p. 37). Furthermore, when in the same species one group of associated individuals is fighting for its existence against another group, the necessity for active self-sacrifice becomes manifest, since that society has the best chance of success whose members are most willing to expose themselves to the brunt of a hostile encounter. Such subordination of individual to race interest is sufficiently provided for in all animals except man by the supremacy of unreasoning instinct. The unfit majority cannot combine against the fit few; the sexual and parental impulses reign uncontrolled by the prospect of inconveniences resulting from a large family; the combative impulse is unbalanced by any dread of pain and death. But with the dawn of reason all this is changed, for, according to Mr. Kidd's philosophy, "there is no rational sanction" for self-sacrifice of any kind; and it would be especially foolish for any man or class of men to sacrifice their own interests to the good of unborn generations. It is here that religion steps in and saves the race from its own fatal enlightenment by a system of supernatural sanctions, encouraging social actions by the hope of divine rewards and repressing anti-social actions by the fear of divine punishments. In the first, or militant and predatory type of civilisation, devotion to the family and the state was the qualification supremely necessary to success; accordingly, it flourished under the protection of the tribal religions and perished with their decline. By virtue of its greater military efficiency one city, Rome, finally succeeded in uniting the whole civilised world under its dominion, and used its position to plunder the subject races without restraint. The choice then lay between a relapse into the earlier stages of militarism, and a change of route leading the foremost representatives of the human race along a new path of peaceful industrial evolution. The second alternative was impossible without the introduction of altruistic sentiment on a large scale, and this desideratum was supplied by Christianity. It introduced the idea of humanity, unknown before, and enforced its recognition by the most tremendous sanctions. It taught the equality of all men before God, and thus led to the abolition of slavery. But for a long time the self-sacrifice demanded by altruism was only realised under the form of extreme asceticism, such as we read about in the lives of the saints. The Reformation, by putting an end to this practice, set free a large fund of disinterested feeling which has since found a more appropriate outlet in promoting the happiness of others. Hence the great superiority (assumed by Mr. Kidd as beyond dispute) of the Protestant and Teutonic to the Roman Catholic and Latin nations in humanity, in tenderness and benevolence of feeling. The consequences for social evolution have been most momentous. For altruism means emancipation: it means the admission of ever increasing numbers to competition in the struggle for existence, and along with the widening of the field for selection a continual raising of the highest standard of efficiency reached, with an increasing advantage to those communities where the principle of emancipation has been most thoroughly applied. It may be objected that the surrender of power and privilege by the upper classes has not been due to any such sentimental considerations as are here assumed, but to the increased strength of the unemancipated classes, to the revolutionary literature disseminated among them, to the selfish ambition of high-born demagogues who have deserted their own order to gain a higher or more profitable position as leaders of the people. But Mr. Kidd will not hear of any such explanation. He thinks that the governing classes have at all times been so much stronger than the rest of the community that nothing but a deep conviction of the justice of its claims would ever have made them yield to the demands of the class below them. Nor have the limits of concession yet been reached. The admission of the masses to political equality is but a step towards their complete industrial enfranchisement. Equality of opportunity for all is the goal towards which we are tending. The same education, and apparently the same start in life, will then be given to all; and, thanks to the increasing altruism of the rich, whatever rearrangements of property and taxation may be found necessary as a means to that end are to be peacefully effected by the ordinary processes of legislation. It would be a great mistake to call the contemplated ideal a socialistic one. Mr. Kidd is utterly opposed to Socialism, on the ground that, if consistently carried out, it would involve a limitation of the birth-rate to the number strictly necessary for the maintenance of a stationary population, thus putting an end to natural selection, and therefore, on his theory, leading to the degeneration of the race.

Such in its briefest outline is the social philosophy expounded in a volume more remarkable for vigour of style, facility of generalisation, and hardihood of assertion, than for correct reasoning or accuracy of historical knowledge. To begin with, Mr. Kidd plays fast and loose with the idea of natural law. The theory of natural selection is entirely deductive, and assumes as axiomatic that all the phenomena of the organic world are produced by mechanical causation. Once admit the possibility of supernatural interference, conscious and benevolent, with the course of evolution, and there can be no conceivable reason for ascribing the progressive development of living forms to a method so wasteful, so clumsy, and so cruel as that of the survival of the fittest—the extermination of the weak by the strong. But whatever considerations shut out the supernatural from biology equally shut it out from social science. If the one course of development can be explained by natural causes, so, and much more, can the other. Now, to Mr. Kidd, religion is nothing if not supernatural (p. 113). Indeed, according to his view, the sole function of religion is to provide what he calls "an ultra-rational sanction" for conduct injurious to the individual but beneficial to the society to which he belongs (p. 103)—in short, to apply selfish motives for performing what seem to be unselfish actions. And this leads us on to another difficulty. Mr. Kidd is always railing against a certain undefined entity that he calls reason. It is "the most profoundly individualistic, anti-social, and anti-evolutionary of all human qualities" (p. 293). Such epithets are indeed fully merited if it be true that "the teaching of reason to the individual must always be that the present time and his own interests therein are all important to him" (p. 78). This is like saying that the sense of sight is anti-social, or that language teaches a man to take exclusive care of his own interests. Reason is the power to construct and connect general notions; and as solely through it are we enabled to think and to share each other's thoughts, it is the most social of all our faculties. It discovers the means for attaining whatever ends we set up, whether selfish or social; nay, through it we have constructed those ends, and the more impersonal, the more universal they are, the more victoriously is its energy displayed. The pretension to set religion beyond its reach is utterly chimerical. All great religious teachers have used it to make converts: that is, they have drawn what seemed to them logical inferences from what seemed to them acknowledged facts. Mr. Kidd's own favourite religion amounts, in substance, to saying, "If you do not love your neighbour as yourself, you will be damned. We have this on the word of the Creator of the world, who appeared once on the earth in human form, and proved His identity by rising from the dead." Now, this may be appealing to a rather low motive, and, also, it may not be true; but granting it to be true—and on no other assumption can it claim obedience—I, for one, can see nothing irrational about the command, although I should scruple to call it altruism.

It is to be supposed, then, that by ultra-rational sanctions Mr. Kidd means rewards and punishments imposed by a supernatural power. But what sanctions of the sort has Buddhism? In answer, he can only refer to Karma. This means that our personality is the creation of the actions performed by someone else, now deceased, for whose faults we suffer, and that we in turn are making the Karma of a still unborn individual who will bear the consequences of our misdeeds. I fail to see what motive such a doctrine appeals to, except the quite disinterested wish to spare suffering to other people after we have ceased to exist—a motive quite open to any Positivist or Utilitarian. But how little Mr. Kidd has studied religion may be seen from his astounding assertion, that all religions agree in teaching that "right and wrong are right and wrong by divine or supernatural enactment outside of, and independent of, any other cause whatever" (p. 113). Such is certainly not the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church as interpreted by its greatest doctor, St. Thomas Aquinas. To maintain it indeed would be fatal to the moral efficacy of any religion by leaving open the chance that God said what was false and would not keep His promises.

A religion of sanctions in Mr. Kidd's sense of the word—that is, a religion appealing to selfish hopes and fears—can never be a school of altruism. Its moral commands will inevitably be interpreted in such a manner as to involve the smallest amount of self-sacrifice and the largest amount of purchasable pardon for self-seeking. Of course I am speaking of average men, not of those exceptionally gifted persons who would devote themselves to the good of others under any system. And therefore, supposing Christianity to be the sort of religion that it is assumed to be by this author, it could not have had the emancipating influence with which he credits it, for class-emancipation formed no part of its original programme. In point of fact, Christian teaching was neither the sole nor the chief cause of the abolition of slavery. Slavery was first condemned as a violation of natural right by certain Greek philosophers long before the Christian era; and legislation of a kind favourable to emancipation was initiated by Roman jurists imbued with the spirit of Stoicism long before the conversion of the Empire to Christianity. The economical disadvantages of forced labour and the closing of the slave-markets by a series of political and military events quite unconnected with religion did the rest; and it is notorious that the human chattels of the religious houses were the last to be manumitted. With the discovery of America and the opening up of Africa came a revival of the hateful institution under forms worse than any known to classical antiquity; and in this revival some very pious Christians bore a prominent part, while none that I know of raised a protest against it. At last a protest came, but it was uttered by the rationalistic philosophers of the eighteenth century and was first put into the form of law by the anti-Christian Convention of France. So with the whole emancipating movement of modern times. In all its phases it has been originated and supported by rationalists, and, until lately, has counted many devout religious believers among its most strenuous opponents. I am well aware that quite recently the public opinion of the religious world has undergone a great change in this respect—a change well illustrated by the very book I am reviewing—but it is a change for which their religion is no more to be thanked than for their acceptance of the Darwinian theory, both being due to the serpentine rather than to the dovelike qualities of pietism.

The tendency towards political and social equality is not peculiar to modern times or to Christian civilisation; it began in the city-states of ancient Greece and Italy, and has been continually stimulated in after ages by the classic record of the victories then achieved on behalf of the disfranchised and oppressed. It matters nothing whether the lower classes of that régime were or were not themselves a slave-holding aristocracy; it is enough that they were poorer and more numerous than the class from whom they succeeded in wresting a share of power. In this connexion a dilemma suggests itself, either alternative of which is fatal to the view of modern reforms put forward by Mr. Kidd. If the Demos and the Plebs made good their claims to political equality by force, what becomes of his theory that the power-holders in any community occupy an impregnable position? But if, as is more probable, they, like the unenfranchised classes of modern Europe, were greatly helped by the generous sympathy of some among the privileged aristocracy, what becomes of his theory that the growth of democracy is exclusively due to Christian altruism? If Mr. Kidd would but read the history of Greece and Rome, his faith in human nature might be a little raised, and his faith in the sole saving efficacy of the Nonconformist conscience a little shaken. But let him study it at first hand; let him not repeat, on the worthless authority of such a writer as Lewes, such a gross misstatement as that no Greek ever embraced any conception of humanity (p. 134). And let him learn to read with a little more care than when, with his Gibbon open before him, he could write as if during the whole course of Roman history the Plebeians were debarred from intermarriage with the Patricians, and as if the latter almost exclusively possessed "wealth and honours, the offices of the state and the ceremonies of religion" (p. 257). While on this subject I may mention that one of the latest, most learned, and most judicious historians of antiquity, Adolf Holm, ascribes the success of Rome not to her military superiority, which is very questionable, but to her reputation for justice, which induced her neighbours continually to invoke her arbitration in their quarrels, or to place themselves under her protection.

The revolutionary and democratic movement is, according to Mr. Kidd, to continue up to the point of securing everyone a really fair start in the race for existence. It does not appear by what machinery competition is to be suitably distributed among all the channels of enterprise: whether the mechanical trades are to be exclusively supplied by the failures of the learned professions, or what is to be done with the surplus population. Are the last in the race to be simply starved, or, in accordance with the benevolent suggestion of Mr. Francis Galton, to be treated kindly as long as they do not marry? At any rate, Christianity having conducted us to a competitive millennium where the race shall be most surely to the swift and the battle to the strong, will then have for its principal function to see that the hindmost are duly handed over to the devil. In other words, it will have to prevent the establishment of complete socialism, of a system under which the produce of labour would be distributed equally rather than in proportion to services done. For Mr. Kidd has actually persuaded himself that the residuum, in the struggle for existence, would have it in their power to enforce a system of equal distribution against the winners in the fight, the fittest to survive, whose interest it would evidently be to maintain a system that had brought them, and would probably bring their children, to the front; and this, too, after insisting that, in all previous stages of modern evolution, the position of the classes holding power has been impregnable as against any attack from without not seconded by their own altruistic feelings—a notion, by the way, not very consistent with the assertion that, in England during the nineteenth century, the educated classes have set themselves against nearly every progressive measure (p. 236). "But," says Mr. Kidd, "it is the teaching of reason that all should share alike" (p. 76). Reason cannot teach anything so absurd as that all should share alike, if by that apportionment the wealth to be divided among them is destroyed. Besides, have we not been told that reason teaches every one to care exclusively for his own interests? and how can it be for the interest of the strong and efficient that the weak and worthless should fare equally well with themselves? The truth is that misology brings no luck: the enemies of reason take their punishment into their own hands, and are buried under the ruins of their own incoherent and unstable edifices.

Briefly, then, what I find in Mr. Kidd's volume is but a reiteration and expansion of the old discredited dogma, that morality is, in the long run, impossible without supernatural religion, followed up by a disproportionate estimate of the part played by morality in opening a career to talent. Instead of solid arguments and facts, this thesis is supported by bare assertions, by transparent fallacies, and by flagrant misrepresentations of history. I agree with the author in holding that the future belongs rather to the competitive than to the socialistic régime. Unlike him, however, I hold the ultimate success of freedom to be guaranteed, not by the permanence of avowedly irrational beliefs, but by the conscious reason of man co-operating with the immanent reason of things. What should survive if not the law of survival itself? The refusal to multiply is the one uninherited habit, a savour of death unto death. Like the victorious grace of Pascal, the upward pressure of life can never want defenders, for it forms them itself by its omnipotent force; and the highest, most successful manifestation of life must always be reason, that reason which is the constitutive principle of righteousness and truth. Only a slight amendment is needed to make the great saying of Hegel as accurate as it is profound. All that is, is reasonable; all that is reasonable is, or will be.

ALFRED W. BENN.

The Lower Slopes. By Grant Allen. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

THOUGH Mr. Allen allows us to range him with the lyric poets, lest we should suspect that even in thought he ever whispered "sublimi feriam sidera vertice," he adds an apologetic second title, which, however, as it is rather fantastic, we will suppress. But if he does not, save perhaps once, quite touch the stars, he need not fear to subside into the even ranks of our modern minor minstrels. "A rare and fitful votary at the shrine," as he calls himself, he has yet to learn the trick of their sweet jargon and of their impressively vague suggestion of just nothing at all. Having a good deal to say, and wanting badly to say it, and not caring overmuch how he says it, or whether we shall like it or not, the versatile and aggressive mocking-bird is not likely to be lost in the chorus of tom-tits. So this dainty little volume will not stand in the light of the numberless other little poetry books equally or still more elegant, nor in truth will they in its. For, after all, we are not everyone of us children or young ladies; and some few there are who can relish a partridge, even though he be a trifle tough and would have borne hanging another day. But they do not touch pastry.

When Petrarch blandly apologises for the versos which he had written "in sul mio primo giovenile errore," he disarms us by the plaintive appeal—"Spero trovar pietà non che perdono," which, as every wise poet knows, is the surest way to secure something else more flattering. A similar appeal is implied in the publication of this selection from Mr. Allen's early poems, and though it is not precisely hinted at—for that would imply retraction, a weakness foreign to his nature—the appeal must be admitted. We may therefore take it for granted that he has recalled—though we should be surprised if he had—whatever we choose to regard in his early verse as injudicious or unpleasing. What loophole then have we left for assault? Only the judgment which he has exercised in the present selection from his stores. Without knowing what has been rejected, we are rather in the dark; but my own impression is that they were not always those which we should have viewed with indifference or disapproval. Some that he has selected are likely to offend, and perhaps to be regarded as printed milestones indicating how much farther the author ventures to go in manuscript. Such a view is probably false, and for this reason. Throughout Mr. Allen's admirable work in so many various fields there seems to recur at intervals one defect, a momentary lapse of taste and judgment. He seems for an instant to have lost all perception of how a sentence will look in print, or whether it will jar upon the susceptibilities of those whom he wishes to conciliate. In a critic of such rare refinement and nicety, this can scarcely be attributed to native roughness or want of care. It is probably due to a nervous hesitation and over scrupulosity. Some of the most outrageous affectations ever printed have sprung from sincerest candour and humility. You feel something strongly; you write it spontaneously, and in perfect taste. You read it again in another mood, and doubts begin to arise. It looks so personal, so effusive—what will the world say to this épanchement de cœur?—suppose Fang should parody it in the Guillotine! So you hesitate, strike it out, restore it, doctor and tone it down, and end by printing it as a horrible, artificial, disgusting affectation. It is like spelling; once hesitate and you are lost. In the selection and revision of his early poems, Mr. Allen would be peculiarly liable to this nervous vacillation, and his second thoughts would probably be less judicious than his first.

The matter of these poems, the subjects, and the attitude of the author will probably cause more criticism than their manner. Here they will be discreetly ignored. Personally I protest against most of them: I expected to: I am satisfied. To find myself in agreement with Mr. Allen on any question whatever, critical, social, political—such axiomatic common ground as the weather, Mr. Gladstone, or the multiplication table does not count—would indeed be a painful breach in a friendship which has subsisted for a quarter of a century without one cloud of acquiescence, concession, or retraction on either side. His philosophy I denounce as heretical, yet delight in; it is a pleasure to confound his detestable cut-throat politics; his panaceas for social ills I regard as deadliest poison, yet I would not have him drop them. Alas, there are so few people left now who are really worth disputing with, or who know how to contradict with spirit. It may perhaps seem unfriendly not to pour out a few precious balms respecting such deliberate provocations as his "Psalm of the Commune" and his "Sunday Night at Mabilly," but I refrain—because I must. Pages of prose vituperation would only be opposing a musket volley to the Maxim guns of verse. Like Lobengula, I yield to the superior weapons in which I am wholly unskilled.

Yet, after all, what is one man's poison may be another's meat. There are a good many people about now who say they are sincere in thinking that Gambetta was a holy man, and the Commune a benignant and beneficent dispensation of Providence, and the oldest and most Scriptural of female professions a diabolical plot of the rich for degrading the poor. Seeing eye to eye with Mr. Allen the wrong side of the mirror, they will find what is best in their aspirations invigorated by the earnest fervour of his protests against vice and stupidity in high places, and their extravagance restrained by the tinge of pathetic pessimism which already streaked his early poems. Nor will even benevolent Orthodoxy fail to recognise the evangelistic spirit in which he preaches, in season and out of season, doctrines which promise no reward of pleasure, profit or popularity.

From the purely poetical point of view, Mr. Allen's verses are, in the first place, peculiarly interesting. Not always original, because he has not taken pains to cunningly suppress all that suggests imitation, they do display an unmistakable cachet. Some pieces, of course, betray youthful inexperience, and give the impression that his diction was inadequate to the thoughts which he wanted to express. But almost throughout we can trace that singular personality, which so many I could name, in all else as the poles asunder, have learnt to admire, to respect, and to love. There is the fervid, rapidly shifting, kaleidoscopic imagination, which instantly from one or two bright fragments evolves an elaborate symmetrical design of fancy; there is the instinctive felicity of expression in which, if only he took more pains, not even Mr. Stevenson would be his master; there is his attitude to all science and all truth, the humble awe of the novice energised by the enthusiasm of the zealot, and allied to this, that propagandist fervour, that mania of exposition, that remorseless insistence on lucid, detailed, and mathematically exhaustive explanation which sometimes exasperates us by its prosaic pedagogism; that varied range of acquired knowledge, and still more that unequalled universality of interest and curiosity; most of all his passionate, if somewhat distorted, sympathy with suffering, his love of justice and hatred of wrong, his abiding sense of the greater something which lies behind and above the sciences. Poetry which reflects, however imperfectly, these characteristics can hardly fail to be deeply interesting. The reader may easily trace them for himself through the different poems.

Mr. Allen's versification is either at times careless, or he holds some canons which I do not understand. He frequently crowds additional short syllables into the line, and once perpetrates a strange freak, thus :

"In being's endless, widening chain,

Through higher types and higher again."

Here and there, too, he wantonly uses ugly words and expressions; for instance, the Scotch words in his "Sunday at Braemar," "Pessimist," "Forget me Not," and the "Epitaph on Miss Levy," are perhaps the best examples of his pathetic lyrics. "A Vindication" is a reprisal of the Museum upon the Puseum: so innocently playful that they are not likely to suspect its noble and remorseless satire. No more ingenious or fantastic ballads have been written in English than that on "Evolution," which is here reprinted. Still more ingenious—at least harder to do well—is the little fairy poem, "In Coral Land"! It is as exquisitely tiny and fragile as can be, and, moreover, its tropical colour is just perfect. These beauties are dignified by a deeper import in the fine poem "Only an Insect," which appeared some years ago in the ACADEMY. Unfortunately, Mr. Allen has now altered three epithets with disastrous effect, and has restored the last verse which he suppressed before. It adds nothing to the effect; it is argumentative and ends with something akin to a quip. Suppress it, and the poem ends with a superb climax, the last line forming a pathetic little refrain or reminiscence, gently bringing the mind down from the heights of the abstract to the concrete example. The ancient poets understood this; our musicians understand it, who after the last note add a few simple instrumental bars.

I am by no means alone in thinking that this singular poem, so delicate yet so strong, so passionate yet so finely chiselled, if only it were widely known, would be enshrined among the rarest gems of English poetry.

E. PURCELL.

Junius Revealed. By his Surviving Grandson, H. R. Francis. (Longmans.)

THE chief merit of this volume lies in its brevity. Less than a hundred pages, title-page, preface, and everything included, are contained within its covers; and even of this small total not an insignificant number of paragraphs possess but little bearing on its subject. The quaintness of the dress of Sir Philip Francis, his penuriousness in trifles, his horror of printed circulars, and the grandiloquence of his language when excited over the weaknesses of his friends and relations, are all of them matters of considerable interest to his descendants, and even to students of an illustrious figure in the political world, while many of the characteristics are shared by other persons of less distinction in life; but they have slight, if any, relevancy to the discussion of the author of the Letters of Junius. Mr. H. R. Francis travels far and wide in search of matter which may seem to have some value in elucidating his theory. The letter from a distinguished military engineer, which appeared in the Times at the end of May, 1893, suggesting that a corroboration of the suspected identity of the author might be found in the name, "Francis Junius," of a popular and courageous preacher in the Netherlands in the sixteenth century, is even reprinted by him in his preface as supplying a conjecture worthy of acceptance as a valuable argument.

The main point in the volume consists of the identity with the feigned hand of Junius of the handwriting on an envelope containing some complimentary verses. A poetic effusion in honour of Miss Giles, a young lady of many accomplishments, was sent to her by some admirer in 1771, when Francis was at Bath. The envelope in which it was enclosed was extant very recently, and a facsimile of it was taken many years ago. "This envelope," says Mr. H. R. Francis, "is unquestionably in the feigned hand of Junius." Several years later, when the author of this volume was on a visit to Lady Francis Fuller, a daughter of the lady whose gifts of mind and body formed the subject of the poem, she produced for him some specimens of youthful poetry given to her by Sir Philip Francis, and among them was a copy of the lines which had been sent to Miss Giles. The value of this testimony, if it have any cogency whatever, turns on the handwriting of the original envelope; and the analyser of the value of arguments entertains no prepossession in favour of the evidence of experts in writing, even when such an authority as Mr. Chabot is brought upon the scene. Did not, for instance, another such inquirer, Mr. William Cramp, who believed Lord Chesterfield to have been the author of the epistles of Junius, publish a pamphlet to prove that the amanuensis employed for the copying of the letters was no other than a lady, the wife of Solomon Dayrolles? Have not many such persons of weight on this point contended that the Junian manuscripts were written in their author's natural handwriting; and was not Junius himself sometimes afraid lest his handwriting might come too often under the eye of others, and so afford a clue to his identity, a suspicion which could not have existed in his mind had his penmanship been feigned?

If this point is not accepted as proving conclusively the identification which Mr. Francis seeks to establish, the other pages of the little volume need not detain the enquirer for any length of time. The variations in spelling, such as "compleat" and "extream," which are brought forward as further corroborative testimony in favour of the authorship by Francis of the famous Letters, can be found at that date in many another person of good position and average education. Far more important in their bearing on the subject are the sentences in which Mr. Francis urges that the feelings and prejudices of Junius towards the leading politicians of the day met in the person of his grandfather more fully than in the case of any prominent character of that time. But though such arguments are not destitute of force, for in this point the Franciscan has much to urge, they cannot dispel the conviction, felt by most of us, that the author of Junius was a person of much greater authority, of much higher position in the world, than Sir Philip Francis ever succeeded in acquiring.

Considering the friendship of Sir Philip with Edward Dubois, and the part which this well-known editor and man of letters played in connexion with Sir Philip, it is a little ungrateful of Sir Philip's grandson to speak of him as "a Mr. Dubois" (p. 70).

W. P. COURTNEY.

Letters from the Western Pacific and Mashonaland, 1878-1891. By Hugh H. Romilly, C.M.G. Edited, with a Memoir, by his brother, Samuel H. Romilly. Introduction by Lord Stanmore. (David Nutt.)

A CAREFUL reading of this book will not help to allay the suspicion, entertained even by those who have not had their misgivings stimulated by actual experience, that all is not right in regard to the administration of the scattered territories over which England exercises lordship. Had Hugh Romilly intended to write an indictment of the Colonial and Foreign Offices, he could not have accomplished his purpose more effectually than by this temperate and almost unwilling recital of facts, as set down in private letters to his friends. For it is not only that in him a splendid fellow, one of the army of pioneers whose indomitable pluck and never-failing patience have gained for us our imperial position, was sacrificed needlessly; but it is made abundantly plain that Romilly was only one victim of the pernicious system which obtains at Downing-street. The ranks of our upper middle classes supply an abundance of such men as Romilly, with the result that we use them with cynical indifference to their well-being. Their lot is very similar to that which in the commercial world a humbler army of "sweated" are called upon to experience. Romilly's case was a pitiable one. In him we lost an Englishman singularly endowed with the capacity for serving his country, and more than ordinarily zealous in that service; a man, too, with a high sense of the abstract rights of humanity and of the particular rights of the aboriginal peoples. Over and over again he was left in the midst of savage and cannibal natives: a ruler with absolutely undefined powers, and with no means of enforcing his authority or of protecting himself should the natives prove hostile. It speaks volumes for his personal qualities that he was able to come through a variety of extremely difficult situations with a whole skin. He was moved rapidly from place to place, thrown on to the shore as it were with no authority to build himself a fortified residence, no provision accorded, as in the case of his office of Consul in the New Hebrides, for any kind of dwelling. Here he received no "general consular instructions"; and to complete the irony of the situation, he was censured for not complying with regulations of which he had never heard, and told to collect fees by means of official stamps, the stamps themselves not being forthcoming. In the end, at the early age of thirty-five, Romilly succumbed to the successive hardships to which his health had been exposed. Fever after fever, blood-poisoning, starvation, and unwholesome food, and above all the Robinson Crusoe-like isolation to which he was condemned in New Guinea and elsewhere, told at last upon a constitution exceptionally robust. A life which might have been spared to accomplish great things for his country was sacrificed; while one of the best of good fellows and straightest of men was taken away from an extremely large circle of friends, and a career, full of social and political promise, was arbitrarily closed.

One opens a book of this kind with misgivings. It is bulky, and one anticipates that it will prove to contain much that is trivial and redundant. But, although there is some little repetition of incident, almost every other page contains an interesting and even astonishing fact; while the frank candour of the man, and the cheerful, whole-hearted and conscientious way in which he did his work, endear him to us. He was a thorough Englishman, facing danger and glorying in it; and so long as he felt his labours were appreciated, and until the time when the callous indifference of Downing-street became too much for a sick man suffering terrible hardships to endure philosophically, nothing approaching a murmur escapes his lips. The pains he took to keep his mother in the dark as to his real position throws a pleasant light upon his character.

It was unwelcome to him to have to inflict punishment upon the inhabitants of various islands for outrages and murders which in nine or ten cases resulted from the aggressive cruelty of white men. But a much more congenial task next fell to his lot. The Queenslanders had unlawfully kidnapped a number of islanders, and it became Romilly's duty to return these natives to their various homes. This was a most difficult and intricate task. To effect a landing was in itself fraught, in many instances, with great danger, and in one case Romilly nearly lost his life by the capsizing of his boat. It must have been a bitter thing for him that these liberated labourers turned out afterwards to be the principal disturbers of the peace in the Pacific Islands; their association with lawless white men had done them no good.

The book is lightened by repeated touches of humour. Romilly's keen sense of the ridiculous must often have stood him in good stead. The Pacific islanders are evidently highly emotional, but their emotions are very much on the surface. When Romilly left Rotumah, the men and women were in tears; but he discovered afterwards that an hour sufficed for their complete recovery. He tells us that in Fiji the roads over the hills are cut straight up and down, going over the highest peaks, the reason being that it was necessary for the natives, when these roads were made, to get an uninterrupted view of the country as often as possible to guard against ambushes. The bridges, too, seem to be designed to impede rather than facilitate travel, for the horses constantly tumbled through them into the creeks and had to be dug out of the mud. The Fijian mummies appear to indulge in pranks not unlike those which beguile the fellahin of Egypt; but the account of a bird—a megapode—which lays an egg bigger than her body, must be taken, as Mr. Samuel Romilly says, with a certain reservation. These islanders have some pretty fancies, for at Rotumah the girls showed their sentiments toward Romilly by sticking him all over with flowers, so that he looked much like a jack-in-the-green. They appear to be absolutely devoid of certain moral qualities, gratitude included. They never offer thanks for benefits received, though they cherish a lively expectation of favours to come. Like the Japs, they never kiss; while in Rotumah, the Sau and Mua, dual rulers, suggest points of resemblance with the Mikado and Tycoon of Japan, though the analogy is by no means complete. They have some wonderful legends, too; and the Rotumah Hercules may be commended to the students of folk-lore. Their fancy takes a practical turn sometimes, as shown by the clever way in which the Papuan girls contrived to inveigle the bluejackets out of their tobacco and knives.

Cannibalism in many of the islands is evidently as rife as ever, and some of the stories Romilly tells are not a little gruesome. The digestive capacities of the Papuans are wonderful; their feasts last for a fortnight, and the meals go on without intermission. Pig is their favourite animal food, as it is of many other primitive peoples, our own agricultural labourers, for instance; but they are adroit fishermen, and are fond of a fish diet, and by no means despise kangaroo and wild boar, though they do not appear to put themselves to the trouble of killing these animals singly: they prefer to take them en masse, firing the bush, and driving them into an enclosure, and spearing them. Romilly certainly did not get much chance of indulging his sportsmanlike propensities; his deeds of daring lay in other directions. One of these may be fitly mentioned in conclusion. In Fiji a native dinner is brought to an end by drinking kava. The natives chew a quid of yangona for about ten minutes, and deposit it in a big bowl, which constitutes a loving cup, from which everyone is expected to drink. One shudders vicariously; but when one remembers that presumptuous zeal for trying the quality of all the strange drinks exposed to the unwary at the Colonial Exhibition prompted one to swallow a glass of kava, one shudders for oneself.

J. STANLEY LITTLE.

NEW NOVELS.

The Greater Glory. By Maarten Maartens. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

The White Aigrette. By Vin Vincent. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Baptist Lake. By John Davidson. (Ward & Downey.)

A Modern Xanthippe. By Walter T. Arnold. (Sonnenschein.)

Deferred Pay; or a Major's Dilemma. By Lieut.-Col. W. H. M'Causland. (Digby, Long & Co.)

My Dead Self. By William Jameson. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and other Stories. By Jane Nelson. "Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

If Maarten Maartens' art were painting, he would have produced canvases filled with figures as the Old Masters did. But—and in this he would be unlike some of the Old Masters—in a picture where all was definite his principal figures would have stood out clear and unmistakable in the highest of high lights. The stage of The Greater Glory is crowded with personages; there are so many that of the host but few remain on the mind. These few, however, are masterpieces. Baron Rexelaer, of Deynum, the old ruined nobleman with only the best vices of aristocracy, pride of race and pride of place, makes a strong contrast to the impostor Count Rexelaer, who stoops to base and cowardly intrigues, but rises as the other declines. The wives are also contrasted—the White Baroness, the gentle high-souled lady with her rigid Romanism, and the Mulatto Countess, coarse, ignorant, and self-indulgent. Their very children are contrasts: the Baron has an only daughter, the Count an only son. The story is a bold one. Above what, with grim irony, he calls "high life"—the sordid and seamy side of which he portrays with an unflinching hand—Maarten Maartens brings out the higher life, "the greater glory," of pure motives, of great thoughts, of self-sacrifice. The reader is made to see the veritable truth behind appearances, to which it so often gives the lie; and the harmony pervading the book consists of combinations of the air set in the beautiful argument to the story: "There be climbings which ascend to the depths of infamy; there be also—God is merciful!—most infamous fallings into heaven." The Count climbs, the Baron falls. The episode of the dying Marquis, who so strangely descends upon Deynum, yet more strangely to fulfil the destinies of the Rexelaers, is one of the greatest things in the book. He and his servant Antoine, whose religious faith gives his scoffing master his only hold over him, are remarkably true to human nature. But it would be difficult to point to any character or incident which is not true, either to human nature or to that high order of imagination which may safely be left to supplement experience. The story is as noble in teaching as it is bold in treatment, and among its charms should be mentioned the strokes of humour which so happily serve to light up its serious purpose.

Daisy, Jack, Charlie, good old well-worn names, do duty yet again in The White Aigrette, which is, of course, a story of soldier life. Jack Fortoscu, the soldier, is a middle-aged captain, with a past (several pasts, in fact), curly greyish hair, an overwhelming load of debts, a fascinating manner, and a tender heart. In spite of everything, one likes Jack, perhaps because Daisy Gardiner, the beautiful young heiress, who is really a charming girl and not a bad judge of character, loves him so absolutely. Charlie, the boy-lover, is good. In contrast to Jack, with his sins and his ever-ready belief in all that religion teaches, is Captain Abel Brown, "son of Hatswell & Brown, ironpolishers, of Manchester," who is an agnostic, a self-effacing, honest, blameless man, and a brave soldier. But Jack was physically brave too. One needs only to learn that Daisy's father was a financier, and that his business affairs are left to the care of his partner, "Mr. Wallace, of the Stock Exchange," to understand that ruin looms large and near. Ruin comes; the Gardiners find out who were their true friends; and Daisy rejects Jack, who goes thereupon to Egypt, and enters into battle. There is nothing new in the story, either of matter or thought; but the manner of its telling is so artlessly engaging that one is carried pleasantly on to the end.

When you have a nineteenth-century boy of fifteen and a half, who is desperately in love and anxious to be married, the parents who are almost at a word induced to consent to his marriage are a small and secondary surprise to you. This is but one of several marvels in Mr. Davidson's Baptist Lake. The hero himself is only credible on the supposition of his mother's husband, whose bane he has been all his life, that he has no soul—is, in fact, a male Undine. But Undine's gay mischief and innocent thoughtlessness become in him a deliberate system of wickedness, social fraud, and villainy. Even though you leave him married, you have not the remotest hope that marriage, which gave Undine a soul, will do anything for him except, probably, kill his wife's soul. An approved way of ending a story just now is to drive your hero or heroine into the most uncomfortable position possible, and there to leave off, with a problem unsolved. It is only the inventor of Baptist Lake who could cope with the married life of that singular creature and Alice Meldrum, and one questions whether even he could make much of it. The book is clever and brilliant beyond all doubt, at times even fascinating; but it lacks sanity. The characters pose as realistic studies of ordinary persons. Measured by that standard, they are wanting. Measured by the standard of extravagance, they are wanting too: from that point of view they are too ordinary. One wonders here and there whether Mr. Davidson has not had some actual person in his eye, whom he dresses in fantastic colours. This is especially the case with Baptist himself, who is full of reminiscences of a literary person (though Baptist is not literary) well known in society. The most lifelike people in the book are Mr. and Mrs. Inglis, a hearty, healthy, honest Scotch couple; but their consent to their school-boy-son's wedding puts them out of such a category after all, while their previous sober and rational ways disqualify them for any other.

Mr. Arnold's subject is of a somewhat time-worn kind, which has of late fallen much into disrepute; but from his point of view A Modern Xanthippe is amusing enough. The French setting of the story may give it a fresh attraction for English readers, though everyone is familiar, in Thackeray and Dickens, with foreign noblemen who captivate all the women in a book at a glance, but prove on further investigation to be thinly disguised rogues and swindlers. Nevertheless, by means of a couple of heroes of this sort, M. Préalé restores the happiness of his home, which Madame Préalé, acting on the advice of Madame Pichinette, a redoubtable man-hater and the fictitious Count's first conquest, had done her best to ruin. The cleverest thing in the book is the sketch of young Victor Vasistas, who began life as a grocer's assistant. But the muse was too strong for him. He must write. He and his charming young wife go to Paris, innocent as a couple of children; and he divides his time there between reading his MSS. to any one he can persuade to listen to them, and falling suddenly and hopelessly captive to a fair actress. The honesty and unruffled sanity of M. Préalé is refreshing in the midst of feminine passions, intrigues, and frantic attempts to rise to a dubiously better station.

The Major in Colonel M'Causland's Deferred Pay does not leave any distinct impression of his personality on one's mind, but still more hazy is the "deferred pay." On the last page one gives up the quest for the missing money, and concludes that the title is metaphorical after all—though even then the appropriateness is rather far to seek. The Major, who as a boy begins life in a really clever chapter or two, is, so to say, a string on which to hang a few more or less isolated adventures and situations. Pathetic, one fears Colonel M'Causland could never be, but funny he certainly is now and then—notably in the premature burial of Titus Flanagan, and the young officer's temperance crusade. But the situations hang so ill together, and the hero and heroine are so little interesting, that the best bits seem to miss fire for lack of support. It should be said, however, that, though the hero is not interesting, he is decidedly ingenuous. He commits two terrible acts—murders his friend, and buries a man alive—and the artless way in which he puts his finger on the exact moment when he has suffered enough to expiate these dark deeds, and considers himself thenceforth guilt-free, is very captivating.

Gabriel Forsyth—in My Dead Self—the prosperous young bank manager, is less interesting than Gabriel Forsyth the forger and convict; but more interesting than either, despite the muddled state of affairs around him, is Gabriel Forsyth the ticket-of-leave man. There is a sweetness born of suffering, and the virtue of an unquestioning self-sacrifice, about the silver-haired father who, for her own sake, will not make himself known to the daughter he worships. Many of the situations are unnecessary and forced, but they do what they are meant to do—they bring out the character of Forsyth: all of them, in fact, are the outcome of his schemes to help everybody without betraying his own identity. There are few novels in which characters and plot are both excellent. Indeed, a reviewer is nowadays content if one of the two can be called good. The present reviewer has little doubt that, with all its defects, the plot of this tale will fully satisfy most readers.

Jane Nelson is apparently doing for the settlers of the Far West what Mary E. Wilkins has done for the New Englanders. In the collection of stories in her "Pseudonym" volume there are many quiet, faithful studies of character, as it is moulded, and as it develops itself, in that sparsely-populated region. But the incidents are so very quiet and unmarked that two of the titles—"The Rousing of Mrs. Potter" and "A Tumultuous Engagement"—are a little misleading. It is true that, in the latter story, a lover and his lass have several long duets, but they are duets in a minor key. Perhaps the story best suited to the writer's manner is "A Hope Deferred," which relates the setting out of two old people to visit their beloved son on the occasion of the birth of his firstborn.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Poets' Praise, from Homer to Swinburne. Collected and arranged, with Notes, by Estelle Davenport Adams. (Elliot Stock.) Mrs. Davenport Adams is to be congratulated—first, on having hit upon a new kind of anthology; and, secondly, on having carried out her design so successfully. Poetry is so largely an imitative art, and its professors are bound together by so close a tie of mutual appreciation, that it is natural they should write much, and well, about one another. The bards of our own day have been specially devoted to this amiable practice, which is certainly to be preferred to the satire of earlier generations. Walter Savage Landor and Matthew Arnold excelled in mingling criticism with sympathy; the threnodies of Mr. Swinburne, the memorial sonnets of Mr. Theodore Watts, and the elegies of Mr. William Watson rank among their finest and most characteristic efforts. The collector of this anthology has erred, if at all, on the side of comprehension. A good deal, certainly, is included that falls below even a moderate standard; but the mediocre is here permissible, not only as a foil for the good but as an expression of the common voice. Whatever omissions might be noticed are probably due to difficulties of copyright. The arrangement, in chronological order, is excellent, though we do not care so much for the notes.

"THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY."—Book-Song: an Anthology of Poems of Books and Bookmen from Modern Authors. Edited by Gleeson White. (Elliot Stock.) As the editor admits, this is not the first collection of poems about books that has been formed in recent years. Its justification lies in the fact that the "Book-Lover's Library" would manifestly be incomplete without such an anthology. And, as a further recommendation, it is confined to the work of living writers, who happen to have been extraordinarily prolific in this sort of library confessions. The praise of books by former generations of poets is reserved for a companion volume by another editor. There, probably, we shall find more concerning books as repositories of learning and tools of trade: concerning the vast national libraries and the toil of scholars and historians. Here, our contemporaries sing, in their pretty way, learnt from Mr. Austin Dobson and Mr. Andrew Lang, mostly about the volumes of their friends, or their own success in the innocent sport of book-hunting. Two exceptions, however, may be noted: Mr. Swinburne, who owns a very choice collection of Elizabethan literature; and Mr. Theodore Watts, who is rich in presentation copies—both of whom prefer to write, not of books, but of their authors. For the rest, this little volume represents faithfully and creditably one of the dominant tastes of the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

Frangipanni: the Story of Her Infatuation, told by Murray Gilchrist. (Derby: Frank Murray.) The story of the infatuation of Frangipanni, as the title-page has it, is equally (if not more) the story of the infatuation of Thomas Arden. It is a story of blind passion on both sides, but the penalty is borne by Arden and his poor wife Nancy. The story is unpleasant throughout and horrible in its culmination; but it is written with great power and imagination from beginning to end. According to modern theories of art the book is justifiable enough. Even if we take a high moral ground, the nemesis which overtakes Arden is a strong antidote to any temptation to sympathise with the reckless manner in which the principal characters abandon themselves to their passion. But it is not a book virginibus puerisque; and we very much doubt if it was worth writing at all, except to exhibit the literary power of the author. It reminds us in many ways of Madame Bovary, but has not the justification of that masterpiece: namely, that it is a profound study of modern life and character.

The Last Day of the Carnival. By J. Kostromitin. (Fisher Unwin.) We are informed that this is the first of a series, in which the author intends to give in a literary form "an important account of present social and political life in Russia." The author himself tells us that he had no intention of writing a novel, and that he only framed his plot to incorporate facts and details of everyday life. He would indeed prefer that what is here stated were mere imagination, but unfortunately he must conclude his sketch in the words of the great humanist: "It is so, I cannot say otherwise, God help me!" If the day described in this book be a real day from a Russian's life, then Poland is avenged. A more hopeless condition of any people can not be conceived by any stretch of fancy. The book describes the bankruptcy of all classes in the Russian empire—bankrupt both of money and of hope. There is not a gleam of light, save the author's own wit. The dialogue is racy and humorous. The following is a specimen:—

"'It's really dreadful,' says Grouseff [the usurer]. 'Nobody pays any interest. I have not one customer who is not in arrears.'

"'Sell them up! Sell them up quick, and put the money in your own pocket,' answers the civiliser.

"'Times are changed now; you caught the right moment, but there is nobody to buy; the Jews even are expelled.'"

There is also the forester who wishes to start a local industry—"a splendid industry"—the manufacture of rods. But everyone who appreciates wit and irony, whether he takes an interest in things Russian or not, should read this tragic but most amusing book.

"THE SCOTT LIBRARY."—Prose Writings of Wordsworth. Selected and edited, with an Introduction, by William Knight, LL.D. (Walter Scott.) This volume is intended, like the rest of the series in which it appears, for readers with little knowledge of literature and scant opportunities for increasing their store. It is well that they should be offered any selection from Wordsworth's prose; and we need not, perhaps, be too critical about the methods of its production. Prof. Knight knows his subject, and has abundance of material at his disposal; but we are sorry that he has chosen to omit, at his own discretion, "sentences and entire paragraphs" from the passages quoted, without at least indicating exactly where he has done so; and to provide titles, occasionally sentimental, for his somewhat disjointed extracts. Wordsworth, however, is one of those whom it is most permissible to cut down, for there is much dross mingled with his gold; and the contents of this volume have been prepared from many sources never before brought together. So that it does really present us with some of "the most interesting specimens of his prose writing," and "may prepare the way for a more complete edition of his entire works than any that at present exists."

"DILETTANTE LIBRARY."—William Blake: His Life, Character, and Genius. By Alfred T. Story. (Sonnenschein.) "My business is not to gather gold, but to make glorious shapes, expressing god-like sentiments," said Blake in his lordly manner; and again,

"Shall painting be confined to the sordid drudgery of facsimile representation of merely mortal and perishing substance, and not be, as poetry and music are, elevated into its own proper sphere of invention and visionary conception? No, it shall not be so. Painting, as well as poetry and music, exists and exults in immortal thoughts."

Mr. Story considers that the latter utterance contains "the vitalising principles that underlay all Blake's work," and deduces from it an explanation of his stupendous imaginative successes and technical failures. The theory is reasonable in itself, and consistently supported in this little volume, which contains a very sane, though enthusiastic, estimate of Blake's life and work, eschewing the elaborate symbolism constructed by Messrs. Ellis and Yeats. Mr. Story also gives a clear and readable outline of the difficult prophetic books, but we could wish that his own English style were more correct and musical.

"BELL'S ENGLISH CLASSICS."—Johnson's Life of Addison. With Introduction and Notes by F. Ryland. (Bell.) This edition has been prepared for schools, and contains all the information which it is desirable for a student of the subject to know, with a certain amount of added scholarship. Without claiming to be an original critic, Mr. Ryland has acquired some right to speak by his industry, clearness, and accuracy. We fear that he would not attract any boy with a fixed distaste for literature; but the hard-working, whether under the influence of enthusiasm or of examinations, will find him a welcome and helpful guide. He unfortunately does not avoid the fault, well nigh universal among editors of school literature, of inserting casual references to books and persons with which the pupils are certain to be unfamiliar; but he seldom quotes contradictory authorities, and, in general, adopts the dogmatic method of criticism to which alone they will give heed. His introduction is too closely packed with ideas and his notes with facts, but both are concise and to the point. On the whole, we should say that they would be most useful in the hands of a good teacher, who could judiciously omit and expand.

Three Letters and an Essay by John Ruskin, 1838-1841. Found in his tutor's desk. (George Allen.) The wisdom of searching a man's desk for his unpublished manuscripts, or those of his friends, is always questionable; and the publication of our findings generally deserves more positive condemnation. There is an interest, of course, in the early or crude utterances of a great man, though we doubt its legitimacy; and the contents of the present volume form no exception to the general rule. We have here an attractive, though youthful, essay on literature, in answer to the question: "Does the perusal of works of fiction act favourably or unfavourably on the moral character?" in which Mr. Ruskin defends imaginative literature in general, and Scott, Lytton, and Byron in particular; and three letters on travel and on the ministry as a profession. From the latter perhaps, the most striking passage describes his two impressions of Rome:—

"If you take a carriage and drive to express points of lionisation, I believe that most people of good taste would expect little and find less. The Capitol is a melancholy rubbishy square of average Palladian-modern; the Forum, a good group of meshed columns, just what, if it were got up, as it very easily might be, at Virginia Water, we should call a piece of humbug—the kind of thing one is sick to death of in "compositions"; the Coliseum I always considered a public nuisance, like Jim Crow; and the rest of the ruins are mere mountains of shattered, shapeless brick, covering miles of ground with a Babylon-like weight of red tiles. But if, instead of driving, with excited expectation, to particular points, you saunter leisurely up one street and down another, yielding to every impulse, peeping into every corner, and keeping your observation active, the impression is exceedingly changed. There is not a fragment, a stone, or a chimney, ancient or modern, that is not in itself a study, not an inch of ground that can be passed over without its claim of admiration and offer of instruction, and you return home in hopeless conviction that, were you to substitute years for the days of your appointed stay, they would not be enough for the estimation or examination of Rome."

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Clarendon Press announces a posthumous volume of Freeman's History of Sicily, covering the period from the tyranny of Dionysios to the death of Agathokles. It has been edited from his MSS. by his son-in-law, Mr. Arthur J. Evans, who has also added supplements and notes. It will be illustrated with maps and a plate of coins.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will issue early in April an English edition of the unpublished correspondence of Cavour, translated by Mr. A. J. Butler. The proofs of the translation have been read by Count Nigra, who was for some time secretary to Cavour and afterwards Italian ambassador at Paris.

MR. STOPFORD A. BROOKE's new work, Tennyson: his Art and Relation to Modern Life, is completed, and will be published by Messrs. Isbister about the middle of April. Besides a critical survey of the principal poems, the volume deals with Tennyson's faculty as an artist, his relation to Christianity and to social politics, his attitude towards nature (in which he differed from the great poets of the century), and his speculative theology.

WE understand that the Bishop of Durham will contribute a preface to the volume of sermons on social subjects, which is to be published shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock, under the title of Lombard-street in Lent.

MESSRS. DAVID BRYCE & SON, of Glasgow, expect to issue Mr. Clouston's History of Hieroglyphic Bibles in the course of the next fortnight. Mr. Clouston has traced the first English version of those curious children's picture-books through a Dutch version to an Augsburg source—"Geistliche Herzens Einbildungen," or "Spiritual Heart-Fancies" (1687). The bulk of the volume, as originally designed, has been nearly doubled by including an account of the principal block-books of the fifteenth century, and a fuller description of Lord Denbigh's unique MS. Bible in Rebus (or Mnemonic Bible, as it may also be called), written probably about 1460, and of European books of emblems. The volume contains upwards of thirty facsimile plates, and fifty-six quaints, printed from the original blocks employed in a "Hieroglyphic Bible" published at London in the first decade of the present century.

A NEW volume of devotional papers, by the Bishop of Winchester, entitled The Tenderness of Christ, is ready for immediate issue.

MESSRS. METHUEN & Co. will publish very shortly a new novel, in three volumes, by Sir Baring Gould. It is entitled The Queen of Love, and it is a story of the Cheshire salt mines. The same firm are also about to issue a new novel, in two volumes, by Mrs. Oliphant, entitled The Prodigals.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE, having decided to issue further volumes of fiction in the form in which George Egerton's Keynotes appeared, have arranged a "Keynotes" series, of which two volumes are now passing through the press. The first to be ready will be The Dancing Faun, by Miss Florence Parr, the actress who has been associated with several Ibsen productions, and who has just opened at the Avenue Theatre in Dr. Todhunter's "Comedy of Sighs." Later a translation, by Miss Lena Milman, of Dostoevsky's Poor Folk will appear, and to this volume Mr. George Moore has written a preface.

THE next addition to the "Gospel and the Age" series of sermons will be from the pen of the Rev. W. J. Dawson, author of "The Makers of Modern English," "Poems and Lyrics," &c. The title of the volume is The Comrade Christ, and it is composed of a selection from the discourses delivered at Highbury Quadrant Church within the last year or so.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, will publish immediately a study of Scottish life and character, by Mr. P. Hay Hunter, author of "My Ducats and my Daughter." It will deal, in a spirit of uncompromising realism, with questions of church and state as they present themselves to rustic minds in the Lothians. The title chosen is James Inwick, Ploughman and Elder.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly publish a new volume in "The Tavistock Library," entitled Sir Joseph's Heir, by Capt. Claude Bray.

MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER has in the press a story entitled In a Kingdom by the Sea, by Mr. Thomas Dun Robb. The scene is laid in the West Highlands.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS, of Hull, has ready for early publication Old Church Customs. Ceremonies and superstitions connected with holy days, baptism, marriage, burial, and ringing will receive attention.

A NEW edition of Archdeacon Perowne's Our High Priest in Heaven is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for immediate publication.

MR. W. E. HENLEY has retired from the conduct of the National Observer, which he has edited for the last five years and a half. The control of the journal will, in future, be undertaken, not by Mr. Frank Harris, as was announced, but by Mr. J. E. Vincent, the author of the Life of the late Duke of Clarence.

THE next number of the Jewish Quarterly Review will contain a lengthy paper by Mr. C. G. Montefiore, entitled "First Impressions of Paul." Other articles are "Some Aspects of Rabbinic Theology," by Mr. S. Schechter; "Joseph Zabara and his Book of Delight," by Mr. I. Abrahams; and "M. Leo Errera on the Jews of Russia," by Miss Löwy.

PROF. A. B. DAVIDSON, of Edinburgh, is contributing a series of articles on "The Theology of Isaiah" to the Expository Times. The first appears in the April number.

WE quote the following from the New York Critic:

"Stone & Kimball announce the preparation of an edition of the writings of Edgar Allan Poe, under the editorship of Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman and Prof. George E. Woodberry of Columbia College. The effort is to make a standard and final edition—for the library, the book-lover, and the general reader. It will contain a biography by Prof. Woodberry, and critical introductions to the poems, tales, and literary writings. There will be a thorough re-arrangement of the works; a careful revision of text—based on Poe's maturest judgment—and a correction of much of Mr. Griswold's work, which has been mechanically followed by later editors. The volumes will be illustrated with portraits, facsimiles, &c., reproduced by photogravure. The printing will be done on specially made English paper with deckled edges, and in all respects the manufacture will be as perfect as it is possible to make it. The edition is to be complete in ten volumes, and will be issued in large and small paper forms. The large paper edition will contain a series of eight illustrations to the tales by Mr. Aubrey Beardsley—illustrations not included in the small paper edition."

THE Hon. Roden Noel will give a public reading of a selection from his own poems on the afternoon of Tuesday next at the Hove Town Hall, Brighton, in aid of a local hospital for children.

THE following are the lecture arrangements after Easter at the Royal Institution: Prof. J. A. Fleming, four lectures on "Electric Illumination"; Prof. J. W. Judd, three lectures on "Rubies: their Nature, Origin, and Metamorphoses"; the Rev. W. H. Dallinger, three lectures on "The Modern Microscope"; Mr. F. Seymour Haden, two lectures on "The Etching Revival"; Prof. J. F. Bridge, two lectures on "Music: 1. Musical Gestures; 2. Mozart as a Teacher"; Prof. Dewar, three lectures on "The Solid and Liquid States of Matter"; Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie, three lectures on "Egyptian Decorative Art"; Mr. H. D. Traill, two lectures on "Literature and Journalism"; Mr. John A. Gray, two lectures on "Life among the Afghans"; Captain Abney, three lectures on "Colour Vision" (the Tyndall Lectures); Mr. Robert W. Lowe, three lectures on "The Stage and Society." The Friday evening meetings will be resumed on April 6, when a discourse will be given by Prof. Victor Horsley, on "Destructive Effects of Projectiles"; succeeding discourses will be given by Prof. J. J. Thomson, Dr. J. G. Garson, Prof. H. Marshall Ward, Dr. G. Sims Woodhead, the Rev. S. Baring Gould, Prof. A. M. Worthington, Sir Howard Grubb, Prof. Oliver Lodge, and Prof. C. V. Boys.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TWO HANDS.

I.

THIS is her hand, her cool and fragrant hand:
Long lissome fingers, soft as the south wind;
A roseleaf palm, which Love's own kiss would find

Sweet as the rose; and many a thin blue strand
Vein'd in the white, our homage to command.

All grace of form and colour has combined
To give us this fair index of a mind
Pure as her hands, and not less nobly plann'd.

Ah, tender toys, so slight, so flexible!

Can they too share the strenuous work of life,
And help their owner to do long and well

The duties of a woman and a wife;
Or, may they brook no labour more severe
Than just to charm the eye and soothe the ear?

II.

THIS is her hand, her large and rugged hand:
Strong nervous fingers, stiff with homely toil,
Yet capable: for labour cannot spoil

Their native vigour, nor their swift command
Of household tools, indoors or on the land.

What if rough work must harden and must soil
Her massive palms? They are but as a foil
To that sweet face which all can understand.

Yes, all enjoy the beauty of her face:

But few perceive the pathos and the power
Of those broad hands, or feel that inner grace

Of which they are the symbol and the flower:
The grace of lowly help; of duty done
Unselfishly, for all—for anyone.

M.

OBITUARY.

J. M. GRAY.

BANISHING from this page anything but the briefest and driest expression of the regrets of a friendship now closed by death, it may be possible to me—because I think he would have wished it—to set before such readers as he most esteemed a very slight record of the work and characteristics of J. M. Gray.

Mr. Gray died at his rooms in Edinburgh on Thursday of last week, in early middle age, after only a few days of severe and recognised illness. He had held for several years an official post of which he was the first occupant: he was curator of a comparatively new institution, now nobly housed in the Scottish capital—the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. Since its establishment he had devoted to its interests, and to that order of work with which those interests were associated, his fullest energies, his absolute passion of research and of accuracy. In official and other circles there was, I think, no grudging acknowledgment of the quite exceptional labour which Gray never scrupled to bestow upon an office that might very easily have been treated as a sinecure; and accordingly he had been marked out of late as the probable recipient of some further official distinction. His occupation of that post in Scotland gave a turn to his pursuits, more especially towards antiquarian study; and in regard to portraiture, it had certainly gradually come about that there were not three men in England whose knowledge exceeded his own. But, while he had to some extent become a specialist in that branch of art or of art history with which he was officially concerned, and while that had undoubtedly diminished his possibilities of work in other directions, he never lost interest in pictorial art generally, or in the literature which, in past days at least, has done so much to inspire it. He followed with the closeness of a serious student—not as an amiable dilettante—most of the modern movements in belles lettres, especially in poetry; and if his sympathies were not always with such imaginative writing as is most robust and fearless, they were at all events with that which is elevated and graceful. Of painting—notwithstanding the remains of a leaning to Pre-Raphaelitism—he was a capable and tolerant judge: apt, indeed, sometimes to read into the insufficient performances of those he loved the subtlety of his own mind and the tenderness of his own nature. Only lately we received from him a detailed exposition of the work of a contemporary landscape artist (Mr. Lawton Wingate), whose cause he had been among the earliest to espouse; and one of the very first contributions of importance which he made to art biography and criticism was the excellent and sympathetic essay on George Manson, the young Scottish water colour painter who died so young, and whose reputation the writings of J. M. Gray substantially and justifiably advanced. As a contributor to the pages of the journal in which these words are printed, his name must be known, and, as I am assured, his work was valued for qualities of criticism and of knowledge which were peculiarly his own. Of his writings published elsewhere it is advisable, perhaps, to place first a group of elaborate and thoroughly studied monographs on the treasures of certain large Scottish houses. These (that on Penicuik especially) he wrote with grace and ease and personal interest, as well as with knowledge. Next, there must be named—and merely named to-day—that volume, lately reviewed in these columns, in which with almost unexampled industry, and with great discretion, Gray did his ample part towards confirming the reputation of the Tassies. And, lastly, where I could mention much besides of well applied effort and appropriate endeavour, there must not be forgotten a laborious and sympathetic monograph which he contributed, if I remember rightly, to Blackwood's Magazine, and in which were set forth many new facts having relation to the life, the paintings, and the etchings of Wilkie's distinguished friend, Andrew Geddes. Some of these writings show the learning, and all of them the refinement of taste and the sincere and generous enthusiasm, by which the mind of Gray was certainly characterised.

F. W.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of the Revue de Paris contains the account, by Mme. James Darmesteter (Mary Robinson) of how Messire Jehan Froissard journeyed to the court of Gaston Phébus, Count of Foix, and of the curious things he saw and heard during his sojourn with the sovereign of Béarn; an article on M. Gréard's recent volume "Prévost-Paradol"; the first part of a nouvelle, by Edward Rod, entitled "Jusqu'au bout de la faute"; and a series of Letters of the late Octave Feuillet, in which he relates to his wife the incidents of court life at Compiègne and Fontainebleau under the Second Empire—hunting parties, theatrical performances, and other gay doings. The following passage is characteristic:—

... "Le soin des toilettes, des répétitions, tout cela enchante les petites dames. Pour moi, je me fais venir une perruque, un carrick, et un pantalon insensé, pour un rôle de voyageur; et l'idée de paraître en cette tenue et plus tard en maillot à paillettes devant Leurs Majestés me cause par moments un profond dégoût de la vie; mais je deviens philosophe."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BLOCHVILLE, Marquise de. Pensées et souvenirs. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 8 fr. 50 c.
 FORSCHUNGEN zur Kultur- u. Literaturgeschichte Bayerns. Hrg. v. K. v. Reinhardt-Günner. 2. Buch. München: Franz. 6 M.
 GALLAIS, E. La Poste, et les moyens de communication des peuples à travers les siècles. Paris: Baillière. 5 fr.
 KKKUL, R. Ueber e weibliche Gewandstatue aus der Werkstatt der Parthenontetelgiguren. Berlin: Spemann. 10 M.
 PAVILLI, X. de. Mac-Mahon, Maréchal de France. Paris: Tolra. 5 fr.
 WANDERER, F. Bücherzeichen des 15. u. 16. Jahrh. v. Dürer, Burgsmair u. A. Berlin: Stargardt. 5 M.
 YRIARTE, Ch. Livres de souvenirs de Maso di Bartolommeo dit Masaccio. Paris: Rothschild. 60 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- CORPUS scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum. Vol. XXVIII. 8. Augustin de Genesi ad litteram libri XII. etc., rec. I. Zycha. Leipzig: Freytag. 16 M. 60 Pf.
 RACH, Ch. Die Offenbarung des Johannes, untersucht nach ihrer Zusammensetzung, u. der Zeit ihrer Entstehung. Leipzig: Harrasowitz. 3 bl. 60 Pf.
 REGNAUD, P. Les premières formes de la religion et de la tradition dans l'Inde et la Grèce. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BEATIN, L. E. Les grandes Guerres civiles du Japon 1156—1392. Paris: Leroux. 20 fr.
 CAPITANOVICH, G. J. Die Eroberung v. Alexandria durch Peter I. v. Lusignan, König v. Cypern 1365. Berlin: Hirsch. 1 M.
 D'ARCY, Pierre Lanery. Bibliographie raisonnée et analytique des ouvrages relatifs à Jeanne d'Arc. Paris: Leclerc. 30 fr.
 DOUAI, C. Acta capitulorum provincialium ordinis fratrum praedicatorum. Fasc. I. 1239—1326. Paris: Picard. 20 fr.
 ENGEL, A. et R. SEEBURG. Traité de numismatique du moyen âge. T. 2. Paris: Leroux. 15 fr.
 GUILLON, E. La France à Minorque sous Louis XV. Paris: Leroux. 5 fr. 50 c.
 JANKE, G. Hans Georg v. Arnim. Lebensbild e. protestant. Feldherm u. Staatsmannes aus d-r Zeit d. 30jähr. Krieger. Leipzig: Hirzel. 8 M.
 LECTON, L. Le Consulat: origines, histoire, organisation etc. Paris: Lethielleux. 8 fr.
 MITNIKILSKOY, A. a. dem Statarchiv u. der Stadtbibliothek zu Breslau. Breslau: Morgens. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- GYLON, Hngo. Traité analytique des orbites absolues des huit planètes principales. Paris: Hermann. 35 fr.

- HUMBERT, A. Myriapodes des environs de Genève. Basel: Georg. 20 M.
 SCHULZE, E. Florae germanicae Pteridophyta. Kiel: Lipsius. 80 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- LEHRBÜCHER der Seminars f. orientalische Sprachen zu Berlin. 12. Bd. Berlin: Spemann. 45 M.
 TOUBERTINI, F. Le commentaire du San-Ze-King. Basel: Georg. 6 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED.

IV.—The Logie Elphinstone Stone: Ett and Pett.

Bodleian Library, Oxford.

We have now had so many instances of Pictish e = Irish and Modern Scottish Gaelic ai that I think no impartial student can doubt that ett and ehle = ait and ai(h)te. The Logie Elphinstone Stone, in the Garioch, Aberdeenshire, will not only give us an earlier form than any of these, but will furnish a clew to the etymological meaning at the root of them.

This stone and two others, with a fourth now destroyed, stood near each other on the neighbouring moor of Carden (Lord Southesk, Oghams of Scotland); doubtless they marked the four corners of the same property. All three bear Pictish symbols, and the one we are dealing with also has an Ogam inscription written on a circular stem-line. Prof. Rhys has discussed this inscription at p. 279 of his paper, but has not included it in his Pictish list. For how was it to be read? Where were you to begin reading on the circular line, and which side of the stem-line was to be considered "above," which "below"? In other words, you might begin almost anywhere, and six out of ten characters had each a double value! Accordingly Lord Southesk read Athai Bhoto, Mr. Allen Abat Cahot, and Prof. Rhys suggested a various reading of one letter, which would give Cahotalt. The right reading is probably Ahta Ovobhv.

The circle and Ogam round it form an image of the sun. The Ogam were so written for luck. At Preston-Pans, on the Firth of Forth, Sun-day is (or quite lately was) the favourite day to sail for the fishing (Choice Notes, Folk-lore, p. 271). "One very ancient and persistent superstition had regard to the direction of movement either of persons or things. This direction should always be with the course of the sun" (Napier, Folk-lore [West of Scotland], p. 133). On the south side of the Moray Firth, when a boat was pushed into the water, "The prow was always turned seaward in the direction of the sun's course" (Gregor, Folk-lore of North-East of Scotland, p. 199). At this day in one part at least of Sutherland a funeral will sometimes travel a long way round in order to travel with the sun, and when you go out first thing of a morning you must turn to the right—which, Dr. Joass tells me, is the way of the sun!

The Ogam on this sun-picture, then, begin at the bottom, and turn to the spectator's right: by this arrangement they are also travelling to the right when they leave off. Up the right side of the circle the outside of the stem-line is regarded as the upper side, down the left side the "inside of it is so regarded; and it is perhaps as an indication of this change that just before it begins the angle of the vowel-strokes is altered so as to front the other way. And so we get Ahta Ovobhv.

Now Ahta, as I shall presently show, is the one missing form required to explain the divergent forms ai(h)te, ehle, ett, ait, and ett: and its meaning I shall presently show to be "hearth."

Ovobhv is the usual dat. pl. place-name. Of course the normal Pictish ending of that case is -e(v)(v) = -aihb; but Prof. Mackinnon has pointed out (Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Inverness, xii., p. 356) that in the Dean of Lismore's Book (early sixteenth-century and South-Highland dialect) the dat. pl. Piannaibh appears as seanow—and we shall meet with a dat. pl. in -ov in the Aquhollie Stone. The bhv of course = vv and the word = omhaibh, from omh, "lonesome, unfrequented," the place being called, as in so many other cases, from the inhabitants, whose distance from any other abode probably procured them this name. In English we might have called the stead "Lonesome House": in Gaelic they called it "Hearth Lonesomes." This is the second case we have had of a stead bearing a proper name, and we shall have two more.

* In each case, however, it is the side on the spectator's right of the stem-line.

It is right to say that there is some uncertainty as to one or twoscores towards the bottom of the circle. But, if it were found impossible to read Ahta Ovobhv, it might yet be possible to read Ahta Ovob, which would do almost as well (the Old-Irish dat. pl. is in -b, not -bh). And if even Ahta were proved impossible, I should still make bold to postulate ahla as the almost certain precursor of the ehle group.

And now for the derivation of ahla. Our Pictish inscriptions are phonetic; and in the Lunasting Stone they have already given us h (in Cuhetts) as the equivalent of th, th being always sounded as h in Scottish Gaelic when it is not quiescent. Spell the word, then, as ahla, and you see that it is a compound of ath, which now means a kiln, but doubtless originally meant a fire, and ta, a border or place, and so = either "fireplace, hearth," or "confines of a hearth." * With ath, cf. ed "fire" (Windisch's frische Texte, mod. Ir. aodh, and "D = TH interdum in radice" (Zeuss, Ir. gr., p. 73). Moreover the adj. ath-ach means a clown in Irish, and Lhnyd gives athaigh as = "husbandman," the Highland Society's dict. apparently correcting him to athaich "husbandmen." In these words the meaning is obviously that of a country hearthdweller, as that of our "husbandman" is house-dwelling-man.

We now see how there comes to be an h in ehle, eh, and the North Highland pronunciation ai(h)te. h is never a radical in Gaelic: ath, pronounced a-h, supplies its origin in this case.

We see, too, how in the forms ath, ait (and in ait and ett, which I shall presently show to be abbreviations of them) there is no h. Th in the middle of a polysyllable is silent in Scottish Gaelic; so that after ath-ta had come to be looked on as a single word, the th was dropped altogether.

We see also why there are two sets of forms, one with a final -e (ehle, ait), one without it (eh, ett, ait). It is a rule in Scottish Gaelic that, if a consonant in the middle of a word is preceded by a small vowel (e or i), there shall be a small vowel also in the next syllable. When ath + ta had come to be considered as one word the first vowel became, by "infection," ai or (in the Newton Stone) ae, but that left the next syllable without a corresponding small vowel. This want of harmony was remedied in two ways. One was to infect the next syllable also, and so we get ehle (= aihtai or ahle), ett, and ait. The other was to drop the final -a altogether, and so we get eh, ett, ait.

It is noticeable, moreover, that, although the Irish ait is feminine, ait, which preserves the original number of syllables, preserves also the gender of the original ta, which is masculine.

* I do not feel quite sure whether ath in this particular combination means "fire" or "a fire": in the former case ath-ta would = fireplace, domestic hearth, in the latter it would = confines within which there was such an hearth.

I now proceed to give what I believe to be the derivation of the prefix Pit- in Scottish place-names, the ultimate origin of which has been hitherto unknown. The oldest form is Pett-, in the Book of Deer. Now an initial p in Gaelic cannot = an Indo-European of which Gaelic always drops at the beginning p, a word (cf. athair = pater). It must either indicate a word borrowed from another language or else it must be a degraded b. The tendency of the Highlander thus to degrade his b's is well known: I need only refer to Aytoun's "Massacre of the Macpherson." And this tendency was not unknown in Irish—cf. peist for bhist (Zeuss, p. 59). Now, the Highland Society's Dictionary gives baiteach as "farmer" and Lhuyd in 1707 gives baitach as a clown (O'Reilly baiteach). The Highland Society derive this from bò "cow" and aiteach, which latter word has three meanings (1) agriculture; (2) inhabiting; (3) habitation—but all of them derived from aite (or ait). Now, if bò (or even the pl. ba) and aiteach can make baiteach, bo (or ba) and ait can equally make bait: this in Pictish would be spelt bet or bett and, if the b were degraded to p, pet or pett. I go further than this, and maintain that baitach and baiteach are not themselves compounds of b- and ait(e)ach but are adjectives formed directly from an once-existing bait(e).

Pett, then, I hold, meant an ait (Pictish ett) where cows were kept. This suits to perfection the repeated use of it in the Book of Deer. "It is there uniformly connected with a personal name," as if it was applied to a single homestead, . . . and the affix Pit seems to have a similar meaning in the old entry in the Chartulary of St. Andrews, where we read of the 'villula' or homestead, which is called Pitmokane" (Skene, Celtic Scotland, iii., p. 226).

We now see why almost all the Pits are in the eastern counties between the Firth of Forth and the Moray Firth: the Gaels of these flatter parts would be the first to establish cattle-farms.

We see also why in almost all our North-Pictish inscriptions (in all eight of the inscriptions of the eastern counties) we get an ett but never a pett, while in the Book of Deer we get only two ets, but four petts. It is clear that when the Book of Deer was written the et was an old institution, for the form used is a degraded one, and that it was giving way to the pett. In other words, the original ahla or ett, a more hearth or stead, was becoming everywhere a b-ett or pett, a stead with cows attached to it.†

I suggest further that the place-names Perth and Pomona may illustrate and be illustrated by this letter.

Boece, in bk. 13, calls Perth, when standing on its former site, Bertha; and we have the forms Perth in 1150 and Pert circa 1178 (Johnston's Place-names of Scotland). These three forms point to its meaning Battle-place, from bair "contest," and ta "place." Bair would be in Pictish ber, as we have already had it in Ber-nises, "Battleheadland," in the Bressay Stone: with the favourite Highland substitution of p for b it would also become per. Ta according to the practice of the oldest Gaelic would not be aspirated in composition; but according to the latter practice it would become tha. Finally, the last a would be dropped, because the "small" vowel e ought not to be followed by a broad vowel (cf. cht instead of chtu). So we get all three forms accounted for.

* If he has overlooked pett immutenn, "pett of the mill," but that quite consists with his theory.

† Dr. Stuart's instances of the indiscriminate use of Pit and Bal (Book of Deer, p. lxxxiv.) indicate that the words denoted the same size and kind of holding.

Pomona, which name Mr. Elton (on what ground I don't yet know) considers to date from the time of Pytheas (fourth century B.C.) "or soon afterwards" (Origins of English History, p. 75), appears circa 1380 as Insula Pomonia (Johnston). I suggest that the first part of it is the stem of po, Pictish for bo "cow," and the latter part a stem mon- from which comes the Irish moin "moorland," which itself looks like the infected form of an earlier mon. It would then have received its name from consisting largely of moorland on which cattle were grazed.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

P.S.—In my first letter I should have said that normaer = not "great man" but "great maor"—i.e., great officer; but whether maor = the Latin maior, or what other origin it has, I do not yet know.

Dr. Joass has proved to me by a rubbing that I also wrongly copied morphear for morfhear on the Golspie Stone; though the f was blurred, I doubted its being a p, but followed my guidebooks.

Lastly, I must correct Callum to Caillein in my statement as to the hereditary Gaelic title of the Duke of Argyll: about the differing forms of that title, and my indebtedness to various correspondents, I may some day write separately.

HUGH AUDLEY: CYRIL TOURNEUR.

March 16, 1894.

On Hugh Audley, the notorious usurer, who "in 1605 possessed only £200, and died in November, 1662, worth £400,000," there is a pleasantly written article in the Dictionary of National Biography, chiefly derived from the rare tract issued a few weeks after his death, with the title The Way to be Rich according to the Practice of the Great Audley.

I am able to supply a few additional particulars concerning this worthy. He was the second son of John Audley, who resided at one of the Suttons in Kent, and was admitted of the Inner Temple in 1603, from which society he was called to the bar in 1611. By paying down a good round sum he subsequently obtained the lucrative place of Registrar of the Court of Wards and Liveries. Regardless of the truism that hawks do not pick out hawks' eyes, Audley found his most profitable customers among his learned brethren. In the way of business, the broad Oxfordshire lands of Sir Thomas Gardiner, the "loyal Recorder" of London, became his; so did those of Edward Coke, Esq., of Norfolk. How during the Civil War, and after, the Parliament sought to compel him to yield up for the good of the state some part of his ill-gotten hoard, and how stoutly he fought to retain it, may be read in the Calendars of the Proceedings of the Committees for Compounding and Advance of Money, so admirably edited by Mrs. Everett Green.

The bulk of his immense wealth went to his two nephews, William and Robert Harvey; but his will is not wanting in philanthropy of a sort. Thus, for the "use of the poore harboured and kept in the three noted hospitalls in or near London, commonly called Christ's Hospital, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and St. Thomas' Hospital in Southwarke," he gave £100 apiece. To his nurse, "in regard and recompence and towards a satisfaction of her broken sleeps and paines taken with mee in all my sickness," he bequeathed the princely sum of £333 6s. 8d. in money and all his household goods. One hundred pounds was to be distributed by his executors among "poore householders whose charge is greater than their meanes and endeavours can support"; a decidedly inadequate sum, one would think. Another £100 was to go to the Society of the Inner Temple towards the repairing of their church. But the most curious item of all is his bequest of £400 to be apportioned at the discretion of his executors in shares of £10 apiece among "forty maiden servants, such as are knowne to bee Protestants and to live under the Episcopall Government and not reputed to bee of the Presbyterian Religion, Quakers, or any other of the new upstart religions," those who had "served one Master and Mistris or one Master or one Mistris by the space of three yeares" being eligible as candidates. Other references to Audley are to be found in the Calendars of State Papers—Domestic Series.

To my note on Cyril Tournear (ACADEMY, No. 992, p. 442), I would add that the inferences to be drawn from Lord Wimbledon's Journal of the expedition make it highly probable that Tournear was one of those put ashore at Kinsale, when in a dying state from the effects of the fearful gale which had just swept the Southern coast of Ireland. It cannot, indeed, be ascertained whether he was buried at Kinsale, as the registers are wanting before 1686. But assuredly no more romantic spot could be found for a poet's grave; and to establish the fact would be to give new interest to Tournear's description of the drowned soldier. There is no mention of Tournear in Glanville's Voyage to Cadiz in 1625.

GORDON GOODWIN.

MR. SLATER'S "EARLY EDITIONS."

London: March 26, 1894.

I have been so busy lately reading criticisms made by admirers of one or more of the thirty and odd authors treated in this book, that I have had little time for anything else. In some cases the critics themselves have been corrected by others, and it is plain to be seen that we shall soon have them all by the ears. As a rule, objection has been taken to the quoted prices, which are alleged to be much too low, i.e., much less than the commentators have themselves paid; but Mr. Falconer's remarks cover other ground. Even admitting all he says to be strictly accurate, the admission involves nothing more than a question of very minute detail; of "mint, anise, and cummin," as your editorial note has it. Not that I fail to see the advisability of being accurate, even in small matters; but it may well be that copies of the same book vary, and when they do, it is quite possible to be accurate and yet to be open to attacks that cannot be repelled. Thus, if I assert that a book was published in green wrappers, and someone writes to say that his copy is in boards of some other colour, all I can reply is that the one I used was as described; for Mr. Falconer is not correct when he says I got my data at second hand. With a few exceptions all the books noted have been seen, examined, and collated from the best copies procurable; and wherever possible the proofs were corrected by the authors, who certainly ought to know, better than anybody, what the facts really are.

That this book would be very critically examined was certain from the first, and I am rather pleased than otherwise to find it an object of interest. The more corrections anyone will do me the kindness to make, the better I shall be satisfied, after which remark it will be apparent that I regard Mr. Falconer's criticisms in no unfriendly light. They are—I admit—fairly and honestly put and will be examined, and if necessary acknowledged, when we come to prepare a new and enlarged edition of the book. Even then, however, I am not sanguine enough to believe that criticism will be silenced; for my experience of books of this kind is that hardly a positive statement can be made by one side which is not capable of being amplified, corrected, or altogether refuted by the ingenuity of the other. If anyone thinks he can write such a book and get all his data absolutely correct at the onset and so escape whipping, either deservedly or otherwise, let him try.

J. H. SLATER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, April 2, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Babylonian Exploration."
 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Attention," by Mr. A. F. Shand.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Photometry," I, by Capt. W. de W. Abney.
TUESDAY, April 3, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electric Illumination," I, by Prof. J. A. Fleming.
 8 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "May Feasts in Shakspeare," by Mr. Anichkov.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Construction of Gas Works," by Mr. C. Hunt.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Further Field-Notes on the Game Animals of Somaliland," by Capt. H. G. C. Swayne; "The Dwarf Antelopes of the Genus Madoqua," by Mr. O. Thomas; "The Occurrence of the White Rhinoceros in Mashonaland," by Mr. R. T. Coryndon.
WEDNESDAY, April 4, 8 p.m. Microscopical: Conversation.
 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Drummond of Hawthornden," by Mr. Frank Payne.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Elements of Beauty in Ceramics," by Mr. C. F. Binns.
THURSDAY, April 5, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Etching Revival," I, by Mr. F. Seymour Haden.
 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Aortic-Arch System of Saccobranchus," by Mr. R. H. Burne; "The Orchidea and Apostasiacea of the Malay Peninsula," by Mr. H. N. Ridley.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, April 6, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "The River Hamber," by Mr. W. H. Hamer.
 8 p.m. Geologists' Association: "Fossil Sponges," by Dr. G. J. Hinde.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Destructive Effects of Projectiles," by Prof. Victor Horsley.
SATURDAY, April 7, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Life Among the Afghans," I, by Mr. J. A. Gray.

SCIENCE.

The Dawn of Astronomy: a Study of the Temple-Worship and Mythology of the Ancient Egyptians. By J. Norman Lockyer. (Cassells.)

It is a happy augury for the future of research into the earlier time that astronomy has given the right hand of fellowship to archaeology. It chanced that in March, 1890, Mr. Lockyer visited the ruins of the Parthenon and of the temple of Eleusis, in company with a friend who lent him a pocket compass; and "the curious direction in which the Parthenon was built, and the many changes of direction in the foundations at Eleusis. . . were so very striking and suggestive," that his attention was drawn to the general question: Have astronomical principles been taken into consideration in the erection of various archaic buildings in Egypt and elsewhere? And, if so, what were the objects of the builders, and what do the facts of the case imply? Some papers in Nature, April-July, 1891; a very interesting address, delivered to the Egyptian section of the Oriental Congress at London in September, 1892; and the present handsome volume form the result of Mr. Lockyer's researches.

After preliminary remarks upon the probable effect of the external world on early man, Mr. Lockyer mentions the basic-concepts of various Egyptian divinities, regarded as follows: Hor (Morning-sun), Ra (Noon-sun), Tum (Evening-sun), Ausar, Us-ir, Osiris (Sun-when-set), and Auset, Usit, Isis, and Nebt-het, Nephthys (each both Dawn and Twilight). It is important to remember that, however these personages were afterwards regarded, this was their simple origin; for, though Mr. Lockyer entitles Cap. III., "The Astronomical Basis of the Egyptian Pantheon," it really shows a "Natural Phenomena" basis. Mr. Lockyer then points out how the orientation of a building is determined, and, with admirable lucidity, explains various technical terms; the explanations, moreover, are assisted by numerous excellent illustrations. He then treats of Egyptian solar shrines, of the risings and settings of the stars, of Egyptian temples "directed to the stars," and "star-cults." This naturally leads to a disquisition on the Egyptian Year, the Calendar, and the Sothic Cycle; and here it is satisfactory to find that the researches of Oppolzer have entirely confirmed the statements of Censorinus. From Isis and Osiris, and the Great Pyramid Builders, Mr. Lockyer passes on to consider the origin of Egyptian astronomy, and the Egyptian and Babylonian ecliptic constellations, concluding with a chapter entitled "The Influence of Egypt upon Temple Orientation in Greece," in which full justice is done to the recent researches of Mr. Penrose. An investigator into such a mass of material must necessarily, in his survey, combine astronomy, mythology, and archaeology, not to mention history and religion; and the first and the most important question which arises is, what are the actual astronomical conclusions arrived at? Here Mr. Lockyer may claim to speak with the highest authority, and has a goodly result to show.

First, as to solar shrines. Accurate measurements prove, beyond a doubt, a general scheme of solar orientation. Thus, to take some of the principal and earliest instances, at Abydos a temple was orientated for the sun at the summer solstice; at Annu (On), to the sun not at a solstice, and some 6000 years ago; at Karnak, the axis of the temple of Amen-Râ is directed to sunset at the summer solstice. Another class of solar shrines—the Pyramids and temples at Gizeh, Sais, and Tanis, were orientated to the sun at the equinoxes. The Sphinx

"was there watching for the rising of the sun at an equinox, as the Colossi [the two great statues of Amenhotep III., the northern one of which was called by the Greeks Memnon] . . . at Thebes were watching for the rising of the sun at the winter solstice."

To look elsewhere, we have probably at Khorsabad a solstitial temple; the great solar temple of Pekin is orientated to the winter solstice, and Stonehenge to sunrise at the summer solstice. Solomon's temple faced east; at Baalbek the orientation is due east; at Palmyra, as at Karnak, a solar temple faces due west. St. Peter's, at Rome, is built exactly east and west, and the solar rays illuminate the high altar at the vernal equinox.

Next, as to stellar shrines. The precession of the equinoxes produces a cyclic movement in the pole of the celestial equator, which movement is completed from any one point to any other point of the circle in 25,870 years. The pole-star, therefore, changes; thus, 12,000 years ago Vega was Polaris. Hence, the position of any star at any time is merely a matter of calculation; and therefore when the foundation of a building is obviously connected with a particular star in a certain position, the time-clock of the heavens will supply us with the date of such foundation. The application of this astronomical truth to the star-temples at Karnak forms the most brilliant and remarkable feature in Mr. Lockyer's book. By this means order and design rise at once out of apparent chaos and accident. The Karnak stellar shrines face in various directions, but in each case the temple-axis is directed towards a particular star,  $\gamma$  Draconis, Canopus, &c.; and, in more than one instance where precessional movement has made the axis unsuitable for its original purpose, either another shrine has been built, with an axis directed to the star's later position, or the axis of the temple has itself been changed, in order to keep it up to date. Further, where the line of vision from a stellar shrine has been blocked by buildings, such erections are of more recent date, and indicate a deliberate disuse of the temple for that particular purpose; whilst, lastly, the astronomical data of the age from foundation of the various temples, exactly agrees with, and thereby irresistibly confirms, the conclusions already arrived at by scientific archaeology. Here, then, is indeed a triumph of research, and M. Mariette and Mr. Lockyer may well congratulate each other.

Mr. Lockyer, following Mr. Penrose, shows that in numerous cases Greek temples also have been directed towards particular stars. Thus, according to the table provisionally drawn up by Mr. Penrose, the Parthenon was originally directed to the rising of the Pleiades April 20, B.C. 1530; and Aleyone was the patron-star of at least three temples of Athëna. Sirius was the patron-star of the midnight mysteries, and Fomalhaut the patron-star of the sunrise-cult of the temple of Demêtêr at Eleusis; Hamal was the patron-star of the temples of Zeus at Athens and Olympia; and Spica the patron-star of the temples of Hëra at Olympia, Argos, and Girgenti. So far astronomical facts. But when Mr. Lockyer, on the strength of these discoveries, asserts that it is "beyond all doubt the fact that the astronomical observations and temple-worship of the Egyptians formed the basis first of Greek, and later of Latin temple-building" (p. 412), he is drawing an unwarrantable inference. That Egyptians and Greeks both directed temples towards certain stars is no proof of borrowing on either part; as well might it be said that because Romans and Peruvians buried their erring Vestals alive, the one nation adopted the custom from the other. No historical evidence on the subject is available; but, when we do arrive at certitude with respect to the facts, I think it will appear that the patron-star in each case is one specially connected with the particular Euphratean divinity, of which the particular Greek divinity is regarded as the equivalent. Thus, Istar-Virgo (with special star, Spica) = Great-goddess-mother of Asia Minor, = (by analogy, the Aryan) Hëra. Anu = (by analogy) Zeus; hence the Kakkab Lulim ("The Star of the Ram"), which was "The Star of Anu," becomes the Star of Zeus.

Mr. Lockyer devotes much attention to the temples of Isis and Hathor at Denderah in connexion with "the personification of stars," and quotes, from Mariette, the passage: "She [i.e., her Majesty Isis] shines into her temple on New Year's Day, and she mingles her light with that of her father, Râ, on the horizon," which contains "a perfectly accurate statement" of the cosmical rising of Isis in her stellar phase as Sept (Sothis = Sirius). The temple pointed to Sirius circa B.C. 700, and at that date Sirius and the sun rose together "on the Egyptian New Year's Day." According to Plutarch, as Mr. Lockyer notes, Isis = Hathor, and the latter is styled in an inscription, "the mistress of the beginning of the year." Of course, the rising of Sirius contemporaneously with that of the Nile called special attention to the former. All this is highly interesting; but we must go a step further and inquire, Why are Isis and Hathor the same divinity, and why are they connected with Sirius? Plutarch says, "Isis is sometimes called both Mouth [= Egyptian mut, 'Mother'], and, again, Athyri [Hathor] . . . and the second name signifies 'the regular habitation' (οἶκον κόσμον) of Hôros" (peri Is. lvi.). Isis = Hathor simply because both are originally Dawn-goddesses and Mothers of the Young-sun; and both are connected with Sirius in accordance with the principle of reduplication: i.e., as Isis originally proclaimed the beginning of the day, so, by analogy, is she connected, in her stellar phase, with the star which proclaims the beginning of the year; just as in the Euphrates Valley the Ram-sun is reduplicated in the Ram-star (Hamal). Hence the story told Plutarch by the priests, that the soul of Isis was translated into the Dog-star (peri Is. xxi.). But Isis is not a star; she is a Dawn-mother, and so, by gradual evolution, becomes the universal-mother, the Isis of Apuleius. Mr. Lockyer, when speaking of the warfare of Hor against the Crocodile and Hippopotamus, which latter, in a stellar phase = Draco, has an ingenious argument to prove that "the myth simply means that the rising sun destroys the circumpolar stars" (p. 151); and he speaks of "the astronomical basis of the myth" (p. 148). But, here again, as in the case of Isis, we must begin at the beginning. The myth has no astronomical basis; such considerations are afterthoughts. Crocodile and Hippopotamus, as Mr. Lockyer notes, are variants, and "represent the powers of darkness," i.e., Darkness itself which is destroyed by the Rising-sun (Hor). The Crocodile is primarily "the crocodile of the west which fed upon the setting stars" (Renouf, Religion of Ancient Egypt, p. 108). Set = Darkness, and therefore, when the circumpolar constellations were mapped out, we are not surprised to find them called the Wife of Set (= the Hippopotamus, = Draco), the Thigh (of Set, = Ursa Major), and the Jackal (of Set, = Ursa Minor). Set, his wife, and his animal (which on the monuments is a nondescript) occupy the highest thrones in the Night-realm, and are thus special objects of the hostility of Hor.

Mr. Lockyer justly insists "how vital the study of mythology" is in these investigations. It must, however, be remembered that, after a time, we leave the mythological plane and get into the region of actual astronomy, however rudimentary the science may be. Thus, if "Horus = Sun, Planet, or Constellation rising" (p. 149), we have here to do, not with a god or a myth, but with a technical astronomical term. Hor may at length = a particular planet, just as, with the Romans, Father Jove ultimately became, in practice, merely the planetary genius Jupiter. Mr. Lockyer has somewhat encumbered his general argument by an ingenious attempt to reconstruct the archaic history of Egypt with the assistance of astronomical data. Thus he supposes that northern and southern schools of astronomy existed, hostile to one another; and speaks of invading "swarms" from various quarters. It is unnecessary to enter the region of bare possibility, and even at present we can see that some of these speculations are incorrect. For instance, Mr. Lockyer's first historical event is "B.C. 6000. A swarm from the south" with "Osiris, the Moon-god," as their chief deity. "We can imagine religious strifes between the partisans of the new northern cult and the southern moon-worshippers" (p. 394). But it is needless to do so, inasmuch as Osiris was not in origin a Moon-god (vide Renouf, Religion of Ancient Egypt, p. 112), and, therefore, these religious strifes never occurred.

Modern research is, I think, rightly inclined to accept the theory of a close archaic connexion between the valleys of the Euphrates and the Nile, and of large borrowing by Egypt from Babylonia. Prof. Hommel (Die Identität der Ältesten Babylonischen und Aegyptischen Gottergenealogie und der Babylonische Ursprung der Aegyptischen Kultur, 1893) has accomplished some excellent work in this field; and Mr. Lockyer has several interesting chapters on the possible connexion of Egyptian astronomy with that of Babylonia. As regards Euphratean astronomy, he is, however, almost entirely guided by Jensen; and it is no real disparagement to the Strassburg savant to say that, in many respects, his conclusions cannot now be sustained. Nothing short of inspiration could preserve an early writer on this subject from numerous errors, and Mr. Lockyer would have found more assistance in Hommel's Die Astronomie der alten Chaldäer, and also in a study of the astronomical figures on the cylinders and boundary-stones. To take an instance:

"In the exact centre of the circular zodiac of Denderah we find the jackal located at the pole of the equator" (p. 361). "Do we get the jackal in Babylonian astronomy?" . . . Jensen refers to the various readings, 'jackal' and 'leopard,' and states that it is only doubtful whether by this figure the god ANU or the pole of the ecliptic ANU is meant. Either will serve our present purpose" (p. 362).

Now the passage quoted by Jensen is from the famous Tablet of the Thirty Stars (W. A. I., V. xlvi., No. 1), the first part of which gives either wholly (Bertin) or in part (Hommel) the Sumero-Akkadian Moon-stations, which in W. A. I. (IV. xv.) are shown to be the practical equivalents of the Assyrian Mizrâta (= the Signs of the Zodiac), the Mazzârôth of the Book of Job. The star in question is the Kakkab Likbarra ("the Star of the Striped-dog"—i.e., the Hyena), undoubtedly an ecliptic star, and identified by Hommel with the red-eyed Aldebaran. The Hyena is not "the god Anu," but Anu appears in the Tablet as the patron-divinity of this particular star; while the theory which makes "Anu Nordpol d. Ekliptik" and "Bil Nordpol d. Aequators" is not really borne out by the Inscriptions. That the early Babylonians, however, had ascertained the obliquity of the ecliptic is, I think, clear. The discovery passed from them into Greece, through sages such as Pythagoras and Oinopides of Chios.

Mr. Lockyer is naturally surprised by the permanence of the Goat-fish type (Capricorn), but this is no special case. Thus Sagittarius, a sign which, according to Mr. Lockyer, following Jensen, "we must interpolate" (p. 400) between Scorpio and Capricorn, appears on the Sippara Boundary-stones much as we represent it now; and not only so, but in W. A. I. (III. lvii., No. 5), we find the constellation divided into three sub-signs—the Kakkab Kumaru ("the Dusky" part), the Kakkab Ega ("the Glory," i.e., the bright upper fore-part), and the Kakkab Sugub ("the Left-hand" of Sagittarius), which latter re-appears in Ptolemy's List as "the Star at the grip of the Left-hand" (8). Jensen "notes the absence of the Crab" (p. 408, note), but the Crab is absent no longer. In Tablet 81-7-6, 102, he appears as "the Constellation Nagar-asurra" ("the Workman-of-the-River-bed"), and the sign of the fourth month (vide "The Zodiacal Crab," ACADEMY, February 21, 1885; December 6, 1890). No sufficient evidence exists at present to solve the problem when the Babylonian Zodiac was introduced into Egypt. The late Zodiacs of Esne and Denderah, which belong to Greek and Roman times, throw no real light on the subject, except perhaps in connexion with the Balance, a genuine Egyptian sign.* The texts and monuments, in my opinion, show that the original Euphratean sign was a circular Altar, grasped in "the Claws" of the Scorpion.

I have no space to notice numerous other highly interesting points in Mr. Lockyer's admirable book. It is to be hoped that he will continue his researches, for the harvest is plentiful and the labourers but very few. Meanwhile, disciples of the natural phenomena theory of mythology will be pleased to see their old friends—sun, moon, and stars—so well to the front; and the special student of star-myths, who, long ago, was informed that he had "overdone" the subject, may take heart of grace on finding himself far nearer the beginning than the end of researches as fascinating as they are arduous.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

* Τὰς Χηλὰς, τὰς καλουμένας ὑπ' Ἀιγυπτίων Ζυγὸν (Achilles Tatius). Cf. The Book of the Dead, cap. xii.: "Salutation to thee, O Râ, who guards the secrets of the gates [eastern and western] over this domain of Seb [the Earth], and this Balance with which Râ raiseth up Maât [Kosmic-order, hence "Law"] daily" (ap. Renouf). The daily balance is reduplicated in the yearly (quinquennial) balance.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANALO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY, IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, March 6.)

E. A. CAZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—Dr. Frank Clemow read a paper on "Russia and the Cholera," of which the following is a summary: While no country can afford to ignore the problems connected with cholera and its prevention, Russia and England are the two countries most deeply interested. The recent epidemic arose in our own territory in India, and thence spread to Russia and other countries, where it carried off a large number of victims. We in these islands had escaped. Should we, therefore, play the part of the Pharisee, and, pointing to our own vastly superior degree of sanitation, thank God we were not as other countries? Or should we not rather reflect that it is only comparatively recently that sanitation has attained the position of importance it now holds in this country, and that there are still many insanitary places in England that might suffer severely if cholera were imported to them? The lecturer gave a brief history of past epidemics of cholera from the earliest time, and proceeded to trace shortly the course of the epidemic of 1892 in Russia. He then passed on to consider the lessons which that epidemic had taught. He pointed to the work which had been done upon the bacteriology of cholera, and mentioned that Russia was now as well equipped for medical scientific work as any other nation in Europe. The laboratories in the Oldenburg Institute at St. Petersburg, and in the new buildings of the Medical School at Moscow, were perhaps the finest series of laboratories to be found anywhere in the world. He pointed to the additional knowledge which the epidemic had afforded, upon the natural history of cholera, its mode of spread, particularly the part played by water, the influence of weather, sex and age of the individual, and a number of other points of interest. He entered more fully into the teaching of the epidemic with regard to the best methods of preventing and controlling epidemics of cholera. There had been no concealment on the part of the Russian authorities as to the course and facts of the epidemic. The nature and results of the St. Petersburg Cholera Conference, held in December, 1892, and the measures which the Russian government took to meet and check the epidemic were described. A tribute was paid to the philanthropic institutions which sent aid to the suffering peasants, and to the nurses and physicians who went to the cholera-stricken districts. Greatest stress of all was laid upon the lesson of sanitation which the recent epidemic had taught. The question of quarantine was discussed. Quarantine was wrong in theory, and a failure in practice. While everything possible should be done to keep disease out of a country, it was of greater importance to so improve the sanitary condition that an infectious disease, when imported, should have the least possible chance of spreading. The methods now in use in Russia to guard her marine frontiers from the introduction of an infectious disease were described. The results of the Dresden Conference were briefly referred to; and tribute was paid to the fact that England had led the way in regard to modern methods of prevention of disease, and that it was mainly owing to England's able representative at the Dresden Conference, Dr. Thorne Thorne, that the minimum of restriction upon the movements of individuals and upon trade intercourse was fixed as low as it was. Finally, both England and Russia in practice never exceeded the minimum that was then agreed upon.—Dr. Sisley pointed to the extreme importance of a pure water supply. He contradicted Lanin's false and exaggerated statements as to their being no sanitary spot in Russia; he praised the St. Petersburg hospitals, particularly the Alexander Barrack Hospital. Mr. Richmond also spoke of the importance of sanitation, and particularly of water supply. He narrated the historical instance of the spread of cholera by water from the Broad-street pump in 1854.—After some remarks from Mr. E. Brayley Hodgetts and Mr. A. Kinloch, the president conveyed the thanks of the meeting to Dr. Clemow for his paper.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN.—(Monday, March 12.)

Mr. F. JENKINSON, president, in the chair.—Prof. Darwin made a communication on "Monuments to Cambridge Men at the University of Padua," in which he described the memorials to Harvey, Richard Willoughby, the friend of Galileo, Sir John Finch, and Sir Thomas Baines, in the cloister and in the Aula Magna of the university of Padua. Photographs of the tablets were exhibited.—Mr. Bowes made the following communication on "The First Cambridge Newspaper." The first Cambridge newspaper was called "The Cambridge Journal or Flying Post," and the first number appeared in September, 1744. By that time many provincial papers had been established, seventeen of which are still in existence, the two oldest being "Berrow's Worcester Journal," 1690, and the "Stamford Mercury," 1695. The early numbers had no original articles and very little local news, the matter being chiefly drawn from the "London Gazette" and other papers, and containing a summary of general, foreign, and home news brought together for circulation in the county. Some of the advertisements are curious—one of bear-baiting at the Wrestlers, cock-fighting at Newmarket, &c. The "Cambridge Chronicle," the second Cambridge paper, commenced October 30, 1762. In January, 1767, the proprietors, Fletcher and Hodson, having purchased the journal, took the title of the Cambridge Chronicle and Journal, and it continues under that title till the present time. The third Cambridge paper was the Cambridge Intelligencer, edited by Benjamin Flower. It contained original articles commenting freely on public men and current events, and denounced the war with France as "absurd and wicked." An article in 1799 on a speech in the House of Lords on the Union by the Bishop (Watson) of Landaff, led to Flower being called before that House, when the article was declared to be a libel and he was fined £100 and sent to Newgate for six months. Coleridge contributed some poems to the Intelligencer while he was up at Jesus. The paper came to an end about 1804, as in the following year Flower was living as a printer at Harlow. The paper now called the Cambridge Independent Press commenced as the Huntingdon, Bedford, and Peterborough Gazette in 1813; it was printed in London and edited at Huntingdon. The name of Cambridge was added to the title in 1815. It has been printed in Cambridge from 1819, but it did not take its present title till 1839. The newspaper tax must have presented one of the greatest difficulties to a country newspaper, and this can be realised by the price at which the Chronicle was sold at different dates: in 1762, 2d.; 1789, 3d.; 1794, 4d.; 1797, 6d.; 1812, 6d.; 1815, 7d., at which price it remained till 1836, when it was reduced to 4d.

ASIATIC.—(Tuesday, March 13.)

LORD REAY, president, in the chair.—The secretary (Prof. Rhys Davids) read a paper by Surgeon-Major Waddell on "The Secret of Buddha, as illustrated by an Ancient Cave Fresco and by Tibetan Paintings." It is well known that the special characteristic of Gotama, which made him a Buddha and distinguished him from the other Arahats, was the discovery of the well-known Four Noble Truths and of the Twelve-Linked Chain of Cause (otherwise called the Wheel of Life, the Paticca Samuppāda). The meaning of the Noble Truths is well ascertained, but that of the Wheel of Life is still so obscure that the best interpreters have confessed their inability to show the connexion between its various links. These are Ignorance, Conformations, Consciousness, Name and Form, the Senses, Contact, Sensation, Thirst, Craving, Becoming, Birth, Old Age, and Death. It is easy to understand the proposition that, given the sense organs and contact through them with the outside world, there follows a sensation, which gives rise to a felt want, a thirst, a craving. But how can ignorance cause conformations, or how can craving produce becoming? And when we find birth nearly at the end of the series, so that it cannot be the birth of the individual to whom the senses belong, is it the birth of some one else, or a future birth of the same person, that is referred to? All these are at present unsolved questions, as we have only the technical terms of the Chain, as expressed in Pali, to guide us; and the authorised traditional interpretation of them, preserved in the Commentaries, has not yet been published and translated. Now there is, in the celebrated caves of Ajanta, a ruined fresco representing a wheel, with figures in twelve compartments on the rim, hitherto supposed to be a painting of the Zodiac. Reproductions of this fresco were in the hands of the audience, and Mr. Waddell also exhibited a large picture he had brought from Tibet, of the Wheel of Life. The comparison of the two showed that the Ajanta fresco was really a painting of the same subject, and the Tibetan interpretation of the figures on the wheel showed what was the traditional meaning attached in Tibet, since the ninth century, to the difficult technical terms found in the older works. The author also commented on the view of life set out on the wheel and those of Schopenhauer and Hartmann.—An interesting discussion followed, in which Sir William Hunter, Dr. Gaster, Mr. Arbuthnot, Miss Foley, and others took part.

FINE ART.

PELAGIC ITALY.

IN the February number of the Civiltà Cattolica, Padre de Cara pleads for a national effort on the part of Italian archaeologists to solve the question of the origin of their country's civilisation by the systematic exploration and excavation of Pelagic Italy. He holds that this problem has remained so long unanswered because Italian excavations are rather conducted to enrich museums than directed to the solution of the historical problem, and also because of the confused and false conception which is expressed in calling "Italic" those peoples, cities, and cemeteries which are neither Etruscan, Roman, nor Greek, only because they are found in Italy. In a series of articles, extending over several years, the learned father has contended for the identity of the Hittites and Proto-Pelagians on archaeological, etymological, and historical grounds; and he here repeats that, if "Italic" means Aryan, then it is among the peoples speaking Oscan, Umbrian, Latin, and other dialects of the Indo-European family that the parentage of Italian civilisation must be sought; but that "Italy" meant in the first place the country of the Hittites (Hethi), and hence of the Pelagians, and that name and civilisation are alike Pelagic. Those who hold it to have been Aryan have not only the testimony of Greek and Roman writers against them, but also the facts that there were Pelagians in Italy whose stone constructions are standing to this day, and that the Etruscan language and culture had no Aryan affinities.

The writer further points out that the walls of Pelagic cities, whether in Italy, Greece, or Asia Minor, all resemble each other, and that the origin of Greek civilisation was also Pelagian. In Greece, as in Italy, the Aryans followed centuries after the Hittite-Pelagians, and Aryan Greece carried the arts of Pelagic Greece to perfection. He believes that, of two migratory bands of Hittites, one invaded Greece and the other Italy, about the same time. He also draws attention to the coincidence that it is not very long since Greece, like Italy at the present time, could date its civilisation no further back than 700 or 800 B.C. Schliemann recovered centuries for Greece, but "Italy still remains imprisoned in the iron circle of the seventh century." To break it, she must follow Schliemann's plan; and as he had steady faith in the excavation of the Pelagic cities and cemeteries of Greece, so will like faith and conduct on the part of Italian archaeologists let in light upon this once dark problem. Light will come from Pelagic tombs in Italy as from the Pelagic tombs of Mykenie, the ancient tomb rightly explained and studied being the compendium of a people's history: and a single Italian Pelagic tomb, with its funerary furniture, will teach more of ancient prehistoric Italy than all the Roman and Etruscan museums put together.

In 1802 Torcia, librarian to the king of Naples, stated that there were monuments of seventy-five ruined or still inhabited Pelasgic cities in Italy, and many of their cemeteries. Since that time others have been noted. All these remains Padre de Cara would have studied with unity of purpose, combined strength, and efficient means. He proposes that, in the first place, a congress should be called together of experts, not only in Etruscan, Classic Greek, and Roman history and archaeology, but also in Egyptian and Oriental archaeology and ethnography, to discuss the means of solving the problem in question; to examine into the best method of exploring the cemeteries of these Pelasgic cities; and, above all, to draw up a topographical map of all the Pelasgic remains in Italy, be they small or great. This map should note the connexions between the cities, the plans of the city walls, forts, and gates, and pay special attention to the symbolism on the monuments; all this with a view to comparative study of the subject; viz., Asia Minor, Greece, and the islands of the Mediterranean. Tentative and inexpensive excavations would show where the Pelasgic cemeteries of Italy lie. The great expense would only begin with the systematic excavation of one or more of them, and this expense would be amply rewarded by the scientific results. Some Government money might well be diverted from the ordinary Roman and Etruscan excavations to this more interesting end; but if the Italian Government is unable to assist in the work, Padre de Cara suggests that it should be accomplished by the foreign schools of Italian archaeology.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE THARSIS MUSEUM.

Tavira, Algarve: March 12, 1894.

In the neighbourhood of the copper-mine of Tharsis—the entrance to which, with its huge circular descending platforms open to the sky, suggests the Inferno of Dante—a considerable number of antiquities have been found, chiefly Roman, a few perhaps Phœnician. Under the care of Mr. Rutherford, the manager of the mine, these objects have been collected in a small museum. They consist of Roman pottery and coins, elegant glass vessels of various colours, and so-called "tear-bottles." Two of the latter have the letters AVG stamped on the bottom. There is also half a slab of baked clay, bearing in relief the following letters:

CAM * *
VS. T[A] * *
F. E. IS * *
C-TV. * *

The rest of the inscription was lost in the finding. E. S. DODGSON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. BERNHARD BERENSON—who has just published (G. P. Putnam's Sons) an essay on the Venetian Painters of the Renaissance—is now engaged on a monograph upon one of these painters, Lorenzo Lotto (1480-1556), a pupil of Vivarini, also influenced by Bellini and Giorgione. The book will be illustrated with numerous photographic reproductions of Lotto's pictures, many of which have neither been engraved or photographed before.

THE Corporation of Glasgow has purchased Mr. David Murray's picture, "Fir Faggots," which is now on exhibition at the Glasgow Institute. The collection of the Glasgow Corporation is famous for its old masters; but we believe that this is only the second picture by a living artist that it has acquired, the other being, of course, Mr. Whistler's portrait of Carlyle.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: the Royal Society of British Artists, in Suffolk-street, Pall Mall; two pictures by M. François Flameng of Napoleon Buonaparte, entitled "The General at Isola Bella" and "Malmaison," at the Goupil Gallery, in Regent-street; and a loan collection of pictures at the Art Gallery, Guildhall, which is to be opened to-day (Saturday), at 2 p.m., by the Lord Mayor in state.

THE collection of Jenner relics, formed by Mr. Frederick Mockler, which was noticed in the ACADEMY of September 9, on the occasion of its exhibition last autumn at Bristol, is now on view at the First Avenue Hotel, Holborn. The owner intends to offer the collection to the Royal College of Surgeons.

THE recent destruction of the old palace of Bromley-by-Bow, one of the few Elizabethan houses in London, has suggested to Mr. C. R. Ashbee, of the Guild and School of Handicraft, the formation of a "watch committee," which shall systematically visit the old buildings of Greater London, with a view to compiling a register of them, and stimulating local interest in their preservation. The Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings has given its cordial approval to the scheme.

THE STAGE.

INTEREST of a rather unusual kind attaches to the new play at the Adelphi—a theatre whose productions are not generally of vital importance to the readers of the ACADEMY. Nor must the hopes of those who peruse this paragraph be raised, even now, too wildly, in consequence of that which has just been said. No wholly fresh order of play has been discovered; no new genius has been revealed. Still, the occasion is noteworthy. A comparatively new writer—yet one who has already done somewhat promising work—has supplied to the Messrs. Gatti a piece which in several points is fairly distinguishable from melodrama proper. Mr. Sutton Vane has indeed endowed "The Cotton King" with freshness of idea and individuality of treatment; and for these things we must be grateful to him, even if there linger in his labours something of the improbability habitual in Adelphi productions. As regards the action of the characters in melodrama, it will never do for one's analysis of motive to be very searching. Did one insist upon making it so, the more or less conventional machinery of the playwright would be promptly disclosed. In the present piece, again, it is possible that that which is understood to be the "comic relief" is not quite sufficiently comic. Still, it serves its purpose with the majority. The dialogue, speaking generally, is better than usual; and what is likewise very much better than anything we are accustomed to find at those theatres at which the presentation of the stereotyped is usually held to suffice, is the conception and execution of a certain scene of high importance—the scene in which one James Shillinglaw, an habitual tippler, whose wife and children are suffering from zymotic disease, is first tempted by an infamous evil-doer to permit Hetty, the heroine, to visit the sick family and to contract their complaint, and then, after some hesitation, declines the bribe, and with assumed brutality bids Hetty be gone when she presents herself. Mr. Charles Cartwright plays this part with meritorious force and truth, thereby legitimately stirring the audience. Hetty—a heroine plagued with admirers, one of whom, at least, is equal to this exceedingly dirty trick—is represented, of course with skill, by no less serious and subtle an artist than Miss Marion Terry, who makes the most of her material. Mr. Charles Warner, admirable in declamation as well as in gesture, plays the simple-hearted hero, Jack Osborne, to the satisfaction of all. And the pathetic figure of a young girl who has been through deep waters is presented touchingly, and with charm, by that rising young actress, Miss Hall Caine, whose sympathetic aptitudes we do not to-day recognise for the first time. Nor is this all, for Mrs. Boucicault lends her aid to a performance which, as a whole, is unquestionably strong.

MUSIC.

The Art of Music. By C. Hubert H. Parry. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

DESIGN and expression form the basis of all arts, music included. An artist is impelled to express his feelings; and this instinctive desire is one of the main incitements to the development of design, as the artist naturally wishes to make himself clearly understood. The "long story" of music shows how expression, from the indefinite cries and shouts of savages, became more and more definite. How design, at first of the simplest kind, gradually grew in importance, and how there was slowly built up a wonderful art, "worthy of the dignity of devotion." Such are the lines on which Dr. Parry has written his book. And he is eminently qualified to write on the subject: he has no pet theories to expound, no fads to flourish, but takes a broad survey of the facts of musical history.

A chapter is devoted to scales. Dr. Parry considers a selection of two notes at the interval of a fourth as the first stage in scale-making; such was the ancient Greek scale, with the addition of a third note a semitone above the lower of the two. The objection that the fourth is a difficult interval to attack, is met by the statement that the Greeks read their scales downward; and to descend in singing a fourth from a note is, indeed, quite easy. Then, by other races, the interval of the rising fifth was chosen. And in these two starting points our author sees the origin of pentatonic and heptatonic scales. This ingenious theory has been called in question, and we cannot here discuss it. But this much we will say: the earliest Greek scale on which Dr. Parry places chief reliance may be old, but yet is far from representing the earliest stage of scale-making. Our author believes that the wonderful stories of Orpheus and Amphion showing the power of music can only have arisen at a time when that art was immature. It seems, however, difficult to base any argument on those stories, for the Greek "music" was of much wider signification than with us.

The chapter on Folk-Music is one of special value. Collections of the tunes of savages and of folk-music are by no means rare, but Dr. Parry's examples display various stages of musical development; they are not put forward as mere curiosities, but serve a purpose. The following extract will show the author's method of treating his subject, better than any description we could give:—

"Indeed the whole of the folk-music of the world may be broadly classified into two comprehensive divisions. On the one hand, there are all those tunes whose ostensible basis of intelligibility is the arrangement of characteristic figures in patterns; and on the other, all those which by very prominent treatment of climaxes imply a certain excitement and an emotional origin."

The writer of the remarkable article "Volksmusik" in the Mendel-Reissmann Conversations-Lexicon has attempted a similar classification; and those interested in the subject will find it profitable to compare his remarks with those of Dr. Parry.

As there is so much to notice, we pass over the two chapters on "Incipient Harmony" and "Pure Choral Music." Chapter vi. deals with "The Rise of Secular Music." And here we have an apt illustration of our author's statement that "men have generally concentrated their efforts on design at one time, and on expression at another." The Florentine reformers freed themselves from the fetters of tradition, and aimed at expression, careless of the means by which it was to be achieved. Yet we are reminded that the reformers were right in being bold, for only thus could the complicated edifice of modern art have been erected. Dr. Parry, while fully acknowledging the services which they rendered, describes in no flattering language the character of their music:—

"The course of the early operas wanders on through pages of monotonous recitative, varied only here and there by little fragments of chorus or short dance tunes, which are almost as innocent of melody or design as the recitative itself."

In discussing instrumental music Dr. Parry devotes considerable space to J. S. Bach. His enthusiasm for the master is great. In reference to his organ works, he declares that "everything that has been written since is but the pale shadow of his splendid conceptions"; and of the "Forty-eight" he declares that "no collection of equal interest and variety exists in the whole range of music." He remarks that the Fugues in the latter work are generally considered the most important part, but adds that "the Preludes are fully as interesting, and even more unique." And here we must venture on one more quotation:

"The collection is likely to remain the sacred book of musicians who have any real musical sense, as long as the present system of music continues."

Dr. Bülow remarks somewhere that the "Well-tempered Clavier" is the Old Testament, and Beethoven's pianoforte Sonatas the New Testament, of musical literature.

In the chapter on "The Middle Stage of Modern Opera," due homage is paid to Gluck; and Metastasio, the famous librettist, is mentioned as having encouraged the musician in his operatic reforms. The following extract from a letter written by the poet in his old age shows what he thought of the conventional libretto:

"I am restricted to five characters, for this substantial reason, given by a certain governor—that persons of rank ought not to be lost in a crowd. The duration of the performance, the changes of the scene, the airs, almost the number of the words are fixed. Tell me if this is not enough to drive the most patient man mad?"

The letter from which the above is taken is given by Bombet in his account of Metastasio.

Dr. Parry generally manages to sum up the great musicians in a pithy manner. Of Gluck, after describing his aims and achievements, he says:

"It was as though he pushed for himself a special short cut up a very arduous ascent where other men could not follow him. And it was not until music in general had gone by a more circuitous route, which avoided the rocks and precipices, that it finally arrived at a position which made his ideals attainable."

We have spoken of Dr. Parry's enthusiasm for Bach, and he is equally enthusiastic about Beethoven and Wagner. But somehow or other he seems rather cold towards Mozart. His account of the services rendered to art by that musician is certainly fair; and yet, here and there, he makes use of rather disparaging expressions. For instance, he says that Figaro and Cherubino are realities "just as much as Mozart's merry tunes." In connexion with Cherubino's music, "merry" seems scarcely the correct epithet. Again, Mozart is described as representing "the type of man who is contented with the average progress of things." And yet Mozart complained of pedantic poets, and longed for "a composer who understands the theatre, and knows how to produce a piece, and a clever poet, could be (like a veritable phoenix) united in one." In reference to Mozart Dr. Parry notes the comparatively late maturity of men of strong artistic personality, as compared with those whose main spur is artistic facility. This he regards almost as a law, and gives a few illustrations. In some cases the application of the law may be easy enough, but in others it would be found more difficult. There would, in any case, be difference of opinion as to the time of maturity of this or that musician. The subject is one of great interest, and Dr. Parry's thoughtful remark might serve as the basis of a profitable essay on the evolution of genius.

Concerning Beethoven our author has much to say, and his analysis of the master's career is as sound as it is sober. Beethoven's attitude with regard to programme music is clearly set forth; every remark made by the master on the subject shows that the "expression of inner feeling rather than picturing" was his guiding principle—guiding principle, we mean, so far as formally revealing the details of the pictures which prompted musical utterance. We believe mental picture-drawing suggested by the mood of his music to be in accordance with Beethoven's precept and practice. Dr. Parry notices the direct influence of Bach on Beethoven; and from an interesting pamphlet recently published by Dr. Erich Prieger, entitled "Friedrich Wilhelm Rust: Ein Vorgänger Beethovens," we find that, indirectly, Beethoven was also indirectly influenced by Friedemann, J. S. Bach's most gifted son. Of this Friedemann Rust was a pupil; and an examination of his music will show clearly that the old Dessau master fully deserves the title of a "predecessor of Beethoven."

Dr. Parry speaks humorously of "the colossal dimensions" of Berlioz's orchestra, "with its square yards of drum surface, and its crowds of shining yellow brass instruments," and contrasts it with the small but effective orchestra of the opening of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony. The comparison, however, seems to us faulty. Why not compare like with like? Berlioz has shown us that he, too, could write effectively for a small orchestra. Still, the wonderful weirdness and picturesqueness of the French master's music is fully acknowledged.

Towards the close of his book Dr. Parry touches upon modern music. The experience of nearly seventy years which have elapsed since Beethoven's death confirms Dr. Parry's statement that Beethoven reached "the high water mark of art and expression in Sonata form." And he speaks also of "the wild theories of a certain group of enthusiasts" who vainly imagined they could follow Beethoven in his expressive aims without regard to his principles of design.

In discussing "Modern Phases of Opera" Dr. Parry says truly—"The problem to be solved in fitting intelligible music to intelligible drama is one of the most complicated and delicate ever undertaken by man." The whole of this chapter is of great interest.

We have touched here and there on certain passages in the volume which seemed to invite comment; to notice all that is of interest or importance would require almost as many columns as the book has pages. We have merely tried to call attention to a work which is certainly one of the most serious attempts to relate in succinct form the long story of music.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

A. DVORÁK has recently published three overtures ("In der Natur," Op. 91, "Carneval," Op. 92, and "Otello," Op. 93), and of these the second and third were performed at the Crystal Palace last Saturday. The composer, in a semi-official way, has hinted at a connexion between the three. Why then were not all given? The three movements of Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata, if played apart, would win admiration; but the special effect of that whole work, the unity overruling variety, would be lost. No. 2, "Carneval," is a bright, bustling, characteristic piece; the composer delights in national colouring. No. 3, "Otello," is extremely interesting; and Dvorák certainly wrote up to his "programme," and did not, à la Schumann, add his superscription after he had written his music. It is a bold attempt at music on a poetical basis: so bold, so dramatic, indeed, that it seems as if one ought to have a clue to the meaning further than the general heading "Otello." The orchestration is highly effective in its colours and contrasts. The performance of both Overtures, under the direction of Mr. Manns, was excellent. M. Elkan Kosman gave an artistic rendering of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and Miss Marie Brema was successful as the vocalist.

DR. JOACHIM and Signor Piatti well deserved the reception given to them last week at the Grafton Galleries in honour of the fiftieth anniversary of their first appearance in England. Both of these eminent artists have laboured long and successfully in the cause of high art, but, as yet, neither seems inclined to enjoy a well-earned repose. It was, therefore, fitting to mark this as a red-letter year. The speeches which they made in answer to the addresses read by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie and Sir George Grove were of deep interest. By reason of their extreme simplicity they were eloquent; and no thoughtful musician could help feeling that, in spite of the proverbial rapid flight of time, it really was a very long time ago since Joachim and Piatti made their first appearance here. The former naturally referred to Mendelssohn who brought him to London, and many have been the changes in musical art since the death of that composer. From Haydn to Mendelssohn musicians worked quietly on what may be called Sonata lines; but this was followed by a period of storm and stress, of questioning, of awakening, perhaps, to new life. It is worthy of note that, among the audience at the Grafton Galleries, was Mr. Manuel Garcia, whose early memories carry him back to the days when Beethoven, Weber, and Schubert were producing their immortal works.

SIR AUGUSTUS HARRIS commenced a short season of opera in English at Drury-lane last Saturday, and chose for the opening night Wallace's "Maritana," followed on Monday by Balfe's "Bohemian Girl." English operas, as a rule, do not enjoy world-wide celebrity, but these two form notable exceptions. Their librettos are not strong, and their music is often weak; but by reason of their simplicity and tunefulness they still, as was manifest in these performances, retain a firm hold on the general public.

THE sudden death of Sir Robert Stewart, professor of music at Dublin University, removes from the musical world an amiable man, an accomplished organist, and a successful composer. He will be specially remembered as organist at Trinity College, for which he wrote his latest work, the Tercentenary Ode. In 1853 he was elected honorary member of the Royal Academy of Music.

Price HALF-A-CROWN Monthly.

THE PORTFOLIO.

EDITED BY

P. G. HAMERTON.

THE SUBJECT FOR APRIL IS

JULES BASTIEN-LEPAGE.

By JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. Henry Ady).

JAN. No.—"The Etchings of Rembrandt," by P. G. Hamerton.

"It is difficult to say enough in praise of this excellent piece of work."—SPECTATOR.

FEB. No.—"Malta, and the Knights Hospitallers," by Rev. W. K. R. Bedford.

"Most choice and admirable."—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

MARCH No.—"Josiah Wedgwood," by Professor Church.

"Numerous fine drawings illustrate this admirable monograph."—LEEDS MERCURY.

NEW AND ABRIDGED EDITION.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By Rev. W. J. LOFTIE. With Thirty Illustrations.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Cloth, 3s. 6d.

ROUND MY HOUSE. Notes on Rural Life in France. By P. G. HAMERTON.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. MARSHALL.

Price 1s.; sewed, 1s. 6d., cloth.

THE FIRST LIGHT ON THE EDDYSTONE. By EMMA MARSHALL, Author of "Bristol Bells," &c.

SEELEY &amp; COMPANY, LIMITED, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY.

NOW READY.

THE BETROTHED. 1 vol. With Five ETCHINGS after WAL. PAGET.THE TALISMAN. 1 vol. With Five ETCHINGS by and after HERBERT DICKSEE and JULIEN LE BLANT.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14 KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "SUPERNATURAL RELIGION."

Just published, 8vo, price 6s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER: a Study.

By the AUTHOR OF "SUPERNATURAL RELIGION."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION: an Inquiry A REPLY to DR. LIGHTFOOT'S ESSAYS into the Reality of Divine Revelation. 3 vols. Revised and Complete Edition. 8vo, 36s.

8vo, 6s.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; CO.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D."Very frank in tone, and modern in application."—The Bookman.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS. And other Sermons."As striking and suggestive as any Dr. Maclaren has published. . . . The book is full of helpful thoughts."—Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN. And other Sermons.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES. A Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST. And other Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

DAVID NUTT,
270-271, Strand, London.THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

APRIL, 1894.

180 pp., demy 8vo, 2s. net.

CONTENTS.

S. SCHECHTER.—SOME ASPECTS of RABBINIC THEOLOGY.

C. G. MONTEFIORE.—FIRST IMPRESSIONS of PAUL DAVID ROSIN.—THE MEANING of the MNEMONIC FORMULAE for the RADICAL and SERVILE LETTERS in HEBREW.

I. ABRAHAM.—JOSEPH ZAPARA and his BOOK of DELIGHT.

MISS LOWY.—M. LEO ERRERA on the JEWS of RUSSIA.

CRITICAL NOTICES.—NOTES and DISCUSSIONS.—G. H. SKIPWITH. THE STRUCTURE of the BOOK of MICAH.—C. G. MONTEFIORE. A NOTE on INSPIRATION, &amp;c.

The Annual Subscription to the "Jewish Quarterly Review" is 10s. post free, payable in advance. The year begins with the October Number.

FOLK-LORE.

A Quarterly Review of Myth, Tradition, Institution, and Custom

Vol. V., No. 1. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

CONTENTS.

W. B. GERISH.—ST. VALENTINE'S DAY CUSTOM at NORTHEREPS.

G. H. KINAHAN.—CURSING STONES in COUNTY FERMANAGH.

W. H. D. ROUSE.—RELIGIOUS TABLEAUX and VOTIVE OFFERINGS in ITALIAN CHURCHES.

E. SEWELL.—SOUTH INDIAN MURDER TRIALS.

F. FAWCETT.—ON some of the EARLIEST EXISTING RACES of the PLAINS of SOUTH INDIA.

MISS BURNE.—GUY FAWKES on the SOUTH COAST.

MR. MURRAY AYNLEY.—THE CINGALESE GAME of MASOCK.

G. L. GOMME.—PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS for the 1893-94 SESSION.

REVIEWS—CORRESPONDENCE—MISCELLANEOUS—BIBLIOGRAPHY.

"Folk-Lore" is sent to all members of the Folk-Lore Society paying an Annual Subscription of 21s., in addition to an extra volume. The extra volume for 1891 was: "The Denham Tracts, Edited by D. J. Hardy. Vol. I." (purchasable separately at 15s. 6d. net); for 1892, "Cinderella, Catskin Cap &amp; Rushes. Three Hundred and Forty Variations, Edited by Miss M. R. Cox" (purchasable separately at 15s. net); for 1893, "Saxo Grammaticus. Translated by O. Elton, with Commentary by F. York Powell." The extra volumes for 1894 will be "The Denham Tracts, Vol. II."

Applications for Membership should be made to the Secretary, F. A. MILNE, Esq., 11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.*THE TRADITIONAL GAMES of ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, and IRELAND.

Collected and Annotated by ALICE BERTHA

GOMME. Vol. I. (ACROSSHAY—NUTS IN MAY).

xx.-433 pp., demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

SAXO GRAMMATICUS. The first Nine Books of the Danish History, Translated by OLIVER ELTON, with some considerations on Saxo's Sources, Historical Methods and Folk-Lore. By F. YORK POWELL. Demy

8vo, cxxviii.-436 pp., cloth, 15s. net.

CIVILISATION during the

MIDDLE AGES, especially in relation to Modern

Civilisation. By G. B. ADAMS, Professor of History in Yale University. VIII.-463 pp., cloth

10s. 6d.

A. M. EARLE.—CUSTOMS and

FASHIONS in OLD NEW ENGLAND. Crow

8vo, 320 pp., 7s. 6d.

H. H. ROMILLY.—LETTERS

from the WESTERN PACIFIC and MASHONA

LAND. Demy 8vo, 400 pp., illustrated, 7s. 6d.

BLISS CARMAN.—LOW TIDE

on GRAND PRE, and other Poems. Small 4to

5s. net.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1144.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION.

MARK RUTHERFORD'S NEW NOVEL.

CATHARINE FURZE.

2 vols., cloth 12s.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—“We have no hesitation in saying that it is by far the most impressive, original, and interesting work of fiction that has fallen into our hands for many a month.”

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—“A simple and touching story, told with rare skill and power.”

SCOTSMAN.—“Can be read many times by the same reader before its interest is exhausted.”

CHRISTIAN WORLD.—“Mark Rutherford has treated a risky conception with rare skill and delicacy, and the story, with its strong contrasts of light and shade, fascinates the reader.”

HE

PSEUDONYM LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUMES.

21mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. each.

A STUDY in COLOUR.

By ALICE SPINNER.

“These stories, with their humour and pathos, are most prettily told, and we know no better picture of the dusky side of West Indian life.”

Daily Chronicle.

THE HON. STANBURY, and Others. By TWO.

“This book illustrates the expulsive power of a new affection.”—Yorkshire Daily Post.

- |                                     |                                    |
|-------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. MADEMOISELLE IXE.                | 20. A SPLENDID COUSIN.             |
| 2. STORY of ELEANOR LAMBERT.        | 21. COLETTE.                       |
| 3. MYSTERY of the CAMPAGNA.         | 22. OTTILIE.                       |
| 4. THE SCHOOL of ART.               | 23. A STUDY in TEMPTATION.         |
| 5. AMARYLLIS.                       | 24. THE CRUISE of the “WILD DUCK.” |
| 6. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.              | 25. SQUIRE HELLMAN.                |
| 7. A RUSSIAN PRIEST.                | 26. A FATHER of SIX.               |
| 8. SOME EMOTIONS and a MORAL.       | 27. THE TWO COUNTESSES.            |
| 9. EUROPEAN RELATIONS.              | 28. THE SINNER'S COMEDY.           |
| 10. JOHN SHERMAN.                   | 29. CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA.          |
| 11. THROUGH the RED LITTEN WINDOWS. | 30. THE PASSING of a MOOD.         |
| 12. GREEN TEA.                      | 31. GOD'S WILL.                    |
| 13. HEAVY LADEN.                    | 32. DREAM LIFE and REAL LIFE.      |
| 14. MAKAR'S DREAM.                  | 33. THE HOME of the DRAGON.        |
| 15. NEW ENGLAND CACTUS.             | 34. A BUNDLE of LIFE.              |
| 16. THE HERB of LOVE.               | 35. MIM'S MARRIAGE.                |
| 17. THE GENERAL'S DAUGHTER.         | 36. THE ROUSING of Mrs. POTTER.    |
| 18. SAGHALIEN CONVICT.              |                                    |
| 19. GENTLEMAN UP-COTT'S DAUGHTER.   |                                    |

VOLUME II. JUST READY.

THE REVOLUTION and the EMPIRE. Being the Memoirs of Chancellor Pasquier. In 3 vols. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. per volume. Vols. I. and II., now ready. Vol. III. in the Autumn.

“The book can be highly recommended, not only to the student, but to the more serious class of the great reading public; there is scarcely a page which is not worthy of perusal. Its author abstains from entering upon the gossip and frivolities that form to large a part of many French memoirs, and while he disclaims in his preface the title of historian, he writes in the spirit of one—calmly, impartially, and almost judiciously.”—Standard.

Second Edition, Revised and Corrected.

SPINOZA'S ETHIC. Translated from the Latin by W. HALE WHITE. Trans- lation Revised by AMELIA HUTCHINSON SPIRLING, M.A. (Edin.). Second Edition, Revised and Corrected, with New Preface. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

“A careful rendering such as this appears to be, ought to be of great service to those who do not read Latin, and who yet wish to get the actual thoughts of one in whom so many have found salvation.”—Glasgow Herald.

PHILLIPS BROOKS' LAST WORK.

PERFECT FREEDOM. Ad- dresses by PHILLIPS BROOKS. With an Introduction by Rev. JULIUS H. WARD; Etched Portrait Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE NEW VOLUMES OF “THE REFORMER'S BOOK-SHELF.”

BAMFORD'S PASSAGES in the LIFE of a RADICAL. Edited, with an Intro- duction, by HENRY DUNCKLEY (“VERAX”). 2 vols., cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

“We cordially welcome this reprint.....Mr. Dunckley's lucid and impartial introduction.”—Times.

“The volumes have their chief value and charm in the homely, racy and vigorous sketches they contain of working Lancashire in the early part of the century.”—Scotsman.

ECHOES of OLD FLORENCE:

Her Palaces and Those Who Have Lived in Them.
By LEADER SCOTT. Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

“A little book that Leigh Hunt would have delighted in.”
Saturday Review.

NEW VOLUME OF “THE INDEPENDENT NOVEL SERIES.”

MRS. THORNDALE'S COUSIN.

By E. M. BACOT. Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
each.

“A bright little story.....Smartly written throughout.”
Literary World.

(The 37th Volume of “The Story of the Nations.”)

JAPAN. By David Murray,

Ph.D. Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Large crown 8vo, fancy cloth, gold lettered, 5s.

“A succinct and comprehensive history.”—Times.

SECOND EDITION.

(Third Edition in Preparation.)

S. R. CROCKETT'S

NEW STORY.

THE RAIDERS:

Being Some Passages in the Life of John Faa,
Lord and Earl of Upper Egypt.

BY

S. R. CROCKETT,

Author of “The Stickit Minister,” &c.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

“A thoroughly enjoyable novel, full of fresh, original, and accurate pictures of life long gone by.”—DAILY NEWS (Leader).

“Abounding in delightful incident and charming description.”—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

“The new Barrie of yesterday is to-day a second Stevenson—and no bad second, let us make haste to add.”—DAILY CHRONICLE.

“The book has merits; merits of humour, character, description, dialect.”

NATIONAL OBSERVER.

“A book of capital merit.”

SATURDAY REVIEW.

“This splendid story, with strength in its every line, full of insight, humour, and pathos.”

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

“A very able, original, and stirring Scots romance.”—GLASGOW HERALD.

“Nothing so tempting has been provided for some time.”—DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

“Delightfully vigorous, racy, humorous, adventurous, and distinctive.”

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

“An admirable story.”—VANITY FAIR.

“‘The Stickit Minister’ was good, ‘The Raiders’ is better.”—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

“A book well worth reading.”

WHITEHALL REVIEW.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

PROF. SAYCE ON THE VERDICT OF THE MONUMENTS, by T. TYLE	281
MRS. TOWNSHEND MAYER'S WOMEN OF LETTERS, by J. A. NOBLE	283
DAWSON'S GERMANY AND THE GERMANS, by J. G. C. MICHIN	284
BOYERSEN'S COMMENTARY ON IBSSEN, by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON	285
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	286
CURRENT LITERATURE	287
NOTES AND NEWS	288
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	288
ORIGINAL VERSE: "WINTER SONNETS FROM MY GARDEN," by MRS. FREILINGBATH-KEOKER	289
CRITICARY: PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH, by J. S. C.	289
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	290
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	290
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Logic Elphinstone Oyam, by the Earl of Southesk; What was a Lock on the Thames? by Dr. F. J. FURNIVAL; Dante's Interpretation of "Galilea" as "Bianchezza," by PAGET TOYNBEE; Dr. Johnson and Sir Thomas Browne, by LIONEL JOHNSON	290
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	291
SOME BOTANICAL BOOKS	291
SCIENCE NOTES	292
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	292
ART BOOKS	293
THE TEMPLE OF HAYASU AT DEIR EL BAHARI, by D. G. HOGARTH	293
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	294
MASSENET'S "THAIS," by CECIL NICHOLSON	294
OBITUARY: SIR ROBERT STEWART, by O. J. VIGNOLES	295
MUSIC NOTES	295

TO LITERARY MEN and others.—

PAINT SHARE OFFERED in a very lucrative undertaking. About £150 required.—Write, in first instance, "X. Y. Z.," care of A. B. Fuller, Esq., Solicitor, Howard House, Arundel Street, Strand.

ADVERTISER is seeking SITUATION

in a Provincial Public Library; 18 years of age; educated at a public grammar school; some knowledge of French and Latin. Typewriting; is learning shorthand, and preparing for Examination of Library Association.—L. 11, Oakley Street Flats, Chelsea, S.W.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,

Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF ELOCUTION, 10, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN

MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossip." Is. 6d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Bwln, Breconshire.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SONS SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

ORIENTAL WORKS.

MESSRS. LUZAC & CO. have a large

Stock of ORIENTAL WORKS, and can supply them, if not in stock, quickly and at moderate prices.

LUZAC &amp; CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.

Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly. Annual Subscription (post free), 3s.

* The ACADEMY, Feb. 4, 1894, writes: "Messrs. Luzac & Co.'s Oriental List...deserves the support of Oriental students...It gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere."

Vol. V. No. III. (March, 1894), just out. A few copies of Vols. I. to IV. are still to be had (half-bound, with full Author's Index, &c.) at 5s. net each volume.

BIBLIOTHECA ORIENTALIS: I.

Being a Catalogue of Oriental Languages and Literature (containing New and Second-hand Books in more than 50 different languages), pp. iv. 194 (1894 Nos.) will be sent post free on receipt of 6d.

LUZAC'S ROUGH LIST of SECOND-

HAND BOOKS, No. 7 (on the Languages and Literature of Asia, &c.), sent post free on application.

LUZAC & CO., Publishers to the India Office, 46, Great Russell Street opposite the British Museum, London, W.C.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

NEW CHAIR OF HISTORY.

The UNIVERSITY COURT will, on MONDAY, 18th JUNE NEXT, or soon subsequent day, appoint a PROFESSOR to this CHAIR.

While any portion of History will be within the scope of the Chair, special regard will be had to the attainments of the Candidates in the department of Modern History.

The Professor will be required to deliver annually at least one full Ordinary Course of 10 Lectures, and one full Honours Course of 60 Lectures, and to discharge the other duties of a Professor.

The Lectures will extend over either a continuous Winter Session of six months, or, should the Court so determine, over half of the Winter Session, together with the Summer Session of say three months.

The salary attached by Ordinance to the Chair is £300, subject to abatement in the event of the University Fee Fund at any time failing to provide the normal salaries of the Professors.

The appointment will be made "ad vitam aut culpam," and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance. Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 28th May next, sixteen copies of his application, and sixteen copies of any Testimonials he may desire to submit. One copy of the application should be signed.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary, Edinburgh University Court.

University of Edinburgh, 18th March, 1894.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1894.

A COURSE OF EIGHT LECTURES on "CHRISTIANITY in its MOST SIMPLE and INTELLIGIBLE FORM" will be delivered by the Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt., Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, at the PORTMAN ROOMS, BAKER STREET, on the following days—viz., MONDAY 18th, Thursday 19th, Monday 23rd, Thursday 26th and Monday 30th, April; and Thursday 3rd, Monday 7th, and Thursday 10th May, at 5 p.m. Admission to the Course of Lectures will be by ticket, without payment. Persons desirous of attending the Lectures are requested to send their names and addresses to Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C., not later than Saturday, 7th April; and as soon as possible after that date, tickets will be issued to as many as the Hall will accommodate.

The same Course of Lectures will also be delivered by Dr. DRUMMOND at OXFORD, in the large LECTURE-ROOM of MANCHESTER COLLEGE, on each of the following days—viz., Tuesday 24th and Friday 27th, April, and Tuesday 1st, Friday 4th, Tuesday 8th, Friday 11th, Tuesday 15th and Friday 18th, May, at 3 p.m. Admission to the Oxford Course will be free without ticket.

P. LAWSON, Secretary to the Hibbert Trustees.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, on 14th June next, or some subsequent date, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR to occupy the newly instituted Chair of HISTORY in the University. The duties will begin from 1st October next. Candidates are requested to lodge 20 printed copies of their application and testimonials, if any, in the hands of the undersigned, on or before 13th May.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON, Secretary to the Glasgow University Court, 91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

THE GROVE, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPAL MRS. LACEY. HEAD-MISTRESS—Miss LACEY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Modern History; Oxford University Extension Lecturer.

VISITING TEACHERS:—Miss J. W. KIRKALDY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Natural Science.

Miss A. G. EARLE, Newnham College, Cambridge; First Class Natural Sciences Tripos.

Miss C. M. RICHARDS, Girton College, Cambridge; Classical Tripos.

Miss M. R. HOSIE, Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford; Honours, Classical Moderations.

Miss LOUISA DREWRY (English Language, Elocution).

Mr. ARTHUR SOMERVELL, Professor at the Royal College of Music.

Miss GALATRY, Associate of the Royal College of Music.

Mr. R. CARROLLS (Violin).

Mme. OLIVIER (Dancing and Physical Exercises).

Mr. W. MCPHERSON (Fencing and Drill).

REFERENCE PERMITTED TO:—The Lady Laura Ridding; Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, late Principal of Somerville Hall; Mrs. A. H. Johnson, Hon. Sec. Association for the Education of Women, Oxford; Miss Maitland, Principal of Somerville Hall; the Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester; the Rev. Professor Symes, M.A., Principal of University College, Nottingham.

The NEXT TERM will begin MAY 4th.

GUYS' HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY

SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.) CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee 16 Guineas.

GUYS' HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS in September, 1894. FOUR OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, two (£150 and £60) in Science, and two (£100 and £50) in Arts.—Particulars and copies of Examination Papers on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT

(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £20, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—

Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Goree Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEVYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

HAKLUYT SOCIETY (President, C. R.

A. MARKHAM, Esq., C.B., F.R.S.)—The following Work, in two volumes, is now ready for issue:—VOYAGES OF FOXE and JAMES IN SEARCH of a NORTH-WEST PASSAGE, 1631-32, with Narratives of Earlier Voyages. Edited by MILLER CHRISTY, Esq., F.R.S.

The Annual Subscription is One Guinea, which entitles to all the Publications of the Society. Particulars of Works already issued, and of others in preparation, may be obtained on application to the Society's Agent, Mr. C. J. CLARK, at 4, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

WILLIAM FOSTER, Hon. Secretary.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

GENERAL LORD ROBERTS, V.C., G.C.B., G.C.F.I., G.C.I.E., will preside at the 10th ANNIVERSARY DINNER, to be held at the WHITEHALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLE, S.W., on WEDNESDAY, April 25th, at half-past six for seven o'clock precisely.

FIRST LIST OF STEWARDS.

The Hon. William Waldorf Astor, Alfred Austin, Esq., George Bentley, Esq., William Blackwood, Esq., Colonel the Lord Eustace Cecil, Frederick Chapman, Esq., Colonel Sir Henry Collett, K.C.B., The Rev. Canon W. Cooke, F.S.A., Wilfred J. Cripps, Esq., C.B., F.S.A., The Lord Justice Darcy, Sir John Fowler, Bart., K.C.M.G., J. P. Gasiot, Esq., F. W. Gibbs, Esq., C.B., Q.C., Henry Hicks Gibbs, Esq., F.S.A., Austrey Guthrie, Esq., The Viscount Hampden, Colonel Henry Hozier, Arthur D. James, Esq., The Rev. Augustus Jessopp, D.D., Professor William Paton Kerr, Orfeur J. Kilvington, Esq., William Knighton, Esq., LL.D., Sidney Lee, Esq., Sir George Lewis, W. E. H. Lecky, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D., W. S. Lilly, Esq., T. Norton Longman, Esq.,

The Right Hon. Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P., Sir Alfred Lyall, K.C.B., K.C.I.E., Clarence W. McIlvaine, Esq., Frederick Macmillan, Esq., Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B., John Murray, Esq., F.S.A., J. C. Parkinson, Esq., R. E. Prothero, Esq., The Very Rev. the Dean of the Rochester, Alfred de Rothschild, Esq., Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild, M.P., J. E. Sandys, Esq., Litt. D., Clement Scott, Esq., A. Murray Smith, Esq., Sir Walter de Souza, E. Steinkopf, Esq., Sir Douglas Straight, Major-General Blackwell, C.B., T. Fisher Unwin, Esq., The Rev. J. Edward Vaux, The Hon. William Warren Vernon, Colonel the Lord Wantage, V.C., K.C.B., Captain G. Wemyss, The Rev. Robert J. Wilson, D.D. (Warden of Kelley), C. Knight Watson, Esq., F.S.A.

Guineamen willing to act as Stewards, or to attend the Dinner, are invited to communicate with the Secretary. Dinner tickets one guinea each.

A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.

7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

DRAMATIC and MUSICAL BENEVO-

LENT FUND.

HENRY BETTY, Esq., President.

The THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL DINNER in aid of the Fund will take place at the HOTEL METROPOLE (WHITEHALL ROOMS), on WEDNESDAY, April 14th, at 7 for 7.30 p.m. sharp.

J. COMYNS CARR, Esq., will Preside.

The following distinguished Artists have promised to assist during the quartet—Mlle. Ghisla Valda, Mrs. Helen M. Trust, Miss Edith Miller, and Madame Antoinette Sterling; Mr. Lawrence Kelle, Mr. Reginald Groome, and Mr. Norman Salmon.

Solo Flute, Mr. W. L. Barrett. Musical Director, Mr. C. J. Hargitt.

At 11 p.m. there will be a

SMOKING CONCERT.

Supported by the following and other eminent Artists:—Messrs. Arthur Roberts, E. J. Loupen, Harry Paulson, Ben Nathan, T. G. Warren, John Le Hay, Rutland Barrington, R. Scott Fische, Walter Woodroffe, Hugh Carlisle, and James Fernandez.

Tickets, 2s. each (including wine), may be obtained at the Hotel, the Principal Libraries, and at the Offices of the Fund, 9, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

By order, J. D. TIDD, Secretary.

THE LIBRARY of the late Prince L.L.

BONAPARTE is now FOR SALE en bloc. Intending purchasers may obtain orders to view on application to Victor Collins, Esq., 11, Cleveland Road, Barnes, S.W.

Catalogues (price 2s.) can be purchased from Messrs. SOTHERMAN & Co., 140, Strand, W.C., and 37, Piccadilly, W.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

G. and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and

SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at 1s Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand a greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

THE NEW REVIEW.

THE ONLY HIGH-CLASS SHILLING MAGAZINE.

Among the Contributors to the APRIL Number are—EDMUND GOSSE (on Walt Whitman), GERARD FIENNES (on Thackeray), W. M. YATES (Relics of the Brontës), T. M. HEALY, M.P., WILLIAM ARCHER, F. R. SPOFFORTH (on Australian Cricket).
 The St. James's Gazette says—"Distinctly a strong number, perhaps the strongest of the Reviews this month."

London: Wm. Heinemann, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

DEVIL'S PRONOUN, and other Tales.

By Miss F. FORBES-ROBERTSON. 12mo, cloth, 4s. 6d.
 REEVES & TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

2 vols., small 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

MEINHOOLD—SIDONIA the SORCERESS. Translated by Lady Wilde, and THE AMBER WITCH, by Lady Duff Gordon.

REEVES &amp; TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Just published.

THE POPULATIONS of the FATHERLAND OF ABRAHAM.

By the late G. BERTIN, M.R.A.S.

Price 2s. 6d.

To be had of the Messrs BERTIN, 29, Willes Road, N.W.; or of the Publishers, Goldridge & Co., Hampstead.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON &amp; SONS 59, Pall Mall.

THEATRES.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, Shakespeare's comedy of TWELFTH NIGHT. Miss Behan as Viola; and George Clarke, James Lewis, Herbert Gresham; Violet Vanbrugh, Catherine Lewis, &c.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CASTE. Messrs. J. Forbes Robertson, W. L. Abington, Gilbert Hare, G. W. Anson; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss May Harvey, and Miss Kate Rorke. At 7.50, A CASE FOR EVICTION. Mr. Scott Bulst, Miss Helen Luck, Miss Conti.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, Willie Warde, George Mudge, Mesdames Millie Hylton, Cissie Loftus, Maria Davis, Louise Montague, Sinden, Earle, Mills, Henderson, Hamer, Durkin, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Price, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, P. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, M. Marsden, and Miss May Yohé. At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Orsay, Porteous, Rimma, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Mmes. Decima Moore, Juliette Neville, Cutler, Stadholme, Pounds, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, Gerst, and P. Broughton.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Hay, Scott-Fisher, Gridley, S. Russell, Hunt, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Rubie Temple, and Letty Lind; Messrs. Harry Grattan, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, Sidney Howard, Frederick Rosse, and John L. Shine.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, WET PAINT. Mr. H. Sparling, &c. At 8.20, WAPPING OLD STAIRS. Messrs. Courtice Pounds, Richard Temple, Avon Saxon, H. Sparling, H. Bouchier; Mesdames Mary Turner, Hannah Jones, Mary Hutton, and Jessie Bond.

USE

VINOLIA CREAM, SOAP,

AND

POWDER,

FOR

FACE SPOTS.

ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE beg to announce for publication on Monday, the 16th of April, the first volume of their new quarterly Magazine, "THE YELLOW BOOK." Pott 4to, 272 pages, 15 Illustrations, in cloth limp, price 5s. net.

The LETTERPRESS by MAX BEERBOHM, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER BENSON, HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE, ELLA D'ARCY, JOHN DAVIDSON, GEORGE EGERTON, RICHARD GARNETT, EDMUND GOSSE, HENRY HARLAND, JOHN OLIVER HOBBS, HENRY JAMES, RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, GEORGE MOORE, GEORGE SAINTSBURY, FRED. M. SIMPSON, ARTHUR SYMONS, WILLIAM WATSON, ARTHUR WAUGH.

The ILLUSTRATIONS by Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, P.R.A., AUBREY BEARDSLEY, R. ANNING BELL, CHARLES W. FURSE, LAURENCE HOUSMAN, J. T. NETTLESHIP, JOSEPH PENNELL, WILL ROTHENSTEIN, WALTER SICKERT.

Prospectus post free on application.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, LONDON, W.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,
 BUCKINGHAM PALACE,
 WINDSOR CASTLE,
 UFFIZI, FLORENCE,
 PITTI, FLORENCE,
 ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,
 FLORENCE,
 AMSTERDAM,
 THE HAGUE,

LOUVRE, PARIS,
 LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
 ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
 HERMITAGE, ST. PETERSBURG,
 PRADO, MADRID,
 VATICAN, ROME,
 HAARLEM,
 FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
 HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOCRAVURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processers in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Just published, demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1893.

LECTURES

OF THE

BASES OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF.

DELIVERED IN OXFORD AND LONDON

IN APRIL AND MAY, 1893.

By CHARLES B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.,
 Professor of Philosophy in Manchester College.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORWORTH, London and Edinburgh.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
 FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
 FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

IN THE PRESS.

THE LIFE OF JOHN CHURCHILL,

DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH,
To the Accession of Queen Anne.

By General VISCOUNT WOLSELEY, K.P.

With Portraits and Plans.
In 2 vols., demy 8vo.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF NAPOLEON.

From the French of ARTHUR LEVY, by STEPHEN
LOUIS SIMÉON,

Translator of "The Youth of Frederick the Great," &c.
2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

NOW READY.

WOMEN OF LETTERS.

Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Mary Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, Lady Duff Gordon, Elizabeth Inchbald, "Lamb's Duchess," Lady Hervey, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu,
Mrs. Delany, and Mrs. Montagu.

By GERTRUDE TOWNSEND MAYER.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

READY NEXT WEEK.

T H O R O U G H.

By MARY A. M. MARKS.

Author of "Masters of the World," "Dr. Willoughby Smith," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

THE GREATER GLORY.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

Author of "An Old Maid's Love," "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The name of Maarten Maartens is becoming—indeed, it has already become—one of the most important and significant names in the literature of contemporary fiction. . . . We could point to scenes and situations of exceptional power and beauty, but we leave them to the many who, we hope, will read this admirable and striking novel."—Spectator.

NOW READY.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN, Author of "The Scots of Best-minster." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Yonge seems to have flung her mantle over the author of 'A Devoted Couple,' and to have found a worthy successor.
The story is a family one, full of sweet domesticities of English family life with a spice of Indian adventure thrown in. A most agreeable, clever, and wholesome story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER OF THE NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON,

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.
2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE.

By M. DEANE.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A striking and interesting addition to the number of works of fiction—not yet large enough to have exhausted the subject—which seek to re-create this or that portion of the life of revolutionary France."—Scotsman.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

A NEW NOVEL BY MISS BROUGHTON. A BEGINNER.

By the Author of "Nancy," "Cometh up as a Flower," &c.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

RECTORIAL ADDRESSES DELIVERED AT THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

1863-1893.

Sir William Stirling-Maxwell to the
Marquis of Bute.

Edited, with an Introduction,

By WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.,

Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of St. Andrews.
Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

"This is a volume that will be treasured by alumni of St. Andrews wheresoever the fates may have borne them. It will revive sunny memories of days departed, and vividly recall scenes that time has obscured but not obliterated."

Dundee Advertiser.

"The volume is both valuable and attractive, and it is got up in a style worthy of the 'City of the Scarlet Gown,' of which it is meant to be a memorial."—Scotsman.

"Besides being of special interest to all whose student days are recalled by them, appeal more generally to those who wish to understand the aims and ideals of our Scottish universities during the latter half of the nineteenth century."

Glasgow Herald.

"Materials so brilliant required the support of no editorial sponsor. The value of the book is, however, increased by the interesting introduction by Professor Knight."

Aberdeen Free Press.

SANTA TERESA:

Being some Account of her Life and Times,
together with some pages from the
History of the last great Reform in the Religious Orders.

By GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, price 32s.

AN INTRODUCTION to STRUCTURAL BOTANY (FLOWERING PLANTS).

By D. H. SCOTT, M.A., D.Sc.,

Honorary Keeper of the Jodrell Laboratory, Royal Gardens, Kew.

Crown 8vo, illustrated, with 113 figures, price 3s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY of MAMMALS, LIVING and EXTINCT.

By Sir W. H. FLOWER, K.C.B., And RICHARD LYDEKKER.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 763 pages, and illustrated with 357 Wood
Engravings, Cheaper Edition, price 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF FISHES.

By A. C. L. GÜNTHER,

Keeper of the Zoological Department in the British Museum.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 720 pages, and illustrated with 320 Wood
Engravings, Cheaper Edition, price 12s. 6d.

MARGARET DRUMMOND, MILLIONAIRE.

By SOPHIE F. F. VEITCH.

1 vol., crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE GREAT CHIN EPISODE.

By PAUL CUSHING.

1 vol., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

UNDER TWO SKIES.

By E. W. HORNUNG.

1 vol., crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

DRYBURGH EDITION

OF THE

W A V E R L E Y NOVELS. Vol. 18. REDGAUNTLET.

Illustrated by GEORGE HAY, R.S.A.

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6s., cloth, and 6s., half-bound.

London: A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS FOR 1893.

A List of Books published in Great Britain and Ireland in the Year 1893, with their
Sizes, Prices, and Publishers' Names.

Also of the Principal Books published in the United States of America.

With the Addition of an Index to Subjects.

Royal 8vo, 5s.

Dedicated to H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck.

A MANUAL OF OBSTETRIC NURSING
By MARIAN HUMFREY, British Lying-in Hospital,
London; Diploma London Obstetric Society; Member
Royal British Nurses' Association, and of its Registration
Board. Crown 8vo, 300 pp., cloth, 8s. 6d.

GLIMPSES of the FRENCH REVO-
LUTION: Myths, Ideals, and Realities. By J. G.
ALOEI, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"No writer has done more thorough work in the investigation of the personal side of the Revolution than Mr. Alger, whose 'Englishmen in the French Revolution' commanded,
not long ago, general attention and critical approval. The present work is even more interesting, dealing, as it does, with many aspects of the Revolution, always from a personal point of view; and, like its predecessor, it shows signs of careful and accurate research. . . . A deeply interesting and most valuable book."—Daily Chronicle.

A Dainty Novelty in size, price, paper, print, illustrations, and general get-up. Super-royal 32mo. Each Volume,
IF SOLD SEPARATELY, parchment paper, 1s. 6d.;
cloth, gilt top, rough edges, extra, 2s.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Six Volumes complete in cloth case (each Volume cloth, gilt top), price 9s.; in cardboard box (each Volume in parchment paper covers), price 8s.

STORIES FROM SCRIBNER.

STORIES OF NEW YORK.
STORIES OF THE RAILWAY.
STORIES OF THE SOUTH.
STORIES OF THE SEA.
STORIES OF ITALY.
STORIES OF THE ARMY.

The ATHENÆUM of March 10, 1894, says:

"Of a series entitled 'Stories from Scribner,' we have before us the last three volumes, 'Stories of the Sea,' 'Stories of Italy,' and 'Stories of the Army,' by various authors. In appearance they are charming little books, tastefully printed, prettily illustrated, and of a convenient size to put into the pocket; while the letterpress is very pleasant, comfortable sort of reading, if the epithet may be applied to stories which are never exciting or thought-awakening, and at the same time never actually dull."

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

APRIL NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

Old Memories. Painted by FRANK BRANLEY, A.R.A.
With Frontispiece and Portrait. PHILIP GILBERT
HAMERTON.

The Farmer in the South. (Sketches of American Types.) OCTAVE THANET. (Illustrated.)

The Burial of the Guns. THOMAS NELSON PAGE.

Peradventure. ANNA C. BRACKETT.

Life Under Water. GUSTAV KOBRE. (Illustrated.)

A Pound of Cure: a Story of Monte Carlo. Chapters
III-IV. WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP.

The Bowery and Bohemia: Urban and Suburban Sketches. H. C. BUNNEN. (Illustrated.)

Afterward. DOROTHEA LUMMIS.

John March, Southerner. Chapters XXIII-XXIX.
GEORGE W. CABLE.

Spring Song. DUNCAN CAMPBELL SCOTT.

French Caricature of To-Day. ARSENE ALEXANDRE.
(Illustrated.)

A Winter Journey up the Coast of Norway.
RASMUS B. ANDERSON, Ex-Minister of the U.S. to Denmark. (Illustrated.)

A Word about Painting. WILLIAM A. COFFIN.

"With the Gods" J. WAST ROOSAVALT.

On Piratical Seas: a Merchant's Voyages to the West Indies in 1805. PETER A. GROTHAN. (Concluded.)

At "Tully's Head." AUSTIN DOBSON.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1894.

No. 1144, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The "Higher Criticism" and the Verdict of the Monuments. By A. H. Sayce. (S. P. C. K.)

WHEN it became known that Prof. Sayce was engaged on a new work to be issued by the S. P. C. K., it was thought in some quarters that, whatever unconventional, not to say "unorthodox," sentiments he might have previously uttered were now to be renounced. The "higher criticism" was to be regarded as an insaniens sapientia, and Prof. Sayce was to sing a palinode:

"Nunc retrorsum
Vel: dare atque iterare cursus
Cogor relictos."

On looking, however, at the present work as a whole, the defenders of conventional opinions will probably sympathise to some extent with the feelings of Balak when he said: "I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them." Indeed, the question has already been raised whether Prof. Sayce has not gone too far for some of the "higher critics."

We must, at once, demur to our author's definition of the "higher criticism," which he opposes to textual criticism as the "lower criticism."

"By the 'higher criticism,'" he says, "is meant a critical inquiry into the nature, origin, and date of the documents with which we are dealing, as well as into the historical value and credibility of the statements which they contain."

But such an inquiry may be inductive and scientific, and its results may be determined by valid and sufficient evidence. An inquiry thus conducted cannot be justly contrasted, or its results be supposed to conflict, with the testimony of the monuments and with legitimate inferences therefrom. The expression "higher criticism" has been, no doubt, used vaguely; but it would be well that it should be restricted to criticism which is wholly subjective and intuitional, or, at least, which proceeds without due regard to extrinsic evidence. In this sense textual criticism may be, and not unfrequently is, "higher criticism." A critic, for example, may not understand, or may dislike, Ecclesiastes. Accordingly, without any adequate evidence, internal or external, he may imagine that the book was written in ancient times on loose or separate leaves, which somehow got into confusion and were afterwards wrongly joined together by clumsy interpolations. But the critic proceeds to set all right, and to evolve from his inner consciousness the very book as it proceeded from the pen of the author. Here we should have criticism which is "high" indeed, even though it may not mount above the Land of Clouds and Cuckoos.

The aim which Prof. Sayce proposes to himself is excellent. He seeks to set forth the "verdict of the monuments," regardless alike of heterodoxy and orthodoxy. He says in his Preface:

"I have aimed at writing as an archaeologist rather than as a theologian, treating the books of the Hebrew Bible as I should any other oriental literature which laid claim to a similar antiquity, and following the archaeological evidence wherever it may lead. Whether I have been successful in putting aside all those prepossessions in favour of a peculiarly divine origin which an Anglican priest might be expected to feel for the Scriptures of his Church, is for my readers to decide."

It may be well here to say that Prof. Sayce's dissidence from the higher, or newer, criticism is manifested especially with regard to Genesis. Without in any way denying the composite character of this book, he is not disposed to accept the analysis of which so much has been said in recent years.

"The confidence," he says, "with which one portion of a verse is assigned to one author and another portion of it to another is a confidence begotten of the study of modern critical literature, and not of the literature of the past. Such microscopic analysis is the result of short sight." "The literary analysis which has given us a Jehovist and an Elohist and a Priestly Code must be supplemented or replaced by an analysis of the Book of Genesis into Babylonian, Canaanite, and other similar elements."

Traces of the original cuneiform documents are, in Prof. Sayce's opinion, still to be seen—as, for example, in the names Zuzim and Zamzummim and Ham (Gen. xiv. 5), as compared with Ammon, many of the Assyrian and Babylonian characters having, as is well known, more than one pronunciation. A difficulty, however, presents itself when the Scriptural narratives of the Creation and Deluge are ascribed to a Babylonian origin, at least if the Babylonian originals were at all like those texts which have been discovered. Prof. Sayce's view is that the Biblical writer gave the Babylonian original a new complexion, so that the colouring became thoroughly Hebraic, the geography that of a native of Palestine, while the Babylonian polytheism was changed into a stern monotheism. But that a stern monotheist should regard as authoritative narratives which are absolutely saturated with polytheism is not easy to believe, though the points of resemblance are such as may well indicate a common origin. At the same time we should not, in this connexion, disregard the new evidence furnished by the Tel el-Amarna Tablets of early Babylonian influence and of the widespread use of the Babylonian language.

In opposition to the high antiquity of Genesis or of some parts of the Book, it has been urged that alphabetical writing is comparatively modern, and that the Israelites at the time of the Exodus were altogether illiterate. To refute opinions of this kind, Prof. Sayce adduces the results of Dr. Glaser's researches concerning the inscriptions of Southern Arabia. These inscriptions reveal an alphabet more ancient than that of Phoenicia. This Arabian or Minaean alphabet, our author thinks, is to be regarded as furnishing a link between the Phoenician characters and the hieratic writing of the Egyptians. In Prof. Sayce's view much light is thus cast on problems which at present seem hopeless or very difficult of solution.

"No amount of ingenuity," he says, "has been able to find any plausible resemblance between the earliest forms of the letters k or n, and the meaning of their names, kaph, 'the palm of the hand,' and nun, 'a fish.' But when we turn to the forms as they appear in the alphabet of Ma'in, the riddle is frequently solved. We begin to understand why the populations of Palestine gave the names they did to the letters they had borrowed from the merchants of Arabia. The problem is no longer so hopeless as it seemed to be a short while ago."

All the difficulties surrounding that great Biblical event, the Exodus, have not been cleared away, but undoubtedly discoveries of great importance in relation thereto have been made recently. The Tel el-Amarna Tablets, Prof. Sayce tells us, have thrown a flood of light on the statement, "There arose up a new king over Egypt which knew not Joseph." Under the later kings of the XVIIIth Dynasty, Egypt had passed more and more into the hands of its Canaanite and Syrian vassals and subjects. But, as was to be expected, a reaction against the dominant Semitism set in, and early in the XIXth Dynasty appeared Rameses II., whose name is to be seen in that of the city of Raames, one of the products of Israelitish labour, and who was, indeed, "emphatically the building Pharaoh of Egypt." The city just named has not been identified, but Pithom was disclosed by the successful labours of M. Naville. To this fact, and to some very interesting topographical allusions found in Egyptian documents, due weight should be given; but it must be confessed that the topography of the Passage of the Sea and of the first stages of the Journey of the Israelites is still unexplained. That Rameses II. was the oppressor of the Israelites may be maintained with some plausibility. Equal confidence cannot, however, be expressed in the identification of Menephtah with the Pharaoh of the Exodus. Prof. Sayce alleges "that the narrative in Exodus does not assert that the Pharaoh was drowned in the Passage of the Sea." Such a statement, however, savours of that historical hair-splitting against which our author himself elsewhere protests. That Pharaoh perished with his army in the Sea is the fair and obvious interpretation of the narrative and the song of triumph; and this was undoubtedly the view taken by the author of Psalm cxxxvi. 15. There would be an obvious want of symmetry if the army alone perished, and the chief transgressor, who had so obstinately resisted the miraculous display of the great plagues, was allowed to escape. It would be better at once that the problem is unsolved or insoluble. Of Menephtah, Prof. Sayce tells us that "a hymn to the Nile speaks of his dying in a good old age," and that his tomb still exists at Thebes. Nothing yet discovered is likely to affect the opinion of those who, whether rightly or wrongly, regard the history of the Exodus as legendary, though with a basis of fact. Some persons, indeed, may think that Prof. Sayce himself really takes this view, when he says:

"The Exodus itself is not an event which need surprise a student of Egyptian history. Indeed, a similar migration of Bedawin tribes from the very district occupied by the Israelites has been witnessed in our own days. Yakub Artin Pasha has told me that his father-in-law, the famous Ihekekyan Bey, always maintained that he had seen with his own eyes the Israelites departing out of Egypt."

According to Prof. Sayce's view, the conquest of Canaan differed very much from the opinion of it usually entertained. The Canaanites were not exterminated, or nearly exterminated. The Israelites found it more advantageous to enter into association with them by marriage and otherwise. The language previously spoken in the land, "the language of Canaan," was, as the Phœnician inscriptions, the Tel el-Amarna Tablets, and the Moabite Stone give evidence, essentially Hebrew; and this language the Israelites adopted on becoming incorporated with the original population. As favouring this view, Prof. Sayce appeals to the fact that many of David's "mighty men" were foreigners—Hittites, Ammonites, Zobahites, and even Philistines of Gath; while David himself was partly a Moabite by descent.

The Book of Job is just now, from one cause or another, attracting much attention. Prof. Sayce inclines to the opinion that it had an Edomite origin, and passed subsequently through the hands of Jewish editors. He would thus explain those peculiarities of diction which the book undoubtedly presents; but it seems difficult to recognise in Job an essentially non-Israelite production. There is evidence to be considered, apart from verbal allusions, or even such a fact as the close resemblance between the curse of Job iii. 3 and that of Jeremiah xx. 14. One easily recognises an analogy between the suffering Job and the Servant of God in Isaiah, "stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." And with regard to this matter, it is scarcely of much consequence whether the portraiture in Isaiah is or is not regarded as Messianic. The fact that the scene is laid in "the land of Uz" may be accounted for on the ground that the author wished to pass beyond the narrow limit of Israel, and take a wide view of his great subject, the moral government of the world. And there is another point worthy of consideration, the relation of Job to Ecclesiastes. Though greatly differing the one from the other, there is an essential analogy between the two books. Ecclesiastes deals with the same great problem as Job, though its criticism of life goes deeper and is more uncompromising. Probably the author of Ecclesiastes kept Job in view as he wrote. He, too, while adopting a quite different method, wished his work to pass outside the theocracy, and become cosmopolitan. For the various interlocutors in Job he substitutes a new and original device, embodying a plurality of speakers in the person of Koheleth, with his conflicting utterances. The discussion in Job closes with a theophany; and the very last verse of Ecclesiastes looks forward to a theophany, when God will reveal what is hidden and mysterious, and show that his government of the world has been right. This relation between the two Books is unfavourable to the idea that Job was originally an Edomite production.

Prof. Sayce does not expect that his book will please "uncompromising 'apologists'"; and doubtless theologians of the type indicated, though they may approve some things, will often demur to his statements concerning Genesis and other of the Biblical Books. But their strongest hostility is likely to be evoked by the conclusions he has expressed with respect to the Chronicles, Esther, and Daniel. They will not improbably contend that these conclusions virtually surrender everything to the "higher critics." As to the Chronicler, there appears to be some confusion when we are told on one page that we may consider his notices "of nations whose names are not mentioned in the Books of Kings as worthy of full credit;" while on the previous page we find, "It is clear that although we may accept the otherwise unsupported narratives of the Chronicler in their general outlines, the details they contain must be submitted to criticism." A much stronger condemnation of the Chronicler as an historian comes a little earlier:

"He wrote in fact with a didactic and not with a historical purpose. That he should have used the framework of history to illustrate the lessons he wished to draw was as much an accident as that Sir Walter Scott should have based certain of his novels on the facts of mediæval history. He cared as little for history in the modern European sense of the word as the Oriental of to-day, who considers himself at liberty to embellish or modify the narrative he is repeating in accordance with his fancy or the moral he wishes to draw from it. . . . We thus have in the Books of the Chronicles the first beginnings of the transformation of history into Haggadah, which is so conspicuous in later Jewish literature."

With regard to the story of Esther, we are told that it "has been founded upon one of those semi-historical tales of which the Persian chronicles seem to have been full." Even the existence of Esther is doubtful. Her name is to be identified with that of the old Babylonian goddess, Istar, a name which could not have been given to a woman if its meaning had been known. If "Istar" was used without appendage or qualification,

"the woman Esther can have had no existence save in the imagination of a Jewish writer, and the identification of Hadassah with the old Babylonian goddess Istar would have been the work of an age which had forgotten who Istar was."

Dr. Pusey began his lectures on Daniel with the statement: "The Book of Daniel is especially fitted to be a battle-field between faith and unbelief. It admits of no half measures. It is either divine or an imposture." And with regard to the attacks made on the Book, he triumphantly declared, in his final summing up, "I have answered the objections." Little did he foresee the changed aspect which the question would so soon assume; as little, indeed, as when with respect to the Psalms he pronounced the Maccabean theory to be already dead.

Previous to the last fatal journey of George Smith to the East, tidings had reached this country of the discovery of a number of tablets which, contained in jars, had come to light through the rain. George Smith was commissioned to buy these tablets for the British Museum, if he thought the purchase desirable. He did purchase them; and after his death they were sent to this country, and examined by Mr. Boscawen, who read an important paper on these "Egibi Tablets" before the Society of Biblical Archaeology in 1877. It was found that the tablets, of which the number was very large, could be arranged in a continuous, or nearly continuous, series extending throughout the period to which the Book of Daniel relates. As they were dated with the regnal years of the successive Babylonian monarchs, the question naturally suggested itself. Do they mention Belshazzar and Darius the Mede, kings mentioned in Daniel, but not recognised by other authorities? To this question only one answer could be given, that the tablets knew nothing of either the one or the other. Moreover, these tablets, of the kind known as contract tablets, were concerned with the prosaic details of ordinary life, and showed not the slightest shadow or reflection of the stupendous miracles related in Daniel.

Not very long after the purchase of the Egibi Tablets, the British Museum also acquired the Cyrus cylinder bearing an inscription which Prof. Sayce describes as "drawn up by Cyrus soon after his conquest of Chaldaea." When it was known that this cylinder had arrived, the expectation was expressed in a certain quarter that now the "higher critics" would suffer a humiliating defeat by Cyrus appearing, in accordance with the testimony of Isaiah and Ezra, as a monotheist and a worshipper of Jehovah. "The inscription is," says Prof. Sayce, "the most Hebraic of all the cuneiform texts known to us"; but it contained no mention of Jehovah. On the contrary, Cyrus appears as the restorer of ancient Babylonian polytheism; while his predecessor, Nabonidus, lost his throne by endeavouring to give the supremacy to Bel-Merodach, and so making an important advance towards monotheism. "Nabonidus," says Prof. Sayce, "attempted in Babylonia what the kings of Judah had successfully carried out in Palestine."

In its opposition to the history in Daniel the cylinder agreed with the Egibi Tablets, and a similar remark must be made with regard to a very important tablet which shortly afterward was translated by Mr. Pinches. This tablet contained annals of Nabonidus; and its statements are very discrepant from those in Daniel and, it may be added, in Herodotus, as may be seen from the following words of Prof. Sayce:—

"There was no siege and capture of Babylon; the capital of the Babylonian empire opened its gates to his (Cyrus's) general, as Sippara had done before. Gobryas and his soldiers entered the city 'without fighting,' and the daily services in the great temple of Bel-Merodach suffered no interruption. Three months later Cyrus himself arrived, and made his 'peaceful' entry into the new capital of his empire. We gather from the contract-tablets that even the ordinary business of the place had not been affected by the war."

Of Belshazzar, the son of Nebuchadnezzar and king of the Chaldeans, slain on the very night of an impious feast, no trace has been found in the cuneiform records.

That the Tract Committee of the S. P. C. K. felt some scruples about publishing this work is to be inferred from their prefatory remarks and an appended note. But they are to be congratulated on overcoming their scruples and giving to the world a really valuable and important book, perhaps the best which Prof. Sayce has yet written.

THOMAS TYLER.

Women of Letters. By Gertrude Townshend Mayer. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

THE sketches, or essays, contained in these volumes have appeared, from time to time, in the pages of Temple Bar; but, in their present form, they have been revised throughout and, in most cases, considerably enlarged. In thus reissuing them, Mrs. Townshend Mayer has, we think, been well advised. Though written independently of each other—and, probably, in the first instance, with no thought of a continuous series—they possess a much more obvious unity than most collections of magazine articles; and though devoid of novelty, either in fact or comment, they serve a useful and agreeable purpose by exhuming memories, many of which have lain buried in bulky and half-forgotten biographies. Of the fifteen women of whom Mrs. Townshend Mayer writes, few, perhaps, could demand an architecturally imposing cenotaph, but there is not one who might not claim the modest brass or tablet of remembrance. In these sympathetic, well-balanced records and appreciations they are, to use a good and useful old word, fittingly memorised.

The greater number of them are, or were once, more or less famous as literary producers; but several of them—though known as diarists, autobiographers, and annotators—are women of "letters" rather in the St. Martin's-le-Grand sense of that word than in the sense which will be given to it by readers of Mrs. Townshend Mayer's title-page. As, however, the exclusion, on such a plea as this, of the papers devoted to these charming ladies would have robbed the first volume of some of its pleasantest pages, we may be thankful that a gracious hospitality has been allowed to override a pedantic literalism of nomenclature. Indeed, one may travel far in the domain of letters proper without coming across anything more winning than the Diary of Mary, Countess Cowper, the Autobiography and Correspondence of Mrs. Delany, and the familiar epistolary chit-chat of Lady Hervey and Miss Berry.

Mrs. Townshend Mayer begins two centuries ago, with Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle, known to all the world as "Lamb's Duchess," and ends with Lady Duff Gordon, whose death in 1869, in her beloved Egypt, brings us well on into our own time. The very pleasant paper on the "incomparable" Margaret loses little—if one dare venture upon such an heretical utterance—by having been based upon a study of nothing more formidable than that most delightful volume, The Cavalier and his Lady, in which Mr. Edward Jenkins reprinted A True Relation of my Birth, Breeding, and Life, represented the other voluminous prose and verse of the Duchess by characteristic excerpts, and introduced the whole with an admirable essay. Those whose curiosity concerning anything loved by Charles Lamb has tempted them to study in the original the works of the "thrice noble, illustrious, and excellent princess," know that Mr. Jenkins left behind him many things almost as good as those which he brought away; but they know, too, that his selection has a really representative character, and that therefore familiarity with it entitles any one to speak with some measure of authority. At any rate, it suffices to dispose of the common error, for the prevalence of which only absolute ignorance can account, that Lamb's enthusiasm for the Duchess was a fancy based on nothing more substantial than personal whim—that it was one of those oddities of preference which are always lying at hand to be cited by the writers of essays on "The Eccentricities of Genius." No notion could well be further from the truth. What the woman herself was can be clearly discerned in the pages of that one work of hers which has been already named. "Nobody," says Mr. Leslie Stephen in his Hours in a Library "ever wrote a dull autobiography," and he might have added that nobody ever wrote a delusive autobiography. There is something in the nature of the autobiographer's task which seems to compel truthfulness—not of course external veracity of statement, but the more important and intimate veracity of instructive self-revelation. It is only in human nature that the autobiographer should endeavour to show his strongest and best: he never fails to show his weakest and worst. Cellini intended his autobiography to be a self-glorification; but the book provides standing proof that he was a braggart, a liar, and a malignant scoundrel. The autobiography of the Duchess of Newcastle proves not one whit less incontestably that she was a woman of singular strength, healthfulness, sweetness, and fine simplicity of character. It exhibits plainly enough her little weaknesses, but they are all lovable weaknesses; and we feel that she was worthy of the eulogies which have but one English parallel—the beautiful sentence in which Steele rescued from oblivion the name of the Lady Elizabeth Hastings. Nor, as Mrs. Townshend Mayer shows by various apt citations, was the duchess's literary talent a thing of no account. She wrote too rapidly and far too much, but she had something to express and a genuine gift of expression; for though often forced or fantastic, her thought can rise to a fine image or concentrate itself in a forceful epigram. The essay devoted to her here is certainly one to be read.

Not less pleasant are the pages devoted to Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, which are especially welcome as doing adequate and needful justice to that native womanly tenderness of nature which a life impoverished of love did much to conceal. The Lady Mary of later days—that is, the Lady Mary who was known to the world at large—is hardly to be recognised in the writer of the pathetic letters addressed to the cold and careless husband by the loving young wife and mother, who asks nothing but that she may know how it fares with him, and that he will send some word to her and her "dear little boy."

A not less brilliant and a much happier career than Lady Mary's was that of the Elizabeth Robinson, who like her became by marriage a Montagu—the Mrs. Montagu who was hailed as the "queen of the blue-stockings," and whose "peacock hangings," under which a brilliant society "quoted, criticised, and exchanged repartees," add a touch of colour to Macaulay's story of the trial of Warren Hastings. Mrs. Montagu as a wit was born, not made. As a girl of seventeen we find her writing of the courtship of the middle-aged Lord Winchelsea and the not very youthful Miss Palmer, "There is a time to sigh and a time to smile, but the sigh of an old man is a groan, and the smile of an old maid is a grin"; and a very few years later, when she herself was receiving the attentions of various country gentlemen, she writes disdainfully—

"To love calves one should be a calf, and to love country squires one should be a country damsel. Now, having assumed somewhat of a higher character than that of a calf or a damsel, I do not find great delight in their company. I think of the two creatures I best like the calf, for he stares at me as if he admired me, but never dresses up that admiration in an awkward phrase. Both calf and squire love the dairy-maid better in their hearts, and only look on me as a stranger."

A clever girl this, and she fell into her right place—which also proved to be a happier place than that allotted to many clever women—when she married Mr. Montagu, grandson of the first Earl of Sandwich, and gradually became a recognised leader of literary society. It was to the feminine guests at Mrs. Montagu's "conversation parties," which began as breakfasts and ended as evening receptions, that the term blue-stockings was first applied. There are at least two explanations of the origin of the nickname, but one of them is both far-fetched and inadequate; and there is little doubt that the true story is the one told by Mr. Hayward in his edition of Mrs. Piozzi's Autobiography, where he quotes a note made by a lady in the year 1816.

"Lady Crewe told me that her mother (Mrs. Greville), the Duchess of Portland, and Mrs. Montagu were the first who imitated the famous conversation parties at Rue St. Honoré. Madame de Polignac, one of the first guests, came in blue silk stockings, then the newest Paris fashion. All the lady members at Mrs. Montagu's club adopted the mode. A French gentleman, after spending an evening at Mrs. Montagu's, wrote to tell a friend of the charming intellectual party who had but one rule—'they wear blue stockings as a distinction.'"

Mrs. Townsend Mayer makes us free of very charming company in all her papers, chiefly perhaps in those which deal with Lady Hervey, Mrs. Delany, Lady Anno Barnard, immortalised by "Auld Robin Gray," Amelia Opie, Lady Morgan, "The Wild Irish Girl," and that beautiful soul—Lady Duff Gordon. One can hardly blame a biographer for being too charitable; but there is reason to think that Miss Mitford's generally fine character was somewhat marred by a weakness, the existence of which Mrs. Townsend Mayer seems inclined to disbelieve. Harriet Martineau's testimony may have been prejudiced, though it is given in the midst of a passage of really warm admiration; but she is certainly not the only witness to Miss Mitford's alleged habit of depreciating others. In her recent volume of reminiscences, Mrs. Newton Crosland, who knew Miss Mitford well, leaves us with exactly the same impression. And perhaps the wisest course is to admit the fact, but while admitting it to urge the plea that a fondness for saying sharp things—especially when manifested by a clever woman—is not so incompatible as it seems with that genuine kindness, to which, in Miss Mitford's case, we have abundant evidence. The most beautiful testimony quoted in these volumes is, however, taken from the lips of one of the many Egyptians who had cause to remember the loving ministrations of Lucie Duff Gordon.

"'By the God most High!' cried one poor father, whose son she had cured, 'if ever I find any of the English poor or sick or afflicted up in Flyzoghloo, I will make them know that I, Abou Mohammad, never saw a face like the pale face of the English lady bent over my sick boy.'"

This review would be not merely inadequate but misleading, if it does not excite in the minds of those who read it a desire for something more than hearsay acquaintance with Mrs. Townsend Mayer's book. That there may be no mistake, let it be said in conclusion that it is a most carefully compiled, finely felt, and admirably written work, the perusal of which cannot fail to give a variety of pleasures.

JAMES ASHROFT NOBLE.

Germany and the Germans. By W. H. Dawson. (Chapman & Hall.)

IN these days social questions are so complex and pressing that only the self-absorbed can be dull. If the crying wants of the time do not rouse our moral sympathy, they may at least awaken our intellectual curiosity. Mr. Dawson's book is a thoughtful study of the difficulties which the statesmen and thinkers of Germany are engaged in surmounting. The phases of national life are, happily, not all like chess problems; but a student of men and institutions has more to say about the dark than the bright spots in a nation's history. He is nothing if not critical. The two volumes before us repay study and reflection. The author wanders over a wide field, without being either tedious or diffuse. The army and the police, the urban mechanic and the rural labourer, the schools and universities, the professors and the students, the pulpit and the press, the Imperial and Prussian constitutions, the Conservative and Radical parties, the Ultramontanes and the anti-Semites, the Social Democrats and the National Liberals, the three Emperors and Prince Bismarck—all these varied subjects are adequately discussed.

Mr. Dawson may be congratulated on having produced a valuable work of reference on the Germany of the present day. Naturally the English reader will contrast what he reads of Germany with what he knows of his own country. He will congratulate himself on the absence, at least in Great Britain, of an Ultramontane party and an anti-Semitic party. Both these parties, though in other respects so very different, owed their success to their respective leaders. Dr. Windthorst was never more than a deputy, yet (as Mr. Dawson truly observes) he was more powerful than the strongest Minister. His "Little Excellency" was intellectually a giant. To his patience, persistence, and ability was due the firm and united front which for ten years the Centre offered to an anti-Catholic Government. The diminutive ex-Minister from Hanover was the most successful party leader of modern Germany. The Kulturkampf between Germany and the Pope has been happily closed. Germany has not gone to Canossa either in body or in spirit ("weder körperlich, noch geistig").

Another Kulturkampf, or fight against civilisation, dates from 1880, when the anti-Semitic movement began. The struggle between the Christian and Jewish populations of Germany is a very serious fact, and deserves to be closely watched. According to Mr. Dawson, it is destined to play a more important part in the future than in the past. The Conservative parliamentary congress of December, 1892, voted with almost absolute unanimity the inclusion of anti-Jewish measures in the party programme. Mr. Dawson, like Prince Bismarck, regards the agitation as impracticable and worse, but none the less he pays a tribute of respect to its originator, ex-Court Chaplain Stöcker. This misguided man is only known to foreigners as a Jew-baiter. He is in reality an active reformer, and apart from his anti-Semitic views, neither a fanatic nor unpractical. After fifteen years of agitation, this political parson now finds himself at the head of "a powerful party, which includes the greater part of the nobility and aristocracy of North Germany."

The Radicals are not a party of victory. Their position is too negative to be strong. In 1878, in 1887, and again in 1893 their anti-patriotic attitude in the Reichstag brought on them utter rout at the polls. Laissez-faire is their panacea for all evils, and this appeals neither to the urban nor to the rural labourer. Their leader is Herr Eugen Richter, one of the best debaters in the Reichstag, if not the very best. Mr. Dawson wonders that a man of his strength and gifts "should not have raised Radicalism to a position of greater influence," but no great nation will be content to follow one who offers little but criticism. After thirty years of agitation and with all the advantages of organisation, the Radicals do not form a tenth part of the Reichstag.

Very different is the history of the Social Democratic party. It is estimated that, of the seven and a-half million votes given in the imperial elections of 1893, at least a million and three quarters fell to Socialist candidates. With proportional representation, that party would have secured a hundred seats instead of forty-four. In industrial Saxony the number of Socialist votes increased between 1887 and 1893 from 149,000 to 273,000. In Berlin the Socialist vote was three-fifths of the total number cast. The Socialists have been no exception to the profound truth contained in the beatitude—"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely." Herr Richter, the Radical and Socialist-scoffer, hit the mark when he said he feared Social Democracy more with the law than without it. Now that coercion has ceased, the powerful incentive of sacrifice for conscience sake has been withdrawn. It was in 1890 that Prince Bismarck proposed to embody the anti-Socialist Law as a permanent statute in the penal code of the Empire. He might have carried the bill, had he consented to withdraw the clause giving the Government the power of expelling dangerous Socialists, not only, as hitherto, from districts proclaimed under the minor state of siege, but from Germany altogether. The bill was rejected by 169 votes against 98. The speech of the debate (for Bismarck took no part in it) was delivered by Prince Heinrich zu Carloth Schönaich. This Conservative magnate declared that "we are in danger of losing our ideals"; he thought German Socialism not absolutely without trace of idealism, a virtue which he feared was fast giving place to servility and place-seeking. No one has illustrated the ideal side of Socialism better than Heinrich von Vollmar, who has been a martyr for his principles. If Bebel is the Cleon of his party, von Vollmar resembles the Gracchi—like them noble by birth, democratic in sympathy, and a patriot by instinct. Liebknecht is a Republican, like Bebel; but while Bebel blusters, Liebknecht reasons. Bebel reminds one of the Thersites of "Troilus and Cressida," Liebknecht of Ulysses. The one is a firebrand, the other is cool and calculating. Yet it is to Bebel, "the religionless," that we owe the famous definition of Social Democracy: "We aim in the political domain at Republicanism; in the economic domain at Socialism; and in the religious domain at Atheism."

This brings us to the point where those who value the thought of Germany more than any other German product must cross swords with the Socialists. The two blots on Socialism—need we limit it to German Socialism?—are its despotic tendencies in the material world, its immoral tendencies in the spiritual world. Individuality is so hateful to democrats that the wonder is it survives at all. If there is one book more than another whose principles must be offensive to Liebknecht and Bebel, that book must be Mill's On Liberty. Leibnitz taught us that not one leaf is exactly like another. This marvellous diversity in nature the Social Democrat would stamp out of mankind. Germany is naturally proud of the position which the Intelligence Department of her army has won for her in Europe, but it may truly be said that her thinkers form the Intelligence Department of the still greater army of European culture. Kant made a God of duty; and Fichte, immediately after the humiliations of Auerstädt and Jena, "gave practical form and application to the precepts of the Königsberg sage." Far different is the moral teaching of Social Democracy. The "Boycott-lists" which appear regularly in the Socialist press are bad enough, but the grossly immoral tone of their advice to the working classes is far worse. Morality, as understood by Kant when he preached the "Categorical Imperative," is a plant of delicate growth. Will it wither in the blasts of a democratic press? Mr. Dawson very properly points out that it is in their moral teaching, not in their economic theories, that the danger of Social Democracy lies. Their economic theories may or may not be right, but they will not be put into practice. Their atheistic and selfish materialism is a dry rot, eating away the manliness of the urban workman. Let Mr. Dawson, no slanderer of Socialists, speak on this all-important point (vol. ii. p. 214):

"When every high ideal has been taken away from the labouring classes, when every ennobling aspiration, every incentive to high thinking and unselfish doing, every belief in a life beyond, every trace of faith in God and disinterested love for man—when these things have been blotted from the labourer's code of life, his condition and the condition of the society of which he forms part will be dark and desperate indeed."

There are some crimes which are also mistakes and bring us immediate punishment. The totally needless attack made by the Socialists on religion has shut them off from the agricultural labourer. The educated Socialist of the town has no reverence for the Bible and no belief in a moral law of any kind, supernatural or natural. Where then does he fix the moral line which must not be transgressed? That is a question which those who think the future belongs to Social Democracy must answer. The Socialist may despise his country cousin who has not grown out of the leading strings of the church, but the contemned rural labourer is "his superior in all moral qualities." The peasantry of Germany have always been distinguished for their simple piety. In the articles in which they set forth their demands in 1525, they base their action upon Christian principles.

"The peasants," said the rebel leaders, "do not wish to be serfs, since Christ has redeemed and purchased all men with his precious blood; they wish to be free according to the Scripture, yet not to live in a lax and fleshly wantonness, but gladly obey the powers that be in all seemly and Christian matters."

This manifesto contrasts strangely enough with the Democratic programmes of the present day. The gulf that divides the rural labourer from the followers of Liebknecht and Bebel is summed up in the words "according to the Scripture."

The political party who (according to Mr. Dawson) can look to the future with the greatest assurance, knowing that time is on its side, is the National Liberal party. Some of the most distinguished men that ever entered the Reichstag—von Gneist, von Treitschke, Lasker, von Bennigsen, Miquel—have at one time or other belonged to this party. The best newspaper in Northern Germany, the Kölnische Zeitung, is an exponent of their views, but their strength lies in reason and logic rather than in numbers. The fact that they loyally supported Prince Bismarck in his State Socialism would make a thoughtful man pause before he joined hands with the Radicals and Social Democrats in condemning that policy. In Germany there is a wide difference between Liberal and Radical principles—almost as wide as between State Socialism and Democratic Socialism—a tempting field which our space forbids us entering on. Suffice it to say that no political party, as a party, are disloyal to the Emperor or the army. Mr. Dawson tells an anecdote of the young Emperor being driven along the streets of Berlin one summer evening. A group of masons, whose work was done, emerged from a building in course of erection as he passed. They waved their hats vigorously, and greeted their sovereign with cries of "Arbeiter-Kaiser."

We cannot conclude this notice of a most interesting book without quoting another remark made by the Emperor himself. Some one in his presence had commented on the alleged ingratitude of the working classes.

"Whether we receive thanks or not," said William II., "for our endeavours to better the lot of the working classes, is not the question; for my part I will not suffer myself to be deterred in my movements by any such considerations. I am convinced that it is the duty of the State to charge itself with these endeavours, and to make the working classes feel that they are an estate within the social order. In any case, these endeavours give me a quiet conscience."

J. G. C. MINCHIN.

A Commentary on The Works of Henrik Ibsen. By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. (Heinemann.)

THE plays of Henrik Ibsen, it appears, are "works which, resting upon a broad superstructure, are but the visible summits of fog-enshrouded mountains of thought." It is true that Mr. Boyesen cannot detect this broad superstructure, "the dominant principle underlying his criticism of life"; but he has endeavoured to dispel the "fog" and show us the grim "mountains of thought" lying beneath. Frequently he proceeds after this fashion: 1. The play or poem under consideration contains the keynote of Ibsen's philosophy. (This is an article of faith which may be universally applied.) 2. It exhibits in a startling and powerful manner certain general truths which Ibsen holds with bitterness and intensity. 3. The strength of his position however is weakened by the particular circumstances of the case chosen to illustrate it, which only exhibits one side of the question.

Mr. Boyesen does not always make use of the third step, and the true Ibsenite would prudently omit it altogether; for it betrays the weakness, not of Ibsen, but of his commentators. It has never apparently occurred to these gentlemen that Ibsen chooses particular cases because he is a dramatist and not a prophet, one to whom the personal problem is of supreme interest, and by whom no general application may be intended. There can be no objection to drawing morals from Ibsen's plays or from any other careful pictures of life; but this fact must be remembered, that his characters are not types but human individuals, whom it is his first and last ambition to represent faithfully. It is not true that "in each of his plays since 'The Pretenders' there was a distinct philosophical proposition which he desired to prove or disprove."

It will be instructive, in this connexion, to examine the confusions which may arise from neglecting the above precautions. Mr. Boyesen declares (p. 51) that "'Brand' is, in its whole tenor and tendency, anti-Christian," and again (p. 169) that "Ibsen had endeavoured to show in 'Brand' that the Christian ideal, if consistently realised, ends and must end in destruction." But in another place (p. 99) he complains that Mr. Bernard Shaw, in his Quintessence of Ibsenism,

"boldly leaps at the conclusion that it is the Christian ideal that Ibsen has undertaken to satirise in the person of his hero. . . . There is, however, an insurmountable obstacle to the adoption of this theory; no one will recognise the spirit of Christianity in Brand. . . . It is, therefore, the half-heartedness, the laxity, the hypocritical insincerity, of society in professing an ideal, beyond its capacity of attainment, which Ibsen satirises in 'Brand.'"

The one conclusion is, to our minds, as unsatisfactory as the other. "Brand" is the picture of a man who has lived up to his ideal only to find it false, a profound tragedy of noble error. The final cry, "He is Deus caritatis," which Mr. Boyesen finds jarring, means simply that Brand had misinterpreted Christ's teaching. In order to account for his persistence in error and to bring out the fine side of his character, he is confronted with certain teachers of compromise, who, being drawn from life, appear to us contemptible. There is absolutely nothing in this play that commits Ibsen for or against Christianity, for or against society.

A similar personal interpretation may be found for the other plays, and will preserve us from detecting "the corrosive self-destroying character of his social criticism" in "The Wild Duck," or "a profound disillusion" in "Rosmersholm." His dramas present different phases of experience, whose teachings it is difficult to reconcile, though each one must help us to an understanding of the rest. That they are faithful and dramatic pictures of life appears to be generally admitted, and for other matters he is not responsible. We have no right to accuse him of "confirming the very thesis which he started by subverting" because Nora could not live without the Truth, which was "absolutely destructive" to Hjalmar Ekdal, or because Rebecca West failed to appreciate "the brimming cup of pleasure" for which Mrs. Alving had thirsted in vain.

We have endeavoured to make a summary of Ibsen's opinions, as interpreted by Mr. Boyesen; but, where so many contradictions are admitted, the task is a difficult one. It appears, however, that "humanity and the plan of creation in general" are paltry and contemptible; the majority is always wrong; civilisation and the Decalogue are hateful, though possibly required for the guidance of fools; an absolute despotism of the strong man unfettered by moral law would make an ideal society. It may be remarked, in passing, that the only formal statement of faith directly quoted from Ibsen contains this one tenet: Human ideals are not eternal, but capable of being transmuted and developed.

Mr. Boyesen's English is, unfortunately, decorative and, in some cases, obscure; but there is good, solid work in his Commentary. Ibsen's unflinching moral courage, subtlety in character-drawing, and matchless dramatic instinct, are fully recognised, and a careful analysis is provided for each play. The astounding statement that "Nora is the model wife, such as the poets and the masculine ideal of all ages have figured her" may help us to account for the singular lack of appreciation with which those splendid monuments of a poet's youth—"The Pretenders," "Lady Inger of Oestrat," and "The Vikings of Helgeland"—are dismissed as crude and romantic.

We now have three English studies of Ibsen. Mr. Wicksteed's Four Lectures on Henrik Ibsen (Sonnenschein) remains by far the most lucid and sympathetic introduction to the subject; the strong, artificial sidelights of Mr. Bernard Shaw's paradoxes—The Quintessence of Ibsenism (Walter Scott)—show up some unexpected points; and Mr. Boyesen has declared, from personal experience, that the dramatis personae are veritably Norwegian.

REGINALD BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

NEW NOVELS.

A Superfluous Woman. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

Hooks of Steel. By Helen Prothero Lewis. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

A Maid of Brittany. By Count Orsi. In 2 vols. (Remington.)

The Stone Dragon. By R. Murray Gilchrist. (Methuen.)

Victims. By F. W. Maude. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

Speedwell. By Lady Gwendolen Ramsden. (Bentley.)

A Fair Colonist. By Ernest Glanville. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Story of Dick. By E. Gambier Parry. (Macmillans.)

Made in France. By H. C. Bunnor. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE anonymous author of A Superfluous Woman has been on the verge of writing a remarkable novel. Its success, of a kind, is already secure. With Keynotes and A Yellow Aster, it is in the front rank of books in demand at the libraries. It is easy to prophesy after the event, so I will say nothing about what I thought of A Superfluous Woman when I read it during the first days after its publication. I have just re-read it, and am now concerned with second impressions, and with the significance of its remarkable popularity. The story has not become a book of the season on account of anything new and fascinating in the matter of plot. The tale is a chronicle of a young woman who is a victim of neurosis. She would not so designate her complaint, nor does her chronicler admit the impeachment. This young person, Jessamine Halliday, so beautiful that she is always spoken of as one of the loveliest women in England, leaves her society life in London and seeks healthy employment on a Scottish farm. There she is passionately loved by, and believes herself to be equally in love with, a Highland crofter of the name of Colin Macgillivray. When that excitement comes near the prospective fire of marriage, it begins to shrink. Jessamine suffers from a sense of her superfluity, but is unable to adapt her inherited requirements to the prose of crofter-life. She disappears from Colin, and from the Highlands, with a Jack-in-the-box celerity. Ten years later she is disclosed to us again in London, as Lady Heriot, the wife of a revolting debauchee, and the mother of two idiots, victims of a hideous disease. She dies in the pains of labour with another victim. Now, three qualities are necessary for a story of this kind. It must be convincing, that is, it must be wrought consistently, its sequences must be natural and well-ordered; it must be treated with controlled power and unflinching insight; and the writer must be so in sympathy with his or her theme that no opportunity be given to the reader to imagine that he is being played with. The author of A Superfluous Woman certainly fulfils the third of these conditions. She (for there can be no doubt as to the sex of the writer) is so much in earnest that she is clearly as sophisticated about her heroine as is that heroine herself. But I do not find the evidences of the second condition: and as to the first, I can only say that another perusal of the novel leaves me still unconvinced. There seems to me only one real personage in the book, Colin Macgillivray—and even he occasionally becomes a shadow. If Jessamine had either more or less force of character her actions would have a greater verisimilitude; but this "superfluous woman" is too much of an author's puppet. Her creator is singularly unequal in her craft. The story has in parts that touch of crudeness in construction and style which suggests the amateur: yet a large section of it seems clearly the work of a practised hand. If written by an author of experience, it is probably an early tale reworked. If the "superfluous woman" were convincing, the record of her inglorious and selfish life would be one of engrossing interest: as it is, one reader at any rate finds her a woman out of a book, not a woman out of life. In some of her thoughts, impulses, and actions, she might be called a sister of Clotilde von Rüdiger: but what a gulf between her and the heroine of The Tragic Comedians! We hear the heart beating, the throb in the throat, even the dainty frou-frou of the one; the other begins by alienating sympathies through a too great demand on credulity, and thenceforth is for the most part an embodied abstraction rather than a woman. It would be unfair not to add that A Superfluous Woman (the title in its present connexion is a singularly inept one) is to a great extent a story that deserves its popularity. It is interesting; it is told with verve and sincerity; and it has many felicities in both matter and manner. But that it should be the success it unquestionably is points to a steady veering of that vane of taste which indicates the way of the literary wind.

By the title-page I learn that the author of Hooks of Steel has written several books. It is a matter of surprise that the experience should not have stood her in better stead when she came to write the autobiography of Rosamund Gwynne, and prevented her from beginning in this fashion:

"Orpheus is dead. Dark as Erebus is his sleeping place on the Thracian hill. No more do the savage beasts of the forest in listening to him forget their wildness, or the mountains bow their heads to hear him sing; but his lute is in the heavens, and makes sweet music among the stars."

As Hooks of Steel is a three-volume story, it was merciful of Miss Helen Prothero Lewis to refrain from perpetrating this style throughout. She has frequent relapses; even in the third volume a chapter begins thus: "Not Ariadne passioning for Theseus' flight ever felt such grief as mine was then." Notwithstanding this verbiage, and a habit of continual quotation from Shakspeare which is calculated to jar on a susceptible reader's nerves, the novel is worth reading. Rosamund Gwynne is a real woman; and, moreover, she has the rare faculty of self-disclosure. Hooks of Steel (there is nothing sanguinary in the title, it is only part of a harmless Shaksperian quotation) is an interesting love-story, diversified with much episodic matter of an entertaining kind. If Miss Prothero Lewis will eschew Orpheus, and keep her wide extent of Shakspeare-study to herself, she will probably write a romance every whit as attractive as this book unquestionably is, and, at the same time, free from its obvious faults of taste and discretion.

The name of the venerable author of A Maid of Brittany will be familiar to all students of the history of Napoleon III. Any book from the pen of Count Orsi would be sure of a respectful reception. No doubt there are many readers who will enjoy the somewhat complicated story to which the author has given its present irrelevant title. The narrative is based upon true facts, and A Maid of Brittany is, in a sense, an historical romance. But the author has fallen between two stools: for his book is neither a moving romance of history nor an absorbing tale of individual experiences. There is, by the way, nothing in it about Brittany: most of the scene is laid in America at the time of the War of Independence, and in Italy during the stormy days at the close of last century.

This is Mr. Murray Gilchrist's third book, though, unlike its predecessors, it is not a single narrative, but a collection of tales. Most of these have already appeared in the National Observer, where some of them, and, most notably, "The Writings of Althaea Swarthmoor," attracted considerable attention. Full of distinctive and often of fine work as it is, The Stone Dragon still remains a work of promise rather than of accomplishment. The author is the only living writer I know of who might with justice be called the younger brother of the late Sheridan Le Fanu. Nearly all our recent romancists, from Robert Louis Stevenson downwards, owe a distinct debt to this half-forgotten master; but the youngest is his most unmistakable disciple. I refer to a kinship of sentiment rather than of expression; for in point of style there is an obvious unlikeness between the writer of the stories grouped with "The Stone Dragon" and the author of Uncle Silas and In a Glass Darkly. There is a byway just at Mr. Murray Gilchrist's feet if he care to follow it—a byway that will lead him to one of the several goals of romance, where he will find himself unrivalled. But he must forget Edgar Allan Poe, forget Le Fanu, and, above all, forget the author of Passion: the Plaything, and The Stone Dragon. Then, if he give himself free scope, if he scrupulously control his imagination, and if he be on guard against his own conventions, he may give us a book which will be as permeated with the essential breath and spirit of romance as a moss-rose with fragrance. At present he trusts too much to the symbol: "sundial," "peacock," "fountain," and other words, are so charged for him with rich and poetic suggestions that he forgets they may not adequately convey to his readers the significance they have for himself. The very fervour of the imagination of this lover of fantasy and tragic romance leads him into faults of exaggeration, of both sentiment and style, from the committal of which less romantic writers are absolved, not so much because of better training or judgment as from deficiency of that fundamental quality of which excess is so often but the inevitable froth. The story that gives its name to Mr. Gilchrist's new volume is by no means the best. And fantasies so merely fantastical as "The Noble Courtesan" and "The Basilisk," fascinating as they are in their kind, are not the work on which Mr. Gilchrist should allow his reputation to rest. Again, if he be wise he will put a curb on his bias towards the grotesquely horrible. The story called "Roxana runs Lunatick," for instance, gives just that superadded thrill which, instead of enhancing the horror, repels the reader. But the fourteen tales or fantasies included in this volume are so clearly the outcome of a vivid imagination, a genuinely romantic temperament, and an unquestionable original faculty, that my last word of them must be one of praise. On the whole, with all its obvious shortcomings, the book is one of singular distinction.

Of the next four books on my list there is not much to be said, further than that all are readable, and that Victims and The Story of Dick are worthy of more than casual interest. Major Gambier Parry's simple study of bucolic life is full of quiet pathos and keen observation; and what it lacks in stirring movement is more than compensated by its delightful verisimilitude. A story dealing with the problems of inherited evil must be exceptionally good if it is to have any appeal at all, for the "heredity-novel" is already a drug in the market. Victims, though it has an interesting concurrent development on other lines, is a study of dipsomania. The book is neither a pleasant nor an exceptionally able exposition of male vices, but it is conscientiously worked out and sufficiently engrossing. Mr. Ernest Glanville won so much deserved repute by his South African tales, The Lost Heiress and The Fossicker, that readers of those books ought to turn with pleasurable anticipation to A Fair Colonist, which is in all respects an advance upon either of its predecessors. Speedwell is a pleasant little love-story of the kind popular with the girl-lovers of Mrs. Craik and Edna Lyall, though (it must be added) without the crisp literary excellence of the former, or the vigour and constructive skill of the latter.

Made in France is the name given by that popular American author, Mr. H. C. Bunner, to the collection of eleven tales which he has just published in this country through Mr. Fisher Unwin. The title does not mean that Mr. Bunner wrote the stories in France, but that they are really of French origin. In other words, he has taken a batch of favourite tales from the treasure-house of Guy de Maupassant, and, instead of translating, has adapted them, with an arbitrary dressing of his own, to the taste of American readers, or of those among them who, in his own words, will not or cannot read Maupassant in the original. Truly, as he adds, the venture was a bold one. These Bunner-Maupassant stories are so good that one might heartily enjoy them, if one were not annoyed throughout perusal by the knowledge that the tales are neither Guy de Maupassant's nor Mr. Bunner's. This is particularly disenchanting when one happens to know the originals well. I am happy in the possession of a good photograph of the French novelist, and unfortunate in not having one of Mr. H. C. Bunner: but, I admit, I do not regret the lack of a Bunner-Maupassant "composite." "Each fish has its own sauce," as the Venetians say. WILLIAM SHARP.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Random Roaming, and Other Papers. By A. Jessopp, D.D. (Fisher Unwin.) In the popular mind antiquaries are divided into two classes. There are the Dryasdusts—indefatigable collectors of indigestible facts and figures; and the curious old fogeys who wax foolish over "Bill Stumps, His Mark." But the division is not exhaustive, for no sane person would place Dr. Jessopp in either category. He is learned without being dull, enthusiastic without being credulous. It is scarcely necessary to say that he possesses the happy knack of popularising his subject, and exercises his art with a grace and geniality which few can command. Perhaps the secret of his success is explained by the avowed purpose of his writings.

"I have found," he says, "so much delight in such studies, they have made the common objects by the wayside so full of interest, and brought me into such close and mysterious relations with the generations behind us, that, from very craving for sympathy, I have felt impelled to bring others under the spell of that same fascination which has not only added to the happiness of my life, but has, I believe, added to my usefulness in the duties of my calling."

Be this as it may, Dr. Jessopp has given pleasure to many readers, and awakened an intelligent interest in the past where before it was dormant. The present volume deals with a variety of topics. It begins with a lazy tour through Kent and Sussex and Hants—counties specially rich in historic sites; then Castle Acre, in the author's own county, forms the theme of a paper where the successive influences of Roman, Saxon, and Norman invaders are traced. "Hill-digging and Magic" is gossip about hidden treasures and their discovery; and then follow two pictures of clerical life in Norfolk, separated by centuries but united by a church which abridges the gap. What we may call the economics of antiquity are discussed in two papers—one on Village Almshouses and the other on Clergy Pensions. In the latter Dr. Jessopp shows himself characteristically not "up to date." He is evidently unaware of the existence of the Clergy Pensions Institution, and the success it has achieved. He is, indeed, outside its scope; and we trust he may long remain rector of Scarning, and with no worse fate awaiting him than that of becoming, as he grows aged, somewhat garrulous and discursive.

THE third volume of Mr. Gemme's topographical selections in the "Gentleman's Magazine" Library (Elliot Stock) displays all the best qualities, and most of the defects, of its predecessors. It relates to three counties—Durham, Essex, and Gloucester; but the first of them, which is by far the most important of the three to an enthusiast in antiquities, was very shabbily treated by the correspondents of this venerable periodical. The whole county is dismissed in 44 pages, while Essex occupies 156 pages, and Gloucester 105. During the last century proximity to London counted in literary matters for a great deal. Many of these articles on Essex are of great value; but especial interest attaches to the series by Mr. Sperling on "Coats of Arms in Essex Churches," which deals exhaustively with a subject that has been unduly neglected. The epitaphs and tablets in its churches and churchyards are reproduced in full, and are often of exceptional curiosity. Many sepulchral monuments, especially those in Leigh churchyard, have been wantonly destroyed; but that in High Laver, to the memory of John Locke, which was described in 1791 as in a ruinous condition, is now kept in good order, and attracts to that remote hamlet many an ardent pilgrim. A very curious hunting lodge at Woodford, which was demolished just sixty years since, is described on pages 198-9; it was reported by tradition to have been a resort of the Earl of Essex, Queen Elizabeth's unfortunate favourite. The most attractive article in connexion with Gloucestershire gives particulars of its mediaeval houses, many of which run back to the twelfth century. While there is much to gratify a literary or antiquarian student in this volume, as in those which have preceded it, many of the subjects are, it must be confessed, discussed in an inadequate manner.

Peeps at the Past: or, Rambles among Norfolk Antiquities. By Mark Knights. (Jarrold.) This is a handsome book to look at, and it is illustrated with some tolerable architectural plates. But we regret that we have nothing else to say in its favour. The author appears to be fairly well read in historical literature, and to have visited the scenes which he undertakes to describe. He possesses, however, absolutely no qualification to instruct others, or to add one more to the pile of popular disquisitions that only cumber the field of antiquarian research. The county of Norfolk has produced so many genuine students that the offence is specially great in this case; for, if Peeps at the Past should find its maximum number of two hundred purchasers at one guinea, the result must inevitably be to discourage the publication of more valuable work. If we have written strongly, it is because we feel strongly on the subject. We took up the volume with no prejudice, being rather attracted by its solid appearance, and by the fact that the edition was limited. We have found nothing in it except what is commonplace, secondhand, or conjectural. In the columns of a country newspaper, this would not call for censure; but the case is otherwise with a volume that simulates the dignity of a local history, and demands no small share of shelf-room. We must decline to give it that accommodation, even as a gift.

Penshurst Castle in the Days of Sir Philip Sidney. By Emma Marshall. (Seeley.) Mrs. Marshall is continuing her series of historical tales, which emphasise the associations of interesting places with great names. She has already given us pictures of Winchester in the days of Bishop Ken, and of Salisbury in connexion with George Herbert, where she was at home in dealing with two lives both marked by peacefulness and piety. It was a bolder task to attempt the more stirring days of Elizabeth, and the more varied character of Sir Philip Sidney—a subject adapted to the wider sympathies and stronger pen of Miss Charlotte Yonge. As regards Penshurst itself, there can be no doubt that the Place, here dubbed Castle, has no rival in its combination of ancient domestic architecture and historic association. Of these features the illustrator has taken full advantage in a set of admirable full-page plates. The story seems to us to suffer somewhat from the weakness of the subordinate episodes, which are concerned with the love of two brothers for two sisters. We are also introduced to wily Jesuits and perverse Puritans, as a foil to the via media of the Anglican Church. But any story would be redeemed from commonplace which gave us for its central figures Sir Philip Sidney himself—poet, statesman, and hero—and his sister, the Countess of Pembroke, whose beautiful example is made to influence all the other personages in the book.

The Wooing of Osyth. By K. E. Sizer. (Jarrold.) The author of the book pleads guilty to false chronology; but the dates of the Saxons are not entirely free from reproach, even in history books, and no one will blame her for any slight alteration which enabled her to weave the interesting story of the wooing of Osyth by King Sighere. He was bold, but did not win the fair maiden, who became abbess of a convent which stood almost on the same site as the Priory of St. Osyth in the quaint old-world village of Essex bearing that name. The story is extremely well told, lights and shades are pleasantly mingled; and the contrast between the fierce, heathen Dane with the brave, but forgiving, Saxon is effective. The attempt, too, to give life-like pictures of old times is successful. There are pleasing illustrations by M. M. Blake.

NOTES AND NEWS.

UNDER the title of The Early Public Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Four Times Prime Minister, Mr. Alfred F. Robbins has written a detailed account of the career of the late Premier up to the time of his joining the Peel Administration in 1841 as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. Introductory to this will be a biographical sketch of Sir John Gladstone, in which special attention is given to those aspects of his career, both as merchant and politician, which exercised an influence upon the mental development of his youngest and most illustrious son, and particularly in regard to the question of slavery, about which much previously unsifted information has been obtained. The book will be published by Messrs. Methuen & Co.

At the time of his death, the late Sir Gerald Portal was engaged upon a narrative of his mission to Uganda, and had completed a considerable portion of the work when it was interrupted by his fatal illness. His diary of the expedition and other materials relating to it have been placed in the hands of Mr. Rennell Rodd, who has consented to prepare them for publication in a volume which will also contain the finished chapters already mentioned. The book, which will be published by Mr. Edward Arnold, is expected to be ready by the end of May.

THE new illustrated magazine, the Yellow Book—about which there has been so much talk in certain circles—is announced to appear on Monday, April 16. The prospectus, which does not err on the side of modesty, must be left to speak for itself. The mode of publication is in quarterly parts—or rather volumes, for they are to be bound in limp cloth—each of which will contain at least 256 pages. It is also interesting to know that no advertisements will be admitted other than publishers' lists. We understand that Mr. William Watson (who, by the way, has a fine poem in last week's Spectator) will contribute two sonnets to the first number. The publishers, of course, are Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane, of the Bodley Head, Vigo-street.

MR. DAVID NUTT will publish shortly: Lectures and Addresses (Biological and Zoological), by the late Prof. Arthur Milnes Marshall, of Owens College, Manchester; The Loves of Laili and Majnun, a reprint of the translation issued in 1836 by the late J. Atkinson, edited by his son, the Rev. J. A. Atkinson; Welsh Folk-tales and Other Stories, collected and edited by Dr. P. H. Emerson; a second edition of Dr. Joyce's Old Celtic Romances; and in the course of the year, in the "Bibliothèque de Carabas," A Philosophical Essay concerning the Pygmies of the Ancients, by Edward Tyson, M.D. (1699), edited with notes and preliminary dissertation on pygmy races, ancient and modern, and their connexion with tradition and myth, by Dr. B. C. A. Windle, professor of anatomy in Mason College, Birmingham.

MESSRS. GAY & BIRD will publish immediately The Jewish Question and the Mission to the Jews, by a scholar who wishes his anonymity to be preserved. The volume is the result of much reading, and of a careful study of the Jew as a type, an influence, and a problem of increasing importance in the history of civilisation.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a History of Haddesley, by Rev. J. N. Worsfold. At Haddesley was one of the most important Templar Preceptories; subsequently the Darcy and Stapleton families resided there, and Cromwell and his ancestors were connected with the parish. The work is compiled largely from local documents, and will be illustrated with sketches.

THE author of "A King's Daughter," a novel which met with considerable success a year or two ago, is about to publish with Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. a new novel entitled The Perfect Way of Honour. The scene is laid in Perthshire and the Isle of Wight; and the work is an attempt to show that there is nothing which a high-minded woman will shrink from atone for an injury committed by one who is near and dear to her.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. have in the press two new novels—A Hidden Chain, by Dora Russell, and The Mystery of Clement Dunraven, by Jean Middlemass—both of which will be published in three volumes, about the end of April.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER announce a British (sic) edition of a volume by an American doctor, entitled Confidential Talks with Young Men. Prof. A. S. Simpson, of Edinburgh, has written a commendatory note.

THE World of this week contains a birthday "Ode to Swinburne," by Mr. Eric Mackay.

WE are informed that the National Observer, under its new management, proposes to publish a series of facsimiles of literary autographs of the early part of the century. The first of the series, to appear this week, will be a hitherto unknown letter of Sir Walter Scott.

THE old-established foreign circulating library and import book business of the late J. W. Kolckmann, of Langham-place, Regent-street, has been acquired by Mr. C. O. Haas, for many years in the house of David Nutt, in the Strand, in conjunction with the working partners of that firm. It will be carried on by him under the style of Kolckmann's Foreign Library (Haas & Nutt).

At the meeting of the Philological Association, to be held at University College on Friday next at 8 p.m., Dr. J. A. H. Murray will read a report on the progress of the New English Dictionary.

At the monthly meeting of the Library Association, to be held at 20, Hanover-square on Wednesday next, at 8 p.m., Mr. F. Madan, of the Bodleian Library, will read a paper entitled "An Early Printing Press, as described by Thomas Hearne, with Notes."

ON April 23 the German Shakspeare Society at Weimar will have been in existence thirty years, as it was founded on the three hundredth anniversary of the birthday of the poet. The event is to be celebrated by a special meeting, at which Prof. Dr. Löning, of Jena, will deliver a lecture on "The Physiological Basis of the Shakspearean Psychology."

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW have issued this week The English Catalogue of Books for 1893, which is arranged on the same principle as for the two preceding years: that is to say, the names of authors and of subjects are included in one alphabet, though with differences of type and cross-references. We observe that the size of the work is steadily growing, the total number of pages having increased from 120 in 1890 to 147 now.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

FULL term will begin at Cambridge on Friday, April 20, and at Oxford on Monday, April 23.

THE Hibbert Lecturer for this year is the Rev. Dr. James Drummond, principal of Manchester College, Oxford, who has chosen for his subject "Christianity in its Most Simple and Intelligible Form." The lectures, consisting of a course of eight, will be delivered at the Portman Rooms, Baker-street, on Mondays and Thursdays at 5 p.m., beginning on April 16. Admission is by ticket (without payment), to be obtained from Messrs. Williams & Norgate. The lectures will also be given at Oxford, on Tuesdays and Fridays, beginning on April 24.

THE university accounts for 1893 are published in a special number of the Cambridge University Reporter, filling just 96 pages. The receipts of the university chest amount to just £39,000, towards which the rent of property contributes only about £2000. By far the largest items are: fees on matriculation, £4623; fees for examinations, £9201 (the payments to examiners, on the other side of the account, are only £7240); fees for degrees, £11,578; and capitation tax, £10,884. Apart from trust funds and assessments upon colleges, it would seem that Cambridge is hardly better endowed than London University. The effect of agricultural depression may be learned from two examples. The university is possessed of a tithe rent charge, of which the apportioned value is £1659; and possibly, in the good old times, this amount may have been exceeded. But, in 1893, after deducting depreciation of corn averages, rates and taxes, cost of collection, &c., the net receipt was only £1015. Similarly, a farm and public-house are put down at a rental of £216; but the actual income was only £70. We are surprised to find the fees of candidates for local examinations amounting to no less than £13,722, of which £9905 went to the examiners; and the payments from towns for local lectures amounting to £9163, of which £7783 went to the lecturers.

THE professors of the several theological colleges in and near London, which it is proposed to include in the new Teaching University of London, have unanimously adopted a resolution expressing their general acceptance of the recommendations of the Commission.

A PROVISIONAL programme has been issued of the second Summer School of Theology, which it is proposed to hold at Mansfield College, Oxford, during the latter fortnight of July. There will be six courses, of three lectures each, on philosophical and systematic theology; three courses on Old Testament and three on New Testament theology, and others on apologetic and pastoral theology, and on Church history. Among those who have promised to give lectures are: Profs. Cheyne and Sanday, of Oxford; Profs. Ryle and Macalister, of Cambridge; Prof. Seth, of Edinburgh; Profs. G. A. Smith, James Robertson, A. B. Bruce, and McKendrick, of Glasgow.

MR. JAMES BRYCE has consented to deliver the inaugural lecture at the summer meeting of university extension students at Oxford this year, and has chosen for his subject, "The Worth of the Study of Ancient Literature to our Time."

THE Council of the Society for the Extension of University Teaching has decided to hold a representative conference in London towards the end of June.

FROM the thirty-sixth annual report of the Cambridge syndicate, it appears that the total of candidates at the local examinations has decreased from 9993 and 9564 in the two preceding years to 9416 last year. The number of centres is now 177 for boys and 159 for girls. The percentage of passes varies from 79 for junior girls under sixteen to 43 for senior girls above nineteen.

MR. JUNIUS S. MORGAN, of New York, has recently presented to the library of Princeton College a number of rare books, including several of the early Aldine classics.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WINTER SONNETS FROM MY GARDEN.

THE FIRST FIRE.

No housemaid lights the year's first fire for me,
But I myself with reverential hand
Kindle upon my hearth the sacred brand,
That shall illumine and warm us gratefully;
Lo, gathered brushwood from the garden, see!—
Dead bough of sage and lavender—a strand
Of knotted clematis—laurelwood bland—
And light blue smokedrift curls up fragrantly.
Then, as the sweet bright flame darts upwards high,
And glowing sparks are scattered all around:
"Ah, would that each sad hearth"—[runs my poor sigh!]
"I thus might cheer through winter's dreary round;
Myself would gather sticks and fuel dry,
And bring the logs in from the frozen ground."

LATE SUNRISE.

I now get up before the laggard sun,
That hides as yet in yonder cloudbank low;
On this side Night is still departing slow,
Trailing behind her veils of sable dun;
But, eastward, see! where swiftly quiv'ring run
Arrows of light, that flush and smite aglow
Yon cloudlets, tier on tier and row on row,
Till all have taken fire one by one:
Then is the sombre cloudbank rent in twain,
And through the rift the red sun disc doth rise,
Until, full-orbed, it stands revealed again
An ever new and glorious surprise:—
Say not that early rising is in vain
When on such marvels you may feast your eyes!

MY FANCY WORK.

This is the time when ladies' fingers deft
Revel in rainbow tints of silk and gold,
In oriental patterns manifold,
And cunning broiery of woof and weft.
Of all such skill am I, alas, bereft,
And to acquire it am I all too old;
But, on the background of my garden's mould
Let me embroider also, right and left:
First, flaming bands of yellow crocus, see,
With tufts of tender snowdrops, pure and white,
Pale primrose and young-eyed anemone,
And sweet narcissus, tulips streaked with light;
But oh, my daffodils, most fair are ye
Springing from grassy sward—mine eye's delight!

KATE FREILIORATH KROEKER.

OBITUARY.

PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH.

It is with much regret that we record the death of Prof. W. Robertson Smith, which took place last Saturday (March 31), in his rooms at Christ's College, Cambridge. Though his constitution had shown signs of breaking down for some years past, he had only been seriously ill for little more than a week. One of his oldest Scotch friends was with him at the last; and his remains have been taken to Scotland, to be buried in his native village.

William Robertson Smith was the son of the Free Church minister of Keig, in the upper valley of the Don, in Aberdeenshire. He was born on November 8, 1846; and at a very early age won a bursary at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated in 1865 with the highest distinction in more than one subject. His keenest rival in the examinations was William Minto, who came from the same Highland strath, and who died, just a year ago, under very similar circumstances. On leaving Aberdeen, Robertson Smith continued his studies in Germany at Bonn and Göttingen, where he acquired the principles of scientific research to which he remained ever afterwards devoted. For about two years (1868-70) he acted as assistant to the professor of physics at Edinburgh. In 1870, on the foundation of the Free Church College at Aberdeen, he was appointed the first occupant of the chair of Hebrew and Old Testament exegesis. From this chair he was finally driven in 1880, after a prolonged struggle in the ecclesiastical courts, on a charge of heresy, based upon his Biblical articles in the Encyclopædia Britannica. It is almost impossible now to realise the excitement which his case then aroused throughout Scotland. His profound learning, the boldness and eloquence of his defence, and his manifest personal integrity gained for him a host of friends. Two courses of lectures that he delivered about this time, on the history of the Jews, were attended by enthusiastic audiences at Edinburgh and at Glasgow. He had now become assistant editor of the Encyclopædia Britannica and lived at Edinburgh, until he was invited to Cambridge in 1883, to succeed Palmer as the Lord Almoner's reader in Arabic. At Cambridge he spent the remainder of his life (except for a visit for health's sake to Egypt and Arabia, where he met with some strange experiences), becoming ultimately a fellow of Christ's, the college of Dr. Peile and Prof. Skeat. On the death of Henry Bradshaw in 1886, he was elected University Librarian. But the work of this post was never congenial, and became too heavy for his physical powers; so that in 1889 he was glad to accept the chair of Arabic, vacant by the death of Dr. William Wright, whose lectures he afterwards edited. Meanwhile, he had become sole editor of the Encyclopædia, the ninth edition of which owes more to him throughout than it does even to its first editor, Prof. Spencer Baynes. The banquet given in the hall of Christ's College, on December 11, 1888, to celebrate the completion of the work, worthily crowned his career. Henceforth, his enfeebled health permitted him to accomplish nothing else on a scale equal to his intellectual powers. But he continued to take an active part in academical business, and to show occasional flashes of the old spirit. In September, 1892, he presided over the Semitic section of the International Congress of Orientalists held in London. He delivered no address on that occasion; but he prominently advocated the organisation of a group of scholars to undertake the compilation of an Oriental Encyclopædia. Almost the last piece of work that he did was to prepare a report on the unique stone weight from Samaria, with a disputed inscription in ancient Semitic characters, which was printed in the ACADEMY of November 18, 1893. This report is a model of patient ingenuity and impartial exposition. We believe also that this very year he was able to revise for a new edition at least one of his early works.

Robertson Smith's abilities were greater than the books he has left behind. When the echoes of the famous "heresy hunt" are buried in kindly oblivion, he will long be remembered as the editor of the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. For it was mainly his example and his influence which brought that work up to the German standard of exact scholarship. It is sad to think that the conscientious labour he expended upon those editorial duties undoubtedly shortened his own life. We must also mention his Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia (1885), which is an admirable example of philological research applied to obscure historical problems.

Robertson Smith led a public and a stormy life, the effects of which certainly left an impress upon his character. He was an ardent controversialist, and could be brusque in his manner and harsh in his judgments. But such defects of temperament were more than atoned for by grand qualities of head and heart, and served to show off his rugged independence. Cambridge—where oriental studies have suffered so grievously by the loss within ten years of Palmer and Keith Falconer, Wright and Bensly—will find it hard to fill his place.

J. S. C.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

MR. JOHN WARD contributes to the Antiquary an excellent paper on "The Museum at Caerleon." The Roman remains which have been discovered from time to time in the neighbourhood are of a high degree of interest. A villa in the castle grounds furnishes a curious memorial of the Roman occupation. The Roman settlers, like ourselves, were in the habit of what is now called restoration. Here we have two, if not three, structures superimposed on one another. Mr. Ward's paper is confined entirely to Roman objects. He promises a continuation, in which, we trust, matters medieval will be treated of. The proposed restoration of Stainburn Church, Yorkshire, is dealt with in an able report to the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Buildings by Mr. Thackeray Turner. We are glad that it is reprinted here, as it will come under the notice of many who otherwise would never have seen it. Mr. Edmund Spedding has a good paper on "Christian Symbolism." We need not say that the subject is one of such vast extent and overmastering influence that any short article such as must appear in a magazine can only give the very meagrest outline. The cross alone would require several volumes to deal with efficiently. "Symbolism is warranted by the Parables, and our very lives commence with the symbolic accompaniment to the rite of baptism." Mr. Spedding tells his readers this is true to the letter; but it may not be amiss to remark that those who only know the baptismal rite from witnessing it as performed by those bodies which are the children of the Reformation, do not know how rich the old services were in symbolic material. The east and west heretics and orthodox alike vied with each other in surrounding the initiatory rite by which infants are admitted within the church's pale with symbolic acts and words. That much symbolism as such among Christians can be traced to non-Christian sources is a fact that no one who has studied the subject can call in question. We are far in advance now of the standpoint of Dr. Conyers Middleton. Andromeda and the Sea Monster and Orpheus charming rocks and stones are to be seen in the Catacombs. In the "Notes for the Month" there is an account by the Rev. P. J. O. Minos of a recumbent wooden effigy in the church of St. Bartholomew, Much Marel, Herefordshire. Effigies in wood are very rare in this country. We trust that this example will be tenderly cared for.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BISMARCK'S Leben u. Wirken. Nach ihm selbst erzählt. Leipzig: Benger. 8 M.
BOENIGK, O. Frhr. v. Grundzüge zur Judenfrage. Leipzig: Friedrich. 8 M.
GESCHICHTE, politische, der Gegenwart. XXVII. Das J. 1893. Berlin: Springer. 4 M.
IMBERT, Hugues. Portraits et Études. Paris: Fischbacher. 8 fr.
JOINVILLE, Prince de. Vieux souvenirs (1818—1848). Paris: Calmann Lévy. 8 fr. 50 c.
SCHWARTZ, E. Eather im deutschen u. neulateinischen Drama des Reformationszeitalters. Oldenburg: Schulze. 4 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- FRIEDLÄNDER, M. Zur Entstehungsgeschichte d. Christenthums. Wien: Hölder. 2 M. 80 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AYROLES, J. B. J. La Vraie Jeanne d'Arc. II. La paysanne et l'inspire. Paris: Gaume. 15 fr.
HORN, P. Das Heer- u. Kriegswesen der Grossmoghuls. Leiden: Brill. 8 M.
PAIBRAM, A. F. Franz Paul Freiherr v. Lisola, 1813—1874, u. die Politik seiner Zeit. Leipzig: Veit. 18 M.
RICHLI, H. Die Bronzezeit in Bäumen. Wien: Hölder. 40 M.
SCHRAUP, K. Registrum bursae Hungarorum Cracoviensis (1493—1558). Wien: Hölder. 2 M. 80 Pf.
SCRIPTORUM rerum sillesiacearum. 14. Bd. Politische Correspondenz Breslaus im Zeitalter d. Königs Matthias Corvinus. 2. Abth. 1479—1490. Hreg. v. B. Kronthal u. H. Wendt. Breslau: Max. 6 M.

WALISZEWSKI, K. Autour d'un trône (Catherine II. de Russie): ses collaborateurs, ses amis, ses favoris. Paris: Pion. 8 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY, ETC.

- BERTHOOLD, G. Der Magister Johann Fabricius u. die Sonnenflecken. Leipzig: Veit. 1 M. 80 Pf.
BOIS, H. du. Magnétique Kreise, deren Theorie u. Anwendung. Berlin: Springer. 10 M.
FELDRÖG, F. Ritter v. Das Verhältnis der Philosophie zur empirischen Wissenschaft v. der Natur. Wien: Holder. 1 M. 21 Pf.
MOSSO, A. Die Temperatur d. Gehirns. Leipzig: Veit. 10 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LOGIE ELPHINSTONE OGAMS.

London: March 31, 1894.

In his remarks on the Logie Elphinstone Stone, in the current number of the ACADEMY, Mr. Nicholson states—so far quite accurately—that I have read its circular Ogam inscription as Athai Bhoto. Allow me to point out that I have since published a revised version. The first, which appears in The Ogams of Scotland (Proc. S. A. Scot., xviii. 188), was framed, some twelve years ago, after an examination of the original; but study, last year, of a paper cast (taken by Mr. W. R. Paton) together with a photograph of large size, has changed my views in several particulars (see Origins of Pictish Symbolism, p. 53).

Special difficulties attach to this inscription, partly arising from its unique circular form. These, with your permission, I will enumerate, briefly stating at the same time the conclusions I have been led to adopt. (1) The relation of the scores to the stem-line. I assume that all the outer scores are above the line, and all the inner below it. (2) The direction of the scores. The stone probably stood within, or formed part of, a circle of pillar-stones, and faced south; the top of its incised circle must, I think, represent the north, and the scores would, so to speak, march with the sun from left to right, as a procession would have moved round a circular temple. (3) The starting-point. Three spaces divide the groups into as many sections, each, no doubt, representing a separate word. Counting the top of the circle as north, the spaces stand (roughly) at east, south, and west. I assume that the movement would be made from sunrise-point, viz., at the east, thence would pass by south to west, and would finish in the north; in other words, the legend would begin at the spectator's right and would continue towards his left. (4) The angle-junctions of the vowels. These are ill-defined, thus the relations between the inner and outer scores are sometimes hard to determine—this cannot be explained without a diagram. (5) Doubtful markings. There are two marks within the circle, perhaps mere injuries, perhaps portions of angled vowel-scores. Their slants and positions might favour the latter view; but Mr. Paton, who is well acquainted with the original, inclines to the former. His cast, I may mention, being on thin paper gives much help, by showing on its under side the true courses of lines not so evident on its surface, nor in the photograph, nor perhaps in the original.

The transliteration I have suggested is as follows:—At Thaho Dho. This is subject to the omission of the two doubtful inner marks. Including both (but each must stand on its own merits) the second and third words would become Dahaho and Du. The translation would seem to be "The [burial-] place" of Taogh (Thaddeus) the Black." As an illustrative example, compare the Irish epitaph "Or do Bran Du b, Pray for Bran the Black" (Petrie and M. Stokes, Chr. Ir. Ins. ii. 2), an ancient inscription, though more modern than the Ogam at Logie Elphinstone, which is probably of the sixth century; for, from the style and nature of its symbolism and the absence of Christian signs, it cannot be much later than the period of St. Columba's mission, while the vowel-forms of the Ogams and the curious superimposition of the Crescent symbol (Sun Axe) upon a half-erased Double-Disc symbol (Sun and Moon) seem to indicate no relatively early date among the Pagan monuments. SOUTHESK.

* At = Ait, a place, in old Aberdonian Dec-side speech pronounced At, with the vowel broad and long (Pict. Sym., p. 53).

WHAT WAS A LOCK ON THE THAMES?

London: March 29, 1894.

Thomas Pennant's Voyage from Chester to London (1583), concludes with the statement that there was then no lock between Boulter's, above Maidenhead, and London. This surprised me, as there are now eleven locks; and I set to work to find out the dates of their making. But as no book in the British Museum that I came across gave these, I had to apply to the secretary of the Thames Conservancy, Mr. James H. Gough, and he courteously sent them me. Romney or Windsor was the first built, in 1797. Then came Teddington (1811), Sunbury and Shepperton (1813), Molesey and Penton Hook (1815), Bell Weir at Egham (1817), Old Windsor (1821), Boveney above Eton (1836), Bray (1845). The reports, however, of the river engineers from 1791 to 1811 show that in those days a Lock was not what it is to us, and that there was a distinction between a Lock and a Pound Lock or Turnpike Lock, which latter terms I suppose to be different names for the same thing, what we call a Lock now. Brindley, in 1770, calls it a "Cistern-Lock." I suggested to Mr. Gough that the old Lock was a kind of movable weir, or part of one; and so it proves to have been.

A Description of the River Thames, &c. (1758), says at p. 158:

"The principal Obstruction to the Navigation of most Rivers, being the Want of Water, especially in the Summer Time, when the Springs are low; in order to remedy this Inconvenience in the River Thames, which is now navigable 138 Miles above London Bridge, the Use of Locks was happily invented, which are a kind of wooden Machines, placed quite across the River, and so contrived, as totally to obstruct the Current of the Stream, and dam up the Water, as long as it shall be thought convenient. By this Artifice the River is obliged to rise to a proper Height, that is, till there is Depth enough for the Barge to pass over the Shallows; which done, the confined Waters are set at Liberty, and the loaded Vessel continues its Voyage, till another Shoal requires the same Contrivance, and again retards its Course."

This process, of course, wasted a quantity of water, and led to the use of Pound-Locks or Turnpike-Locks, which only lose a lockfull at a time; though in dry seasons the old plan of flashing, to give a loaded barge water enough to float, was secured by pulling up several paddles in the weir by the pound-lock, and sometimes even by opening the valve in the upper or sluice-gates.

Can any reader of the ACADEMY refer me to a drawing or description of how an old openable lock was worked? I find none in the Thames Views of Ireland, Boydel, Cooke, Westall, Tomblason. It seems hardly possible that a whole Lock across a moderately broad part of the Thames could be moved, as was the "Flash common Lock, with a Swing Bar and Tackle, to put down and take up, like that at Marlow," mentioned by R. Mylne in 1793. I can only suppose that the complete Lock or Weir had this up-and-down structure in its middle, and that it was lifted above a barge passing through the lock, or swung at right angles to it.

In 1758, Chambers, Cyclop. iii., says: "Lock, or Weir, in Inland Navigation, the general name for all those works of wood and stone, made to confine and raise the water of a river: the banks also which are made to divert the course of a river, were called by these names in some places. But the term lock is more particularly appropriate to express a kind of canal included between two gates; the upper called by workmen the sluice-gate, and the lower called the flood-gate."

F. J. FURNIVALL.

DANTE'S INTERPRETATION OF "GALILEA" AS "BLANCHEZZA" (Conv. iv. 22).

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk.

In commenting on Mark xvi. 7 in the Convito (iv. 22) Dante says: "Ite e dite alli discepoli suoi e a Pietro, che Ello li precederà in Galilea . . . cioè che la Beatitudine precederà loro in Galilea, cioè nella speculazione. Galilea è tanto a dire quanto bianchezza."

Whence did Dante, who is supposed to have known "small Greek and less Hebrew"—to paraphrase a familiar phrase of Ben Jonson's—get this interpretation of Galilee as "whiteness"? By the Fathers the Hebrew word is variously interpreted. St. Augustine says: "Galilæa interpretatur vel transmigratio vel revelatio." St. Jerome says: "Galilæa volubilitas dicitur." St. Gaudensius: "Galilæa vel volubilis, vel rota nuncupatur, ex Hebræo interpretata sermone." Bede says: "Galilæa interpretatur transmigratio perpetrata"; so Anselm and Hugh of St. Victor. Aleuin says: "Galilæa transmigratio facta, vel revelatio interpretatur." Rabanus Maurus says: "Mystice Galilæa sublimis rota interpretatur"; elsewhere: "Bene Galilæa perpetrata transmigratio interpretatur." St. Thomas Aquinas: "Galilæa ut interpretatur transmigratio, significat gentilitatem; sed ut interpretatur revelatio, significat patriam coelestem."

Dante's interpretation appears to have been due to some fanciful connexion of the word with the Greek γάλα, and was perhaps borrowed from Isidore of Seville, who says: "Galilæa regio Palaestinae vocata, quod gignat candiores homines quam Palaestina" (Etym. Lib. xiv. Cap. iii. § 23). Isidore doubtless connected Galilæa with the Greek word γάλα, for he elsewhere directly refers Gallia to that source: "Gallia a candore populi nuncupata est, γάλα enim Græce lac dicitur" (Ibid. Cap. iv. § 25). A gloss on the former passage says: "Etymon Græcum cum vox sit Hebræa." It may be added that Isidore's account of Galilee is copied verbatim by Vincent of Beauvais in his Speculum Historiale (Lib. i. Cap. 67).

PAGET TOYNBEE.

DR. JOHNSON AND SIR THOMAS BROWNE.

London: March 21, 1894.

In Boswell's Johnson occurs this saying of the Doctor:

"Society is held together by communication and information; and I remember this remark of Sir Thomas Brown's, 'Do the devils lie? No; for then Hell could not subsist.'"

Upon this, Dr. Birkbeck Hill has the following note:

"In The Adventurer, No. 50, Johnson writes: 'The devils,' says Sir Thomas Brown, 'do not tell lies to one another; for truth is necessary to all societies; nor can the society of hell subsist without it.' Mr. Wilkin, the editor of Brown's Works (ed. 1836, i. lv.) says: 'I should be glad to know the authority of this assertion.' I infer from this that the passage is not in Brown's Works."

For once, the wonderful learning and industry of Dr. Birkbeck Hill have left unsolved a question, that admits of easy solution. In the eleventh chapter of the first book of the

Enquiries into Common and Vulgar Errors, is a characteristic passage, from which I quote the opening and closing words:

"But of such a diffused nature, and so large is the Empire of Truth, that it hath place within the walls of Hell, and the Devils themselves are daily forced to practise it. . . . And so also in Moral verities, although they deceive us, they lie not unto each other; as well understanding that all community is continued by Truth, and that of Hell cannot consist without it."

Dr. Johnson, after his manner, quoted the passage in its general sense, without verbal accuracy. I may add, that in the folio of 1686, from which I quote, not is omitted after they lie: an evident printer's error, or slip of the pen.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 8, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Juvenile Offender and the Conditions which produce him," by the Rev. W. D. Morrison.

MONDAY, April 9, 5 p.m. Hellenic: Prof. Furtschinger's Views as to the Temples on the Acropolis at Athens," by Miss Jane Harrison.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantar Lecture, "Photometry," II, by Capt. W. de W. Abney.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "A Journey across Central Asia," by Mr. St. George B. Littledale.

TUESDAY, April 10, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electric Illumination," II, by Prof. J. A. Fleming.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Construction of Gas Works," by Mr. C. Hunt.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Recent Economic Developments of Australian Enterprise," by the Hon. James Inglis.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Evolution of Decorative Art," by Mr. Henry Balfour.

8.50 p.m. Anthropological: "The Head of a Microcephalic Hindu," by Prof. R. W. Reid; "Ethnographical Studies in the West of Ireland," by Prof. A. C. Haddon.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 4.30 p.m. National Indian Association: "London—What a Visitor may Learn of its History in a Walkthrough its Streets," by Mr. Arthur E. Quekett.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "London Coal Gas and its Enrichment," by Prof. Vivian Lewes.

8 p.m. Geological: "Mesozoic Rocks and Crystalline Schists in the Lepontine Alps," by Prof. T. O. Bonney; "Some Trachytes, Metamorphosed Puffs, and other Rocks of Igneous Origin, on the Western Flank of Dartmoor," by Lieut-General C. A. McMahon.

8 p.m. Library Association: "An Early Printing Press as described by Thomas Hearne," by Mr. F. Madan.

THURSDAY, April 12, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Etching Revival," II, by Mr. F. Seymour Haden.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "Regular Difference Terms," by the President; "Theorems Concerning Spheres," by Mr. S. Roberts; "The Expansion of Certain Infinite Products," II, Prof. L. J. Rogers; and "A Property of the Circum-Circle," by Mr. R. Tucker.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Discussion, "The Best Resistance for the Receiving Instrument with a Leaky Telegraph Line," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton, and Mr. C. S. Whitehead; "Transparent Conducting Screens for Electric and other Apparatus," and "An Astatic Station Voltmeter," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton and Mr. T. Mather; "Cost of Electrical Energy," by Mr. R. E. Crompton.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, April 13, 5 p.m. Physical: Discussion, "The Calculating Machines," by Prof. Henrici; "The Minimum Temperature of Visibility," by Mr. P. L. Gray; "The Mechanism of Electrical Conduction," by Dr. C. V. Burton.

7.30 p.m. Ruskin: "Ruskin's Teaching on Interest of Money," by the Rev. J. P. Fauntleroy.

8 p.m. Philological: "Report on the Progress of the New English Dictionary," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Some Properties of the Electric Discharge through Gases," by Prof. J. J. Thomson.

SATURDAY, April 14, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Life among the Afghans," II, by Mr. J. A. Gray.

3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOTANICAL BOOKS.

Letters of Asa Gray. Edited by Jane Loring Gray. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.) Those to whom Asa Gray is a living memory, will welcome with pleasure this collection of his letters, edited by his widow. With the exception of a few pages of autobiography, relating only to his early life, and a journal, the two volumes consist almost wholly of letters; among the most frequent of his correspondents on this side of the water being Sir William Hooker, Sir J. D. Hooker, Darwin, Dean Church, and Lord Justice Fry. The interest is of course chiefly scientific, but by no means exclusively so. The letters written at the time of the great War of secession are especially interesting, exhibiting, as they do, the prevalent feelings of the cultured classes in the Northern States, their enthusiasm for the war, their detestation of the avowed policy of the Southern leaders, their unwavering confidence in the restoration of the Union, and the appreciation which many of them felt of the causes which misled public opinion in this country. But Gray's work in life was the culture and teaching of natural science. The son of a small farmer and tanner in Massachusetts, he gradually rose to the position of professor of botany at Harvard University, and to a place rivalled only by a very few men on this side of the Atlantic, as a leader of scientific thought. The interest of these volumes centres on his reception from the first of the main principles of Darwin's Origin of Species; and his letters display admirably the stages through which he was compelled to give in his adhesion to the hypothesis of the evolution of species by natural selection. It is not too much to say that it is largely to the support given to Darwin's views by Hooker, Lyell, and Gray, that their rapid acceptance by the scientific world was due. Gray's adhesion was especially valuable, as the pupil and friend of Agassiz, one of the staunchest upholders of the old views, as one whose work was almost entirely in systematic rather than in physiological botany, and as a man of deep and orthodox religious convictions. To the personal qualities which endeared Asa Gray to a very large circle of friends, both in America and in this country, where he was a frequent visitor, these volumes bear ample testimony.

Chapters in Modern Botany. By Patrick Geddes. (John Murray.) This is a little book to be highly recommended to any one desirous of interesting young people in the more romantic and fascinating departments of botanical science. Prof. Geddes discourses pleasantly, and with a competent scientific knowledge, on such subjects as pitcher plants, insectivorous plants, the movements of plants, and the relations between animals and plants. The mode of treatment contrasts very favourably with that of many popularisers of science. It is a pity that the author did not furnish, or was not allowed, a larger number of illustrations. There are only seven or eight in the whole volume, and of these about one-half are devoted to pitcher plants.

Handbook of British Hepaticæ. By M. C. Cooke. (W. H. Allen.) Although simply a compilation of the writings of others, this is a useful monograph of the British species of liverworts, and will be a valuable manual for reference. The numerous woodcuts give the distinguishing characters of all the genera, and of nearly all the species. A useful bibliography is appended.

WE have received No. 2 of Contributions from the Botanical Laboratory of the University of Pennsylvania, which consists of a Botanical and Economic Study of Maize, by Dr. J. W. Harshberger, extending over nearly 130 pages and illustrated with four plates. The subject is treated under every possible aspect. First, there is a botanical chapter, dealing briefly with descriptive anatomy, together with a full bibliography and list of synonyms—the names recorded for the plant in the East Indies might have been largely extended. Then follows what may be considered the main object of the treatise: an elaborate examination of the evidence—botanical, climatic, archaeological, philological, and historical—with regard to the original home of maize. The author claims to have established that all the ascertained facts point in the same direction—namely, that this was in Central and Southern Mexico; and that the Mayas of Yucatan deserve the credit of having invented American agriculture. A map shows the several stages by which, in the author's opinion, the cultivation gradually extended over both North and South America in pre-Columbian times. Finally, we have some account of the conditions favourable to the growth of maize, of its chemical constituents, of its economic value, and of its commercial future. Incidentally, we may notice that the American usage of "corn" simpliciter for maize has been sanctioned by a judicial ruling in Pennsylvania.

WE have also received the third volume of Massee's British Fungus Flora. A fourth is still wanted to complete the work.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE first annual soirée of the Royal Society will be held at Burlington House on Wednesday, May 2.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be delivered by Prof. J. J. Thomson, on "Some Properties of the Electric Discharge through Gases."

At the meeting of the Anthropological Institute, to be held at 3, Hanover-square on Tuesday next at 8.30 p.m., Prof. A. C. Haddon, of Dublin, will read a paper, entitled "Ethnographical Studies in the West of Ireland," with illustrations by means of the optical lantern.

At the last monthly meeting of the Royal Institution, donations of £50 each were acknowledged from Prof. Dewar and Mr. Hugh Leonard, towards the fund for the promotion of experimental research at low temperatures.

MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON will publish on May 1 the first part of a translation, by Prof. Oliver, of Prof. Kerner von Marilaun's Pflanzenleben, with abundant illustrations. The work will be completed in sixteen monthly parts.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON announce A Handbook for Beginners in the Study of Natural Science: a series of articles by various writers, with an introduction by Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, edited by the Lady Isabel Margesson. The contents and list of contributors will be as follows: Birds, by W. Warde Fowler; Fossils, by F. A. Bather; Minerals, by G. T. Prior; The Study of Mosses, by E. M. Tindall; Fungi, by A. Lorrain Smith; Seaweeds, by E. M. Holmes; The Study of Flowers, by Prof. Patrick Geddes; Zoology, by J. Arthur Thomson; Shells, by E. R. Sykes; Teaching Natural Science, by M. L. Hodgson; How to Observe Without Destroying, by Edith Carrington; The Microscope, and How to Mount Microscopic Objects, by the Rev. Theodore Wood; Home Museums, by Mrs. Brightwen; Bands of Mercy, by Mrs. Sackling.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN.—(Wednesday, March 21.)

FREDERICK ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. James Ernest Baker read a paper on "The Elizabethan Sonneteers." Mr. Baker commenced his paper with a full and concise explanation of the origin of the sonnet, and then proceeded to describe how the form was handled by Guittone d'Arezzo, Petrarch, Dante, Camocens, Bellay, and other poets. The sonnet was introduced into English literature by Sir Thomas Wyatt and the Earl of Surrey. Both Surrey and Wyatt were considerably influenced by Italian poetry. Like the majority of the young noblemen of the day, they had in their youth travelled in Italy; and, on returning to England, had brought back with them an eager desire to infuse the inspiration they had gained into the poetry of their native land. The new "courtly makers," as that quaint Elizabethan critic, Puttenham, calls them, "travelled into Italy and there tasted the sweet and stately measures and style of the Italian poesy," and came home filled with the zeal of "novices newly crept out of the schools of Dante, Ariosto, and Petrarch." Their poems were published for the first time in a collection of verse generally known as "Tottell's Miscellany." The full title is "Songs and Sonettes written by the ryght honourable Heury Howard, late earle of Surrey, and others." The publication of this volume of poetry was an important event in the literature of this country. It was a powerful stimulus inciting men to take a fresh interest in both the reading and writing of poetry. The influence of Chaucer had almost died away, or was evaporating in the wearisome verses of Lydgate and Hawes, or becoming an "instrument of reform" in the more energetic work of Skelton and Lyndsay. But it cannot be said that Surrey and Wyatt were particularly successful with the sonnet. They evidently recognised the almost insuperable difficulties of using the Italian form in the English language, but did not labour much to overcome them. Wyatt closely follows the Petrarchan arrangement; while Surrey, after continued experiments, finally arrived at the conclusion that the form best suited for the English language should consist of three quatrains and a couplet, a form afterwards used by Daniel for his "Sonnets to Delia," and by Shakspeare. The publication of the numerous miscellanies of love songs and sonnets may be said to commence with Sir Philip Sidney's sonnets to Stella in 1591. In 1592 came Daniel's sonnets to Delia, and Constable's sonnets to Diana; in 1593 Lodge's sonnets to Phillis, and Watson's "Tears of Fancy, or Love Disdained"; in 1594 Drayton's "Idea's Mirror, Amours in Quatorzain"; and in 1596 Spenser's "Amoretti or Sonnets." This list is by no means a complete one, but it contains the most notable names. After reading these numerous collections of Elizabethan sonnets, "stuck full of amorous fancies," it is an extremely difficult question to answer whether the passions they express were real or imaginary. Possibly in some cases they were the genuine articles of faith of an enraptured lover, but more frequently they were purely fictitious. We only know we possess a very charming collection of love sonnets, full of graceful and delicate conceits; and we should be singularly obtuse, nay, wickedly ungrateful, as lovers of poetry, if we evaded them solely because we could not satisfy our curiosity whether the beautiful ladies to whom they are addressed ever existed. Of course it must be understood that all sonnets produced at this time were not only "dallings with the innocence of love." On the contrary, we find many excellent sonnets on life and death and their inseparable joys and sorrows. Even your most amorous sonneteer was fain to dwell on other things occasionally. He couldn't always be asking his lady "to live with him and be his love." Like you and I, they heard the beating of the wings of the angels of Death; like St. Basil, they found that it was only in Paradise that roses ever grew without thorns. Still, most of the Elizabethan sonneteers took love and youth for their themes, and who will deny that a youthful poetry could occupy itself with more delightful subjects?

"The God of Love, ah! benedicite—How mighty and how great a lord is he."

As might naturally be expected, one of the sweetest and noblest of the Elizabethan poets—Edmund Spenser—was not slow to perceive the beauty and value of the new form of verse. He introduced several variations; but they cannot be considered, even as experiments, completely satisfactory. They rank among his least successful work. The earliest poems that the author of "The Faerie Queen" published under the name of sonnets were written in blank verse, which clearly proves that Spenser entertained, at that period of his career, a very loose idea of the actual nature and scope of the form. Eventually, after repeated experiments, he discarded the fourteen-line blank verse form, and produced one consisting of three quatrains and a couplet. This modification of the Italian and existing English moulds seems to have given him special gratification, for he adopted it for his ambitious "Amoretti," a series of sonnets recording his progress in love for the lady to whom he was afterwards married. Yet the reading of them fails to convey any genuine and abiding pleasure. The handling is too intricate, the conceits so manifestly frigid and far-fetched, the prevalent tone so palpably artificial, the human interest curiously tame. The "well-languaged Daniel," when publishing his "Sonnets to Delia" in 1592, justly complained that "a greedy printer had published some of his sonnets along with those of Sir Philip Sidney." Daniel alluded to the volume of sonnets surreptitiously published under the general editorship of Thomas Nash in 1591, which contained Sidney's "Astrophel and Stella" and twenty-eight sonnets by Daniel, in addition to other poems by "Divers Noblemen and Gentlemen." A corrected and authentic edition of Sidney's sonnets appeared later in the same year. Nash's eulogy of Sidney is rather extravagant and not a little humorous. He apologises for commending a poet "the least syllable of whose name sounded in the ears of judgment is able to give the meanest line he writes a dowry of immortality. And he is unnecessarily rude to some of his contemporaries. 'Put out your rush candles, you poets and rhymers,' he peremptorily cries, 'and bequeath your crazed quatorzains to the chandlers, for, lo! here he cometh that hath broken your legs.' Sidney's sonnets are always interesting reading. They are distinguished by their beautiful thoughts and exquisite tenderness of language, and stand out prominently from much of the love versifying of the day by their striking originality. Sidney was no mere imitator, no 'pick-purse of another's wit.' Though the sonnets of Daniel do not possess the originality and sparkling grace that belong to the sonnets of Sidney, they are characterised by vigorous thought and a commanding and harmonious flow of language. The publication in 1592 of his 'Sonnets to Delia' helped considerably to the development of the English form. Samuel Daniel and Michael Drayton were the two men who actually prepared and made ready the splendid instrument on which, in a very short time, the greatest of all the Elizabethan poets, William Shakspeare, was to play such transcendently beautiful music. The first edition of Daniel's 'Sonnets to Delia' was prefaced by a prose dedication to the Countess of Pembroke, 'Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother,' Daniel wishing 'to be graced by the countenance of your protection, whom the fortune of our time hath made the happy and judicial patroness of the muses (a glory hereditary to your house).' Daniel also wrote a dedicatory sonnet to the Countess in the second issue, calling her 'the wonder of these, glory of other times,' and asserting that the sonnets were 'her own, begotten by her hand.' Truly, 'Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother' must have been a beautiful and gracious woman. Little is known of Henry Constable. He came of a Roman Catholic family, was educated at St. John's, Cambridge, and took his degree of B.A. in 1579. Owing to his activity in the interests of his religion, he was banished from England in 1595, and on returning, probably in 1602, was imprisoned in the Tower, and not released until 1604. In the 'Return from Parnassus' (1606), he is spoken of as if he were still alive, and in Bolton's 'Hypercritica' (1616), as if he had lately died. Constable was not a great poet, but his verse will always find a place in the hearts of those who are willing to be charmed by sweet ideas expressed in language 'aglow with the rapture of beauty.' For warmth of colour, power of imagination, and ardour of expression, Constable was greatly superior to Daniel. The sound of the verse rings out clearer, the imagery is not so ruthlessly forced, there is not 'a thinking too precisely,' a grave charge to bring against any poet. It is scarcely necessary to say that the love sonnets of Constable were written in 'the very hey-day of his blood.' The extravagance of youthful passion bubbles merrily and spontaneously in every line. Like most of us, Constable as he grew older became more sober and reasonable. Alas! it is a heavy price we have to pay for the somewhat doubtful privilege of being sober and reasonable. Mme. de Lafayette wrote to Menage, 'It costs dear to become reasonable, it costs us our youth.' Thomas

Lodge was born in London about the year of Elizabeth's accession to the throne. He was the son of a prosperous grocer, who became Lord Mayor in 1563. In 1573 Lodge was at Trinity College, Oxford. He was intended for the law, but soon drifted into literature. His parents seem to have regarded him as a wild and reckless youth, and never forgave him for his persistent love of poetry. His name is not mentioned in his father's will, and in his mother's will Lodge has his share left him on remaining what "a good student ought to be." Lodge's nature was too impetuous to permit him to spend much time in elaborating and polishing to the desired state of perfection such an intricate form of verse as the sonnet. Occasionally he opens well, but the conclusion is often lamentably disappointing. He is far more successful in his lyrical pieces, which are "full of young blood and tuneful impulse." They spring as naturally and as genuinely from the heart as the impulsive and perfectly melodious notes from the throat of blackbird or nightingale. Mr. Baker then proceeded to deal with Thomas Watson, the author of "The Passionate Century of Love" (1582), and of "The Tears of Fancy or Love Disdained" (1593), and concluded his paper with a criticism of Drayton, whom he regarded as the author of one of the finest sonnets in our language. Drayton was a year older than Shakspeare, and born in Warwickshire, which he celebrates in his "Polyolbion" as "that shire which we the heart of England well may call." Drayton was "noted for the respectability of his life, and distinguished by the ardour of his orthodox and patriotic sentiments." But he was no mean poet. His verse frequently lacks imaginative power, enthusiasm, and spontaneity, but several of his poems we could never allow ourselves to forget. Shall we ever tire of reading his "Nymphidia," that delightful and amusing story of the trials of Fairyland, the dainty and exquisite "Quest of Cynthia," the stirring and patriotic ode on "The Battle of Agincourt," which Mr. Swinburne fitly ranks with Campbell's "Battle of the Baltic." Drayton's first volume of verse, "The Harmonie of the Church," was published in his twenty-eighth year, and was dedicated to Lady Jane Devereux, of Merivale. He first made his appearance as a pastoral poet in 1593 with his "Idea: Shepherd's Garland; fashioned in Nine Eclogues." In 1594 he issued a collection of sonnets entitled "Idea's Mirror, Amours in Quatorzain," and the mythological tale of "Endymion and Phoebe." There are many points of resemblance between the sonnets of Drayton and Shakspeare; but apart from this, they are worth our appreciation for their inherent merits, their virile freshness, their chastened and appropriate language. One is inclined to believe that Drayton entertained a real passion for the lady whose graces he commemorates for the benefit of posterity. But he certainly never married her, for he died a bachelor at the age of sixty-eight.—An interesting discussion followed, which was opened by the chairman and continued by Mr. Arthur Dillon, Mr. Chambers, Mr. J. A. Jenkinson, Mr. W. H. Cowham, Mr. R. C. Hayward, and Mr. James Ernest Baker.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

The Little Passion of Albert Dürer. With an Introduction by Austin Dobson. (Bell.) The "Little Passion" of Dürer is probably better known than any of his series of engravings on wood or copper. The original blocks (with the exception of two) found their way to the British Museum in 1839, and in 1844 the late Sir Henry Cole got permission to take electro-types of them. These have been used already in more than one edition of the "Little Passion," in this country, and a facsimile of the first Nuremberg edition without the text was published by George Hirth, of Munich, in 1884. A full but succinct account of the history of the work is contained in Mr. Dobson's Introduction, in which he fairly claims for the present issue the merit of corresponding more exactly with the second Nuremberg issue of 1511, i.e., the first edition with the text, than any which has yet appeared in this country. The series is too well-known to need description. Though by no means the finest of Dürer's works of the class, it is characteristic and vigorous, and contains some noble designs, like The Entry of Christ into Jerusalem, the Cleansing of the Temple, Christ taken down from the Cross, and the impressive vignette of Christ as the Man of Sorrows (here printed—like Christ parting from his Mother—from a block engraved by C. T. Thompson in 1844, to replace the lost original). It is not to be expected that, after so much wear, these stereotypes from old and worm-eaten wood blocks of the sixteenth century can be recommended as worthy examples of Dürer or of the woodcutter he employed, but they are interesting and curious; while the introduction by Mr. Dobson is an excellent and trustworthy summary of the history of the "Little Passion," and the portrait of Dürer by himself, after the celebrated picture at Munich (or rather after a very excellent lithograph of that picture), add a special value to the book.

Lead Work, Old and Ornamental, and for the most part English. By W. R. Lethaby. With Illustrations. (Macmillans.) Mr. Lethaby has written a very interesting little book about an art which is extinct, we fear, beyond recovery. We employ lead still for coffins; but these coffins are plain and hidden from sight by polished oak cases. We have ceased to employ the metal for statues and fountains; and there is never a plumber who will ornament his pipes and gutters with rosettes and coats of arms. Here and there, in the garden of some old country house, we come across a Belvedere Apollo, or a Dying Gladiator, much bruised and out of shape, which tells of a time when the glories of Versailles and Marly were imitated in small by the English nobility. We have still Queen Anne's statue at Queen's Gate, and the sundial which has been transferred from Clement's Inn to the Temple; but it is only in imagination that we can restore the ranks of gilded statues that once adorned the gardens of Canons, the sumptuous, but, alas, ephemeral, palace of the Duke of Chandos at Edgware. Those who remember the equestrian statue of George I. that once occupied the centre of Leicester-square (which came from Canons) will not, perhaps, much regret that most if not all its old companions have gone to the melting-pot. In these days, when all old arts are being revived, it would be rash to prophesy that there is no future for lead as an artistic material; and in any case we may welcome this book by Mr. Lethaby, which gives us so many interesting facts so clearly and in so small a space.

A Text-book of Elementary Designs. By Richard G. Hatton. (Chapman & Hall.) As Mr. Hatton begins his book by saying that no one has a right to dictate principles of art or taste, we wonder that he has had the courage to publish it. As a text-book of elementary design, it necessarily consists of dictations of such principles. Nor do we agree with him that such principles are liable to be upset by the succeeding generation—at least, not if they are founded on ideas so elementary and generally received as those he has adopted. For the most part, at all events, we have no hesitation in subscribing to his articles of faith, and can recommend his volume as not only sound, but in no ordinary degree original and interesting. We can also commend his illustrations as generally apt and well chosen; but we fear that his Lion design (p. 104) is not a success, notwithstanding it expresses "the crouch, his mobile strength, and the vigour" of the animal. It is irritating and spotty; and in this case, as well as in others, it is clear that he loves his Ruskin "not wisely but too well."

Drawing and Design: a Class Text-book for Beginners. By Edward R. Taylor. (Macmillans.) The object of this little book is to stimulate the sense of design, by giving a course of lessons in which the ornament to be copied is based on the elementary lines of the letters of the alphabet as written in round-hand. There is much to be said in favour of this method, which makes use of the knowledge already acquired by the child. Calligraphy is the basis of Chinese and Japanese art; and though the formation of English letters does not demand so free a play of the hand and arm as is required by the Oriental scribe, there is a natural affinity between writing and drawing which may be cultivated with advantage to both arts in all countries.

EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE TEMPLE OF HATASU AT DEIR EL BAHARI.

Luxor: March 16, 1891.

RAMADÂN and the hot weather have begun simultaneously; so the last wages were paid yesterday, the railway was taken up and stored, and all made safe for the summer season.

My forecast, published in a former letter, has proved fairly accurate: we have not been able to clear away entirely the huge mounds on the central terrace, but we have reduced their height everywhere by twenty feet, and on the western and northern side of the terrace have cut them away to the level of the pavement and rock. In the process of removing the upper slice, some hundreds of ostraka, demotic and Coptic, were found, besides more Gnostic (?) mummies similar to one mentioned in my former letter. Among the ostraka there appears to be parts of a library catalogue; but the great majority are letters and legal documents. Only one Greek potsherd has turned up, inscribed with moral reflections, headed Ἀμενωντου ὑποθηκαι. On the northern side of the terrace we have laid open in its entirety a fine colonnade, formerly buried under fallen mountain debris, and it now presents a very fine appearance. It has fifteen sixteen-sided columns, each fourteen feet eight inches high to the top of the abaci. A sandstone architrave rests only on the eight westernmost, and it appears certain that the eastern part of the structure was never finished. A wall of brilliantly white limestone is built against the mountain behind, and four vaulted chapels, uninscribed and perhaps unfinished, open out of it. Between and inside the columns exist at present a number of mud-brick chambers, which, when excavated, yielded Ramesside pottery and fragments of hieratic papyri, besides scarabs, beads, amulets, and bits of bronze. No ostraka nor any Coptic remains were found in them. These chambers are evidently of an early period, and possibly were dwellings of workmen of Ramesses II. engaged on a restoration of the Temple, and were never destroyed because the completion of this colonnade was not carried through. We have cleared also the hypostyle hall at the western end, which was entered by Mariette, but left full of rubbish. It is one of the best-preserved remains of antiquity in Egypt. The star-spangled ceiling rests on twelve sixteen-sided columns, over fifteen feet high: right and left are brightly-painted funerary niches, and the main walls show scenes still brilliant in colouring, the Queen and Thothmes III. offering to gods of the dead. A short staircase ascends at the back of the hall to a three-roomed chapel, on whose walls the Queen offers to Amen Ra and Anubis. As this hall is completely covered in, there is good hope that its paintings may be long preserved with their freshness little if at all impaired.

South of this hypostyle, and west of the main court of the central terrace, is a portico corresponding in everything but excellence of workmanship, to the famous Pant portico on the south side of the central causeway. It is very much ruined; the square pillars are only complete at the broken end, and very few of the architrave blocks or roofing slates are in position. The number of these fallen masses of stone proved a great impediment to us, and we have been able this season only to clear the space between the western rank of pillars and the wall. By so doing we have laid bare a very interesting series of representations, concerning the preliminaries and circumstances of the birth of the Queen. Her mother, Ahmes, appears, conducted by several divinities to the presence of Amen, and the god appears to her in the guise of her husband, Thothmes I., as in those well-known scenes in the Luxor Temple, relating to the birth of Amenhotep III. Much restoration has been done on this wall by Rameses II.; but the fine portraits of Ahmes herself have escaped his hand, and remain admirable examples of XVIIIth Dynasty art, both in moulding and colouring. The inscriptions, though defaced, are fairly legible. Among the debris, which has lain since an early period on the court bounded by this portico, the hypostyle, and the colonnade, we have found most of our small objects of art in stone, ware, or paste. Not much statuary has been discovered; the best piece is the lower half of a kneeling statue of Sennmt, the architect of the temple; and a very fine portrait head in sycamore wood, on a part of a mummy case, is worthy of special mention. Amulets, figurines, rings, and scarabs, inscribed and uninscribed, have been discovered in considerable numbers; and in addition to countless separate beads, some fine necklaces of blue ware, still strung, with pendants attached, were found in the lowest layer of deposit. Papyrus has been unearthed, only in innumerable small fragments; the largest pieces have formed part of copies of the Book of the Dead.

The Temple at Deir el Bahari, as has been often remarked, is not built on a general plan, comparable to that of any other Egyptian temple. Several parts of it, however, taken by themselves, recall the conventional arrangement of peristyle court, hypostyle, and sanctuary. In fact, Deir el Bahari may be regarded as an aggregate of small temple-units. So on the central terrace we have the northern colonnade, answering to the usual peristyle, which leads to a hypostyle, out of which opens a sanctuary. As Thothmes I. and II. do not appear in any part of it, but only Hatasu and Thothmes III. associated, we may assume that it was built after the death of Thothmes II. and before the Queen-regent's rupture with her nephew, and was intended to be more particularly the funerary shrine of Hatasu herself and Thothmes III. It is apparent, however, that the original construction has been altered in this region, and we must wait until the whole terrace has been excavated before we can draw conclusions as to the architectural history of this part of the temple.

The reconstruction of the high altar of Harmachis on the upper terrace has been carried out successfully by Mr. John E. Newberry, nearly all the missing parts of the inscription having been found among the debris close at hand. The funerary chapel of Thothmes I. has been restored; and in digging out the space between the broken north wall of the altar chamber and the rock face we have found all the missing blocks belonging to a brilliantly-painted niche in the vestibule, and from them reconstructed it. Here (for once) Queen Hatasu appears in her male guise, unerased. The broken northern and western main walls have been built up again in part, to be completed if possible next season; and the crumbling cliff above has been shored up strongly with rough masonry. The northern end of the terrace is therefore nearly finished, and the main work of next season must be the reconstruction of the niches in the west wall of the main hall of the upper terrace. The major part of the existing wall about them is of Coptic construction, and must be pulled down, in order that numerous sculptures, belonging to other walls in the temple, may be recovered; but in order that this may be done and the safety of the niches assured, the sliding cliff on the west must be shored up not less strongly than on the north, at great expense of money, time, and labour.

The artists have completed their plates of the Altar Chamber, the Hall of Offerings, and the Chapel of Thothmes I.; and these, together with drawings of the altar and the doors of the ebony shrine, discovered last season, will constitute the first fascicule of the complete publication of Deir el Bahari, proposed by the committee of the Fund. It is hoped also that, when the excavation is complete, it will be possible to deduce results bearing generally on Egyptian art. The quantity of relief-work of admirable quality, the variety and freshness of colouring, and the comprehensive find of objects in blue ware ought to afford material for valuable chapters on plastic, pictorial, and ceramic art in the period of the XVIIIth Dynasty.

D. G. HOGARTH.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE spring season of exhibitions is now at its height. Among those to open next week are the following: (1) the New English Art Club, at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly; (2) a series of drawings by Mr. F. Goodall, entitled "Life in the Valley of the Nile," at the Fine Art Society's, New Bond-street; (3) a collection of modern Dutch paintings, at the Goupil Gallery, Regent-street; (4) drawings in water-colour of Italian towns—Ferrara, Ravenna, Rimini, and San Marino—by Mr. Charles J. Watson, at Dunthorne's, Vigo-street; (5) pictures and sketches of "Life on the Dogger Bank," by Mr. Thomas M. Hemy, at the St. James's Gallery, King-street; (6) the thirtieth annual exhibition of cabinet pictures by British and foreign artists at McLean's Gallery, Haymarket; and (7) Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy's picture of "Mr. Gladstone in his Study in Downing-street, July, 1893," at Mr. Henry Graves's Gallery, Pall Mall.

MR. W. BISCOMBE GARDNER has engraved on wood the portrait of George Meredith after the painting just completed by Mr. G. F. Watts. This is the first time Mr. Meredith has given sittings to a painter; and no portrait of him, not even a photograph, is at present purchasable. The engraving will be published as a fine art plate, of which 600 impressions, signed by painter and engraver, will be issued in England. They will be ready for delivery on April 16, and Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane are to publish them.

The third general meeting of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies will be held at 22, Albemarle-street, on Monday next, at 5 p.m., when Miss Jane Harrison will read a summary of Prof. Furtwängler's recently published views as to the Temples on the Acropolis at Athens, and a discussion will follow.

THE Marianne North Gallery at Kew was reopened this week. Under the advice of Sir Frederic Leighton it has been found necessary to give the pictures, after careful cleaning, a thin coat of varnish and to glaze them. Opportunity has been taken at the same time to repair and renovate the decoration of the gallery. A bust of Miss North, by Mr. Conrad Dressler, the gift of her sister, Mrs. Addington Symonds, has been placed in the inner room immediately facing the entrance.

THE March number of the Illustrated Archaeologist (Charles J. Clark) completes the first annual volume, and—we are glad to say—includes the index, which is but too commonly postponed until the first part of a new volume. Mr. Edward Lovett gives an account of neolithic implements, discovered in great abundance in a cave in Jersey; and he also describes a sort of stone bowl that is used to this day for playing on the roads in Lancashire. There is a good account, with numerous illustrations, of the Saxon church at Escomb, in Durham, which has recently been restored; and papers on the corporation plate of Wiltshire, pilgrims' signs or rather badges, and the carved bench-ends that used to be so common in West-country churches. Incidentally, we may mention that Prof. George Stephens gives his approval to the decipherment of the Yenisei inscriptions by Prof. Thomsen.

MUSIC.

MASSENET'S "THAÏS."

M. MASSENET is not only a most prolific composer, writing, on an average, a new opera every year, but no one knows better how to trim his sails to the changeful winds of popular favour. The success of MM. Gallet and Bruneau's rhythmical setting of M. Zola's "Le Rêve" and L'Attaque du Moulin has not been lost on M. Massenet, who, with the assistance of M. Gallet, has made a lyrical comedy, in three acts and seven tableaux, out of one of M. Anatole France's most charming nouvelles.

M. Gallet has discarded the conventional libretto form, and written what the erudite Belgian, M. Gevaert, calls a "poème mélodique," in rhythmical prose, something akin to our blank verse. There is nothing new in this, for Berlioz had the same idea forty years ago. To add to the scenic and other attractions of the new opera, Miss Sibyl Sanderson, the American singer, and M. Massenet's favourite prima-donna, has been specially engaged for the title part.

The first scene takes place in the Thebaid. Twelve anchorites are partaking of a frugal evening repast when their hymn of thanksgiving is interrupted by the arrival of Brother Athanaël (Paphnuc in the original story), who has just returned from Alexandria. He relates the incidents of his journey to his brethren, and tells how scandalised he was at the immorality of the inhabitants of the city, utterly given over to the worship of Venus in the person of Thaïs, the dancer. He then lies down to sleep, and in a dream (tableau ii.) sees Thaïs dancing before an enraptured audience. On awakening, he feels more than ever convinced that it is his duty to return to Alexandria and convert this new Magdalen. So, regardless of the warnings of older and wiser brethren, he departs. The music of these first two tableaux offers a combination of the sacred and profane, such as the composer of "Marie Madeleine" and "Manon" delights in; but originality of inspiration is utterly wanting.

Between the second and third tableaux the orchestra plays a symphony descriptive of the excitement of the city of Alexandria: a very spirited piece of programme-music, through which runs a chromatic theme played by the string instruments, interrupted at times by the sharp call of trumpets, which is very suggestive of the opening scene of the third act of the "Valkyrie." The curtain then rises on a beautiful piece of scenic art—a terrace overlooking the Mediterranean, where Athanaël meets a friend of former days, Nicias, an amiable Sybarite, who promises to assist him in his mission. The holy man, greatly against his will, is attired in festive robes by two beautiful attendants, and introduced to Thaïs, who has come to sup with Nicias. The scene is charming; and when Miss Sibyl Sanderson makes her appearance most splendidly, though lightly, attired, accompanied by a merry troop of dancers and fair slaves to the strains of festive music, the audience easily realise the seductive charm that Thais exercises over the inhabitants of Alexandria. But Athanaël, regardless of the mocking laughter of Nicias and his guests, urges Thais to repent, and calls upon her to abandon her career of sin, whereupon she only laughs at him and bids him come and convert her in her own palace. The music of this tableau, though containing reminiscences of previous works by the composer, is so cleverly arranged, familiar motifs being cunningly blended with novel conceits, that the critic is silenced. The charming nocturne, "Nous nous sommes aimés toute une semaine," and the appeal that Thais, whose life-dream is love, addresses to Athanaël when he upbraids her for her sinful life, "Qui te fait si sévère," with its exquisitely modulated violin and flute accompaniment, are equal to the best passages in "Manon."

Another symphony descriptive of the loves of Aphrodite and the young Syrian god Adonis precedes the second act, which takes place in the boudoir of Thais, whose delivery of the voluptuous aria, "Vénus enchantement de l'ombre, dis-moi que je suis belle et que je serai belle éternellement," is exquisite. Athanaël makes his appearance, and is on the point of yielding to the fascination of the enchantress when the Spirit comes to his rescue; and, in an outburst of holy indignation, he anathematises carnal love and threatens Thais with fearful retribution if she does not repent, abandon all, and follow him to a monastery. He then leaves, saying he will wait for her until daybreak.

The next scene, outside Thais's palace, is preceded by a meditation which depicts the transfiguration which has come over Thais at the recollection of Athanaël's words. The leading motif is an effective andante religioso for the violin solo, accompanied by harps. Athanaël, being asleep, is on the steps outside, when the now penitent Thais bids him conduct her to the convent, where she will end her days in prayer. After narrowly escaping death by stoning at the hands of the populace, indignant at the loss of their favourite, Athanaël and Thais depart. We next find the anchorite once more among his brethren, but the recollection of the beauty of his fair proselyte haunts him day and night. In a dream (the ballet) he is visited by the Seven Spirits of Temptation led by Perdition (represented by the charming, fleet-footed Mlle. Rosita Mauri); he becomes the centre of a wild bacchanal dance, in the midst of which suddenly appears the image of Thais on her death-bed. Athanaël awakes and rushes off to the convent, in the garden of which, in the next and last tableau, we see Thais surrounded by nuns praying for her. Athanaël's passionate avowal of his love and Thais' pious exhortations in reply remind one, as regards both the dramatic situation and the music, of the last act of "Manon." Thais dies in peace, while Athanaël, with a wild cry of disappointed passion, falls to the ground.

"Thais," taken altogether, will not add to M. Massenet's reputation as a composer. The score contains many charming pages; but reminiscences of previous works are far too frequent, notwithstanding the ability shown by the composer in transposing and modifying the original ideas. We have the right to expect more originality and freshness of inspiration from the composer of "Le Roi de Lahore" and "Werther." The ballet, generally a strong point at the Grand Opera, is sadly deficient in taste and melody; the gnomes, evil spirits, dryads, and fauns are badly got up, their dances are wanting in grace; the music is noisy; and the general effect is far from pleasing, either to the eye or the ear. Miss Sibyl Sanderson is in every respect a most attractive Thais, and her delivery of the music of the third, fourth, and last tableaux is perfect. M. Delmas, in the difficult part of Athanaël, maintained the reputation he has acquired by his masterly rendering of Wagner's King Wotan, while M. Vaguet's tenor voice did full justice to the light and pretty music written for the part of Nicias. CECIL NICHOLSON.

OBITUARY.

SIR ROBERT PRESCOTT STEWART.

THE sudden death of Sir Robert Prescott Stewart on Easter Eve has left a blank in the musical profession of the Irish metropolis that will be very difficult to fill. Whether as professor in the University, as undisputed head of cultured musicians in Dublin, or as one of the most accomplished organists in the three kingdoms, his loss will be severely felt; but independently of his professional life and work, there is the sudden extinction of an almost unique personality in the man, which in the hearts of a multitude of devoted friends can never be replaced.

His father was librarian to the King's Inns; and from him Robert Stewart inherited his musical capacity, and with that no small share of literary talent, which he turned to good account in his lectures at Dublin University. Some of these had a large circulation when published, the proceeds being devoted to the erection of memorial windows in the cathedral to his gifted predecessors, Sir John Stevenson and Michael Balfe.

Stewart's musical endowment was of a still higher order, and his precocity was very remarkable. From being a chorister at Christ Church Cathedral, he became deputy-organist at the age of sixteen, and two years later was appointed organist in chief, at the same time being chosen by the Provost and Fellows of Trinity to fill a similar post in the college chapel. This was in 1843; and he retained his offices and fulfilled their duties with increasing distinction and success to the very end of his life. Besides these, he was chief organist at St. Patrick's cathedral for some twenty years; and only so lately as Good Friday he for the last time conducted the choral services in these places of worship, where for half a century devout congregations had listened to the strains of soul-stirring sacred music, drawn by his skilful hands from the pealing organ with a power and pathos rarely equalled. Sir R. Stewart's talent as an organist became more widely known after his first visit to England in 1851, when he performed some of Bach's great Fugues at the Hyde Park Exhibition. He afterwards visited Manchester, and in later years became acquainted with the leading organ-players in France and Germany.

His strongest point was his improvisation, an almost perished art. The writer remembers the splendid treatment of Handel's "See the conquering hero" on the Christ Church organ, played with wonderful originality and brilliant variations by Stewart, on being informed that Lord Gough was in the cathedral, at the time of that great general's first visit to Ireland. And only a few Sundays ago some friends of the writer heard from "the vanished hand" a most masterly development of the "Ein feste Burg," which one of these around the organist had suggested at the moment for the concluding voluntary. Sir John Stainer (in a recent communication) congratulates himself on having heard Stewart improvise, and records that he had listened to him with great delight. His musical memory was prodigious, of which the writer has known many remarkable proofs. His capacity in this respect may be likened to that of the elephant's trunk—nothing was too great or too small to be laid hold of, an old song, a forgotten ballad, some new ditty of the day, or an obscure quartet out of opera or oratorio. He was at home in all, and that not merely to play or accompany them, but he would sit down there and then, and write the piece out, and in full score, too, if the orchestration was required.

As a composer, Stewart cannot be put in the first rank, except in his cathedral services, which occupy a high place in musical estimation. Some of his glees and part songs, moreover, are admirable. His last Cantata, written to an Ode by Prof. Armstrong, of Cork, for the tercentenary of the University of Dublin in 1892, is an excellent work, and its orchestration and fine choral effects were much admired by Dr. C. Hubert Parry, who, with Sir John Stainer and other eminent musicians, was present on that memorable occasion. The writer first knew the lamented composer in 1847, when he succeeded Mr. Joseph Robinson as conductor of the University Choral Society, which, under Stewart's hands, grew from an infant's to a giant's stature. It is impossible to describe the magical power exercised on that body by the personal charm of their conductor—his bonhomie, his brightness, patience, and unfailing courtesy. Some of us older ones can recall (non siccis oculis) the fervour of our early love for music, and for that musician who then found a place in our hearts from which neither time nor distance nor new friends and occupations have ever dethroned him. Many of us, I dare say (the writer, certainly), may have been drawn aside too often from more serious studies by the siren charms of Melpomene and Polyhymnia; but yet, in the storm and stress of life, those chords have never ceased "to vibrate sweetest pleasures," even as the memory of one who has now passed away must in our hearts "thrill with deepest notes of woe."

O. J. VIGNOLES.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE performance of "Faust" at Drury Lane last week attracted an immense audience. Miss Pauline Jeran, who took the part of Marguerite at very short notice, achieved a legitimate success. Mr. O'Mara, as Faust, sang and acted fairly well. Mr. Harrison Brockbank was the Valentine; he has a sympathetic voice, and his acting was dignified. He certainly gives promise of good things. Mr. Hugh Chilvers, a new Mephistopheles, has a fine voice, but, possibly through nervousness, he exaggerated his part. Signor Seppilli conducted carefully, but the band was unpolished. The theatre was again crowded on Saturday evening when "Carmen" was given. Mlle. Olitzka acquitted herself well, on the whole, in the title-rôle; and Mr. R. Green, the Escamillo, sang well, and acted with spirit.

MISS BEATRICE FROST, the daughter of Mr. H. F. Frost, the well-known musical critic, made her first public appearance at the concert given on Wednesday at St. James's Hall for the benefit of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage. She sang "Selva Opaca" from "William Tell," and a light ballad, "Our Hearts are Together," by Lester Carew. Miss Frost's voice, though not fully developed, is of clear and essentially pleasing quality. She was favourably received. She is young, has studied with Mr. H. Klein, and with further study bids fair to become a successful vocalist and refined artist. The programme, in which Miss Ella Russell, Miss Alice Gomez, Messrs. Lloyd, Grover, Black, and Norman Salmond took part, was highly enjoyed. The excellent singing of the "Dilettante" Vocal Quartett deserves mention.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LTD.

Now ready, Part 1., super-royal 8vo, of

BIBLIOGRAPHICA.

CONTENTS.

A COPY of CELSUS from the LIBRARY of GROLIER.

CHRISTINA of SWEDEN and her BOOKS.

RAOUL LEFEVRE and "LE RECUEIL DES HISTOIRES DE TROYE."

NAMES and NOTES in BOOKS.

THE ACCIPIES WOODCUT.

LA BIBLIOPHILIE MODERNE.

THOINAN'S LES RELIEURS FRANÇAIS.

THE STATIONERS at the SIGN of the TRINITY.

THE BOOKS of HOURS of GEOFFROY TORY.

NOTICES.

W. Y. FLETCHER.

CHARLES I. ELTON.

H OSCAR SOMMER.

ANDREW LANG.

R. PROCTOR.

OCTAVE UZANNE.

S. T. PRIDEAUX.

E. GORDON DUFF.

ALFRED W. POLLARD.

Subscription, price 30s. per annum. (Four Parts) net. Single Parts, price 10s. each net.

BOOKS ABOUT BOOKS.

CONCLUDING VOLUME.

THE BINDING OF BOOKS.

By HERBERT P. HORNE.

Being the Sixth Volume of "BOOKS ABOUT BOOKS."

Edited by A. W. POLLARD.

With Illustrations, printed on Hand-made paper and bound in buckram. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

EARLY EDITIONS:

A Bibliographical Survey of the Works of some Popular Modern Authors.

By J. H. SLATER.

Demy 8vo, half-roxburgh morocco, 21s. net.

A few Large-paper Copies on Hand-made paper are issued at 42s.

MR. LEWIS MORRIS'S NEW VOLUME.

SONGS WITHOUT NOTES.

By LEWIS MORRIS,

Author of "The Epic of Hades," &c.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

[This day.]

A LIFE OF ARCHBISHOP LAUD.

By a Romish Recusant.

With Portrait from a rare Engraving prefixed to "The Recantation of the Prelate of Canterbury," 1611.

Demy 8vo, 15s.

"A vast mass of material which may well be of service to historical students of Laud and his times."—Times.

"Always readable, and not seldom decidedly amusing.....we confess to a pleased astonishment that a 'Romish Recusant' has been able to take such a view of such a man."—Saturday Review.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the NEW TESTAMENT.

Critical, Exegetical, and Theological.

By the Rev. S. DAVIDSON, D.D., LL.D.

New Edition, thoroughly Revised and Enlarged. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

[Immediately.]

THOUGHTS AND REFLECTIONS ON MODERN SOCIETY,

With an Introduction on the Gradual Social Evolution of Primitive Man.

By A. FEATHERMAN.

Demy 8vo, 21s.

SOCIETY for PHYSICAL RESEARCH.—PROCEEDINGS, JANUARY, 1894.

Containing Papers on Partial Anæsthesia, Indian Magic, &c.

3s. 6d.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHABING CROSS ROAD.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE. BY P. MARION CRAWFORD. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"A most admirable novel, excellent in style, flashing with humour, and full of the ripest and wisest reflections upon men and women."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Crawford has scored another success.....His characters interest us quite as much when he is telling us about them as when they are telling us about themselves."

CRITICISMS on CONTEMPORARY THOUGHT and THINKERS. A Series of Essays

selected from "The Spectator." By RICHARD HOL
HUTTON, M.A. (London), Fellow of University College
London. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s.
[THE EVERESLEY SERIES.]

READINGS on the INFERNO of DANTE, chiefly based on the Commentary of Benvenuto

da Imola. By the Hon. WILLIAM WARRE
VERNON, M.A. With an Introduction by the Rev.
EDWARD MOORE, D.D., Hon. D.Litt., Dublin
Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. In 2 vols.
crown 8vo, 30s.

*.* Uniform with "Readings on the Purgatorio of Dante,"
by the same author.

ENGLISH PROSE. Selections, with Critical Introductions by various Writers, and General

Introductions to each Period. Edited by HENR
CRAIK. In 5 vols. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each volume
Vol. II. THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY to the RESTORATION.

TIMES.—"Supplies a distinct want in the study of English literature."

SCOTSMAN.—"The book is alike admirable, whether as text-book for educational purposes, or as a prose anthology, which a man will wish to turn for the sake of culture and good reading."

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED:

Vol. I. THE FOURTEENTH to the SIXTEENTH CENT
TURY.

Macmillan's Three-and-Sixpenny Series.

NEW VOLUME.

ADVENTURES in MASHONALAND.

By Two Hospital Nurses, ROSE BLENNERHASSETT and LUCY SLEEMAN. Third Thousand. Crown 8vo,
2s. 6d.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"The adventures and hardships of these two brave ladies are extremely fascinating
reading."

SPECTATOR.—"Emphatically a book to be read."

TIMES.—"It will, we are convinced, be widely read, and widely enjoyed."

A MANUAL of MICROCHEMICAL ANALYSIS. By Prof. H. BEHRENS, of the Polytechnic

School in Delft, Holland. With an Introduction Chapter by J. W. JUDD, F.R.S., Professor of Geology at the Royal College of Science. With 84 Illustrations drawn by the Author. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. A

Course of Sermons. By the late FREDERICK DENISON
MAURICE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"A volume of sermons for which the memory of Maurice's unique personal influence ought to secure a cordial reception."

SCOTSMAN.—"They appear in a volume uniform with the recent collective edition of Maurice's works, and will be welcome to the many readers to whom that edition has brought home the teaching of the most popular among modern English divines."

Elementary Classics.—New Volumes.

Pott 8vo, 1s. 6d. each volume.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH BOOK of the ILIAD. Edited, with Notes, Introduction, and Vocabulary, by WALTER LEAF, Litt.D., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and M. A. BAYFIELD

M.A., Headmaster of Christ College, Brecon.

THE FALL of PLATÆA and the PLAGUE at ATHENS. From Thucydides II. and I.

Edited, for the use of Beginners, by W. T. SUTHER
M.A., and A. S. GRAVES, B.A., Assistant Masters
Fetted School. With Map, Exercises, Notes, Appen dices, and Vocabulary.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1145.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., Art Reproducers.

“—QUOD PETIS HIC EST.”

IT will be in the recollection of our numerous clients, and the public generally, that for a long period a widely felt want was experienced amongst Artists, Authors, Publishers, and Printers alike, in the way of obtaining easily accessible and reliable information as to the best and cheapest methods—consistent with high-class work—of Reproduction, as applied to Oil Paintings, Water-Colour Drawings, Pen and Ink Sketches, Photographs, MSS., &c., &c.

The marked success which has attended our efforts to meet this want induces us to make more widely known the lines on which our House was established.

For many years we had made a special study of the various processes adopted, both at Home and Abroad, for the Reproduction of Works of Art in Monochrome and Colours; and our House being the first to enter the field to supply so necessary a desideratum, we had the good fortune, in our interviews with the various Continental Firms, to secure valuable concessions from many of the leading houses in France, Bavaria, Germany, and Austria, and in some cases to obtain exclusive rights for Great Britain and Ireland.

These various concessions have proved to be highly advantageous, alike to manufacturer and client—to the manufacturer from a widely increased and rapidly extending business, and to client from excellence of results, combined with the lowest remunerative charges.

We are thus enabled to supply the highest possible class of work, and at the same time to advise as to the best method of reproduction according to the nature of the original. We are not committed to any one process, and are perfectly unbiassed in giving advice to our clients, who may in all cases rely upon safe guidance as to the methods best suited to their varied requirements. This is a special feature of our business.

For many years past we have been entrusted with commissions from most of the principal Fine Art Publishers, who have on every occasion expressed themselves in terms of high approval of our various processes.

The well-known house of Herr FRANZ HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, gave us the sole right for Great Britain and Ireland to supply their Photogravure, Block and Collotype processes. This house bears a world-wide reputation for artistic finish. In all their methods of Art Reproduction it is unsurpassed by any European establishment, while as regards their Photogravure Process, many of our leading artists consider that it stands without a rival.

Herr HANFSTAENGL's Studios are of the most elaborate and extensive character, and the liberal support we have received on his behalf from our chief London Publishing Houses is a proof of their appreciation of the value and importance of his work. We have constantly on view many costly and important plates from paintings by artists of high repute, and a visit to our offices will confirm the high encomiums we have received on all hands as to the excellence and quality of the work that has already emanated from our firm in all its branches.

OFFICES: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

Mr. Wm. Heinemann's New Novels. AT THE LIBRARIES.

A DAUGHTER OF MUSIC.

By G. COLMORE,
Author of "A Conspiracy of Silence," &c. In 3 volumes.
"A fine story. 'A Daughter of Music' has appeared very early in the season of 1894, but it will live to the end, and long after."
DAILY CHRONICLE.

SECOND THOUSAND.

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

In 3 volumes.

"One is fascinated and devours the whole three volumes at a sitting."—QUEEN.

THE SURRENDER OF MARGARET BELLARMINE.

By ADELINE SERGEANT,
Author of "The Story of a Penitent Soul," &c.
In 2 volumes, price 12s.

"Absorbing in its intense interest."—OBSERVER.

BENEFITS FORGOT.

By WOLCOTT BALESTIER,
Author of "The Average Woman." In 3 volumes.
"A story of singular power and impressiveness."
DAILY TELEGRAPH.

BY I. ZANGWILL.

Crown 8vo, uniform binding, price 6s. each.

THE KING OF SCHNORRERS:

Grotesques and Fantasies. With 98 Illustrations by Phil May, George Hutchinson, F. H. Townsend, and others.
"A very fascinating story. Mr. Zangwill returns to the Ghetto, and, by treating it as it was towards the close of the eighteenth century, gives us a quaint old-world picture as a most appropriate setting for his pictureque hero, the Beggar King."—St. James's Gazette.

CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO: a

Study of a Peculiar People. Fourth Edition.
"Apart altogether from its great artistic merits, from its clear portraits, its subtle and skilful analysis of character, its pathos and its humour, this book has in my mind an immense interest as a record of a generation that has passed, and of struggles that are yet going on."
Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR, in the Weekly Sun.

THE PREMIER AND THE PAINTER:

a Fantastic Romance. By I. ZANGWILL and LOUIS COWEN. Third Edition.
"It might be worth the while of some industrious and capable person with plenty of leisure to reproduce in a volume of reasonable size the epigrams and other good things witty and serious which 'The Premier and the Painter' contains. There are plenty of them, and many are worth noting and remembering."—Graphic.

THE OLD MAIDS' CLUB. Illustrated

by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
"Told with unflinching humour and occasional touches of pathos. The author plays with his subject, and invests it with delicate whimsical lights and shadows, and keen flashes of wit."—Daily News.

BY SARAH GRAND.

Crown 8vo, uniform binding, price 6s. each.

OUR MANIFOLD NATURE. With a

Portrait of the Author.
"If the reader be troubled by the constant suspicion that he is being preached at for the improvement and reformation of his own nature, amends is made to him by the humour, the vigorous and healthy realism, and the true and deep love of nature which are revealed in these tales."—Scotsman.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS. (Thirty-

fifth Thousand.)
"The adventures of the 'heavenly twins' are delightfully funny. No more original children were ever put into a book. Their audacity, unmanageableness, and genius for mischief—in none of which qualities, as they are here shown, is there any taint of vice—are refreshing; and it is impossible not to follow with very keen interest the progress of these youngsters."
Academy.

IDEALA: a Study from Life. Sixth

Edition.
"The book is a wonderful one—an evangel for the fair sex, and at once an inspiration and a comforting companion, to which thoughtful womanhood will recur again and again."
Liverpool Mercury.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford St., W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

FRAGMENTS OF ITALIAN HISTORY, by RICHARD HUGHES	301
FRANCIS THOMPSON'S POEMS, by Mrs. THOMPSON	302
LE FANT'S SEVENTY YEARS OF IRISH LIFE, by LIONEL JOHNSON	303
THE GELASIAN SACRAMENTARY, by the BISHOP OF EDINBURGH	304
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	305
SOME AMERICAN BOOKS, by WALTER LEWIN	306
NOTES AND NEWS	307
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	308
TRANSLATION: "EL-ASKEH," by Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS	308
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	308
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	309
CORRESPONDENCE—

The Hebrew and Septuagint Texts of Exodus, Chap. xxxv., xl., by W. H. HAZARD, Spencer, "Eucric Queen," I. ii. 18, by H. LITTLEDALE; The Hibbert Lectures, by the Rev. James Drummond	309
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	310
RECENT WORKS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE, II.	311
SCIENCE NOTES	312
PHILOLOGY NOTES	312
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	312
CLAUDE PHILLIPS'S SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS, by F. WEDMORE	313
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE	313
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	314
HEBERT'S MASTERS OF FRENCH MUSIC, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	315
MUSIC NOTES	315

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCZEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture, Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Esthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES FOR THE BEST ESSAY IN ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foondress and "Gossip." 1s. 6d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Twich, Breconshire.

EDITOR of important County Weekly, retiring on account of paper changing hands, desires EDITORSHIP, Sub-Editorship, or similar post. Able Leader-writer, thoroughly well acquainted with current politics, and with special knowledge of Social and Church questions. Also good speaker and lecturer. University man. Highest references.—Address "OXONIANS," care of Mather & Crowther, 7, Fleet Street, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 23 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

Fourth Edition, pp. 390, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LOUIS LEAL, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON &amp; SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the NEXT HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 11th JUNE, 1894.—In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at University College, Aberystwyth; University College, Bangor; The Modern School, Bedford; Mason College, Birmingham; University College, Bristol; Durness College (for University College, Cardiff); The Ladies' College, Cheltenham (for ladies only); St. Gregory's College, Farnside; The Herriot-Watt College, Edinburgh; The Royal Medical College, Epsom; The County School, Hereford; The Yorkshire College, Leeds; The Wykeston School, Leicester; St. Edwards College, Liverpool; University College, Liverpool; The Owens College, Manchester; Rutherford College, Newcastle-on-Tyne; University College, Nottingham; The High School, Oswestry; The Public School, Plymouth; Firth College, Sheffield; Sloughurst College; and St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw.

Every Candidate is required to apply to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry not less than five weeks before the commencement of the Examination.

April 7th, 1894.

ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., Registrar.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

NEW CHAIR OF HISTORY.

The UNIVERSITY COURT will, on MONDAY, 18th JUNE NEXT, or some subsequent day, appoint a PROFESSOR to this CHAIR.

While any portion of History will be within the scope of the Chair, special regard will be had to the attainments of the Candidates in the department of Modern History.

The Professor will be required to deliver annually at least one full Ordinary Course of 100 Lectures, and one full Honours Course of 50 Lectures, and to discharge the other duties of a Professor.

The Lectures will extend over either a continuous Winter Session of say six months, or should the Court so determine, over half of the Winter Session, together with the Summer Session of say three months.

The salary attached by Ordinance to the Chair is £200, subject to abatement in the event of the University Fee Fund at any time failing to provide the normal salaries of the Professors.

The appointment will be made "ad vitam aut culpam," and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance. Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 28th May next, sixteen copies of his application, and sixteen copies of any Testimonials he may desire to submit. One copy of the application should be signed.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary, Edinburgh University Court.
University of Edinburgh,
18th March, 1894.

THE GROVE, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPAL, MRS. LACEY.
HEAD-MISTRESS—Miss LACEY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Modern History; Oxford University Extension Lecturer.

VISITING TEACHERS:—
Miss J. W. KIRKALDY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Natural Science.
Miss A. G. EART, Newnham College, Cambridge; First Class Natural Science Tripos.
Miss C. M. RINDING, Girton College, Cambridge; Classical Tripos.
Miss M. R. HOSTE, Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford; Honours, Classical Moderations.
Miss Louisa DREWRY (English Language, Elocution).
Mr. ARTHUR SOMERLEY, Professor at the Laysa College of Music.
MR. GALLATLY, Assistant of the Royal College of Music.
MR. R. CARBONIS (Violin).
Mme. OUVRIER (Dancing and Physical Exercises).
Mr. W. McPHERSON (Fencing and Drill).

REFERENCE PERMITTED TO:—
The Lady Laura Ridding; Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, late Principal of Somerville Hall; Mrs. A. H. Johnson, Hon. Sec. Association for the Education of Women; Miss Matilda, Principal of Somerville Hall; the Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester; the Rev. Professor Symes, M.A., Principal of University College, Nottingham.
THE NEXT TERM will begin MAY 4th.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS
GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA AND TITLE OF L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Leicester, Loughborough, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Tralee, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

THURSDAY NEXT (April 19), at 3 o'clock.—PROFESSOR J. P. BRIDGE, Mus.Doc., Organist of Westminster Abbey and Gresham Professor of Music, FIRST OF TWO LECTURES on "MUSIC."
1. MUSICAL GESTURES. 2. MOZART as a TEACHER. Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY (April 21), at 3 o'clock.—H. D. TRAILL, Esq., D.G.L.—FIRST OF TWO LECTURES on "LITERATURE and JOURNALISM." Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to 11 the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

PROFESSOR W. P. KER will give THREE PUBLIC LECTURES on the "ICELANDIC SAGAS," on TUESDAY, April 17, Tuesday, April 24, and Tuesday, May 1, at 4 o'clock. These Lectures are open to the Public without Payment or Tickets.

J. M. HORSBROUGH, M.A., Secretary.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—

Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorso Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYER, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

2 vols., small 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

MEINHOLD—SIDONIA the SOICERESS. Translated by Lady WILDE, and THE AMBER WITCH, by Lady DUFF GORDON.

REEVES &amp; TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

GENERAL LORD ROBERTS, V.C., G.C.R., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., will preside at the 104th ANNIVERSARY DINNER, to be held at the WHITEHALL ROOMS, HOTEL METROPOLE, S.W., on WEDNESDAY, April 25th, at half-past six for seven o'clock precisely STEWARDES.

The Hon. William Waldorf Astor, Esq.
Alfred Austin, Esq.
George Bentley, Esq.
William Blackwood, Esq.
Colonel the Lord Eustace Cecil.
Frederick Chapman, Esq.
Colonel Sir Henry Collett, K.C.B.
The Rev. Canon W. Cooke, F.S.A.
Wilfrid J. Cripps, Esq., C.B.
F.S.A.
The Lord Justice Darby.
Sir John Fawcett, Bart., K.C.M.G.
J. P. Gassiot, Esq.
F. W. Gibbs, Esq., C.R., Q.C.
Henry Hicks Gibbs, Esq., F.S.A.
Anstey Guthrie, Esq.
The Viscount Hamplden.
Colonel Henry Hozer.
Arthur D. Jones, Esq.
The Rev. Augustus Jessopp, D.D.
Professor William Paton Ker.
Orfeur J. Kilyington, Esq.
William Knighton, Esq., LL.D.
Sidney Lee, Esq.
Sir George Lewis.
W. E. H. Lecky, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D.
W. S. Lilly, Esq.
T. Norton Longman, Esq.

Gentlemen willing to attend the Dinner are invited to communicate with the Secretary. Dinner tickets one guinea each.

A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.

7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, APRIL 19th, at 8.30 P.M.
The following Paper will be read:—
"THE EARLDOMS UNDER EDWARD I," by Professor T. F. TOUL, M.A., F.R.Hist.S.
20, Hanover Square, W.

SHAKESPEARE READING SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL READING, "KING RICHARD II." Arranged and Rehearsed under the direction of Mr. WM. POEL, will be given at STEINWAY HALL, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, on FRIDAY, April 20th, at 8 p.m.

Tickets, 3s., 2s., and 1s.—Apply Hon. Sec., 13, Upper Berkeley Street; or Miss BUCKNELL, 75, Ladbroke Grove; or Cecil F. J. JENNINGS, Esq., (Hon. Treas.), 27, Walbrook, E.C.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT
INSTITUTION.

For the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows, and Orphans.
The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the WHITE HALL ROOMS, THE HOTEL METROPOLE, on SATURDAY, April 23, at half-past 6 o'clock.

The Right Hon. LORD RIBBLESDALE, P.C., in the Chair.
Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.
Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by Sir JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., R.A., Hon. Secretary.
ALFRED WATERHOUSE, R.A., Treasurer.
DOUGLAS GORDON, Secretary.
19, St. James's Street, S.W.

MONDAY NEXT, April 16.—Optical Stock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY NEXT, April 16th, at half-past 12 precisely, the OPTICAL PORTFOLIO of the late Mr. J. C. STEVENS, JOHN ROWLEY & SON, of 60, Edgware Road, W., comprising Microscopes and Telescopes—Mathematical Instruments—Opera and Field Glasses—Compasses—Model Engines—Gold and Silver Frame Spectacles and Folders—Lanterns and Slides—Barometers—Thermometers, &c.; also Glass Show Counter Cases and various Findings.—On view the Saturday prior, 12 till 4, and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views & Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

DEVIL'S PRONOUN, and other Tales.

By Miss F. FORBES-ROBERTSON. 12mo, cloth, 4s. 6d.
REEVES & TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holi, R.A., Oulens, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of references to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

80 to 84, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

TO AUTHORS AND EDITORS.

NORTHERN

NEWSPAPER

KENDAL. SYNDICATE,

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

Shaving becomes a pleasant and easy operation by the use of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP, which yields a rich creamy lather that is agreeable to the most sensitive skin, and renders the beard delightfully obedient to the action of the razor.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d. CAKES, 1s., 2s., and 3s.

Supplies high-class short and aerial fiction; bright sketches; articles on general subjects.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES. Crown 8vo. Vol. XVIII.

THE ANTHONY HOPE. PRISONER OF ZENDA.

"One of our leading Novelists says: 'It is capital stuff. The plot is high-spirited, and worked out with very gallant good breeding. I finished it and then turned back and read bits again.'"

"Mr. Anthony Hope may justly be invited to look with pride and pleasure upon the brilliant novel he has contributed to the Arrowsmith 3s. 6d. Series. It is one of those novels that, moving us with keen delight, set grateful hearts longing to send the author a warm vote of personal thanks. It grows ever more difficult to find fresh fields for fiction, and when we chance across a novelist who seems with every new effort to strike the unworn, we should do something to encourage him."—Morning Leader.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., Ltd. And Railway Bookstalls.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 368, will be published on MONDAY NEXT.

1. AFRICAN EXPLORATION.
2. DR. JULIAN'S HYMNOLGY.
3. MEMOIRS OF CHANCELLOR PASQUIER. Second Volume.
4. THE LIQUEFACTION OF GASES.
5. THREE NOBLE ENGLISH WOMEN.
6. VON MOLTKE'S CAMPAIGN in BOHEMIA.
7. NAVAL ARMEMENTS.
8. KIDD ON SOCIAL EVOLUTION.
9. THE NEW MINISTRY.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

THE

ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

No. 34, APRIL. Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.
MR. FREEMAN and the BATTLE of HASTINGS. By J. H. Round. With a Note by the Editor.
BISHOP BECKINGTON and KING HENRY VI. By the Ven. Archdeacon Peck.
THE CITY of YORK in the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. By Miss Maco Sellers.
"THE BOKE LONGVINO to a JUSTICE of the PEACE" and the ASSESSMENT of WAGES. By Miss ELLEN A. McArthur.

2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. List of Historical Books recently published.—5. Contents of Periodical Publications.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 356, will be published on APRIL 18th.

CONTENTS.

- I. THE BRITISH NAVY.
- II. THE POLITICAL LIFE of W. H. SMITH.
- III. SHAKESPEARE'S BIRDS and BEASTS.
- IV. OCEAN MEADOWS.
- V. OLD TESTAMENT CRITICISM.
- VI. THE PLEASANT LAND of DEVON.
- VII. THE LIBERALS and SOUTH AFRICA.
- VIII. A CYCLE of CATHAY.
- IX. PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE versus OBSTRUCTION.
- X. THE AGRICULTURAL LABOURER.
- XI. HYPERIDES and the NEW PAPYRI.
- XII. DEMAGOGUES in BRITISH POLITICS.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

MACKAIL'S (J. W.) THE SAYINGS

of the LORD JESUS CHRIST from the FOUR EVANGELISTS. Collected and arranged by REEVES & TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

BARDS and the BIRDS. Selected from various Poets by F. NOEL PATON, Esq. With 10 Illustrations by Mrs. Hugh Blackburn and Hubert Paton. REEVES & TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

OLD SHIRTS

RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 6d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each, 2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10yd. each; real Irish Linen Sheetting, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8yd. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4yd. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 5s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 9d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 2d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

TOWN LIFE in the FIFTEENTH CENTURY. By Mrs. J. R. GREEN. 2 vols., 8vo 32s.

TIMES.—"It is an important, instructive, and picturesque contribution, almost the first of its kind, to an undeservedly neglected branch of English history."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mrs. Green's book is learned enough for a whole faculty of professors, while it is irradiated by a humour and sympathy which come from a brighter atmosphere than that of the common-room."

QUESTIONS of the DAY,

SOCIAL, NATIONAL, and RELIGIOUS. Being Addresses delivered in St. Martin's Church, Leicester, on Special Occasions between the Years 1870 and 1890. By DAVID J. VAUGHAN, M.A., Honorary Canon of Peterborough Cathedral; Master of Wyggeston's Hospital; late Vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester; formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CRITICISMS on CONTEMPORARY THOUGHT and THINKERS. A Series of Essays selected from "The Spectator." By RICHARD HOLT HUTTON, M.A. (London), Fellow of University College, London. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s.

[THE EVERSLY SERIES.]

DAILY NEWS.—"Most of them are excellent as literature, and all are subtle in thought. Mr. Hutton is a born critic, with a wide range of spiritual interests, and a strong sense of ethical purpose."

TIMES.—"Thoughtful and suggestive essays... The range of the essays is wide and various, and Mr. Hutton finds occasion to display his intellectual antagonism side by side with his large intellectual sympathies."

THE COLLECTED WORKS of

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY, F.R.S. In Monthly Volumes. Globe 8vo, 5s. each volume.

[THE EVERSLY SERIES.]

Vol. I. Method and Results; Vol. II. Darwiniana; Vol. III. Science and Education; Vol. IV. Science and Hebrew Tradition; Vol. V. Science and Christian Tradition; Vol. VI. Hume. With Helps to the Study of Berkeley; Vol. VII. Man's Place in Nature; and other Anthropological Essays.

MODERN LOVE. A Reprint.

To which is added "The Sage Examined and the Honest Lady." By GEORGE MEREDITH. New Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 5s.

BALLADS and POEMS of

TRAGIC LIFE. By GEORGE MEREDITH. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s.

POEMS and LYRICS of the JOY of EARTH. By GEORGE MEREDITH. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s.

A VALIANT IGNORANCE. By

MARY ANGELA DICKENS. 3 vols., crown 8vo 31s. 6d.

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

MORNING POST.—"The story has depth of feeling as well as distinction of style, and, above all, it is very human."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"A most admirable novel, excellent in style, flashing with humour, and full of the ripest and wisest reflections upon men and women."

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

A NEW NOVEL BY MISS BROUGHTON.

A BEGINNER.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Other STORIES by Miss BROUGHTON are—

MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN.
NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
ALAS!
"DOCTOR CUPID."

And each may be obtained in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The NOVELS of ROSA N. CAREY.

LOVER or FRIEND?
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
MARY ST. JOHN.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX.
WEE WIFE.
WOODED AND MARRIED.
FOR LILIAS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The NOVELS of MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.
THELMA.
ARDATH.
VENDETTA.
WORMWOOD.
THE SOUL OF LILITH.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The NOVELS of MAARTEN MAARTENS.

THE SIN of JOOST AVELINGH.
AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.
"GOD'S FOOL."

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS by Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING O'T.
HER DEAREST FOE.
LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS by Mrs. RIDDELL.

GEORGE GEITH of FEN COURT.
BERNA BOYLE.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The NOVELS of MARY LINSKILL.

TALES of the NORTH RIDING.
BETWEEN THE HEATHER AND THE NORTHERN SEA.
THE HAYEN UNDER THE HILL.
IN EXCHANGE FOR A SOUL.
CLEVEDEN.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The NOVELS of JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

FROM MOOR ISLES.
THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
ALDYTH.
BORDERLAND.
KITH AND KIN.
PROBATION.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER.

THE COUNTRY Month by Month.

MARCH AND APRIL NOW READY.

Cloth, silk-sewn, inlaid parchment, gilt top, 2s. each; paper, printed stiffened wrapper, gilt top, 1s. each.

PRESS OPINIONS.

TIMES.—"Well adapted to the purpose."

NATURE.—"Interesting and brightly written."

SCOTSMAN.—"Full of observant sympathy and special knowledge."

SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.—"It is altogether delightful reading."

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"Charming gossip—reminding us of Gilbert White and Richard Jefferies."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Should delight the heart of the naturalist."

(And many more.)

NEW NOVELS—In Two Volumes.

AT THE LIBRARIES.

DUST BEFORE THE WIND.

By MAY CROMMELIN.

PRESS OPINIONS.

PRO.

ATHENÆUM.—"Written with a care and skill worthy of better materials."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A tale of grim and cruel retribution, directly illustrating the scriptural pronouncement which declares that the sins of the parents shall be visited on the children.....powerfully written throughout."

CONTRA.

THE MORNING POST.—"PERVERTED—UNPLEASANT—MELODRAMATIC—CORRUPT TO THE BONE—UNSAVOURY TALE."

MRS. MACQUOID'S Latest Novel. IN AN ORCHARD.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

In 2 vols.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Pleasantly written..... dainty setting.....simple and healthy reading."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Mrs. Macquoid is an adept in the art of word painting.....Her sketches of Norman and Breton character are not surpassed in vivacity and verisimilitude by those of even the ablest native specialists such as Elie Berthet, Alphonse Karr, and André Theuriot."

ATHENÆUM.—"Very pretty.....It is needless to say that the author is as successful as usual."

GRAPHIC.—"Unsurpassable art—for it is the art of nature herself—with which Mrs. Katherine Macquoid makes us realise and enter into the whole lives of men and women.... is charmingly exemplified in her story, 'In an Orchard.'"

MORNING POST.—"Naïve simplicity.....the story is a pretty one."

In One Volume, 3s. 6d.

INSCRUTABLE.

By ESME STUART.

"Is exciting enough to please at least one 'jaded reviewer.'"
Athenæum.

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's
NEW BOOKS.

NEXT WEEK.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI AND THE PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT

Viewed in Relation to the Problems, Tendencies, and Purposes of Modern English Art.

By Mrs. J. W. WOOD.

With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings.
8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The book contains some unpublished reminiscences of Rossetti's student days and career in art, and describes the Founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood and its long conflict with academic traditions.

AMONG THE MOORS:

Sketches of Oriental Life.

By G. MONTBARD,
Author of "In Egypt," &c.

Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

[In a few days,
each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese
Vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

M. Montbard, whose skill as an artist has been rendered familiar to everyone through the pages of the *Illustrated
London News*, recently explored the highways and byways of Morocco, and made himself acquainted with the manners and customs of the natives, the characteristics of the scenery, the architecture of the cities and mosques, and every aspect of the social life of the people in town and country.

ON SHORT LEAVE TO JAPAN.

By Capt. G. J. YOUNGHUSBAND,
Queen's Own Corps of Guides, Author of "Eighteen Hundred Miles on a Burmese Tat," &c.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS FOR 1893.

A List of Books published in Great Britain
and Ireland in the Year 1893, with their
Sizes, Prices, and Publishers' Names.
Also of the Principal Books published in the United States of America.

With the Addition of an Index to Subjects.
Royal 8vo, 5s.

Dedicated to H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck.

A MANUAL of OBSTETRIC NURSING

By MARIAN HUMFREY, British Lying-in Hospital,
London; Diploma London Obstetric Society; Member
Royal British Nurses' Association, and of its Registration
Board. Crown 8vo, 300 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE CHAIRMANS HANDBOOK.

By Sir R. F. D. PALGRAVE, K.C.B., Clerk to the House of Commons. Tenth and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

"A brief compilation of suggestions and rules for the conduct of chairman of public and other meetings, based upon the procedure and practice of Parliament."—Daily News.

GLIMPSES of the FRENCH REVO-

LUTION: Myths, Ideals, and Realities. By J. G.
ALGERI, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"No writer has done more thorough work in the investigation of the personal side of the Revolution than Mr. Alger, whose 'Englishmen in the French Revolution' commanded,
not long ago, general attention and critical approval. The present work is even more interesting, dealing, as it does, with many aspects of the Revolution, always from a personal point of view; and, like its predecessor, it shows signs of careful and accurate research.....A deeply interesting and most valuable book."—Daily Chronicle.

LANDMARKS of a LITERARY LIFE,

1820-1894. By Mrs. NEWTON CROSLAND (Camilla Toulmin), Author of "Mrs. Blake," &c. With Photo-gravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"A book of the day. Will be new to most readers and interesting to all."—St. James's Budget.

"Mrs. Newton Crosland has written a pleasant volume of reminiscences put together with remarkable clearness."

Athenæum.

FRA PAOLO SARPI: the Greatest of

the Venetians. By the Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERT-SON, Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy." With Illustrations and Facsimile Letter.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"PREACHERS OF THE AGE" SERIES.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

A CUP of COLD WATER.

By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES.

With Photogravure Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1894.

No. 1145, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

FRAGMENTS OF ITALIAN HISTORY.

Guelphs and Ghibellines. By Oscar Brown-ing. (Methuen.)

The Dawn of Italian Independence. By William Roscoe Thayer. (Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

Venice. By Horatio F. Brown. (Rivington & Percival.)

Charles III. of Naples and Urban VI. By St. Clair Baddeley. (Heinemann.)

UNDER the picturesque title of Guelphs and Ghibellines, Mr. Oscar Browning has published a short history of Italy from 1250 to 1409. The former date is that of the death of Frederick II., the beginning of the end of the Imperial supremacy in Italy; the latter is that of the judgment of the Council of Pisa, when the Reformation was almost in sight. The period that lies between these historic landmarks is thronged with incidents of high historical significance. It includes the last agony of the house of Hohenstauffen; the founding, indeed almost the whole history, of the Angevin dynasty of Naples; the coming and passing of Henry of Luxembourg; the rise and fall of the Scaligers; the all but royal predominance of the Visconti; the ruin of Genoa; the enslavement of Florence; the rising of Rienzi; the plague of the Black Death, and that worse plague of the Condottieri. Dante and Petrarch and Boccaccio; Giotto and his revelation; the new art and the new learning; the new language and the new warfare; all belong to this same period, which saw, besides, the beginning and almost the end of the Great Schism, the Papal Captivity and the return from Babylon. Adequately to chronicle a century and a half of such vast and various human effort, in a volume of one hundred and eighty pages, was obviously impossible. Mr. Browning has, of course, no space to show the various sides of doubtful guilt or innocence, to discuss the sufficiency of motive, to weigh the exact proportions of chance and design. He has often to deliver judgment without stating his grounds, to acquit or condemn without hinting at the evidence. Nevertheless, though his sketch is unquestionably faulty in details, in mass and outline, in broad lights and shadows, it is an admirable presentment. Neither is there much to complain of as regards accuracy, particularly if we bear in mind how curiously difficult it is to be quite sure of details, such as the exact day on which an epoch-making event has happened. Mr. Browning, for instance, states that the Sicilian Vespers occurred on Easter Monday, March 30, 1282. In this he follows Sismondi; but Milman, following Villani, gives the day as Easter Tuesday; while Hallam accepts the vigil of Easter, apparently from Giannone. It is, however, only right to mention that there are a few errors in dates (the printers are probably responsible) which ought to be set right in a second edition. Thus, Lewis of Hungary, who died in 1382, is described as having descended into Italy with his army in 1390. Charles of Durazzo, the nephew of the man executed by Lewis, is made to accede to the Hungarian throne in 1396, and his death is given as happening in February, 1296, when the dates should be 1385 and 1386. There are also a few slips in the text. The statement, for instance, that, on the night of Andrew's murder, he and Catherine—meaning Catherine of Valois—were sleeping together at the convent of Murrano, is a libel on that elderly lady. It was from the young Queen Joanna's side that the prince was called by his murderers or their accomplice—a fact much insisted on as proof of her guilt. We own that we think that Mr. Browning takes a wrong view of Joanna's conduct; and it is scarcely fair to quote Lewis of Hungary's letter about her "inordinata vita praeferita," without adding that all the evidence goes to show that the charge of immorality was without foundation. This lady threatens to become a sort of Mary Queen of Scots for Italy, where she has been of late years much discussed. Nothing, however, has been produced to throw a doubt on Hallam's luminous judgment of her case, which amounts to a verdict of not proven as to the murder, and not guilty on the other counts. So, too, Mr. Browning's assertion that there is no reason to suppose that Charles of Durazzo (whom the victim's brother subsequently hanged for the murder) was privy to it, is at least open to question. A still more unaccountable statement is that King John of Bohemia, the son of the Emperor Henry VII., was taken prisoner at Crécy. A King John (of France) was taken prisoner by the Black Prince at Maupertuis; but that the author has confused the two is not credible. The story of John of Bohemia is familiar. He was almost blind, and, desiring to strike a blow for his French friends, asked two of his knights to lead him against the English. This they did, interlacing their horses' bridles, and galloping together into the thick of the fight, all three were slain.

One question we must allow ourselves to ask before quitting Mr. Browning's book. In it condensation has necessarily been carried to the utmost limits of the bearable. It has been skilfully done; but the result is a sort of historical pemmican, painfully nutritious, though we admit good in flavour. Unless the mental digestion of the average historical student has had in these latter days a great accession of assimilative force, it is difficult to believe that such products can be a wholesome educational diet.

Though Mr. Roscoe Thayer calls his book The Dawn of Italian Independence, it really deals with the dark hour that comes before the dawn. It is the history of the interval between the Congress of Vienna in 1814 and the surrender of Venice after the shortlived dictatorship of Daniel Manin. It was outwardly a period of gloom and silence, broken only by futile and disastrous explosions. Yet, in Italy, as well as in other parts of Europe, during this distressful time, the soil was being prepared and the seed was being sown, and the harvest is Modern Europe. Monarchical France has brought forth the Republic, oligarchic England has become a democracy, Germany and Italy have become nations. But while, in other countries, change has been the result of more or less regular development, in Italy it came with a suddenness that took away men's breath. After Solferino the old order simply collapsed. And this was the case not only in Lombardy, where the Austrian Government (though for an alien government not an unjust or cruel one) had, just because it was irremediably alien, no root in the esteem or confidence of the governed, but in Tuscany and Modena, and most of all in the two Sicilies and the Romagna, where the rulers were Italians. The history of the thirty-five years following the Congress of Vienna provides the explanation of this remarkable phenomenon. Perhaps it is a pity that it should have been written by so bitter a partisan of the cause which we believe to be right, but perhaps the convincing character of his narrative is partly due to this very fact. The belief in the hopelessness of constitutional reform, which, in 1859, prevailed among all intelligent Italians not bound to the old régime by ties of self-interest, did not grow up in an hour. Nothing but reiteration, repeated treacheries of princes, numberless cruelties of the executive, oppression in many forms, continued day by day and year after year, could have brought home the fact to the average Italian. Mr. Thayer has set forth this process, at least in its salient details. His work is so good that one feels indignant that it is not better. He certainly tells a story brilliantly, and, in the main, his views on crucial events are sound. With his sketch of 1820, and the events before and after Laibach, of the troubles that arose ten years later, and those which led up to Novara, we have no quarrel. His portraits of Charles Albert, the Italian Hamlet, of Metternich, the lay Hildebrand, of Pius IX., "the peerless benefactor, from whom all good gifts were possible," even of de Lesseps, with his comical outbursts of passion, are extraordinarily graphic. Where he fails is in his habit of treating state policy as if it were a very simple business, in which any man of good sense and right feeling must necessarily succeed. Hence come all kinds of divagations: attacks on England and France for not intervening to save Venice from bombardment; comparisons of le père Radetzky and of Oudinot with Genseric and Attila; tirades against diplomacy as "the art of ruling by chicanery"; and similar disfiguring puerilities. Again, the preliminary sketch of the ten centuries or so that precede the period chronicled, though excellently put together, is marred by a good many errors. Nor are they, we fear, mere slips in the ordinary sense of the word. They seem to arise from the writer's overmastering passion for picturesque effect. When we speak of errors, we do not mean misprints, such as barroccio for "Carroccio," or guacho for "gaucho." Who does not suffer from "was uns alle bündigt," the bondage of the printer? It is the sacrifice of truth to picturesqueness that we complain of. Mirabeau did not "fling down defiance to the king's messenger in the Tennis Court," but in the Salle des Menus. Nor did Odoacer "unite the Peninsula of Italy in his Ostrogothic kingdom," for he united nothing, and his was a Skyrrian or Herulian kingdom. Nor did France in the fifteenth century "defeat her most dangerous vassal," the Duke of Burgundy. It was to the Swiss republicans, not to the French king, that he lost "Gut und Muth und Blut." A word, too, must be said about Mr. Thayer's literary style. He is very eloquent, and can spin a phrase with the best. When, for instance, he says that Dante in choosing to write the Divina Commedia in Italian "gave a patent of nobility to every modern language," the thought is true, and the expression is suggestive. Again, in his description of the slow ferment of liberty, which between 1830 and 1848 kept the autocrats anxious, his phrase, "Not a few turbulent men but a great thought was their adversary," is worthy of his countryman, Emerson. At times, however, the desire to be striking makes him write very strangely. His reference to Metternich as having "at Cracow frontlessly violated the treaty of Vienna" is an example of this strangeness; while his comparison of de Sauget liberating the Sicilian convicts to "a cuttlefish covering his retreat in a murk of sepia" is so infelicitous as to excite a smile. But we hardly know what to do when we read that "the perjured Neapolitan king tarried in Florence while the Austrians went down and squelched the patriotic army." The flavour of modern slang certainly goes very ill with the old-fashioned sobriety of the rest of the sentence.

Mr. Horatio Brown's Venice is conceived in the spirit of the annalists of fifty years ago, but he makes abundant use of the modern authorities, particularly Romanin's Storia documentata di Venezia. He briefly sets forth the doings of the Republic, almost decade by decade, from the first election of Tribunes by the fourteen island townships, down to the time when the last Doge, at the bidding of General Bonaparte, bade his servant take away the ducal bonnet, "Tole questo, no la dopero piu." Perhaps he is most happy in depicting the first developments of her corporate life, and he brings out with excellent emphasis that singular note of early Venetian character, the instinct which checked every attempt to make the Dogeship hereditary. But the irony of fate doomed the people who declared that "they did not come to the lagoon to live under a Lord," to sink into the submissive subjects of all the grandi whose names were in the Libro d'Oro. Of course the Venice that the world knows best is the Venice of the decadence, what Mr. Brown calls "the Venice of Francesco Foscari, the Venice of the Ambassadors, the Venice of Paoli Sarpi." But the Venice that is most wonderful is the Venice that repelled the Frank invaders, the subject of the Eastern Caesar, and later his conqueror, the Venice of Enrico Dandolo, and of the Zenos. Mr. Brown writes with the immense advantage of one who knows the material Venice au fond; and his knowledge is of unique importance in regard to a place which alone of the great cities of Europe can boast that she has never been stormed, or burnt, or ruined by an invader, not a stone of whose palaces, not a brick of whose quays has been overturned by the hand of the alien. This made her final decay all the more sad to look on, though it helped to hide the malignant disease of which she was dying. Mr. Brown's picture of the moribund Venice of the eighteenth century is as excellent as any part of his useful and unpretentious book.

Charles III. of Naples and Urban VI. is a sequel to the volume on Queen Joanna published last year. Both are scholarly monographs, showing considerable research, beautifully printed, and containing interesting architectural illustrations. In his later book, Mr. St. Clair Baddeley is, we are glad to note, crisper and less rhetorical in style than formerly, though he still has hardly taken sufficiently to heart the truth of Flaubert's paradox, that the adjective is the natural enemy of the noun. Charles Duke of Durazzo, King Charles III. of Naples, the conqueror of his benefactress Joanna, and who, like her, fell by the hand of the assassin, is not a particularly sympathetic character. But though he was himself suspected of a useful murder, his character, unlike hers, has neither been bitterly assailed nor has it found passionate defenders. His career, however, abounds with knotty points, which give full scope to Mr. St. Clair Baddeley's passion for elucidation; and in nearly every case we find his reasoning just, though he acquits King Charles III. of the murder of Joanna and Joanna of the murder of Andrew. Even in his dealing with Urban VI., one of the most odious tyrants that ever dishonoured the throne of St. Peter, one must applaud the author's fairness in insisting on his savage hero's total freedom from small vices.

The appended essay on Cecco d'Ascoli, the friend of Dante, poet, physician, astrologer, and professor of philosophy, is a study of one of those complex characters in which Italy was so fertile. He belongs to an earlier period than Charles and Urban, his career ending in 1327, when he was burnt in Tuscany as an astrologer or wizard, which he seems to have believed himself to be. The populace certainly shared this belief; for it is recorded that on the day of his execution Florence turned out en masse to see if so famous a stregone would burn, or whether the evil spirits would come and rescue him. His contributions to philosophy and medicine were unimportant; and as to his poetry, though it was taken seriously by his contemporaries, probably the verdict of the biographer of Petrarch is just, "S'il n'ôtait pas plus sorcier que poète, on lui fit une grande injustice en le brûlant."

REGINALD HUGHES.

Poems. By Francis Thompson. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

ONE of the main differences, it may be, between a poet and a postaster, the singer born and the singer manufactured, lies in the proportion of topical influence shown forth in their respective productions. The essentially and rightfully "minor" poet seems ever more or less (but generally more) the mere mirror of certain contemporary waves of thought or emotion, the sport of fashion and the glass of form. You could date his verses to a year, nay to a month even, by their tendencies no less than by their mannerisms; and, to be sure, it is better so, for when he strives to be individual and untrammelled the result is not often agreeable. The poet, on the other hand, bears no season's stamp, carries no company's banner, however dainty; his work has nothing in common with that of the modiste and the milliner; it is neither for to-day nor to-morrow, but for all time. Verse-making is a pleasant enough hobby, given sufficient facility and an adequate lack of humour: it pleases him that makes, and (sometimes) him that reads, while it should not be forgotten that verse is simply invaluable for "lightening up" the pages of periodicals, where it is often an excellent and inexpensive substitute for a tail-piece.

Minor poetry has perhaps been too much and too harshly decried of late. In the first place, it is a deep delight to its author while the singing-fit lasts; secondly, you are not compelled to peruse it when bad, while, when good, you may pick out the purple patches with complacency, if not rapture; and, lastly, what is excellent will surely live, what is worthless as indubitably die. "Time will show and the end declare," with the admirable sanity of natural forces, which is to perish and which shall survive, so that in reality all is for the best. The real poet, one must suppose, has some reward in the very quality of his work, the rhymester in the gratification of his harmless vanity; each should be moderately happy in his own way, for each may believe, as he will, that his odd unreasonable yearning after posthumous popularity will be fulfilled, and in this very immaterial issue neither can know disappointment. Which is yet another beneficent law of nature, and just as it should be. The ultimate destiny of their works is scarce likely to trouble the slumbers of either Shakspeare or Mr. Samuel Rogers; and in all probability both were equally blessed, from the practical point of view, while they lived and wrote.

However that may be, one is fain to believe that, even in the false perspective of the present time, a time necessarily of green judgments and hasty enthusiasms, it is possible, clearly if rarely, to discern some who stand, as it were, like the offspring of the gods lang syne, a head and shoulders above their fellows. To this delectable company Mr. Francis Thompson has been already, and with reason, declared to belong; and, indeed, there seems but little likelihood, unmomentous though the matter be, that posterity (if posterity read poetry at all) will not endorse this verdict. Despite the blemishes on his work (and they are obvious enough in all conscience), it stands plainly confessed for him who runs to recognise as the output of a genius. Mr. Thompson is no "poet of fashion"; the fifteenth century might claim him almost as easily as this; the alternate perfection and clumsiness of his technic are entirely out of touch with the mild charms and mild defects of average contemporary verse. When he errs he errs so boldly, so badly, with such a perverse sincerity, so fine a show of wholeheartedness, as to extort (just as a high-spirited child, who deliberately chooses now and again to be recklessly perverse, may win) some measure of indulgence. Even at his ungainliest and his most wilful, Mr. Thompson sins still in the grand manner: with all his faults of rhythm and mistakes of metaphor he is never undignified; his sublime may now and then incline a little towards topheaviness, but cannot sink to the ridiculous. To misquote a commonplace of criticism, he has a few of the defects of some of his qualities. And his qualities are rare indeed. For sheer beauty of thought, phrase, and imagery, a great many of these poems could scarce be bettered: subtle with the fine subtlety of strength, remote yet intimate, austere and still sumptuous, fair with an unfamiliar excellence and sweet with an unearthly sweetness, this book is, as it were, the mystic rose of modern poetry—if you can call that modern which bears about it no sign or superscription of the times, and is even, here and there, tinged with medieval colour, like a sun-ray gleaming through an old stained-glass casement.

Several of the lyrics, and, most notably, "The Making of Viola," bring to mind some of those pictures painted on golden backgrounds by early Italian masters; "The Poppy," again, has something not all un-Swinburnian in its metrical effects; while the lines, "To my Godchild," beginning thus—

"This labouring, vast, Tellurian galleon,
Riding at anchor off the orient sun,
Had broken its cable, and stood out to space
Down some froze Arctic of the aerial ways:
And now, back warping from the inclement main,
Its vaporous shroudage drenched with icy rain,
It swung into its azure roads again;
When, floated on the prosperous sun-gale, you
Lit, a white halcyon auspice, mid our frozen crew"

are invested throughout with a classic splendour of language and metaphor, joined with an almost superhuman tenderness, that are perhaps the most prominent characteristics of Mr. Thompson's poetry.

Marvellously simple and suggestive is the poem called "Daisy"; it has, moreover, both light and atmosphere, no less than music and human sentiment, as this short excerpt shows:

"A berry red, a guileless look,
A still word—strings of sand!
And yet they made my wild, wild heart
Fly down to her little hand.

"For standing artless as the air,
And candid as the skies,
She took the berries with her hand,
And the love with her sweet eyes.

"The fairest things have fleetest end:
Their scent survives their close,
But the rose's scent is bitterness
To him that loved the rose!

"She looked a little wistfully,
Then went her sunshine way—
The sea's eye had a mist on it,
And the leaves fell from the day.

"She went her unremembering way,
She went and left in me
The pang of all the partings gone,
And partings yet to be."

Of greater complexity, but none the less lovely, are "Before Her Portrait in Youth" and "Her Portrait." Few things in the book are more lyrically delightful than "A Carrier-Song"; but perhaps the most entirely perfect is "Dream-Tryst," which it were impossible to refrain from giving in its entirety:

"The breaths of kissing night and day
Were mingled in the eastern Heaven:
Throbbing with unheard melody
Shook Lyra all its star-chord seven!
When dusk shrank cold, and light trod shy,
And dawn's grey eyes were troubled grey;
And souls went palely up the sky,
And mine to Lucidè.

"There was no change in her sweet eyes
Since last I saw those sweet eyes shine;
There was no change in her deep heart
Since last that deep heart knocked at mine.
Her eyes were clear, her eyes were Hope's,
Wherein did ever come and go
The sparkle of the fountain-drops
From her sweet soul below.

"The chambers in the house of dreams
Are fed with so divine an air
That Time's hoar wings grow young therein,
And they who walk there are most fair.
I joyed for one, I joyed for her,
Who with the Past meet girt about:
Where our last kiss still warms the air,
Nor can her eyes go out."

What an Aubade might not Mr. Thompson make, an he would! For here (to say nothing of the exquisite vein of sentiment) is the very breath of dawn, the silence, the dew: that illusion, so subtle, so infinitely hard to capture, is realised to the full. It is not too much to say that there are few better lyrics in the English language. Strange that on the very opposite page your eye is caught by such an ill-chosen simile as "an oubliette of God." Surely Mr. Thompson had not pictured to himself the inevitable associations connected with the word. However that may be, "God" and "oubliette" in the usual acceptation of these names should not be linked together. But Mr. Thompson is a poet of contrasts; and when his best is so fine, the rest can be of little importance. His stumbles and slips are hardly so deep, or so disastrous, as Browning's.

GRAHAM R. TOMSON.

Seventy Years of Irish Life: being Anecdotes and Reminiscences. By W. B. Le Fanu. (Edward Arnold.)

THE name of Le Fanu has long been associated with Irish fiction and Irish verse in the person of the author best known in England as the writer of Uncle Silas; and now his brother has published a first book, as an almost octogenarian author. It is so good a book that it should not be his last; but, at least, it is enough to ensure him a place among Irish authors. It is not an ephemeral collection of anecdotes and miscellaneous reminiscences, such as abound just now; nor does it belong to that other tedious class of fashionable books, minute and unimportant autobiographies. Mr. Le Fanu has for "seventy years" been in many fortunate situations for the observation of Irish life, for meeting with men of note, for studying various matters of interest; and he has no common faculty for discerning just those things worth recording. His book is not a great work of art, but neither has it any affectations or pretences of being one: it is plain and straightforward, written with simplicity and ease. It keeps clear of vexed questions; indeed, so disconnected is the author from the political movements of a long lifetime, that the names of Davis and Mitchel are wrongly spelled—a thing hardly possible to any active follower or opponent of "Young Ireland," or to any student of the Nation. Even about matters as much social as political Mr. Le Fanu writes little: the one exception being a lively chapter upon his recollections of the Tithe War in 1831, and even that mainly from a picturesque and dramatic point of view. Son of a well-known Protestant clergyman in Dublin, afterwards Dean of Emly and a Limerick rector, Mr. Le Fanu writes of old Dublin, of days at Trinity, of country people and acquaintances, as of his experiences in later life, when an engineer or Commissioner of Public Works, with a good ear, eye, and memory for things striking and amusing. There is also a pleasant open-air freshness in his records of sport with rod or gun; and the peasant stories happily diversify those of the learned professions and public men.

Writing neither as Irish landlord nor as Irish "patriot," but as an Irish gentleman of an active profession and unpolitical office, Mr. Le Fanu sets before us an aspect of Irish life, common enough of course, but less familiar in books than others. There is plenty of stir and excitement in the book, but it is not passionate and turbulent: we have no typical scenes from "the good old times," of revelling squireens, hard riding and hard drinking: those times which died not so very long since. Nor do we find here the emotions and struggles of the popular movements, with their great poetry and their squalid prose. The book reminds us of an Ireland apart from all extremes: a normal Ireland of the professional upper classes, with no lack of Irish humour and geniality, but more English than other Irelands. A Carlyle would find it natural, that an Irishman busy over railways and other public utilities, in short, "doing work," should be more sober and clear-headed than your idle aristocrat or your starving peasant. That would be an idealising view of things. But certainly Mr. Le Fanu, in telling those scenes and anecdotes, simply and heartily, without political purpose, contrives unconsciously to put his reader into a good humour with Irish things, be he Nationalist or no. "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." There is no exaggeration nor condescension. We are sure that its writer would not call the Castle or the League "the curse and canker" of the country; he would attack, or defend, or take a middle position, but always with strong reason, and without rhetorical excess of language. Remembering all that has happened in Ireland, and in England, and in the United States, since Catholic Emancipation, it is difficult not to wonder at, and to admire, a book upon that long and troubled time, so genial and so sane. It is not political; but the very face of Ireland, the talk in all Irish society, the public and private men of the day, the speech and thought of prominent men, have been steeped in politics; and one is surprised to find so little evidence of it in such a book. And, experto crede, a strong partisan may read it, without feeling angry at this passing by of such momentous matters; for what it recalls and records has an importance or an interest of its own. As a treasury of Irish stories, good sayings, and similar delights, this book has hardly a rival of its own kind.

There are many books dealing more minutely with the wit and humour of the country masses; but for the pleasantries and absurdities of other classes, there are few books of recent times so good. It happily embalms the characteristics of many "characters," such as once abounded in all university and cathedral cities, circuits and assize towns, clubs and other haunts of "the world," professional or lounging. "Characters," men say, are becoming rare: lack of leisure, the rush of affairs, make us all much alike, or we are growing ashamed of peculiarity. Dublin, to judge from a hundred books, lives and memoirs and the like, has been not inferior to Edinburgh in its wealth of wits and butts, oddities and eccentrics, humorists and mighty talkers. The perusal of many books abounding in anecdotes often leads to a grave suspicion of much that passes for historical truth. Anecdote, like folk-lore, has its problems of origin and distribution. Stories become attracted to the heroes of great stories, jests to the great jesters, epigrams and bons mots to the great masters of those arts. One knows that Sydney Smith and the late Mr. Jowett are renowned for many things said before they were born. But in less obvious cases the problem is complicated. Do strange incidents and witty sayings repeat themselves? Do they ever occur almost simultaneously in two places to two men? A mere difference in the telling of a story may be of no importance, and can cause no surprise. Thus, we are not distressed because Mr. Le Fanu tells the "halfpenny anecdote" about Dr. Barrett, the notorious don of Trinity, Dublin, differently from Lever in Charles O'Malley. But take this case. Archbishop Whately, says Mr. Le Fanu, used to tell of a beggar who followed him asking alms, to whom he said, "Go away; I never give anything to a beggar in the streets." The beggar replied, "And where would your reverence wish me to wait on you?" Bishop Wilberforce, in his diary, records that Archbishop Trench, of Dublin, told him the incident as happening to himself. To which Archbishop was the beggar's answer given? Whately coming first, one is inclined to say Whately; but Trench tells the story of himself to a witness, who promptly wrote it in his diary. Did

Mr. Le Fanu confuse Whately and Trench, or did Trench tell it of Whately, and Wilberforce mistake him? Or did it occur to both? It happens to be a matter of infinitesimal importance; but such doubts are far reaching, and go beyond their immediate cases. In another instance, Mr. Le Fanu writes that a story has been told of Sergeant Murphy, which "really happened to quite another man, a resident in Kerry, who dearly loved a lord." That story has certainly been told of "quite another" third man, who dearly loved a lord, but did not live in Kerry, Warron of Ten Thousand a Year. But for the most part Mr. Le Fanu's stories are as fresh and indubitable as they are delightful; he has no signs of Mandeville or Munchausen, nor any pardonable tricks of native blarney and extravagance. Among his best are stories of some once well-known Irish Catholic clergy, men of powerful character, and no less humorous than the great Franciscan Father Mathew, or the great Dominican Father Burke. And all are without the least spice of malice, such as often creeps into good stories.

Here and there it may be thought that a practical inexperience in the religion of the Irish majority makes a sort of barrier, which no goodwill on both sides can cross; it is certainly so in the beautiful Irish work of Miss Barlow and of Mr. Yeats. Apart from this, Mr. Le Fanu appears equally at home with Limerick labourers and with the Beef-steak Club, with any peasant humorist, and with Thackeray. Very welcome are the glimpses we have of his distinguished brother, whose works are not yet generally valued at their true worth. What, in spite of his protest, is called, with a depreciatory meaning, the "sensational" element in them, has overshadowed their less obvious features: few writers, except Hawthorne, have so subtly mingled a grotesque humour with a strange and pensive beauty. But Mr. Le Fanu's literary skill is remarkable also, though displayed so unpretentiously: his stories are not only excellent, but excellently told, with the genius of the true raconteur; and all his descriptions or reflections are happily and tersely expressed. His book, though delighting the reader, baffles its reviewer, who refrains from unfairly telling its best stories, while it presents no single important point for criticism. It is just a book of pleasant things well remembered and related, a good talk about an active and varied life, well written down. Very Irish, it is not too much so for any reader who has not that advantage. We can but congratulate the veteran novice upon his first book, with the heartiest thanks.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

The Gelasian Sacramentary, Liber Sacramentorum Romanæ Ecclesiæ. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Notes, and Appendix, by H. A. Wilson. With Two Facsimiles. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS is a very valuable contribution to liturgical research. The work has been executed at the cost of great labour, and with a scholarly thoroughness worthy of all praise. It may, in brief, be declared to supersede entirely all previous attempts to exhibit the text of the ancient Roman Sacramentary with which the name of Gelasius has been from an early date connected. Even those who have ready access to the works of Tommasi (or Muratori) and Gerbert will find that for the study of the Gelasian Sacramentary Mr. Wilson's work not only supplies a more trustworthy text, but saves an incredible amount of time and labour if an attempt at comparison be instituted.

The Vatican, Rheinau, and St. Gallen MSS., which are our most important sources, have been collated afresh for this edition; and certain other MSS. of less value from their fragmentary character or other reasons, preserved in the Bodleian, together with one in the library of Magdalen College, have in certain places been used as helps in determining the text, or by way of textual illustration. In fact, I think the truth is not overstated when I say that every source of information at present available has been examined, and put under contribution. Indeed, Mr. Wilson has treated the text of the Sacramentary with a scrupulous care that would not be unworthy of the treatment of Biblical texts. The fulness of the textual comment may be exemplified by two instances. The Canon Actionis (excluding post-communions) does not occupy quite three pages; these are illustrated by no less than eighty-nine notes exhibiting textual variations. The Ordo de Sacris Ordinibus Benedicendis extends to not quite two pages, while the notes are fifty-two in number.

The Vatican MS. (Reginæ 316) is naturally taken as affording the basis for the editor's work; but the text is emended, when necessary, from other sources. As each Missa or other section is supplied with elaborate textual notes, the reader can form his own opinion as to the soundness of the editor's judgment. In the vast majority of instances, there can be little question that the reading adopted is the true one. Here and there we may hesitate, or prefer an alternative; but even in these cases second thoughts will, I believe, often lead the student back to an acceptance of Mr. Wilson's determination.

A very useful feature of this work are the marginal references, which exhibit at a glance the principal texts in which each liturgical formula is to be found. And it is no small advantage to have here included not only what may be properly called "Gelasian" texts, but also references to the Leonine Sacramentary and to the Gallican and other early liturgical forms; while an indication is also given of the presence or absence of the formula in the Gregorian Sacramentary, which can be further seen at once in situ by the help of Mr. Wilson's earlier work, the Classified Index to the Leonine, Gelasian, and Gregorian Sacramentaries according to the text of Muratori's "Liturgia Romana Vetus." In a word, the comparison of early Western liturgies has been facilitated by the painstaking labour of the editor to an extent which is quite surprising, and the usefulness of the book is extended beyond the circle of those who are engaged exclusively on the more remote antiquities of the Roman liturgy.

An Introduction of some sixty pages describes very fully the MS. sources, and deals with the problems arising from their comparison. The evidence for the Gelasian origin of the "Gelasian Sacramentary" is again reviewed, the editor, though expressing himself with rather more caution, being in substantial agreement with the results arrived at by M. Duchesne in his Origines du Culte Chrétien.

When a man sets before him a laborious task of a particular kind, and accomplishes it with singular success, it may seem unreasonable and ungracious to complain that he has not done more. But we cannot but express the hope that Mr. Wilson, having done so much, may be induced to go further, and give the world an explanatory commentary on the book, which, on the side of textual criticism, is so highly satisfactory. In scores, nay hundreds, of places (more especially in the rubrics), not only younger students, but those who have been long familiar with Muratori, would gladly welcome illustrative comment.

We must not omit to notice that an appendix to the volume exhibits the contents and arrangements of the parts of the Rheinau and St. Gallen Sacramentaries, together with marginal references to the places in Gerbert's Monumenta Veteris Liturgiae Alemannicae where the forms may be found. Very complete indices complete the work.

This notice, though inadequate, may serve to call attention to a liturgical work of the first importance.
J. EDENBURGEN.

NEW NOVELS.

The One Too Many. By Mrs. Lynn Linton. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Grey Romance and other Stories. By Mrs. Clifford, H. D. Traill, D. S. Meldrum, Gilbert Parker, Frederick Greenwood, Frank R. Stockton, W. Earl Hodgson, and Erskine Gower. (W. H. Allen.)

The Romance of Shere Mote. By Percy Hulburd. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

In an Orchard. By Mrs. Macquoid. In 2 vols. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

The Little Widow and other Episodes. By William Tirebuck. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

Mrs. Thorndale's Cousin. By E. M. Bacot. (Fisher Unwin.)

Her Angel Friend. By Monica Tregarthen. (Digby, Long & Co.)

WHATEVER anyone may think about Mrs. Lynn Linton's books as novels, as expositions of manners, as criticisms of life, and so forth, he knows, if he is a critic, that in Mrs. Lynn Linton's hands he is always in the hands of a craftsman, and generally in those of an artist. We must confess that it is a considerable relief, after a course of the go-as-you-please exercises which seem to pass for works of fiction with the majority of writers, both old and new, to come across a book like The One Too Many. So far as general merits of writing, construction, and not a few other things go, the supposititious (of course not real) critic could, as it seems to us, only say, "No; this is not The One Too Many; it is The One-a-deuced-deal-Too-Few just now." And this merit—which may be further allegorically phrased as the merit of basing a house, not on its chimneys, but on its foundation, and of building it, not with the very newest unbaked brick and the very latest untempered mortar, but with such materials as have been known to build good houses of old—makes us comparatively disinclined to notice anything that may seem a defect of detail. Defects of detail, however, are not exactly wanting. We are not much troubled by something which, as we have observed, has puzzled other reviewers, the fact that the two chief sets of characters—the tyrannical prig, Launcelot Brabazon with his victimised wife Moira, and the group of emancipated Girton girls, of whom one "mashes," as she would herself say, a policeman, another preaches suicide and pessimism generally, and a third permits Brabazon to pay her as much attention as his ancient and fish-like nature permits—draw, as satires, an apparently opposed moral. Fire and water draw an exceedingly opposed moral; and yet both exist, and it is well to impress on mankind the dangers of falling into either. The fault that we find with The One Too Many is that almost all its chief characters, after a fashion rather French than English, are pushed to the exaggeration of the type instead of being kept to the truth of the individual. Mrs. Lynn Linton is hardly likely to answer, as some of our novices answer their critics, "But I knew just such a priggish and venomous bully as Brabazon, just such a pretty, helpless idiot as Moira," and so forth; for she knows well enough that this is no defence. And she has certainly touched up her Girton group with too much white and red and black paint. Nevertheless, the book is distinctly amusing, and we have heard, among those who have read it, but one desire as to knowing how Effie Chegwin got on with the policeman.

"A Grey Romance" and its companions are, for the most part, written by very eminent hands; and their eminent handiwork is by no means unworthy of them. Mr. Greenwood's "Young Genius" is not so much a story as what somebody else has called a "faded photograph" of the life, or certain things in the life, of Shelley—a parable, in short; and few people, except those whom it hits, will deny that the parable hits hard. Mrs. Clifford's title-tale deals with a situation not new, but newly enough handled—the St. Martin's summer of love between an elderly couple. It has been observed of old by the uncomfortable that St. Martin has a habit of turning you without a moment's notice from summer into another season, wherein not merely the traditional half, but quite the whole, of his cloak would be required to keep you warm; and so it happens here. But Mrs. Clifford has given the better part to her own sex in a pardonable but slightly unfair manner. Her male being is a very poor creature. In enforcement of the irony of life (it will be observed that these stories do not "run cheerful"), Mr. Traill perhaps excels both the writers we have mentioned in his "Two Proper Prides." The handling (to apply with exactness a phrase which has been ridiculously scattered about of late) is rather like Maupassant's; but it is still more like that of an elder and better balanced French writer, Charles de Bernard, supposing that Bernard had been able, as he too seldom was, to be tragic without being melodramatic. The way in which Maurice Gambier and Clara Mostyn, through "proper pride," evil fate, and the very officious aid of a kind friend, missed the happiness which might have been none the less keen because it would probably have been short, could not have been improved in the telling. Mr. Stockton has contributed a brief legend of a cheerfuller kind, which is not unworthy of the author of The Schooner Merry Chanter; Mr. Hodgson, a lively semi-political story, which we should have liked none the less if it had been a little less full of personal reference and allusion; and others, other good things. The literary eranos or picnic is sometimes too much of a feast of scraps: but not here.

Mr. Percy Hulburd has done a good deal to make us hold The Romance of Shere Mote cheap. He has written it, or a great deal of it, in a strained and pompous style, which does not attain grandeur or beauty. He indulges, without provocation, in the most wildly disputable propositions—as that a person who invested early and sold out in time at the South Sea Bubble period abstracted so much "of the national wealth." How was the nation richer or poorer by the mere transference of a certain sum from several of its foolish pockets to one of its wise ones? And, lastly, he has used for his principal strings the most threadbare cords of romance. The family of the Lusteds, with its ancestral crimes, its curse of madness, its wicked and boding carp in the moat, and all the rest of it, is not merely archi-commu, but never was very good stuff, and always required a master hand to make anything of it. Yet Mr. Hulburd's book is by no means a despicable book. His angelic heroine, Ancilla Peralta, who dwells amid, and escapes unharmed, the various weirds of the Lusteds, is really angelic without being at all mawkish; the strangely-crossed loves of Lord and Lady Akehurst (who live for a trifle of twenty years or so as man and wife without discovering that they are passionately fond of each other) are well done; and many of the minor scenes and characters are good. Even John Lusted, despite the fact that he bears the burden of an accumulated heap of trumpery—horse-taming and magnetic powers, vast strength, mysterious antecedents, unnatural enmity with his father, and half the other frippery of all the schools of the Black Veil and the Hand of Glory—has intervals of ease and nature. There is, no doubt, something in Mr. Percy Hulburd; but it has got to be put into shape and measure.

Mrs. Macquoid's equable and pleasing workmanship, and the singular facility with which she takes "French pictures in English chalk," are very well known, and have not often been better illustrated than by In an Orchard. Whether the flighty, impulsive, capricious, but perfectly pure and sound-hearted Gabrielle, the heroine, who, in her brief married life, does not make the quite unmixt happiness of her husband, and who has vicissitudes afterwards, would be recognised by Frenchmen as an ideal French girl, we shall not undertake either to say or to deny. Nor shall we even hint affirmation or denial on the subject. But she is certainly human. And the excellence of the local colour in the scenes and characters grouped or sketched around her will escape no one.

We think that Mr. William Tirebuck would have done better if he had pitched his stories in a somewhat lower key. They are by no means destitute of power, either in invention or in execution; but there is rather a sense of strain in them, whether it is a strain of the pathetic, as in the title story, of the horrible, as in "Hick Drew," or of social satire, as in "Tewkins's Two Wives." It is possible, however, that this may be a mere personal impression, and that others, even if they feel it, may not dislike it. At any rate, Mr. Tirebuck's observation is certainly acute, and his plastic faculty in reproducing it not small.

As an example of the perfectly "quiet" novel of country life, Mrs. Thorndale's Cousin is not to be evil spoken of. It is not exciting; and perhaps even to those who recognise the not-exciting as a genre in novel writing which possesses quite as much legitimacy as the exciting, it may seem a very little to abuse its privilege. But it is not dull; and it is true.

We have striven in vain to find anything good-natured to say about Her Angel Friend, except that "Monica Tregarthen" is a very pretty name, and that the owner of it has apparently written with the most excellent intentions. But if the other Monica had written a book like this and asked her son's opinion of it, we fear that St. Augustine would have been put in a great strait.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME AMERICAN BOOKS.

The Builders of American Literature. By Francis H. Underwood. (Gay & Bird.) The present volume treats of American authors born before the year 1826, and is to be followed by another which will enumerate and discuss the later writers. Of course the names of what may be termed the fathers of American literature appear here, but the forthcoming volume will deal with some well-known writers concerning whose merits considerable differences of opinion exist. Mr. Underwood's plan is to give, in each instance, a record of facts and a brief critical estimate. He does not aim at exhaustive treatment or even attempt a full bibliography. His purpose is simply to produce a trustworthy popular handbook. His critical estimates are usually judicious, and they indicate (as former works of his have also done) catholic sympathies. It is not everyone who could show such a friendly appreciation as he does of men in many respects so widely asunder as Lowell, Holmes, and Whitman. We are not sure that "melancholy" is the right word to apply to Hawthorne's writings. Hawthorne was a serious rather than a melancholy man, and this characteristic was reflected in his works. To Thoreau, Mr. Underwood does less than justice, having, as it would seem, failed—as Lowell also failed—to discover his "secret." Persons who knew him intimately do not report that he was the self-absorbed, unsympathetic, and even envious person suggested by Mr. Underwood. Emerson, one of his nearest friends, found him very different from this. It was Emerson—not Hawthorne, as Mr. Underwood says—who described Thoreau as a person of "rare, tender, and absolute religion," a remark which, coming from Emerson, means that his nature was beneficent. Dr. Emerson, in his biographical sketch of his father, affirms that Thoreau "stood the severest test of friendship, having been once an inmate of Mr. Emerson's house for two years," and describes him as "a kindly and affectionate person especially to children," while with grown persons he had "tact and high courtesy, though with reserve." That, in the case of Lowell, Mr. Underwood should err somewhat in the other direction is not surprising. The author of "The Biglow Papers" was, we are told, "the best friend, the most charming companion, and one of the ablest and wisest of his generation"—a use of the perilous superlative which at once weakens the force of the judgment and lays it open to question. Among the best estimates in the book are those of Washington Irving and George William Curtis. Mr. Underwood does not undertake to discuss, or even to mention, all American writers born before 1826. He admits that often no clear line of division is possible between the authors chosen for his work and the authors who have been omitted. His line, such as it is, is undoubtedly zig-zag. He apologises—not without reason—for omitting, among others, Jones Very, John Weiss, and David A. Wasson. Others there are who certainly should not have been omitted—for example Charles Brockden Brown (whose novels may be, as Mr. Underwood incidentally remarks, "intensely disagreeable," but are undoubtedly, as he admits, "powerful"), Amos Bronson Alcott, George Ripley, and Horace Greeley. He would hardly have erred if he had included Dr. Lyman Beecher, Henry Ware, Jun., and Elizabeth Peabody, for his book contains names of less worth and fame than any of these. We think, too, the once popular Mrs. Sarah Payson Parton (Fanny Fern) was entitled to a place; and has Rufus Griswold—whose verdict, once upon a time, could make or mar a literary reputation—so fallen that he must have no place in a book which affords two pages to the worthy, but unimportant and practically forgotten, William Wirt?

A New England Boyhood. By Edward E. Hale. (Cassells.) While telling, in his pleasant way, of his own boyhood, Mr. Hale contrives to tell much about boyhood in general, in and around Boston, sixty or seventy years ago, and much also about the ways and customs of the period. His father was a civil engineer and editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser, and was reputed to be a fanatic on the subject of railways. "When it was thought crazy to talk about such things, he talked about the possibilities of a railroad westward." Mr. Hale cannot remember the time when there was not a little model railway in the house, which was shown to visitors that they might understand what was meant by a car running upon rails. "I can still," writes Mr. Hale, "see the sad incredulous look . . . with which some intelligent person listened kindly, and only in manner implied it was a pity that so intelligent a man should go crazy." The result of the elder Mr. Hale's "craziness" was that, immediately after the Liverpool and Manchester railway was opened, an engine called the "Meteor" was ordered from George Stephenson, for the Boston and Worcester Railroad, founded in 1831. Of course, we are all so much wiser now that we can afford to laugh at our grandfathers, who doubted the possibility of rapid travelling by the aid of steam. In these days, a scheme needs only to be wild and fantastic enough to win a crowd of adherents. We will admit no limits to the power of machinery: it shall even serve to make mankind virtuous and happy when worked by politicians. In respect to scientific inventions, it must be admitted, the new wonders follow one another so rapidly that there is no time, even if there be the desire, to doubt. Machinery, however, does not make as good furniture as our grandfathers made without it. Mr. Hale uses chairs, tables, and sideboard in his house to-day, which are as good now as they were seventy years ago. Seventy years hence, collectors will surely look in vain for any perfect specimens of the furniture of our day. Referring to Old Boston, Mr. Hale mentions that it was paved with the round "cobble" stones still used in country towns; and he offers the suggestion, on the authority of an "accomplished friend," that the term "cobble" is derived from the lapstone used by the cobbler to stretch his leather—that, in short, it means cobbler's-stone! In the course of his narrative, Mr. Hale throws an interesting light on some of the Puritan survivals in New England. One such survival is a distaste for public worship on Sunday evening. The Puritan theory was that the family was the Church, and the father of each family a priest, qualified to conduct worship. Accordingly, he did conduct family worship each morning and evening; and "any proposal for an evening service anywhere else" than at home was regarded with mistrust, because it tended to break up that family worship "which was so essential to their plan." Evening public worship is, of course, common enough now in Boston; but, says Mr. Hale, "at this moment you will find, in old Boston families, the habit of going to visit one another on Sunday evening, but not of going to church. Where people go to church steadily on Sunday evening, you may generally guess they are not of old Boston blood." Puritanism is so often held responsible for the dreary Sabbatarianism which still finds champions, that it is worth while to note that in some parts of New England, in Puritan days, custom was more lax than now. The Sabbath ceased at sunset. Mr. Hale records that, at the house of his grandfather, "a stiff Calvinistic minister," the children watched for the sun to go down on a Sunday afternoon, and then brought out their "little cannons and fired a feu de joie in honour of its departure." Then, for the remainder of the evening, they played "Blind Man's Buff." Even in Boston, Sunday evening "sacred" concerts came into vogue a good many years ago. The theatres there were, however, closed on Saturday evening as well as on Sunday, until enterprising managers defied the city and the State, and the law was altered to admit of Saturday evening performances. After gaining the right, Mr. Hale says, suggestively, "they generally found it more convenient to have the performances of Saturday in the afternoon"—one more instance that the surest way of preventing a thing is not always to forbid it. We must conclude with an anecdote of Mr. James Russell Lowell, having reference to the lecturing system. Some one asked Mr. Lowell whether he supposed the average audience of an interior town cared much for Beaumont and Fletcher. Mr. Lowell answered frankly, "I do not suppose they care for Beaumont and Fletcher at all. But I suppose they have heard of me and want to see me, and a good way to see me is to pay for my lecture, sit in front of me, and see and hear me for the hour in which I am reading something which interests me." Mr. Hale does not tell us—but it is true—that the boyhood here chronicled was followed by a noble manhood. Will he not continue his story into those later years?

Comic Tragedies. Written by "Jo" and "Meg," and acted by "The Little Women." (Sampson Low.) Almost anything which relates to the Alcotts, especially to the author of Little Women, is interesting; and it was a happy thought on the part of "Meg"—the last survivor of that famous family—to reproduce these "Comic Tragedies." To the original writers and actors of them, they were far from being comic; but still, to them, they were tragedies only in a dramatic sense. They were sources of real enjoyment to the lonely children, thrown back so much on themselves for their pleasures. "After a long day of teaching, sewing, and 'helping mother,' the greatest delight of the girls was to transform themselves into queens, knights, and cavaliers of high degree, and ascend into a world of fancy and romance." Jo's "tragedy-loving soul delighted in the lurid parts"—villains, bandits, ghosts, while Meg preferred to be the tender maiden or the cavalier. "Amy was the fairy sprite, while Beth enacted the page or messenger when the scene required their aid." The character of the dramas is suggested in their titles: "Norna, or the Witch's Curse"; "The Captive of Castile, or the Moorish Maiden's Vow"; and so on. Jo and Meg were the authors, and also the principal actors, taking sometimes four or five parts each in a play. For the fact that there were only four actors available did not influence the authors to limit the number of characters represented. In the extravagance of language and the exaggerated situations these youthful dramas are funny enough. Yet they are not without tokens of genius also. But when we read them, knowing well the occasion and surroundings under which they were produced, there is too much pathos to make them seem comic. Perhaps it was all a good lesson in self-reliance for those young souls. Making "coloured cotton" into "Greek tunics," and "stars of tin sewed upon dark cambric" into "shining armour," by the aid of a fine imagination, gave the workers more benefit than any which ready prepared and handsome "properties" give to more fortune-favoured amateur actors. Yet surely childhood should not be all discipline, and the spirit of those Alcott girls was not necessarily the more noble, but only more visibly noble, because it was so severely exercised. And there is no sufficient reason why the joy of young lives—or, for the matter of that, the joy of any lives—should be sacrificed, just to convince the world of their worth.

Customs and Fashions in Old New England. By Alice Morse Earle. (David Nutt.) What child-life was in New England, long before the days of the Alcotts, is told in the first chapter of Mrs. Earle's pleasant book. It was not wholesome or in anyway enviable, and the children of to-day may well feel thankful for their happier condition. Among the Puritans, religion, or what passed as such, did its utmost to crush out the brightness which, in these days, is regarded as one of the charms of childhood. It was even careless of life, for infants were carried to church to be baptised, no matter how inclement the weather; so that, as Mrs. Earle says, a verdict of "Died of being Baptised" might have been often recorded with perfect truthfulness. Not much later in the children's lives, everything gloomy in the gloomy Puritan creed was set forth for their edification. We read how Phoebe Bartlett was "converted" before she was four years old, while poor little Jane Turell at the same age "could say the greater part of the Assembly's Catechism," and many of the Psalms. Cotton Mather took his daughter Katy into his study, when she was four years old, told her he was to die shortly (which, indeed, he did not, but lived for thirty years afterwards), and "sett before her the sinful condition of her nature"; while Judge Sewell completely broke the spirit of his child Betty, by early and continually terrifying her about death and the judgment to come. That those who thus scarred the children's souls also whipped their bodies goes without the saying, and certain ingenious schoolmasters invented other modes of torture. We try to think well of those old Puritans by picturing them as sturdy champions of religion and of liberty; but, truth to tell, they were nothing of the kind. Hard and unsympathetic even to cruelty, their religion was too often a cloak for sensuality and greed. They left England to escape from tyranny and persecution; but so soon as they reached New England they began to tyrannise and persecute one another, and, after having robbed and dispossessed the rightful inhabitants, they enslaved and massacred them. They were inveterate busybodies and as infatuated as latter-day Socialists with the power of government, so that not only the children, but persons of every age and rank, were subjected to meddling and harsh regulations of their lives and habits. In the present work, as in a former one which was favourably reviewed in these columns, Mrs. Earle has given some fruits of her industrious investigation of Puritan records. The result is a clear picture of the kind of people these Puritans really were. Her narrative is made eminently readable by the bright humour with which she invests it, but it is good history, nevertheless.

Noah Porter: A Memorial by Friends. Edited by George S. Merriam. (Sampson Low.) Whatever may have been the character of the New England Puritans themselves, it is certain they have had some descendants remarkable for their excellence. Time and again the purified Puritans of New England have been the conscience of their country in times of peril: the upholders of the liberty, the justice, and the culture their forefathers understood so imperfectly. In Dr. Noah Porter we have a good example of this kind. He was not by any means a latitudinarian in his opinions; on the contrary, he was clearly and definitely a believer in the Christian faith. Yet he was a man whose just mind was capable of the broadest sympathy. When more dogmatic Christians—or shall we say persons less sure of the religion they professed than Porter was?—were insulting Theodore Parker and, having murder in their hearts, were praying he might die, Dr. Porter's criticism of his teaching, being inspired by a generous spirit, led to a warm friendship between the two men. Again, when Prof. Tyndall's famous Belfast address evoked an angry protest from outraged orthodoxy, Dr. Porter criticised it in the New Englander in such a way that Prof. Tyndall was constrained to write to the author:

"It is, as it could not fail to be, the production of a gentleman—very different in this respect from other utterances directed to a similar end nearer home. It is severe, but its severity does not lessen the respect or, if you will allow me to say it, the affection I have felt for you ever since I had the pleasure of meeting you at Yale."

Such affection seems to have been felt by others who came in contact with Dr. Porter, whether as pupils or as private friends. Forbearing, just, and with a perfect sweetness of disposition he not only made no enemies (a person of mere negative characteristics might achieve this), but he made all men and women who knew him friends. Thoreau somewhere notes how, in the world of matter, the water-lily—the "emblem of purity"—growing in stagnant and muddy water, "bursts up so pure and fair to the eye, and so sweet to the scent, as if to show us what sweetness and purity reside in and can be extracted from the slime and muck of earth." As in the world of matter so in the world of man, it is marvellous to see how from Puritanism, with its spirit of hate, its modes of tyranny, and its taint of hypocrisy, such men as Noah Porter and Emerson (to name no others) have been evolved. It would seem as if, after all, evil really is "good in the making," and the contradictions which so puzzle us are apparent only and not real.

WALTER LEWIN.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Philosophical Remains of Prof. Croom Robertson, which Messrs. Williams & Norgate announce for early publication, have been edited by his old friend and teacher, Dr. Bain, of Aberdeen, who also contributes a memoir of the author. A feature of interest will be the narrative of Prof. Robertson's connexion with J. S. Mill and the women's suffrage movement, based principally on letters written by Mill.

FOR the volume of poems and verses by Helen, Lady Dufferin, which Mr. Murray will shortly issue, the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava has written a memoir, not only of his mother, but also of several other distinguished members of the Sheridan family.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. will publish the Lectures on the Vedānta Philosophy which Prof. Max Müller lately delivered at the Royal Institution.

AN English translation of M. Jusserand's "L'Épopée de William Langland" will shortly be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, under the title of Piers Plowman. The work will gain in interest by sundry additions in text and illustration, among the latter being Blake's quaint designs for the Book of Job.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish more than half a dozen biographies during the coming season. Besides the Life of Prof. Owen and the Autobiography of Sir William Gregory (which have already been announced), he has in the press: the Life and Correspondence of Sir Bartle Frere, by Mr. John Martineau; the Life and Correspondence of Dean Buckland, by his daughter, Mrs. Gordon; a Memoir of Bishop Harold Browne, by Dean Kitchin; and The Diaries and Correspondence of Sir Victor Brooke, with a chapter on his researches in natural history by Sir W. H. Flower, and a memoir by Mr. O. Leslie Stephen.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SONS announce for publication this spring Korea and the Sacred White Mountain, being a brief account of a journey in Korea in 1891 by Capt. A. E. J. Cavendish, of the First Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, together with a description of an ascent of the White Mountain by Capt. H. E. Gould Adams, R.A.

A WORK entitled Muhammadan Dominion, Past and Present, upon which Prof. Salmoné has been engaged for some time past, will, it is hoped, appear in the coming season. It will contain a critical study of the literature, history, character, and customs of the Arabic-speaking subjects of Turkey, and also treat of the government and condition of the country.

AN interesting experiment will shortly be made by Messrs. George Bell & Sons, with a blank verse play, entitled The Cross of Sorrow, by a new author, Mr. William Akerman. It may not be generally known that stage plays under the American Copyright Act are in the same position as musical compositions: that is to say it is considered probable they need not be printed from plant manufactured in America. Should the test action now before the American courts—Novello, Ewer & Co. (representing the London music trade) v. Oliver Litson, of Boston—be decided in favour of the London house, the point may be looked upon as practically established. Messrs. Bell & Sons propose meanwhile to enter English-made copies of Mr. Akerman's play at Washington.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. have in the press a work on social evolution, by the anonymous author who is content to be known as "A Free Lance." It is mainly occupied with an attempt to trace the various economic and moral factors through which a natural evolution of society to a semi-Utopian state may be brought about. The author, while expressly repudiating Socialism, deals severely with all forms of selfish luxury and frivolity, and devotes much attention to typical illustrations drawn from the phenomena of everyday life.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week Mr. W. B. Yeats's idyl, in dramatic form, "The Land of Heart's Desire," which is being play at the Avenue Theatre. The affiche designed by Mr. Aubrey Beardsley will be reproduced as a frontispiece.

THE following works will shortly be published by the S. P. C. K.:—A second edition of Prof. Sayce's The Higher Criticism and the Verdict of the Monuments; The Celtic Church in Scotland, by Bishop Dowden, of Edinburgh; Religion in Japan—Shintoism, Buddhism, and Christianity, by the Rev. G. A. Cobbold; The Story of a Melanesian Deacon, translated by the Rev. D. R. H. Codrington; and, in the series of "Manuals of Health," Notes on the Ventilation and Warming of Houses, Churches, and Schools, by the late Dr. Ernest H. Jacob, of the Yorkshire College.

MESSRS. GAY & BIRD announce:—Fallen Angels: a Disquisition upon Human Existence: an Attempt to Elucidate some of its Mysteries, especially those of Evil and Suffering, described as being by "One of Them"; Aldrich's Complete Poems, with engraved portrait and illustrations; and The Rulers of the Mediterranean, by Mr. Richard Harding Davis, illustrated.

THE lecture on "The Law and Lawyers of Pickwick," recently delivered by Mr. Frank Lockwood, will shortly be published by the Roxburghe Press. Mr. Lockwood has sketched an original "Buzfuz" for the frontispiece.

MESSRS. MORISON BROTHERS, of Glasgow, will shortly publish, in their series of "Entertaining Literature," Romantic Stories of our Scottish Towns, by Mr. W. H. Davenport Adams, with illustrated cover by Mr. W. Ralston.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER announce a cheap edition of Mrs. Alec Tweedie's A Winter Jaunt to Norway, with a new preface.

MR. H. R. ALLENANCE announces a second edition of Aunt Janet's Legacy to her Neices, by Mrs. Bathgate, of Selkirk.

THE unpublished letter of Sir Walter Scott's that appeared in last Saturday's National Observer will be followed this week by an interesting one of Mary Russell Mitford, which also sees light for the first time.

AT the annual general meeting of the Royal Literary Fund, held last Wednesday, Lord Houghton was elected to the office of president, vacant by the death of the Earl of Derby. It was announced that the investments amount to £49,000, and that the grants last year were £3335. Seven historical and biographical authors received £505, five science and art authors £155, nine authors under the heading of classical and educational literature £1055; and the other grants were to four authors of periodical literature, three writers on topography and travels, five essayists and tale writers, eight novelists, three poets, and ten miscellaneous writers. The anniversary dinner is to be held on Wednesday, April 25, at the Hôtel Métropole, with General Lord Roberts in the chair.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

AT an extraordinary meeting of Convocation of the University of London, held at Burlington House last Tuesday, to consider the report of the Royal Commission in favour of a teaching university, the following resolution was ultimately adopted, after a prolonged and somewhat heated discussion:

"That, with a view to the speedy and satisfactory reconstitution of the University, it is desirable to secure, if possible, the co-operation of the Senate and Convocation of the University; and that, with this object, Convocation refers the whole question of the reconstitution of the University to the Annual Committee, with power to nominate members to the Joint Consultative Committee of the Senate and Convocation."

DR. CARL BEZOLD, who has been for some years employed in the Assyrian department of the British Museum, has been appointed to the chair of oriental philology at Heidelberg, vacant by the resignation of Dr. R. E. Brinnow. Dr. Bezold has already left to take up his new duties; but we understand that he intends to spend some three months of every year in London, in order to finish his edition of certain cuneiform texts.

WE hear that Prof. H. A. Salmoné, of University and King's Colleges, is a candidate for the chair of Arabic at Cambridge, vacant by the death of Prof. Robertson Smith.

PROF. MACALISTER, of Cambridge, will deliver the third Robert Boyle Lecture before the Oxford Junior Scientific Club next term, his subject being "Some Morphological Lessons taught by Human Variations."

THE following has been added as an optional special subject in the school of modern history at Oxford: mediaeval Latin palaeography and diplomatic, to be studied with special reference to MSS. of English origin. For two or three years past, the university has had, in Mr. F. Madan, of the Bodleian, a reader in mediaeval palaeography.

PROF. SULLY is introducing a new feature into the philosophical teaching at University College, by giving a course of eight lectures on "Aesthetics." The lectures will be given on Mondays at 5 p.m., beginning on April 23. It may be remembered that Prof. Sully's first publication, Sensation and Intuition, was made up in part of essays on the aesthetic aspects of music and literature.

THE Catalogue of Books printed at or relating to the university, town, and county of Cambridge, begun by Messrs. Macmillan & Bowes in 1891, will be completed during the present month by the issue of Part C, 1801-1893, and Part D, Appendices—additions, MSS., maps, views, caricatures, &c.—and ninety-eight illustrations of printers' marks, initial letters, &c.

THE second portion of the late Mr. Buckley's library, which Messrs. Sotheby will be occupied during the whole of the next fortnight in selling, includes, as might have been expected, a large collection of Oxonianiana. Among these, perhaps the most valuable is the series of engraved plates to the Oxford Almanac, which goes back to 1696, and is continuous from 1723. As usual, Mr. Buckley had accumulated a number of duplicates. Next, we may mention the original MS. of Robert Burton's play, "Philosophaster," acted in the hall of Christ Church in 1817, and unpublished except for the edition printed for the Roxburghe Club by Mr. Buckley himself. There is also a MS. collection of papers connected with the historical attempt of James II. to force a president upon Magdalen, which was formed at the time by a fellow of the college. Latin verses, sermons, and pamphlets of the seventeenth and eighteenth century are numerous, though not very interesting. One of them (lot 2787) contains the earliest engravings of the arms of the colleges. Coming down nearer to our own time, we notice the poem on "Pompeii," with which R. S. Hawker (of Morwenstow) won the Newdigate in 1827; and a set of the Oxford and Cambridge Magazine (1856), which was edited by Mr. William Morris, and contains several of his earliest pieces.

TRANSLATION.

EL-ASKRI.

(From the Arabic.)

SOLDIER, when I beheld you go,
In conscious and apparent pride,
Thro' crowded streets, 'mid women's woe,
Glory your mistress, death your bride;—

Soldier, as I beheld you pass,
You raised the trumpet, toss'd your head,
And with wild fervour, thro' the brass,
The rally from your lips was sped.

Oh! then such rapture shook my blood,
Of pride and anguish, love and fear,
As never maiden understood
Except she held a soldier dear!

And from that hour I live bereft
Of all in life that once was mine;
For by that blast my heart was cleft,
But, soldier, both the halves are thine!

GEORGE DOUGLAS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Nineteenth Century for April contains a sequel, by Prof. Cheyne, to Prof. Driver's article on Prof. Sayce and the Higher Criticism in last month's number. The writer points out that there is no theoretical distinction between moderate and advanced critics of the Old Testament, and that the monuments rightly used support all the best criticism of the present day. Prof. Sayce's book, therefore, need not be claimed as a valuable support of any one set of Biblical critics. It is also urged that Prof. Sayce's message is in the main only an imperfectly expounded truth—viz., that Old Testament critics, in spite of their abundant use of Assyriological and Egyptological material, have yet to become thoroughly at home in Assyrian and Egyptian antiquity. Prof. Sayce's treatment of the primitive traditions of the Israelites is criticised at some length as timid and hesitating. Due recognition is given to his outspokenness on the Book of Daniel, and regret expressed that he has not equally utilised his cuneiform lore on the subject of Jonah and his "whale." Critics have yet to become more archaeological, and archaeologists more archæal.

THE Expositor for April opens with a long and thoughtful article, by Prof. Harper, of Melbourne, on the Prophets and Sacrifice, moving in the direction of a new and more refined theory of the unity of Scripture, and criticising the "latest critical school." Mr. Rendall briefly discusses the name and character of the Galatians of St. Paul, and the date of the Epistle addressed to them. Dr. Bruce, in treating Rom. viii. 3, applies vigorous criticism to the theory of redemption by sacramental grace, which he does not regard as Pauline.

Prof. Ramsay concludes his elaborate and learned reply to Mr. Chase on points connected with the Acts of the Apostles, and increases our desire that he could restrain his perverid temper and broaden his historical criticism. He calls the present article an Epilogue; would that Sir J. W. Dawson could reach the epilogue to his own scarcely tolerable papers on the Mosaic books! Mr. Chase notices a significant piece of evidence as to an important reading of Codex Bezae in Acts i. 2.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERTHELET, G. Muss der Papst e. Italiener sein? Das Italienertum der Päpste, seine Ursachen u. seine Wirkgn. Leipzig: Renger. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 CARL, V. OESTERREICH, Erzherzog, ausgewählte Schriften. Hrg. im Auftrage seiner Söhne. Wien: Braumüller. 12 M.
 DUBOIS, Félix. Le péril anarchiste. Paris: Flammarion. 3 fr. 50 c.
 FROMM, E. Immanuel Kant u. die preussische Censur. Nebst kleineren Beiträgen zur Lebensgeschichte Kants. Hamburg: Voss. 2 M.
 HÖBES, E. Eichendorffs Jugenddichtungen. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 HOFMANN, E. François Tristan l'Hermite, sein Leben u. seine Werke. 1. Th. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 HOFFMANN-KRAUSE, E. Walther v. der Vogelweide. Basel: Georg. 1 M.
 KREUTZER, P. Brutus in Shakespeares Julius Caesar. Leipzig: Fock. 80 Pf.
 LITZMANN, B. Das deutsche Drama in den litterarischen Bewegungen der Gegenwart. Hamburg: Voss. 4 M.
 MERCKEL, K. Das Denkmal König Friedrichs des Grossen in Berlin. Berlin: Besser. 5 M.
 OHORN, A. Herzog Ernst II. v. Sachsen-Koburg-Gotha. Leipzig: Renger. 5 M.
 POSTHO, G. Schiller in seinem Verhältnis zur Freundschaft u. Liebe, sowie in seinem inneren Verhältnis zu Goethe. Hamburg: Voss. 18 M.
 SCHULTZE, S. Der junge Goethe (1749–1775). 6. Hft. Goethe in Frankfurt (1772–1778). Halle: Kaemmerer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 SOIXANTE-NEUF Ans à l'Opéra Comique, 1825–1894. Paris: Fischbacher. 6 fr.
 TONNDRAFF, M. The Vaill of Rinf Collyear. Mit litterarhistor., drammat. u. metr. Einleitg. hrg. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- KOHN, T. Die Sabbatharier in Sibenbürgen. Ihre Geschichte, Literatur u. Dogmatik. Budapest: Singer. 7 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AMITAL, L. K. Romains et Juifs: étude critique sur les rapports publics et privés existant entre les Romains et les Juifs jusqu'à la prise de Jérusalem par Titus. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr.
 FRANKLIN, A. La Vie privée d'autrefois: Variétés chirurgicales; les Magasins de nouveautés. Paris: Plon. 7 fr.
 FUCHS, G. Der 2. punische Krieg u. seine Quellen. Wiener-Neustadt: Blumrich. 2 M.
 MAYER, E. Zoll, Kaufmannschaft u. Markt zwischen Rhein u. Loire bis in das 13. Jahrh. Göttingen: Dieterich. 4 M.
 MICHEL, H. La révolution oligarchique des quatre-cents à Athènes et ses causes. Basel: Georg. 3 M.
 WITTICH, K. Pappenheim u. Falkenberg. Ein Beitrag zur Kennzeichnung der lokalpatriot. Geschichtsschreibg. Magdeburgs. Berlin: Baensch. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ABHANDLUNGEN der k.k. geologischen Reichsanstalt. 6. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Wien: Lechner. 200 M.
 BEHRENS, H. Das mikroskopische Gefüge der Metalle u. Legierungen. Hamburg: Voss. 14 M.
 ENGEL, G. Entwurf e. entologischen Begründung des Seinsollenden. Berlin: Besser. 4 M. 60 Pf.
 GAFF, E. Die Theorie der Akustik im griechischen Altertum. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
 RAIMOND, Aug. Dien et l'Homme: étude philosophique. Paris: Breston. 5 fr.
 ROUTE, L. L'Embryologie comparée. Paris: Reinwald. 3 fr.
 SCHMIDT, W. Schopenhauer in seinem Verhältnis zu den Grundideen d. Christentums. Erlangen: Blaesing. 1 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BIEBER, J. Ueb. die Echtheit der Lucianischen Schrift De Saltatione. Leipzig: Fock. 80 Pf.
 EICHLEB, G. Die Redebilder in den Schriften Xenophons. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 KELLER, A. Historische Formenlehre der spanischen Sprache. Murrhardt: Keller. 2 M.
 LEVY, E. Provenzalisches Supplement-Wörterbuch. Bearbeitungen u. Ergänzgn. zu Raynouards Lexique roman. 8. Hft. Leipzig: Reiland. 4 M.
 REINHOLD, H. Griechische Örtlichkeiten bei Pindaros. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 WINTER, J. u. A. WUNDERLICH. Die jüdische Litteratur seit Abschluss des Kanons. 1. Bd. Geschichte der jüdischen Litteratur. Trier: Mayer. 11 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE HEBREW AND SEPTUAGINT TEXTS OF EXODUS, CHAPS. XXXV.—XL.

Harvard University, U.S.A.

Sir H. H. Howorth's articles on the Septuagint, now in course of publication in the ACADEMY, have interested me deeply. My own opinion as to the critical value of this version has long been high, and, in common with numerous other workers in the field, it has been steadily growing higher with wider study. In fact, it has been recently very much increased through a study of the Tabernacle sections of Exodus, by which several conclusions were forced on me.

An analysis of the two recensions of these chapters shows that twenty-three distinct subjects are described. Marking corresponding sections in the Hebrew and LXX. with the same Roman numerals, and using the Hebrew as the basis, it is seen that the order which the LXX. takes is i., ii., iii., iv., v., xix., vi., vii., xvi., xvii., ix., x., xi. (xii. wanting), vii., xiv., xiii., xv., xviii., xx., xxi., xxii., xxiii.

Of these twenty-three items, the following are in corresponding order with the Hebrew: i.—v., xvi.—xvii., ix.—xi., xx.—xxiii. Of the others, some are simply interchanged—as xiv., xiii., xv.; while, of the remainder, several—as xix., vii., xvii.—are entirely out of place.

The opening, xxxv. 1—xxxvi. 7, and the close, xxxix. 22—lx. 38 (LXX.)—if we exclude verbal differences—are practically identical in the Hebrew and LXX.

The most unexplainable difference is where the LXX. takes xvii. and xviii., which are really one section, and divides them, so that xvii. comes in the position occupied in the Hebrew text by x., and xviii. in that occupied by xx.!

The omission of xii.—the altar of incense—is very strange, especially as the LXX. gives the account of the making of the incense in almost the ipsissima verba of the Hebrew xiii. In the LXX. this section (xiii.) comes immediately after xiv.—the description of the altar of burnt-offering.

The other accounts are characterised by repeated abbreviations and condensations.

If I should attempt to collate thoroughly the LXX. with the Hebrew of Ex. xxxv.—xl., I should have to practically transcribe the whole. The LXX. does not contain a translation of the Massoretic text of xxxv.—xl. in the same sense that it does of xxv.—xxxii. What it does contain is a representation of the general sense, given in a very free translation, which frequently changes entirely the Hebrew text, and supplies and omits statements in the most striking manner. Certainly I feel, on comparing the two documents, that one can hardly be the original of the other; or, if it is, then extraordinary liberties have been taken with it in the rendition.

What may be the explanation? One of two I think are possible:

(1) The LXX. translation of this section was not made by the same hand as that of the rest of the book, but by another and less accurate scholar.

(2) The translator did not have before him the Hebrew text of the Massoretic Bible.

Examining the second explanation first, it is to be noticed: (a) this assumes that there was a time when a text different from ours was received by Jewish scholars in Alexandria as the "true text." It suggests that then the text was not "fixed," at least in the sense in which it now is; (b) or, on the other hand, if they did have our text, it shows that they certainly did not have the same reverence for it as for the other parts of the O. T.—notably, of Exodus itself.

The translator considered himself at liberty to pick and choose at will, to modify, curtail, or amplify, when he thought it advisable. In a word, his treatment of Ex. xxxv.—xl. is fundamentally different from that of Ex. xxv.—xxxii.

Now, to go back to (1), few will admit its cogency; it does not explain why this particular translator should have handled the Hebrew so cavalierly. It only relieves the translator of the other sections from the odium of having put forth such an unreliable piece of work. But still, it has been suggested (Popper) that the difficulty is really met if we suppose two translators. This is supported by the fact that the same Hebrew terms are translated by different words in the two sections, e.g., כִּי by ἀναφορῆς (phorêis) in one section, διωσθήρες, μοχλοῖ in the other; בָּרוּךְ by θῆκαι in one section, and by εἰσὶν, ὥστε αἰεῖν in the other. Many other instances might be adduced. And, in fact, it is impossible to explain why the same translator should have been so "uncertain" in his renderings.

But, specifically in answer to this, Dr. Kuenen has pointed out that it is arbitrary and inadmissible to suppose that the translator of xxv.—xxxii. would have left xxxv.—xl. untranslated, if he had found these latter chapters in his text. It is only possible to predicate different workers, on the assumption that the earlier translator was interrupted in his work, and another took it up here. But this would explain only verbal variants, not the changed tone of method and treatment.

Popper also infers from the LXX. that Ex. xxxix.—xl. + Lev. viii. is earlier, from its form, than Ex. xxxvi.—xxxviii. Now in the LXX., ch. xxxix. (or the priestly garments) follows immediately on xxxvi., 8. Why is this? Popper answers: because the translator, when he had completed his work thus far, found xxxix.—xl. + Lev. viii. already written, and immediately translated them, and added them to the end of the section at xxxvi. 8. Then the "second stratum of description" xxxvi. (8)—xxxviii., was written and inserted by scraps into the Greek text.

This is ingenious, and at first sight satisfactory; but it requires too much elasticity in the Greek text. And, further, two fatal objections have been proposed:

(a) It makes us suppose that the enumeration of the objects which the people made and gave to Moses for the Tabernacle was written before the account of their fabrication—i.e., the writer first tabulated the things that were made and given to Moses, and then began and described how they were made! This is obviously the reverse order to that in which the account would naturally have been produced.

(b) We find in the LXX. itself the proof that the priestly garments following the sequence in xxv.—xxviii. should occupy a place near the end of the whole.

"In the enumeration of xxxv. 9; sqq. in the LXX. the garments of Aaron and his sons come near the end, being followed only by the sacred oil and the incense. So, too, in the list of the articles delivered, xxxix. 14, sqq., first, the σκηνή and its utensils, then the sacred garments of the priests, and, finally, other portions of the tent, and forecourt, which, in harmony with the natural order, preceded the priestly garments in the Hebrew text. It is true that he mentions the garments before the σκηνή, in the last section; but, in so doing, he betrays himself, for in his own text, as we have seen, the στολαί appear later on" (Kuenen).

It is thus evident that, if the translator felt himself at liberty to transpose the text as he willed, there is no longer necessity to accept Popper's inference from the LXX. order as to the relative date of the composition of Ex. xxxix. 4 + Lev. viii. and xxxvi.—xxxviii.

Now while this second argument refutes Popper's conception of xxxix.—xl. + Lev. viii.

—yet I think that no adequate explanation of the LXX. translation can be obtained, if we assume that it was made from our Hebrew text. Allowing the translator all the "liberties of transposition," I do not see that we can get a sufficient explanation of the changed method of translation. The whole tone of the work is strikingly different from that which precedes and follows it. I suggest the following explanation.

The original P<sup>1</sup> document which we have in xxv. sqq., stopped with the end of ch. xxix. Chaps. xxx. and xxxi. were added later, in accordance with a later phase of ceremonial praxis. But still up to this time the LXX. had not been made.

At this point various additions are attached to the now compacted xxv.—xxx., which narrate in a comprehensive and general way how the commands given to Moses were executed. In this narration the first section is not slavishly followed; its contents are used in the new section as seem most advantageous and edifying to the writer. But this must not be taken to exclude the possibility—nay, the probability—that before xxx.—xxx. were added there was an account of the execution of the commands contained in xxv.—xxix. All that one insists on is, that chaps. xxxv.—xl. in the form in which they reached the LXX. translators must have been later than xxx.—xxx., because they contain those chapters in their proper order.

At this point the LXX. was made. (This does not explain why the altar of incense is omitted in the LXX., because it would naturally be in the Hebrew text; though, of course, not necessarily, for this particular section might have been added after the original of the LXX., xxv.—xl., had been compiled; thus it would be missing from that version.)

Under manifold redactions and manipulations the Hebrew text gradually assumed its present shape—a simple repetition of xxv.—xxx.; but the LXX. was left with its translation of the old text still preserved.

This explains the difference between the two texts; but it requires that the Hebrew remained in a state of flux as late as the first half of the third century.

Indeed, various considerations lead us to suppose that it did. The terminus ad quem of this current, unstereotyped text must be the work of the Chronicler, because in him, all through, we find the Hebrew in its present form presupposed. Of course, his date cannot be determined absolutely; but a general collation of the LXX. with the Massoretic text shows that supplements and amplifications continued down to and within the third century, which gives a point for the Chronicler's date.

It is impossible, of course, to arrange these additions definitely in a chronological order. It is reasonable to suppose, however, that additions that affected the matter are earlier than those which affected the form.

Here, then, is a suggestion as to xxxv.—xl. While the freedom which the scribes allowed themselves in expanding and adding to the Book of the Law gradually fell into abeyance, and the multiplication of copies spontaneously omitted the alterations—yet mere formal completions—attempts to round out and unify verbally, like Ex. xxxv.—xl. to xxv.—xxx., would be open to less objection, and would be carried on in a spirit of reverently perfecting the older documents from all sides.

Thus, there is no difficulty in supposing that the Massoretic text received its present unique fulness of detail after the LXX. and Samaritan Pentateuch had been made from the earlier and less pleonastic version. As the purity and vigour of literary activity subsided, this desire for literal reduplications would gradually gain force, until we find in xxxv.—xl. the commands of Yahwe in xxv.—xxx. executed with a literalness which affected even the words in which the order was couched. This would represent the extreme development of that priestly literalism so markedly condemned in the New Testament, afterwards the inspiration of those vast stores of Rabbinical learning—collected in the centuries immediately following the Incarnation—which are at once the surprise and despair of the Aryan mind.

The Book of Chronicles, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the LXX. prove that our Massoretic Hextateuch existed in the third century B.C. But a comparison of these three also prove that the Hebrew texts of that period do not agree together.

"They manifested divergencies of far greater extent and significance [than mere textual variants], which can only be understood as the results of deliberate recension, conducted with a relatively high degree of freedom, and in accordance with certain fixed principles" (Kuenen).

In former times the Greek translators and the Samaritans, or their copyists, were held responsible for these variations, because it was thought they used a text identical with ours. But we have no a priori ground for this assumption. All the evidence points to the fact that the Hexateuchal Hebrew texts, even as late as the third century, were handled with a hitherto unsuspected amount of freedom. This subjected them to manifold scribal recensions and amendments, significant notes of which are preserved to us in various parts of the versions, particularly that now under examination.

This is perfectly natural, if we look on the redaction not as an affair accomplished once for all, but as a long-continued process in which efforts were made by a body of diaskeuastae to produce such recensions of the sacred text as seemed to them needful and apt to complete its unification and perfection. The redaction is thus a "continuous diaskeue or diorthosis," and the "redactor" is a self-perpetuating body of scribes embracing a long series of independent workers.

Concerning the witness of the LXX. and the Samaritan Pentateuch to the Massoretic text, it has been said above that we have no right to assume that the variations between them were due to conscious corruption of the textus receptus. There is no ground, it is manifest, for such an accusation: for surely the Alexandrian Jews were as much "believers" as their contemporaries, the Palestinian scribes; and the Samaritan Pentateuch, which was essentially Judaean in origin, was as much revered in its new home as it could have been among the Jews themselves. In other words, the authors of these two versions cannot be separated by any a priori reasoning from their brethren in Judaea, and their writings must have an evidential value as to the character of the Hexateuchal texts, second not even to that of the Massoretic text itself.

Besides, if these translators had wilfully manipulated the text of the Hexateuch so as to bring it into conformity with opposing ideas, we should have heard of it from the Jews themselves. But we find no such protests. And it is to be noted that the significance of this silence is greatly emphasised by the well-known fact that Josephus uses the LXX. version, though it has been proved beyond cavil that he was acquainted with the Massoretic recension. And it is also interesting that the chronology of the Book of Jubilees, which is undoubtedly of Palestinian origin, is based on the Samaritan text of Gen. v. and xi. (cf. P. H. Wicksteed's translation of Kuenen's De Stamboom van den Masorteket des O. T., and Dillmann, Beitr. aus dem B. d. J. zur Kritik des Penta-Textes).

It thus seems that we are led by the witness of the LXX. version to the opinion that the Hebrew text of the Massorites of Ex. xxxv. to xl. is at least contemporary with, if not later than, that of the Alexandrians. Its important evidence for the careful study of the Tabernacle sections becomes at once clear, and any critical examination thereof which ignores it may be judged accordingly.

In conclusion, it may be interesting to add that the data thus obtained seem singularly well confirmed by entirely distinct lines of evidence drawn from the Hebrew text itself.

WILLIS HATFIELD HAZARD.

SPENSER, "FAERIE QUEENE," I, ii. 18.

Baroda College, India: Feb., 1894.

"Thereat upon his crest

With rigor so outrageous he smitt,
That a large share it hewd out of the rest,
And glaucing down his shield from blame him fairly blest."

The last line seems to have been misunderstood by the commentators. Mr. Kitchin (Clarendon Press edition, p. 172) writes:—

"Church says: 'Acquitted him of having given but an indifferent blow.' But surely Spenser connects this 'him' with the following 'who,' so that it is the Red Cross Knight who is 'blest from blame,' whatever it may mean. Perhaps it means that the Paynim's sword fairly delivered the Red Cross Knight from blame, blemish, harm—did not wound him at all. This sense of the verb 'to bless' occurs also in such phrases as 'God from him me bless.'"

Mr. Grosart's edition reads:

"And glaucing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest."

About twenty years ago I hit on what I believe to be the true reading of this passage. The comma should be placed after "glauncing down," and the passage should be interpreted: He smote so rigorous a blow on his crest that his sword hewed a large share out of it, and glancing down, his shield fairly blest him from blame, i.e., saved him from further injury. This makes sense of the passage, and simplifies the construction. I do not know whether this explanation has been given by anyone hitherto.

H. LITTLEDALE.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

Oxford: April 9, 1894.

Though it is a matter of minor importance, will you allow me to correct a slight error in your reference to the Hibbert Lectures? I did not choose the subject, but was invited by the Trustees to lecture upon it. The words in which it is expressed are borrowed from the trust-deed; and I suppose it was considered to be, on this account, a fitting topic for the closing lectures of the present series.

JAMES DRUMMOND.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 15, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "A Standard for English Working Homes," by Miss Mason.
MONDAY, April 16, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Religion of the Assyrians and Babylonians," by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Photometry," III, by Capt. W. de W. Abney.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Mr. F. H. Bradley's View of the Self," by Mr. J. S. Mackenzie.
TUESDAY, April 17, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electric Illumination," III, by Prof. J. A. Fleming.
7.30 p.m. Statistical: "The Conditions and Prospects of Popular Education in India," by Mr. J. A. Baines.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Training of Rivers," by Mr. L. F. Vernon-Harcourt; "Estuaries," by M. Henri Léon Partiot.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Bones and Muscles of the Mammalian Hand and Foot," by Prof. Karl von Bardeleben; "Two New Species of Sea-Pens of the Family Verticillidae from the Madras Museum," by Dr. G. Herbert Fowler; "Two New Genera comprising Three New Species of Earthworms from Western Tropical Africa," by Mr. F. E. Beddard.

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Design Applied to Carpets," by Mr. Alexander Millar.
 8 p.m. Meteorological: "Some Phenomena of the Upper Air," by Mr. Richard Inwards; Exhibition of Instruments, Drawings, and Photographs relating to the Representation and Measurement of Clouds.
 8 p.m. Folk-Lore: "The Western Folk of Ireland and their Lore," by Prof. A. C. Haddon; "Folk-Lore Gleanings from County Leitrim," by Mr. Leland L. Duncan.
 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Elizabethan Faery Lore," by Mr. W. H. Cowham.
 8 p.m. Microscopical: "An Eocene Deposit of Diatomacea—Origin of a Fossil Lake in New Jersey, and the Identification of it by the Diatoms found in the Deposits," by Dr. A. M. Edwards.
 THURSDAY, April 19, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Musical Gestures," by Prof. G. F. Bridge.
 8 p.m. Chemical: "Action of Metals on Strong Acids," by Messrs. G. J. Burch and J. W. Dodgson; "Action of Light on Oxalic Acid," by Dr. A. Richardson; "English Jute Fibre," II., by Mr. A. Pease, jun.; "Natural Oxycelluloses," by Mr. C. Smith.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Tasmania and the Forthcoming Hobart International Exhibition, 1894-95," by Mr. G. Collins Levey.
 8 p.m. Linnean: "A Monograph of the Acetabulariaceae," by Prof. Graf zu Solms-Laubach.
 8.30 p.m. Historical: "The Earldoms under Edward I.," by Prof. T. F. Tont.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, April 20, 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers' Students' Meeting, "The Sinking by Compressed Air of the Cylinder Foundations of the Trent Viaduct," by Mr. H. T. White.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Early British Races," by Dr. J. G. Garson.
 SATURDAY, April 21, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Literature and Journalism," I., by Mr. H. D. Traill.

SCIENCE.

RECENT WORKS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

II.

Electrical Papers. By Oliver Heaviside. Vol. I. and Vol. II. (Macmillans.) Of all the good books, and they are many, on our table for review at the present time, there are none which represent more genuine hard work and research of the highest value than these volumes of collected papers by Mr. Heaviside. Few men have done so much during recent years in a quiet and unobtrusive way for the development of electrical theories as this author. He has had to fight against "official views," and the somewhat truculent and, in our opinion, quite unjustified attacks of the Northern "quaternionic experts." There has always been a danger of the development of a scientific hierarchy in this country. Of recent years this danger has much increased, owing to the large element of "official science" which has come into existence. More than one scientific journal is practically in the hands of official science, and, consciously or unconsciously, is run in the interests of officialdom. The papers which are belauded and the papers which are published by such journals are only too characteristic of a decadence of scientific judgment in this country; while the fact that five journals appear to have refused really important papers by Mr. Heaviside (now first published in these volumes) is suggestive of the evil effects of this decadence. As to the "quaternionic experts," they are blind to facts already accomplished: for each student who studies quaternions à la Tait, there are a score or more, in the technical schools of this country, who are acquainted with one or another of the various types of modified vector analysis, who probably never heard the word quaternion mentioned, and who have attacked the subject along the line of minimum resistance on account of its practical value. To such students Mr. Heaviside's reprints of the Electrician series of papers will be of special interest. On the other hand, much of Mr. Heaviside's work involves mathematics of the most severe character, which must perforce pass over the head of the ordinary student. We might have wished that he had expanded and simplified his analysis at certain points, developing his papers rather in the text-book direction, so as to render them easier reading for the electrical technologist. Occasionally also he does not give a sufficiently clear and ample statement of the problem he is dealing with, but leaves the reader to draw the conditions of the problem from the analysis. Possibly he supposes all his readers to have the same knowledge of practical telegraphy as himself. Take, for example, the problem on p. 85 of condenser working in cables; we have failed to verify the analysis here, because the exact mode of working the cable is only tacitly described. We cannot in the ACADEMY enter into much specialistic criticism, but one or two suggestions may possibly be of service with a view to a second edition. So far we have only tested the analysis of the first half of the first volume—a task of two months' study with senior students. Result 1 on p. 4 is stated as if it were generally true; it is, of course, only true if there be a balance. There are confusing misprints on pp. 5, 10, and 45; on the latter page the capacities are given twice their correct values. In the paper on telegraphic signalling with condensers, a reference to the relation between Mr. Heaviside's and Sir William Thomson's symbols would have materially helped the reader at more than one point. In the paper on the extra current, Mr. Heaviside's division of the current into two parts, one of which depends entirely on the momentum of the original current, and the other entirely on the original charge on the wire, is incorrect. The constants of the latter part of the solution involve the constants of the former. On p. 61, in the expression for the integral current, read for the initial charge,  $Q_0$ , the quantity of electricity  $Q'$  conveyed in the first current. In the paper on signalling through heterogeneous circuits, the expressions 1, 3, and 4 for the percentages of received current are, we think, incorrect. If the arrival curves have been drawn from these formulæ, then they will also require modification. In the paper on faults in cables, we have been unable to obtain the result on p. 75, owing, most probably, to the extreme length of algebra; some of the intermediate stages might well have been indicated. Our more general result for battery-condenser signalling with a fault does not appear to agree in the special case of small capacity with Mr. Heaviside's conclusions on p. 85; we hold this, however, to be due to our not clearly grasping how he intends the signals to be made. Taken as covering the most important difficulties we have encountered in the first half of Mr. Heaviside's volume, these criticisms do not show a large amount of error or obscurity. Vol. II. contains some hard thinking and some rather hard hitting, notably at Prof. Hughes and Mr. Preece. The exhaustive discussion of self-induction and the lengthy treatment of electromagnetic waves are even more instructive and, in the latter case, more exciting than the earlier results.

QUITE a different type of electrical research is presented to us in the Scientific and Technical Papers of Werner von Siemens. Vol. I. Scientific Papers and Addresses. (John Murray.) Von Siemens was a mathematical infant as compared with Mr. Heaviside, and approaches problems very much from the commercial side. The work is translated from the second German edition; and from the purely scientific standpoint, we should have preferred a translation of, say, Helmholtz's or Kirchhoff's papers. A good deal of the present volume, being of an industrial character, has historical rather than scientific value; for progress in this direction is rapid, and modern science is more occupied with theories than with the exact distribution of inventors' claims. Still, much of the volume may be read with interest. The papers on duplex telegraphy, written in 1856, may be compared with Heaviside's of 1873-6, those on submarine cables with Sir William Thomson's, while the researches on the properties of selenium are still fresh. In the paper on physical considerations suggested by an eruption of Vesuvius, some not very conclusive criticisms of Sir William Thomson's views on the structure of the earth, and some very obscure remarks on crushing and tensile strength, are given; while in the papers on the physical constitution of the sun and on the earth's atmosphere there is much very disputable matter. The electro-magnetic theory of these papers does not, of course, know anything of the wonderful developments of Maxwell and Hertz. It is simple in the extreme, and produces a somewhat archaic impression on the modern reader. The translation is passable: that is all. We must confess that it gives us a shivering fit to read of "Mr. Virchow," of the "Germo-Austrian Telegraph Society," and of "vis inertia"; while the extraordinary tall talk of Du Bois Reymond's address when Von Siemens was admitted a member of the Berlin Academy should have been put into intelligible English or omitted altogether. How are we to scan such a sentence as the following: "But that from such a height, as prince of technists, holding in your hands the threads of numerous combinations, revolving hundreds of plans in your brain, you exist in the very soul of German learning, in the noblest sense of the word born to what you were not brought up"? Whether "my dear Siemens" was really "the James Watt of electro-magnetism," whether his labours "for electricity were what Fraunhofer's were for light" is for posterity to settle; it is only in France, as a rule, that such things are said to a man's face, but there it is done with a grace hopelessly lacking in this remarkable address of the secretary of the Berlin Academy.

We have two other books on our list, translations from the German, both dealing with mechanics and both of American production.

The first of these is Prof. Mach's Science of Mechanics: a Critical and Historical Exposition of its Principles, translated from the Second German Edition. By T. J. McCormack. (Watts.) It is remarkable that this book should have had to wait ten years for a translator. But now that we have it in English at last, let us hope that it will reach the young gentlemen who promptly follow the attainment of a degree by writing a textbook for the pupils they have yet to meet with. If they would only study what Prof. Mach has to say about the laws of motion, then, perhaps, fewer glib reproductions of traditional and illogical views as to matter, mass, and motion would pass as text-books of dynamics into the hands of the unlucky reviewer and the still more hapless student. Prof. Mach is trenchant in his criticism, and is philosophical in his conclusions in the highest sense of the word. His little book, written in clear and popular language, elementary in analysis and yet never superficial, ought to have a wide circulation in this country. Its keynote may be summed up in the words:—

"The majority of natural inquirers ascribe to the intellectual implements of physics, to the concepts, mass, force, atom, and so forth, whose sole office is to revive economically arranged experiences, a reality beyond and independent of thought."

Even as a person who knew the real world only through the stage might assert its need of a machine room also, so "we, too, should beware, lest the intellectual machinery employed in the representation of the world on the stage of thought be regarded as the basis of the real world." Put this beside Lord Kelvin's statement that "the scientific world is practically unanimous in believing that all tangible or palpable matter, polar matter as we may call it, consists of groups of mutually interacting atoms or molecules," and we see that Prof. Mach is a scientific heretic of the deepest dye. Never mind: fifty, nay, ten years hence, the new scientific idealism, which is shaking the foundations of mechanics, and mocking at the crude materialism of the biologists, will be the commonplace of the schools. Meanwhile, the width of view and catholic interests of Prof. Mach will do much to assist the forward progress of the movement.

Our second German translation is entitled, The Mechanics of Hoisting Machinery. By Dr. Julius Weisbach and Professor Gustav Hermann. Authorised Translation, by Karl P. Dahlstrom. (Macmillans.) This is a translation of a portion of Weisbach's Ingenieur-Mechanik, the first edition of which appeared in 1846. The second edition of the revision by Prof. Hermann appears well up to date. The translation is good, the diagrams clear, and the theory on the points of which we have made a detailed examination sound. The work should form a useful addition to the young engineer's library of technical literature.

ANOTHER American book may be here noticed—Theoretical Mechanics: Part I., Kinematics; Part II., Dynamics and Statics. By Alexander Ziwet. (Macmillans.) This work is intended to meet the requirements of American students especially, but it might also be useful to the students in some of our university colleges. Its mathematics are rather more advanced than those of the usual elementary text-books, and it pays a certain amount of attention to geometrical methods in kinematics and statics. On the whole the book contains little that is novel, and is only mediocre in execution: witness, for example, the laboured analytical proof of the simple geometrical proposition that a point rigidly attached to a rod, the terminals of which are constrained to move on two intersecting straight lines, will describe an ellipse! The author repeatedly indulges in differentiations and integrations which are quite unnecessary—mere sledgehammers to crack filberts.

BEFORE leaving American works, we ought to notice The Physical Review: a Journal of Experimental and Theoretical Physics. Conducted by E. L. Nichols and E. Merritt. (Published for Cornell University.) Vol. I., No. 1. This is a very praiseworthy attempt to fill a distinct gap in the scientific journals of the English-speaking world. We wish it all success. The first number contains no very striking papers, but some good spectrum work and a series of reviews of recent publications in physical science.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday evening will be delivered by Dr. John G. Garson, on "Early British Races."

AT the last meeting of the Zoological Society, Mr. R. T. Coryndon gave an account of his pursuit of the White or Burchell's Rhinoceros (R. sinuatus) in Mashonaland, and of the way he had obtained the specimens which will shortly be placed in the British Museum, the Tring Museum, and the Cambridge University Museum. At the meeting on May 1, Mr. St. George Littledale will read "Field Notes on the Wild Camel of Lob Nor."

THE fourteenth exhibition organised by the Royal Meteorological Society was opened on Tuesday in the rooms of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 25, Great George-street, Westminster. "Clouds: their Representation and Measurement," is the subject chosen for the present year; and a most interesting and instructive exhibition has been arranged, not only of instruments for ascertaining the direction and height of clouds, but also of sketches and photographs showing the various forms assumed by clouds. Most people are only familiar with the rounded or woolly-looking cloud called "cumulus," but by looking at the pictures in this exhibition it is readily seen that there is a large variety of the forms of clouds, which have all been classified and named. The first person to classify systematically the forms of clouds was Luke Howard, in 1802, whose portrait occupies a prominent place in the exhibition. Some water-colour sketches of clouds, by Luke Howard, are shown, as well as many photographs, lantern-slides, and transparencies of clouds and other meteorological phenomena. The exhibition also includes a number of instruments, many of which are quite new in principle—such as barometers, thermometers, hygrometers, evaporators, anemometers, and marine and surveying instruments. The exhibition will remain open till April 20.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces a Monograph on the Stalactites and Stalagmites of Cleaves Cove, in Ayrshire, by Mr. John Smith, vice-president of the Glasgow Geological Society. The volume will be fully illustrated.

MR. LEWIS will issue directly, in his "Practical Series," a volume on Diseases of the Nose and Throat, by Dr. J. de Havilland Hall; and also a new edition of Dr. Norman Kerr's treatise, On Inebriety.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

PROF. TERRIEN DE LACOUPERIE has collected into a volume his various papers on the Western origin of early Chinese civilisation, most of which have appeared in the Babylonian and Oriental Record. The period covered is from 2300 B.C. to 250 A.D.; and there will be a chapter specially devoted to meeting objections that have been brought against the theory.

PROF. H. A. SALMONÉ and the Rev. Alfred Kluht, of Billericay, will shortly publish two works of considerable utility to students of Arabic. The first will be a Grammar in two parts—elementary and advanced. Part I. will be adapted to the use of beginners as well as for those seeking to acquire modern and colloquial Arabic. Part II. will be a work of reference for advanced scholars, containing a full list of idioms found in pre-Islamic poetry and later classical works. The second book will consist of selected readings adapted for the use of both classes of students.

It has long been known that the library of the late Prince Louis-Lucien Bonaparte was not to be dispersed by auction, but reserved for sale en bloc. This week the catalogue of it, compiled by Mr. Victor Collins, is published by Messrs. Sotheran. The compiler modestly calls it only an "attempt at a catalogue"; and it must be admitted that the brief entries are calculated to whet the curiosity of the philologist and the collector. But here, at any rate, stands revealed the life's work of the great scholar, who had devoted many years and not a little money to acquiring everything that had ever been printed in or about the dialects of Europe. For other parts of the world—such as the languages of America and India—the collection is rather notably deficient. But where else will you find such an elaborate classification of the dialects of France and Italy, or a catalogue of no less than 720 works relating to Basque? We could have wished for a separate list of all the specimen translations which the Prince had made and printed at his own expense.

WE have received a new number (Part VIII.) of Avinash Chandra, Kaviratna's translation of the Charaka-Sambhita. This number is again full of interesting observations chiefly on bile, phlegm, and wind, the evils brought about by obesity and leanness and the means by which they may be reduced or removed. The subject of sleep also is discussed, and the purposes which it serves in the human constitution. There are many truths that lie buried in this relic of the ancient physiology of India; and we are glad to find that the translator, himself a physiologist, hopes to continue and finish his valuable undertaking.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, March 15.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president, in the chair.—Messrs. Frank Curzon, W. Francis Drew, and Walter Wren were elected fellows. A paper was read by Mr. Edgar Powell on "Suffolk and the Villeins' Insurrection," based upon his recent researches among the Public Records, the results of which will be published in the next volume of the Transactions of the society.—Mr. I. S. Leadam took part in the discussion which followed.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Wednesday, March 21.)

R. INWARDS, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. W. H. Dines read a paper on "The Relation between the Mean Quarterly Temperature and the Death Rate." The Registrar-General's Quarterly Returns for the whole of England since 1862 were taken by the author, and the number of deaths in each quarter expressed as a departure per thousand from that particular quarter's average, the value so obtained being placed side by side with the corresponding departure of the temperature at Greenwich from its mean value. The rule seems to be that a cold winter is unhealthy, and a mild winter healthy; and that a hot summer is always unhealthy, and a cold summer healthy.—Mr. Dines also read a paper on "The Duration and Lateral Extent of Gusts of Wind, and the Measurement of their Intensity." From observations and experiments which he has made with his new anemometer, Mr. Dines is inclined to think that a gust seldom maintains its full force for more than one or two seconds; and also that the extreme velocity mostly occurs in lines which are roughly parallel to the direction of the wind.—Mr. R. H. Scott exhibited a diagram showing some remarkable sudden changes of the barometer in the Hebrides on February 23, 1894. At 8 a.m. the reading at Stornoway was 29.39 ins., being a fall of 0.7 in. since the previous day, and at 6 p.m. the reading was 28.58 ins. From the trace of the self-recording aneroid it appears that the minimum, 28.50 ins., occurred about 5.30 p.m., and that the fall during the half-hour preceding the minimum was nearly 0.2 in., the rise after the minimum being nearly as rapid.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, April 2.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. A. F. Shand read a paper on "Attention." The commonly accepted position that attention tends universally to increase the intensity, clearness, or stability, of the sensation or representation attended to, was called in question; and it was contended that an examination of well-known cases of psychological experiment shows that this result is not due to attention, but to a process combined with it in ordinary cases but separable from it. It was contended, in the second place, that, though we cannot say that attention tends to increase the clearness and intensity of the sensation attended to, yet we can affirm universally that it makes us more clearly and intensely aware of that sensation. In this clearer awareness of a sensation that possibly grows more obscure while we attend to it, consists attention. And, thirdly, it was contended that the duality of constituents in which attention consists, viz., attending, and the object attended to, are equally directly felt and experienced, although the first is often not recognised or identified.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

FINE ART.

Sir Joshua Reynolds. By Claude Phillips.
With nine Illustrations. (Seeley.)

WHY, one wonders, should Mr. Claude Phillips—whose book on Sir Joshua has been very well treated on the whole—be taken to task for not having confined himself strictly to Sir Joshua's mere studio-life? He has not pretended to be bent on performing a service of simply technical criticism, nor is his work an essay of inevitable and well-weighed brevity like the best of purely literary criticism. This is a somewhat popular book, long enough to be a memoir as well as an appreciation; and how are you to write a memoir of Sir Joshua without taking stock, to some extent, of his so varied world? Sir Joshua, unlike some of the greatest of his fore-runners, Rembrandt and Watteau for instance, and unlike one at least of his important contemporaries—I mean of course Gainsborough—was not so far absorbed in his art that he forswore general society. The friend not only of a few great men and of a few delightful women—any one of his more single minded brethren whom I have named might have been that—Sir Joshua was, especially, the acquaintance of the fine folk of his time: liked them to some extent, paid some court to them, knew how to make urbane reply when the "Earl of C." offered an inappropriate reproach, and when he had not the society of Burke and Garrick and those of the great world whose peers indeed they were, was satisfied, it may be, with Miss Kitty Fisher, or perhaps with Miss Nelly O'Brien. Sir Joshua's times, Sir Joshua's contemporaries, are, so to put it, almost a part of his own talent. His work, we may be sure, was not all of it produced only on impulse from within; and a writer like Mr. Claude Phillips does well to gossip to us, as Tom Taylor did, about his daily ways and the people he met. Three hundred close pages—though they may not seem considerable in amount to those who have never time to be brief—would, in my opinion, at least, be conspicuous but for lost opportunities, if the author did not chat genially about those who were around Sir Joshua in either his earlier or his later time.

Mr. Phillips, who, as readers of the ACADEMY know full well, can go into vexed questions of "attribution" with the most purely studious when he likes, has not especially sought in the present volume to utter the kind of criticism proper perhaps to the keeper of a national gallery, or the student of one particular theme, or to the authoritative dealer who, producing neither art nor literature himself probably, has the right to devote himself almost wholly to questions of expertise. But of that larger criticism, which consists in elucidation and comparison, in the registering of impressions and of reflections, in the bringing to bear upon the study of one painter the knowledge gained in the not less close study of many others, Mr. Phillips fails no more in the present volume than elsewhere to give us a reasonable measure. Critical technically in such paragraphs, for instance, as those which are headed "Causes of Fading and Decay," our writer is, from one point of view, not more valuable, it may be, but at least more generally interesting, when he writes as follows of Gainsborough—and it is in a tone which is not unfamiliar to, or unapproved by, modern criticism—

"As a painter, as a master of the brush, Gainsborough certainly in his happiest achievements . . . rises superior in power and in technical results to Sir Joshua. His brilliant frankness of execution, when it does not, as too often, degenerate into emptiness and carelessness, his beauty and homogeneity of tone, his force of impression, go to make up a pictorial whole with which even the more sumptuous tints, the richer depths, the more gracious charm of Reynolds can hardly vie."

And elsewhere Mr. Phillips, balancing the one delightful master against the other as painters of children, gives to Sir Joshua—very rightly, as my own small experience tells me—credit for one thing with which we can scarcely in good faith credit Gainsborough, his possession of a real understanding of child-character. Somehow, in this matter, the simpler man was wont to be the slighter and the more artificial; the more artificial man was somehow more closely in contact with childhood's actual character. And since I have come to speaking of matters of detail, let me venture to commend the writer of this handy and agreeable study of Sir Joshua and his surroundings, for having singled out for particular commendation one work of his middle period, the exquisite portrait of Miss Jacobs, a blonde, to whose pale but engaging colouring and subtle quietude of visage the mezzotint of Spilsbury has done amplest justice. Gladly would one have welcomed a reduction of this mezzotint, or any other satisfactory reproduction of the picture, as one among the not too numerous yet on the whole fairly satisfactory illustrations with which Mr. Phillips's book is supplied.

In regard to the literary execution of Mr. Phillips's work, his expression is, as the readers of this journal are aware, invariably lucid, and it is not ambitious. Occupied, indeed, it may be a little too exclusively with the problems of his theme, and with the abundant matter which claims to be put forward, he is, while always clear and reasonable—not to say convincing—somewhat too little concerned with the graces of style. He would not otherwise have allowed the course of the narrative to be sometimes interrupted by the presence of a mere list (albeit a short one) of the pictures painted at the particular period of which he is discoursing. But do I not perhaps wax hyper-critical in addressing to him this reproach? The book is extremely well done, and it fulfils excellently its appointed task of standing between the literary essay and the extremely bulky and voluminous memoir.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Sitt: March 21, 1894.

ONE of the objects of my visit to the Second Cataract was to see whether the temples and other ancient monuments of Nubia had participated in the damage done to those of Egypt during the last half century. Fortunately, there are no sugar factories or pumping engines south of the First Cataract, and the engineers have not yet had their way in regard to damming up the Nile; consequently there has been no wholesale destruction there of the monuments of the past. Indeed, it is only within the limits of the ancient Dodekaschaenos that mischief has been done.

At Tafah, one of the temples has entirely vanished since my visit to it in 1879. It was small and in a ruinous state when I last saw it; but it contained some Coptic texts, which showed that it had once been transformed into a Christian church. At Debot, Dakkeh, and Maharraqa the natives have removed portions of the platform of brick upon which the temples rested for the sake of sebakh or top-dressing; and the results have been disastrous. One side of the temple of Debot has fallen, and the other, if not propped up, will fall soon; the central part of the temple of Dakkeh is level with the ground, and it will not be long before the rest of Arq-Amon's sanctuary share the same fate; while one of the sides of the temple of Maharraqa has also fallen since I visited it fourteen years ago. The wall of the second temple of Maharraqa, on which the sacred sycamore is sculptured, is tottering, and needs but little to bring it down. Only the foundation stones now remain of the temple of Thothmes III. at Dakkeh, and such also is the case with the temple of the same Pharaoh at Kerti. The destruction of the latter temple has taken place since the time of Lepsius. No trace remains of the great granite platform at Maharraqa, from which Linant took the stone which supports the Philae Obelisk at Kingston Hall; the sculptured doorway seen by Wilkinson at Koshtamneh has disappeared; and the temple of Isis within the enclosure south of Yertassi, which was described by Legh in 1813, is also gone. The fallen stones at Dakkeh and Maharraqa are being chipped away, to the destruction of the Greek and hieroglyphic inscriptions upon them; and the sebakh-diggers have removed a considerable part of the old fort at Kubban, one of the most interesting remains of Egyptian antiquity. If they are not stopped at once, nothing of it will soon be left. But what is this list of injuries and destruction compared with the black roll presented by Egypt proper, or the future schemes of our own engineers?

The language spoken in Nubia in the age of the Pharaohs and Ptolemies is a question which repeatedly forced itself upon my attention while I was on my way to Wadi Halfa. It could not have been Nubian. The geographical names prove the contrary. With hardly an exception, the old names, so far as we know them, have been replaced by Nubian names of which there is no trace in ancient geography, while none of the ancient names are explicable from the Nubian vocabulary.* The philological facts are thus in harmony with the statements of history—that the Nubians and their dialects originally came from Darfur, and that they were planted between the First and Second Cataracts by Diocletian, who brought them from the Oasis of El-Khayeh in order to check the incursions of the Blemmyes. Herodotos, Strabo, and the older authorities generally, know only of the Ethiopians of Meroë as dwelling northward along the banks of the Nile as far as Elephantine. The "Meroitic" inscriptions and royal names which extend from Meroë to Philae are evidence of the truth of their statements.

* It may be added that, in the Nubian Vocabularies of Lepsius and Reinisch, while nearly two-thirds of the words are borrowed from Arabic, there are scarcely any that come from Old Egyptian, and even these (with perhaps two exceptions) can be shown to have made their way into Nubian through Coptic.

It thus becomes impossible to explain these same Meroitic inscriptions, as Brugsch would do, by the help of the Nubian dialects. Nor is it probable that Lepsius and Revillout can be right in seeing in the wild and uncivilised tribes of the Bisharin or the Blemmyes the representatives of the cultured inhabitants of ancient Ethiopia. Who then can the latter have been?

I would suggest that they were of Berber race and language. Prof. Maspero has shown (in the Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, vol. 1, p. 127) that in the time of the XIth Dynasty a particular species of dog was called in Egyptian by the foreign name of abakru, which is the Berber abâikur "a dog," from which we may infer that a Berber language was already spoken in the neighbourhood of Thebes. Herodotos (ii., 42) asserts that the inhabitants of the Oasis of Ammon, the modern Siwah, were a mixed colony of Egyptians and Ethiopians; and since a dialect is now spoken there akin to those of the Tuaregs and Kabyles, it would seem that these Ethiopians were a Berber tribe. What has inclined me to this belief is the fact that two of the Ethiopian deities known to us have a strikingly Libyan (or Berber) appearance. One of them is Dudun (found also in the compound Sheha-Didi) who was worshipped at Semneh; the other is Kapur, the deified hero of Dendur. Now, the name of the first bears a remarkable resemblance to that of Didi, one of the Libyan enemies of Ramses III.; and that of the other to the name of the Maxyan Kapur. Moreover, it must be remembered that the Berbers have been from time immemorial in the possession of a peculiar alphabet: this alone would suggest a connexion between them and the cultured and literary kingdom of Ethiopia. If my arguments are sound, we shall thus have to look to the Berber languages for an explanation of the Meroitic inscriptions.

While I was at Assuân, we discovered a stele on an island immediately to the south of Sehêl, which had escaped the notice of the French scholars who made an archaeological examination of the district last year. After leaving Assuân, I copied a stele south of Hindellab (now called Kub-baniyeh) which I found two years ago. It is dedicated to the Hippopotamus goddess of the town of Gebt by the "Holy Father" and "divine scribe of Khnum," Nekht-m-an-ger. Close to it one of my companions, Mr. Niven, discovered two iron wedges which had been turned up by the sebakhi-diggers. The fact that they are of iron makes the discovery important, objects of that metal being so rare in Egypt. Above the stele the name of Usertesén is written on the rock, as well as inscriptions which shows that a chapel of "the Serpent" once stood there. It was interesting, therefore, to learn from a native that the Hagar el-Ghorâb, or "Crow's Rock," as the place is now called, is the home of a gigantic cobra, thick as a man's body and long as an oar, with eyes that flame like a candle, which is seen only at night, when woe betide the man or beast who falls in its way.

Northward of this haunted spot, we visited Dêr Girmêleh, on an isolated rock far away in the desert. Between the dêr and the river the natives have been rifling a number of tombs, which have, however, yielded nothing of value to them, and on the river's bank is a stone quay. On one of the stones a human face has been sculptured, the form of which takes us back to Pharaonic times.

We spent three days at Kom Ombo, where M. de Morgan has good reason to be proud of his work. He has uncovered one of the finest temples still existing on the banks of the Nile. One had little idea that such spacious and well-preserved buildings lay buried far down beneath the sand. The walls are rich in cartouches of the Roman emperors: among them I noticed Tiberius, Vespasian, Domitian (whose name has been erased), Antoninus, Macrinus, and Diadumenos, whose name had not been previously met with in the hieroglyphs. There is also another emperor's name, the first part of which is lost, and which ends in r-a-n-r-u-s; but I cannot identify it. The walls of two of the corridors, north and south, are adorned with the names of the countries Ptolemy Auletes was supposed to have conquered. As that most worthless of the Ptolemies lost kingdoms instead of gaining them, the lists have been made up out of older materials thrown pell-mell together. But they are valuable as reproducing names which must have been found on other monuments now destroyed. Among them are two which will be of interest to the Biblical student, as hitherto they have not been met with outside the pages of the Old Testament. One is K(a)ptar, the Caphtor of the Bible; the other is Kaslohet, the Casluhim of Gen. x. 14. Kaptar is preceded by a curious jumble of nationalities—Persia (Parsa), Susa (Sasha), Balbal, Punt, the Upper Retennu of Syria, and the Hittites. Punt and Balbal must be intended to signify Pontus and Babylon, instead of the southern countries which they properly represented, Balbal exhibiting the same play upon the name of Babel that we find in the eleventh chapter of Genesis. Kaslohet is coupled with the Menti or Beduin and the Lower Retennu of Northern Syria, and is followed by the name of Zoar (Zaghar).

On the site of the old city which is believed to represent the Coptic town of Tum, I found two new stelæ in honour of "Horus of Behud," and also that the cartouche which M. Daressy was unable to read (Recueil x. 3, 4, p. 124) is that of Thothmes III. At El-Kab I left Mr. Somers Clarke to continue his work of last year. Mr. Taylor was to join him in a few days.

While at Luxor, I paid a visit to Dêr el-Bâhhari, and was surprised to find what an immense mass of debris M. Naville and his companions have succeeded in clearing away in so short a space of time. The temple must have been very beautiful, and the colours in one or two of the chambers are still so fresh that it is difficult to believe they were not painted yesterday. The great altar with the steps leading up to it is highly interesting, as it is the first of its kind that has been found.

For the temple of Luxor on the opposite side of the river, M. Daressy has just published a very complete and valuable guidebook (Notice explicative des Ruines du Temple de Louxor). It is a pity it is not in English, as every visitor to Luxor ought to study it; and, as it is, it may be feared that its sale there will not be large. Among the names quoted by the author from the geographical lists of Ramses II. on the statues before the pylon is that of Muab, the Moab of Scripture. It is preceded by the name of Assar, which is probably the Biblical Asshurim (Gen. xxv. 3).

I have been spending this morning in exploring the cliffs north of Rayyâyanah and south of Bedâri, in a shade temperature of about 100°. Behind mounds of rubbish, called Tel-Biadieh in the French map, I found a very large quarry and a great number of rock-cut tombs. The tombs seem to be late, as most of them are provided with loculi. They are of considerable size and well hewn, but destitute of inscriptions and even of ornament, with the exception of the remains of Roman arabesques on the ceiling of one of them. On the tel I saw fragments of Coptic sculpture, indicating that a monastery or church had once stood there. To the south are nine tombs, cut in what must always have been an inaccessible part of the cliff.

I must not forget to add that a tomb of the VIth Dynasty has been found at Mârasdhah, south of How, and that close to How itself tombs are at present being excavated, in one of which objects of the time of the XIXth Dynasty have been discovered.

A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY

MR. E. A. WALLIS BUDGE has been definitely appointed to the post of keeper of Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities at the British Museum, which has been vacant since the retirement of Mr. P. Le Page Renouf.

THE following will open next week: the annual spring exhibition of English and continental pictures (including M. F. Roybet's "Propos Galants"), at Messrs. Tooth & Sons, in the Haymarket; and a collection of eighty water-colours by Mr. W. L. Wyllie, entitled "Oceans, Seas, Rivers," representing a year's yachting in the West Indies, Atlantic, Mediterranean, Solent, and Thames, at the Dowdeswell Galleries, New Bond-street.

THE May number of the Magazine of Art will contain an article by the late J. M. Gray (of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery) on "The Authentic Portraits of Burns," illustrated with nine portraits, several of which have never before been published. The same number will contain a photogravure of "The Fan," by Albert Moore; an original etching of Great Yarmouth, by Percy Robertson; and a first article on the Royal Academy exhibition, by Mr. M. H. Spillmann.

A LITHOGRAPH by Mr. J. McNeill Whistler, entitled "Gants de Suède," will be printed in the Studio for April 16, which will also contain an address to art students by Mr. Frederick Wedmore, and an illustrated paper on Albert Moore by Mr. A. Lys Baldry.

MR. J. R. LYELL, of Edinburgh, while looking through the Edinburgh Guildry Registers, discovered, the other day, an important entry relative to George Jamesone, "the Scottish Vandyck." The entry, which is dated May 27, 1612, is as follows:—

"George Jamesonne, son to Andro Jamesone, burges in Aberdein, enteris prentis to John Andersone, paynter, for aucht yeiris, conforme to their indentouris schawen; and payit of entre silver xijjs. iiijd."

This entry is important in two respects. First, it proves, what has hitherto only been conjectured, that Jamesone's father really was Andro, of Aberdeen. Second, it disproves the tradition—which originated nobody knows how, but which has been generally accepted by biographers, including Mr. Bullock—that Jamesone, between 1608 and 1618, studied at Antwerp, where he had a master in Rubens and a fellow-student in Vandyck. The entry, in fact, fills up to some extent that hiatus in the painter's life which so greatly puzzled Allan Cunningham; and it proves that Jamesone was a painter not only of Scotch birth but of Scotch training. As to John Anderson, nothing is known.

A ROMAN pig of lead has been found on a farm near Matlock, in Derbyshire. According to the Sheffield Independent it bears the following inscription, in raised letters:

PRVBRI: ABASCALFITMETALLI: LVTVDARES.

The letters CAL, FIT, and TA are ligatures, but the lettering is perfectly plain. In the latter part of the last century, three similar pigs were found in the same neighbourhood, on each of which occurred the letters MET. LVD or METAL. LVTVD.

GENERAL VON SARWEY has contributed to the newly-issued number of the Westdeutsche Zeitschrift (xiii. part 1) an article on the frontier delimitation of the Roman Empire, in which he reviews the recent discoveries made on the German Limes, and the conclusions which he drew from his last summer's inspection of the Walls of Hadrian and Antonine in Britain. The general considers the Vallum which accompanies Hadrian's Wall to be a civil, not a military, work.

MUSIC.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

Masters of French Music. By Arthur Hervey. (Osgood, Mollvaine & Co.)

No one can read this volume without regretting that the author had so little space for so large and interesting a subject; for "the French can boast a splendid musical record, particularly as regards the opera." Mr. Hervey has confined himself to living masters, if we may include Gounod, who died after the book had gone to press. In the preface a "passing tribute" is paid to the memory of several deceased musicians of note, particularly Edouard Lalo, whose merit was acknowledged, somewhat late, by his own countrymen. Mr. Hervey sums up this master succinctly, yet sympathetically. Lalo is spoken of as "a great admirer of Wagner." So he was in his later years; but when "Tannhäuser" was produced at Paris, Lalo was hostile to the reformer; his conversion came of reflexion, and was, therefore, the more thorough.

Mr. Hervey must have found it difficult to speak frankly about living composers. Of course he would not have written the book had he not felt drawn towards French music; but he certainly did not take as his motto, "De viventibus nil nisi bonum." For instance, the "many weaknesses" in Thomas' "Mignon" and "Hamlet" are mentioned; Gounod's "Redemption" is said to be, on the whole, monotonous; while of Massenet we are told that "he alternately attempts every style and perseveres in none." In the chapter on Thomas incidental reference is made to Meyerbeer. It is somewhat the fashion in these latter days to dismiss this composer with a wave of the hand. Mr. Hervey speaks of Meyerbeer's art-work more justly: "If we find the rich crop of wheat not devoid of chaff, we must, at any rate, admit that the former is of excellent quality." And, again, in a casual mention of Liszt, in the Gounod chapter, he speaks of "the uncompromising hostility entertained in certain quarters against the master's music." Some of Liszt's compositions have undoubtedly provoked hostility, and the indiscriminating enthusiasm of certain of his disciples may, from time to time, have led to bitter rejoinder; but, on the whole, Liszt seems to us to have had his due. The special work which prompted our author's remark was the "Faust" Symphony; and with reference to the many composers who have treated the same subject, Mr. Hervey suggests a "Faust" festival, "devoted entirely to works inspired by Goethe's poem." To a few musicians such a festival might prove attractive; but the general public would, we fear, favour Berlioz and Gounod, at the expense even of Schumann, and certainly of Prince Radziwill, Hugo Pierson, and other worthy but less talented composers. Under Saint-Saëns the much-vexed question of programme-music is touched upon; most interesting are our author's comments, and also the remarks quoted from Saint-Saëns. Mr. Hervey, by the way, speaks of a Sonata by Kuhnau "intended to describe the fight between David and Goliath"; the "fight," however, merely forms a brief episode in the Sonata in question.

The chapter on Alfred Bruneau will, of course, attract special attention. This composer by his "Le Rêve" gained a few supporters, and made many enemies. Mr. Hervey has a high opinion of Bruneau, and agrees with the late Victor Wilder, who spoke of him as "the standard-bearer of the young French school." Our author seems, however, little inclined to discuss the new master, for he has found that argument rarely convinces. "It has always appeared to me," he says, "to be idle to attempt to impose one's ideas upon the relative merits of a composition on those whose disposition is antagonistic to its due appreciation." One cannot but sympathise with Mr. Hervey in his unwillingness to proselytise; but in art—and, indeed, in religion—how much has been accomplished by enthusiasm proof against the stoutest opposition! Space will not allow of a detailed notice of this volume; and, indeed, it is better to leave the reader to enjoy for himself Mr. Hervey's thoughtful appreciation of French masters. The book is further rendered attractive by portraits and facsimiles.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Bristol Orpheus Glee Society gave a Concert at St. James's Hall last Saturday afternoon, under the direction of Mr. George Risely. This body, of over eighty singers, sang several glees and part-songs with wonderful purity of intonation, refinement, and ensemble. The programme was well selected, including some of the best and best-known glees; also two prize glees, the one by Mr. H. W. Davies, a student of the Royal College, the other by Mr. C. Macpherson, student of the Royal Academy of Music, both of which deserved the favourable reception accorded to them. Messrs. Lee Williams, Cummings, and Dr. Bridge appeared successfully both as composers and as conductors. The solo parts to some of the numbers were excellently sung by Messrs. Watkin Mills and Harper Kearton. The Orpheus Society has been established for half a century; but from the small audience one would have thought that it had yet its reputation to make.

MR. HENSCHEL gave a Wagner Orchestral Concert at the Queen's Hall, on Wednesday evening. How times have changed! Twenty years ago a Wagner Concert would have been an impossibility; but now it is boldly announced as "grand" and "popular." Mr. Henschel gave illustrations of the master from "Rienzi" to "Parsifal," an historical programme of considerable interest. An orchestra of one hundred performers played under the able direction of Mr. Henschel, who showed both sympathy and enthusiasm, though, perhaps, at times too much of the latter. On the programme was marked the date of production of the several works from which the excerpts were taken. This was useful; but the attempt to give certain years as the date of composition was absurd: not one of those on the programme was written within any one year.

A BEETHOVEN Festival will be held at Bonn, on May 4, 5, and 6. The nine Symphonies will be performed by the famous Gürzenich orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Wüllner, of Cologne.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "OBITER DICTA."

In fcap. 8vo, tastefully printed, and bound in olive cloth, uniform with "Obiter Dicta," price 5s.

ESSAYS about MEN, WOMEN, and BOOKS. By Augustine Birrell, Q.C., M.P.

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Mr. Birrell's light and easy style well befits his generally kindly judgments. A very entertaining and handy little book for leisurely reading."—The Times.

"Mr. Birrell is always good company. He is always himself, and the self is so sane, so shrewd, so vivacious, that this fidelity to it suffices to make his books delightful."—Daily Chronicle.

"Very sprightly and facile are the judgments which he passes on the men and women included in this volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"These essays have a charming individuality of manner, not self-conscious and affected, but spontaneous. It is when discoursing of bookish matters that Mr. Birrell is at his best."—Globe.

"Bright, amusing, scholarly, wise, and genial."—Echo.

"He shares with the great Lexicographer of Fleet Street the spring of boundless anecdote and allusion that bubbles up spontaneously."—Morning Leader.

"Mr. Birrell's pen has lost nothing of its grace, and we have here a dainty volume as full of charm and vivacity as the much-beloved 'Obiter Dicta,' informed by the same delicate spirit of literary appreciation, and the same wisdom and genial satire."—The Sun.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED, at all Libraries and Booksellers, demy 8vo, pp. 246, cloth gilt, 6s.

FALLEN ANGELS.

A Disquisition upon Human Existence—an Attempt to Elucidate some of its Mysteries, especially those of Evil and Suffering.

By ONE OF THEM.

LONDON: GAY & BIRD, 5, CHANDOS STREET, STRAND.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

J. M. DENT &amp; CO.

TWO NEW VOLUMES just ready.

THE TEMPLE SHAKESPEARE. Edited by ISRAEL GOLLANCZ, M.A. With Concise Preface, full Glossary, and the necessary Notes. In Shilling Volumes. Each Play separately. Printed on hand-made paper, in Red and Black, with Photogravure Frontispiece and Title-Page by Walter Crane.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

NOW READY, cloth, 1s. net; paste grain roan, 1s. 6d. net.
STUDENT'S EDITION ON WRITING PAPER, broad margins, 1s. 6d. net.

THE TEMPEST was published last month, and two other Volumes will be issued simultaneously each month, in the order of the Folio Editions.

Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, on application.

PRESS NOTICES.

"THE IDEAL SHAKESPEARE."

"If I were limited to the possession of two editions, I would choose first the 'Variorum' edition of 1821, and my second choice should be the 'Temple' edition....When we consider the perfectness of the text, the beauty of the get up, and the modesty of the price, I think we may fairly allow it is very nearly the ideal edition of Shakespeare."

R. W. LOWE, in the Illustrated London News.

"Without exception the most charming little book we have ever seen offered for a shilling." Daily Chronicle.

"The enterprise of Messrs. Dent deserves unalloyed praise."—Bookman.

"This is certainly the most scholarly, portable, and aesthetic pocket Shakespeare in existence."—Newcastle Chronicle.

JUST OUT.

OUR LADY'S TUMBLER.

A Twelfth Century Legend.

Transcribed from the French by P. H. WICKSTEED.

Imperial 16mo, with Antique Coloured Wrapper in Red and Black, gilt top, 1s. net.

"Mr. Wicksteed has, in the daintily issued brochure before us, translated into quaint and choice English a delightful legend current in France in the twelfth century.....It is difficult to convey the charm with which this curious and interesting legend is invested by the simple diction of the narrative itself. Messrs. Dent have produced the tale in a very fitting manner." Freeman's Journal.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE NEW AND CONCLUDING VOLUME OF THE "BON-MOTS" SERIES.

BON-MOTS FROM SAMUEL FOOTE AND THEODORE HOOK.

Edited by WALTER JERROLD.

With Grotesques by AUBREY BEARDSLEY.

Royal 32mo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net.

"It is not every day that one lights upon a dainty volume with at least two hearty laughs upon each of its tiny pages. For such a work we are indebted to Messrs. Dent & Co., the publishers, and to Mr. Walter Jerrold, the editor."—Daily Chronicle (Leader).

XENOPHON'S ART OF HORSEMANSHIP.

Translated, with Chapters on the Greek Riding-Horse and with Notes, by MORRIS H. MORGAN, Ph.D.

With 34 Reproductions of Illustrations of the Horse in Classic Art.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"The cultivated lover of horses will find a great deal to interest him in Mr. Morgan's scholarly and handsomely got up little book."—Times.

Ready on the 17th inst.

THE FORTY-FIVE. In 2 vols., 7s. net.

Being the New Volumes of the ROMANCES OF ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

IN FORTY-EIGHT VOLUMES.

The following Volumes are now ready, and a Complete Novel will be issued each month

THE THREE MUSKETEERS. 2 vols., 7s. net.

TWENTY YEARS AFTER. 2 vols., 7s. net.

VICOMTE DE BRAGELONNE. 6 vols., 21s. net.

MARGUERITE DE VALOIS. 2 vols., 7s. net.

LA DAME DE MONSOREAU. 2 vols., 7s. net.

THE TWO DIANAS. 3 vols., 10s. 6d. net.

"To all romantic spirits the appearance of Messrs. Dent & Co.'s library edition of the Romances of Dumas affords matter for hearty congratulation....A most desirable acquisition to the library and entirely satisfactory to lovers of Dumas. They are exceedingly attractive books, excellent as to type and paper; the binding, in design, colour, and material, of an admirable taste; with capital etchings by way of illustration by French and English artists." Saturday Review.

"One of Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.'s most successful achievements in the revival of famous romances, the binding, typography, and etchings combining to render these volumes irresistibly attractive."—Times.

"The charming edition of Dumas' Novels which Messrs. Dent & Co. issue."—Athenaeum.

LONDON: ALDINE HOUSE, 69, GREAT EASTERN STREET.

MESSRS. A. D. INNES & CO.'S
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

VOX CLAMANT IUM.

The Gospel of the People.

BY WRITERS, PREACHERS, AND WORKERS.

Brought together by ANDREW REID.

Imperial 16mo, bound in coarse blue Irish linen, with Frontispiece by Walter Crane, price 12s.

A group of studies mainly on the Relation of Christian Doctrine and Practice to Social Questions of the Day.

THE CONTRIBUTORS ARE—

S. R. CROCKETT (Author of "The Stickit Minister," and "The Raiders"), ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, LEWIS MORRIS, HALL CAINE, A. E. FLETCHER (Editor of the Daily Chronicle), RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, TOM MANN, HENRY ARTHUR JONES, GRANT ALLEN, WALTER CRANE, JOHN HEATHER, FRANK SMITH, The Hon. RODEN NOEL, The Rev. C. L. MARSON (Author of "The Psalms at Work"), The Rev. Professor SHUTTLEWORTH, The Hon. The Rev. JAMES ADDERLEY (Author of "Stephen Remark"), The Very Rev. The Dean of Ely, Dr. C. W. STUBBS. [Now ready.]

SOCIETY IN CHINA.

An Account of the Everyday Life of the Chinese People—Social, Political, and Religious.

By ROBERT K. DOUGLAS,

Keeper of the Oriental Books and Manuscripts in the British Museum; Professor of Chinese at King's College.

Demy 8vo, Mandarin cloth extra, with 22 Illustrations, price 16s.

The Illustrations are in Collootype from Original Drawings by Chinese Artists and from Photographs. [Immediately.]

IN ACTIVE PREPARATION.

SOME ASPECTS OF DISESTABLISHMENT.

Essays from Varying Points of View by Clergymen of the English Church.

Edited by the Rev. H. C. SHUTTLEWORTH,

Professor of Pastoral Theology in King's College, and Rector of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey.

[Ready immediately.]

A SON OF THE FORGE:

A Novel.

By ROBERT BLATCHFORD ("Nunquam").

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

[Now ready.]

THE WORLDS OF SPACE.

A Series of Popular Articles upon Astronomical Subjects.

By J. E. GORE, F.R.A.S.

With numerous Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

ENGLAND UNDER THE TUDORS.

By WILHELM BUSCH.

A History of the Tudor Period.

Written with especial reference to the Commercial Development of the Empire.

Translated under the Superintendence of the Author and Mr. JAS. GAIRDNER, by the Rev. A. H. JOHNSON and Miss TODD.

Volume I. will be ready shortly.

LONDON: A. D. INNES &amp; CO., 31 AND 32, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1146.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

MOLTKE'S PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE, by Judge O'CONNOR	321
MORRIS	322
GOSS'S JACOBAN POETS, by E. K. CHAMBERS	322
SWIFT'S JAMES I. OF ARAGON, by the Rev. WESTWORTH	323
WESTER	323
GOLDWIN SMITH ON QUESTIONS OF THE DAY, by R. SEYMOUR LONG	324
LAMONT'S BRIGHT CELESTIALS, by PERCY ADOLPHUS	324
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	325
SOME SCOTCH BOOKS, by WILLIAM WALLACE	326
NOTES AND NEWS	327
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	328
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	328
ORIGINAL VERSE: "HEATHER BURNING," by Miss L. DOUGALL	329
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	329
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	329
CORRESPONDENCE—	329
The Manufacture of Jewish Surnames, by Dr. F. Chance; An Ancient Funeral Custom in Wexford and Keady, by Miss Margaret Stokes; More about Locks, Pounds, and Paths in the Thames, by Dr. F. J. Furnivall; "Table of Green Fields," by H. Bradley; Cedmon's "Genesis," 2908-7, by Prof. G. Hempf	329
PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS	329
SCIENCE NOTES	331
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	332
FURTHER NOTES ON THE MASTERPIECES OF GREEK SCULPTURE, by Prof. PERCY GARDNER	333
CORRESPONDENCE—	333
Botticelli's "Spring," by Grant Allen; A Roman Pig of Lead, by F. Haverfield	331
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	334
STAGE NOTES	335
DR. MACKENZIE'S "BETHLEHEM," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	335
MUSIC NOTES	335

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on TUESDAY, May 1st, 1894. The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds (including 75 for Convalescents at Swanley). Students may reside in the College, within the Hospital walls, subject to the Collegiate regulations. SCHOLARSHIPS and PRIZES of the aggregate value of over £700 are awarded annually, and Students entering in May can compete for the Entrance Scholarships in September. For full particulars apply to the WARDEN OF THE COLLEGE, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS. An EXAMINATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 26th, 1894, and succeeding days, for the awarding of the following:—
1. A Scholarship of £75 for one year to the best candidate in Chemistry and Physics who is under twenty-five years of age.
2. A Scholarship of £75 for one year to the best candidate in Biology (Animal and Vegetable) and Physiology who is under twenty-five years of age.
3. Candidates for these two Scholarships must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice of any Medical School.
4. A Scholarship of £150 and the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition of £50, each tenable for one year, in Physics, Chemistry, Vegetable Biology, and Animal Biology. Candidates for these must be under twenty years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice at any Medical School.
5. A Jefferson Exhibition of £21 for one year in Latin and Mathematics, with any one of the Languages, Greek, French, and German. (Classical book as in Matriculation of Univ. of London, June, 1894.) Candidates must not have entered at any Medical School.
The successful candidates in all cases will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination.
For full particulars apply to Dr. T. W. SHORE, Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

THE GROVE, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
PRINCIPAL—Mrs. LACHY.
HEAD-MISTRESS—Miss LACEY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honorary School of Modern History; Oxford University Extension Lecturer.
VISITING TEACHERS:—
Miss J. W. KIRKALBY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honorary School of Natural Science.
Miss A. G. EARD, Newnham College, Cambridge; First Class Natural Sciences Tripos.
Miss C. M. RHINO, Girton College, Cambridge; Classical Tripos.
Miss M. R. HOSE, Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford; Honours, Classical Moderations.
Miss L. E. BARRY (English Language, Elocution).
MR. ARTHUR SOMERVILLE, Professor at the Royal College of Music.
Miss GALLATY, Assistant of the Royal College of Music.
MR. R. CARONIS (Violin).
Mme. OLIVIER (Dancing and Physical Exercises).
MR. W. McPHERSON (Feeling and Drill).
REFERENCE PERMITTED TO:—
The Lady Laura Eldridge; Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, late Principal of Somerville Hall; Mrs. A. B. Johnson, Hon. Sec. Association for the Education of Women, Oxford; Miss Maitland, Principal of Somerville Hall; the Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester; the Rev. Professor Symes, M.A., Principal of University College, Nottingham.
THE NEXT TERM will begin MAY 4th.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—

Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters—MRS. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEZON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and advanced Examinations.—STUDENTS PREPARED in Classes connected with North London Collegiate School, under Miss BASS's superintendence. Arrangements made for boarding in neighbourhood.—Address Miss TORLES, 145, Camden Road, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by HARRIS & CO., 20, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAIFORD, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2730. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

With numerous Portraits and other Illustrations, 4to, 21s.

INDIA'S PRINCES:

Short Life Sketches of the Native Rulers of India.

By Mrs. GRIFFITH.

"Something akin to Oriental splendour has been displayed in the preparation of 'India's Princes.' This volume embodies short biographical sketches of the native rulers of India. It is enriched with photographic portraits and other pictorial views, which have been very effectively produced. To all in any way interested in our Indian empire this handsome volume will be a source of delight and pleasure."
—Sedgman.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with upwards of 50 Maps and Plans, 8vo, net.

MODERN TACTICS. By Captain

H. R. GALT, late 5th Fusiliers.
This Third Edition has been almost entirely rewritten in accordance with the new Drill Books, and contains upwards of 50 Plates and worked-out schemes illustrating how to dispose of a force in a Map. "A clear and comprehensive manual for the present-day student, and made pleasant to read by the beautiful printing and paper."
—Globe.

Demy 8vo, with 27 Plans, 9 Sketch Maps, and 2 Sketches in Text, 28s.

MOLTKE'S TACTICAL PROBLEMS.

From 1858 to 1882. Edited by the Russian Grand General Staff (Department for Military History). Authorised Translation, by CARL VON DONAT, late Lieutenant East Prussian Fusilier Regiment, No. 33 (now Regiment Count Koon), Author of "Studies in Applied Tactics."
"These solutions and problems will, on account of their lucidity and surprising simplicity, ever remain model decisions, and afford by their pronounced originality a fountain of suggestion and information."
—Daily Chronicle.

A GREY ROMANCE. By Mrs. W. K.

CLIFFORD; and Stories by FREDERICK GREENWOOD, GILBERT PARKER, FRANK STOCKTON, and others.
"Not very often have eight stories been published or republished under one cover as interesting and original as those in 'A Grey Romance.' A remarkable volume, and Mrs. Clifford's worthy leads a worthy hand."
—Saturday Review.

IN the SHADOW of the PAGODA:

Sketches of Japanese Life and Character. By E. D. CUMING.
"With their racy humour and dramatic quality, these sketches are thoroughly entertaining, and they give a singularly vivid and cleverly observed picture of a very interesting people."
—Pall Mall Gazette.

SIGHTS and SHADOWS: being

Examples of the Supernatural. By the Rev. F. G. LEE, Author of "Glimpses in the Twilight."
"Very attractive, and will be widely read."
—World.

WOMEN of RENOWN. By G. Barnett

SMITH, Author of "The Life and Enterprises of Ferdinand de Lesseps."
"The selection is decidedly well devised, the field embraced by the essays is agreeably varied, and the result is a pleasing volume of sketches."
—Saturday Review.

WAR TIMES; or, the Lads of Craig-

ross; and IN the GARDEN'S SOUTH. By SARAH TYTTER, Author of "L'Etienne Jacquelin."
"Will be read with profit and interest by old and young."
—Globe.

THE SHADRACH; and other Stories.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."
"In Mr. Stockton's stories the unexpected is always happening. There is a quaint turn both in phrase and in plot, and a humour which is peculiar yet agreeable."
—Sedgman.

HERE and THERE in ITALY and

OVER the BORDER. By Signora LINDA VILLARI, Author of "Tuscan Hills and Venetian Waters," &c.
"Madame Villari is a pleasant writer, who conveys a clear general impression of the places she visited."
—Bradford Observer.

MUSIC and MORALS. By the Rev.

R. H. HAWES, M.A.
BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
FOURTH EDITION. Crown 8vo, with Portrait, 7s. 6d.

MY MUSICAL LIFE.

At all Libraries and Bookstalls, "THE BEST of HER SEX." By FERGUS HUME, Author of "The Harlequin Opal." In 2 vols.
"A smart, stirring story, with a good deal of sterling virtue in it. The book is very amusing."
—World.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO. (Limited), 13, WATERLOO PLACE. Publishers to the India Office.

WANTED to PURCHASE, LONDON, PROVINCIAL, or SUBURBAN WEEKLY NEWSPAPER or REVIEW (Liberal). Must show a profit.—Address "Liberal," care of Steel & Jones, Advertising Agents, 23, Craven Street, Strand, W.C.

ADVERTISER is seeking SITUATION

In a Provincial Public Library; 18 years of age; educated at a public grammar school; some knowledge of French and Latin, Typewriting; is learning Shorthand, and preparing for Examination of Public Association.—L. H. Oakley Street, Flats, Chelsea, S.W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROCKEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,

Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFIN-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN

MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Poundress and "Gossyp." 1s. 6d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Bwch, Breconshire.

LITERARY, SECRETARIAL, or

CLERICAL WORK DESIRED by a LADY, who has had two and a half years' experience in a Government Office. Reads French, German, Dutch, Danish-Norwegian, and Swedish.—Address M. R. H., Cornwall Street, S.W.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS at FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books,

11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),

Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

[Catalogues on application.]

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,
RICKINGHAM PALACE,
WINDSOR CASTLE,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,
FITTI, FLORENCE,
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,
FLORENCE,
AMSTERDAM,
THE HAGUE,

LOUVRE, PARIS,
LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
HERMITAGE, ST. PETERS-
BURG,
PRADO, MADRID,
VATICAN, ROME,
HAARLEM,
FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF EXAMPLES OF MODERN FRENCH AND ENGLISH ART IN SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM
BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.*MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENG, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT
INSTITUTION,

For the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows, and Orphans.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the WHITE-HALL ROOMS, THE HOTEL METROPOLE, on SATURDAY,
April 28, at half-past 6 o'clock.

The Right Honble. LORD RIBBLESDALE, P.C., in the Chair.
Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.

Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by Sir JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., R.A., Hon. Secretary.

ALFRED WATERHOUSE, R.A., Treasurer.
DOUGLAS GORDON, Secretary.

19, St. James's Street, S.W.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBILUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes)
at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

SAVE YOUR COMPLEXION
BY USING

VINOLIA SOAP.

Don't economise at the cost of your complexion by using the superfatted imitations which are as a rule adulterated shams.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES OF THE WEEK.—CASES BEFORE
THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—SOLICITORS' CASES.—
REVIEWS.—NEW ORDERS.—GENERAL CORRESPON-DENCE.—COURTS.—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.—
APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER
£2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free
Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other
Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published.....The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other
Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other
Sermons.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,
21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,*TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.THEATRES.*ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. &amp; S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 7.50, THE COTTON KING. Messrs.
Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, A. Williams, E. O'Neill,
Herbert Flemming; Mesdames Alma Stanley, Hall Caine,
Dion Bouicault, and Miss Marion Terry.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. Comyns Carr.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, FROU-FROU. Messrs.
Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, H. B. Irving, Will Denois, Crawley, &c.; Miss Vane, Miss Marie Linden, Miss Radclyffe,
Miss O'Brian, Miss M. Butler, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.

THIS EVENING, at 8, AN ARISTOCRATIC ALLIANCE.
Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Chas. Groves, J. G. Taylor,
F. Worthing, H. de Lange; Miss Fowler (Mrs. Latham Cox),
Miss A. Hughes, and Miss Mary Moore. At 8.30, MRS.
HILARY REGRETS. Mr. F. Atherley and Miss F. Frances.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, Shakespeare's comedy of
TWELFTH NIGHT. Miss Rehan as Viola; and George Clarke, James Lewis, Herbert Gresham; Violet Vanbrugh, Catherine Lewis, &c.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Mr. John Hare, Lessee and Manager.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, MRS. LESSINGHAM. Mr.
John Hare, Mr. Forbes-Robertson, Mr. C. Rock, Mr. G. Du Maurier; Miss E. Robins, Miss H. Luck, Miss D. Drummond, Miss I. Goldsmith, Miss E. Cross, and Miss Kate Rorke.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur
Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, Willie Ward,
George Mudie. Mesdames Millie Hylton, Jessie Loftus, Maria
Davis, Louise Montague, Benden, Earle, Mills, Henderson, Hamer, Durkin, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Price, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Lessee, W. S. Penley.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S.
Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer,
Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada
Branson, Emmie Merrick, Clayton, Nina Bouicault. Preceded, at 8, by IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnien, John
F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carae;
Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford,
E. Greville, Thorne, M. Marsden, and Miss May Yohé.
At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs.
C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Orey,
Porteous, Rimm, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Misses
Decima Moore, Juliette Neville, Cutler, Studholme, Ponné, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, Gorst, and P.
Broughton.

SAVOY THEATRE.

R. D'Oly Carte, Proprietor and Manager.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs.
Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Haye, W. Pasmore, Scott-Fishe, Gridley, R. Russell, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy M'Intosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. George Alexander.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, THE SECOND MRS.
TANQUERAY. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. H. H.
Vincent, Ben Webster, H. V. Emond, A. Vane-Tempest,
A. Bromley-Davenport, A. Holles; Miss Maude Millett, Miss Granville, Miss Laura Graves, Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee, Willie Edouin.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, JAUNTY JANE SHORE.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Edward Lewis, Fred Emney, Arthur
Nelestone, Alfred P. Phillips, Chas. Lovell; Mesdames Grace
Huntley, Emmelie Orford, Florence Daly, Ada Dorée, Carrie
Coote, Hilda Hanbury, Millie Marion, Nellie and Maggie
Bowman, and Miss Alice Atherton.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE BEST MAN. Mr. J. L.
Toole; Messrs. John Billington, Shelton, Lowne, Coventry, Arton, Branton; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Eliza Johnstone,
Fordyce, Poole, Kingsley. At 8, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
Messrs. Westland, Lowne, Arton; Misses Carlyon, Fordyce.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie
Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Rubie
Temple, and Letty Lind; Messrs. Harry Orattan, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, Sidney Howard, Frederick Rosse, and John L. Shine.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. Weedon Grossmith.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, J. Hatfield; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer,
Helena Dacre. Preceded, at 8.30, by THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

In crown 8vo Vols., strongly bound in imperial cloth, cut edges, price 1s. 4d. each.

BLACKIE'S SCHOOL AND HOME LIBRARY.

Under this title the publishers have arranged to issue a selection of the best and most interesting books in the English language.

The Library will include lives of heroes ancient and modern, records of travel and adventure by sea and land, fiction of the highest class, historical romances, books of natural history, and tales of domestic life.

An important feature of the series will be the careful editing of the books, to render them in all respects fit to be read by young people. This editorial work will be carried out in such a way as to maintain the integrity of the books, only what is objectionable or superfluous being discarded.

NOW READY.

Dana's Two Years before the Mast.

Southey's Life of Nelson.

Waterton's Wanderings.

Anson's Voyage Round the World.

To be followed by two volumes on the first of each month, commencing June 1st.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED,
OLD BAILEY.

PADEREWSKI.

PADEREWSKI.

AN ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW.

With many Photographs, specially taken. This is the first Interview the famous pianist has given to any magazine. See

THE WOMAN AT HOME.

Sixpence Monthly. Profusely Illustrated.

THE WOMAN AT HOME.

CONTENTS FOR MAY. Now ready. Price 6d.

1. PADEREWSKI: an Illustrated Interview. By BARONESS VON ZEDLITZ.
2. THE LOVES OF RUFUS. By Mrs. STEPHEN BATSON. Fully Illustrated.
3. JONAS COAKER: an Idyll of Dartmoor. By Rev. S. BASING-GOULD. Fully Illustrated.
4. TWO ROTHSCHILD HOMES in BUCKS. By Wm. J. LACEY. With many Photographs, specially taken.
5. MISS PLEYDELL. By KATHARINE LEE. Illustrated.
6. THE MYSTERY of the SADDLEBAG SOFA. By HEADON HILL.
7. PORT LEYTON'S HEIR. By ANNIE S. SWAN. Fully Illustrated.
8. A PAGE of CONFESSIONS. By Signor TOSTI.
9. BRIDES and BRIDEGROOMS. With Portraits.
10. ORIGINAL FASHION DESIGNS. By MILDRED HARRIS.
11. SUNDAY READINGS. By the DEAN OF ARMAGH.
12. OVER the TEACUPS. By ANNIE S. SWAN.—13. DRESS and FASHION. Illustrated.—14. COOKERY.—15. HOUSE FURNISHING.—16. HEALTH and PERSONAL APPEARANCE.—17. WOMEN'S EMPLOYMENTS.—18. MOTHERS and CHILDREN.—19. SMILES.

THE WOMAN AT HOME.—Vol. I.
Handsomely bound, 5s.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

KERNER'S BOTANY.

PART I. will be published on the FIRST of MAY.

To be completed in Sixteen Monthly Parts, imp. 8vo, price 2s. 6d. each net.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF PLANTS:

Their Forms, Growth, Reproduction, and Distribution.

From the German of ANTON KERNER VON MARILAUN,
Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna.

By F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc.,

Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London.

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF MARIAN BUSK, B.Sc., and MARY EWART, B.Sc.

With about 1,000 Original Woodcut Illustrations and Sixteen Plates in Colours.

KERNER'S "NATURAL HISTORY OF PLANTS," now for the first time presented to English readers, is one of the greatest works in Botany ever issued from the press. Its province is the whole realm of Plant Life, and its purpose, as conceived by the author, Professor ANTON KERNER VON MARILAUN, of Vienna University, is to provide "a book not only for specialists and scholars, but also for the many."

\* Detailed Prospectus post free on application.*

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY ANDREW LANG.

BAN AND ARRIÈRE BAN:

A RALLY OF FUGITIVE RHYMES.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

LONDON AND NEW YORK: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 368.—CONTENTS.

- I. AFRICAN EXPLORATION.
- II. DR. JULIAN'S HYMNOLGY.
- III. MEMOIRS of CHANCELLOR PASQUIER. Second Volume.
- IV. THE LIQUEFACTION of GASES.
- V. THREE NOBLE ENGLISH WOMEN.
- VI. VON MOLTKE'S CAMPAIGN in BOHEMIA.
- VII. NAVAL ARMAMENTS.
- VIII. KIDD on SOCIAL EVOLUTION.
- IX. THE NEW MINISTRY.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CONSOLING THOUGHTS.

Intended for the Sick and Sorrowful.

By M. AUGUSTA BREWSTER.

With original Frontispiece by the Author, and Floral Designs on each page.

Pott 4to, elegant cloth gilt 3s.

JAMES NISBET & Co., 21, Berners Street, London.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

MACKAIL'S (J. W.) THE SAYINGS of the LORD JESUS CHRIST from the FOUR EVANGELISTS. Collected and arranged by REEVES & TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Pott 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

BARDS and the BIRDS. Selected from various Poets by F. NOEL PATON, Esq. With 10 Illustrations by Mrs. Hugh Blackburn and Hubert Paton.
REEVES & TURNER, 5, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

New Edition, pp. 180, cloth, 1s., post free.

DOG DISEASES TREATED by HOMOEOPATHY. By JAMES MOORE, M.R.C.V.S. Each disease is fully described and prescribed for.
LONDON: JAMES EPPS & Co. (Ld.) 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

MUDIE'S

SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thenceless the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 49, Queen Victoria St., E.C

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

READY ON MONDAY NEXT.

THE LIFE OF
JOHN CHURCHILL,
Duke of Marlborough,
To the Accession of Queen Anne.

BY

GENERAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

NEW NOVELS AT EVERY LIBRARY

NOTICE.

MISS BROUGHTON'S NEW NOVEL,

A BEGINNER.

IS NOW OUT AT ALL THE LIBRARIES,

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTERS OF THE WORLD."

THOROUGH.

By MARY A. M. MARKS.

Author of "Dr. Willoughby Smith," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

This Novel deals with the period of the Irish Rebellion of 1841, and the Events which led to the transplantation of Connaught.

JUST READY.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE GREATER GLORY.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,

Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A strangely beautiful book."—Guardian.

NOW READY.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN,

Author of "The Scots of Westminster." &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A supremely entertaining novel."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE.

By M. DEANE.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Teems with thrilling incident and vivid description."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON,

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"One of the best stories of Indian life we have ever read."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

SANTA TERESA:

Being some Account of her Life and Times, together with some pages from the History of the last great Reform in the Religious Orders.

BY

GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.

In 2 vols., illustrated with Two Autogravure
Frontispieces, demy 8vo, price 32s.

"She has not merely studied much original and previously inaccessible material for the life and times of Saint Teresa, but is also specially qualified for the work she has undertaken by her intimate acquaintance with the country and countrymen of the saint. She has patiently and not unconstructively examined the difficult psychological question of Teresa's mysticism, and her study of the rise of the Discalced Carmelite Order may be acknowledged to throw an interesting light on the general history of the period."—The Times.

"A truly noble work, written with such profound knowledge and understanding sympathy that the book has spirit and vitality which no merely graphic skill could impart to it."—The World.

"Much as we differ from Mrs. Cunningham Graham on some important points, we are at one with her in admiration of what Saint Teresa achieved. Her views were lofty and her courage undaunted; and those who, apart from controversial matter, read the narrative here given of the work of reform which she succeeded in carrying out will readily understand why she has become one of the great figures of the Catholic world."

Glasgow Herald.

"No one can take up the book without quickly perceiving that it is written with care as well as with enthusiasm."—Leeds Mercury.

"A notable biography of a remarkable character. It is impossible to withhold admiration for the zeal and devotion of Teresa de Cepeda as depicted in the glowing pages of Mrs. Cunningham Graham."

Dundee Advertiser.

"The pictures of those closing passages of the romance of Spanish history which preceded or accompanied Teresa's entrance upon the scene, and of the landscapes, customs, and characters amid which her early years were spent, display almost the hand of genius.....she has placed on the canvas a striking and lifelike figure, full—in spite of many mental and, it may be added, moral aberrations—of a singular grace and strength..... who undertook and completed a great reform within the Church, not less remarkable because it did not prove to be permanent; who was not only 'the last Mediaeval Saint,' and one of the classic writers of the noble tongue of Castile, but a lady 'valiant, steadfast, and true.' By the power of sympathy and of patient and self-sacrificing labour Mrs. Cunningham Graham may be said to have performed a miracle as remarkable as any attributed to Teresa the nun: she has painted a saint who is also a living and breathing woman."—Scotsman.

London: A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI AND THE PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT

Viewed in Relation to the Problems, Tendencies, and Purposes of Modern English Art.

By Mrs. J. W. WOOD.

With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings.
8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The book contains some unpublished reminiscences of Rossetti's student days and career in art, and describes the Founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood and its long conflict with academic traditions.

"The best book yet written on Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelites. Besides being a work of philosophical value, the book is a most attractive record of comradeship, inspired by the noblest and most generous ideals of youth. The illustrations from some of Rossetti's greatest paintings are beautifully executed. In her treatment of the tragically pathetic incidents in Rossetti's life, Mrs. Wood displays the greatest tact and delicacy."—Daily News.

NOW READY.

AMONG THE MOORS:

Sketches of Oriental Life.

By G. MONTBARD,

Author of "In Egypt," &c.

Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

ON SHORT LEAVE TO JAPAN.

By Capt. G. J. YOUNGHUSBAND,

Queen's Own Corps of Guides, Author of "Eighteen Hundred Miles on a Burmese Tat," &c.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS FOR 1893.

A List of Books published in Great Britain and Ireland in the Year 1893, with their Sizes, Prices, and Publishers' Names.

Also of the Principal Books published in the United States of America.

With the Addition of an Index to Subjects.
Royal 8vo, 5s.

Dedicated to H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck.

A MANUAL of OBSTETRIC NURSING

By MARIAN HUMFREY, British Lying-in Hospital, London; Diploma London Obstetric Society; Member Royal British Nurses' Association, and of its Registration Board. Crown 8vo, 300 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, NOW READY.

TALES from WESTMINSTER ABBEY

TOLD to CHILDREN. By Mrs. FREWEN LORD.
With a Portrait of Dean Stanley, and a Plan and View of the Abbey. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

'PREACHERS OF THE AGE' SERIES.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

A CUP of COLD WATER.

By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES,
Of Lewisham.

With Photogravure Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHEAP EDITIONS, AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth,
Half-a-crown each.

MARY ANERLEY.

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

LITTLE LOO.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

MARY MARSTON.

By GEORGE MACDONALD.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1894.

No. 1146, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

MOLTKE'S PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE.

Field-Marshal Count Helmuth von Moltke as a Correspondant. Translated by Mary Herms. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

THE last strainings of a vintage are poor and thin: we have had enough of the minor writings of Moltke. His letters to his kinsfolk reveal his character, ambitious, earnest, persevering, and manly, and show a considerable power of picturesque expression; but they are not free from the dull bathos which occasionally appears in the Teutonic mind, and we have had more than sufficient specimens of them. His essays are learned, and some of them able; but they are deficient in historical insight, and especially in political wisdom; and they are in places mere Billingsgate against the French nation. His speeches contain weighty thoughts and sentences, and exhibit his organising powers in war; but they prove how little Moltke understood the moral of the war of 1870-1, and how his blind hatred of France hid from him the reason that has made Europe justly suspicious of Prussia. The volume before us is little more than the crambe repetita of pieces of this class; it consists of letters of Moltke to his family and friends, and, like crambe repetita, is not attractive. Some passages in it throw light on the campaigns of 1866 and 1870-1, but really only confirm what is already known. Others illustrate Moltke's private life and habits, and especially his domestic tastes; but they contain little that deserves notice. We should not glance at the book but for the author's eminence; and we take this opportunity to say that the papers of Moltke, which must possess real historical value, ought not to be long withheld from the public. The Gurwood Correspondence of Wellington appeared at a period about as far from Waterloo as the present time is from Sadowa and Sedan; and the Supplementary Despatches did not precede but followed what was of infinitely more importance.

This volume, we have said, adds a mite to our knowledge about the great wars directed by Moltke, and about his views and opinions at the time. In 1866 he probably wished to take, from the outset, a bold offensive, but he was thwarted by the limitations of the king; and this partly accounts for the events that followed:

"You are right in saying that a strong initiative would be the best. . . . Naturally our first drawing up would look like a dispersion. . . . It is a grave thing for an old king and master, at seventy years of age, to be expected to take the first step."

How far Moltke concurred with Bismarck in precipitating the conflict of 1870-1 will probably not be known for years; but he certainly wished for a struggle with France, and the following, written in 1868, will amuse those who have any inkling of the truth:

"La France s'ennuie! and in order to amuse her, Europe must be set on fire! In the nineteenth century a war so frivolously begun, to so little purpose, should seem impossible; it reminds one of Louis XIV. and his Louvois, and yet we stand perhaps close upon it."

At this very time Prussia had all Germany in arms, and Moltke was projecting the invasion of France!

There is nothing in this volume about the great events of the first part of the war of 1870-1. But the convictions that induced Moltke to advance on Paris, after Gravelotte and Sedan, appear very clearly; and they were completely at odds with the facts. He laughed at the notion that France would resist; he believed that Metz would fall even sooner than it did; and he thought that he was about to dictate peace. The gobemouches of success may worship their fetish; but few worse errors have been made in war:

"I hope for an early peace before the renewal of this blood-shedding. The boasting of the Paris authorities only shows their weakness. . . . By right the war ought to be ended now, as France has no longer an army. . . . We must let the volcano burn out by itself."

Moltke was furious at the idea of the intervention of England, and boasted that he had 200,000 men to put down an intruder. Yet his miscalculations were so great, that the assistance of even a weak trained force would have probably turned the scale in favour of France at any time before the disgraceful fall of Metz. Coulmiers nearly caused the raising of the siege of Paris, and would have caused it but for the misconduct of Bazaine. As it was, it revealed the danger in which the invaders stood; and when the national rising of France had made itself felt, and the illustrious Chanzy had appeared in the field, a change passed over the spirit of Moltke's dream:

"How long this terrible war will continue . . . nobody here or at home can tell. A whole nation under arms is not to be underrated. It is possible that we may have a million against us after the new year."

Meanwhile Moltke had little but cynical scoffs for one of the grandest movements in the world's history, the heroic defence of France which long baffled his aims; and he set himself up as a moral Providence to deal out damnation to Frenchmen:

"Indeed, it is God's judgment that is punishing this haughty French nation. They are not yet humiliated, yet much remains still for us to do. . . . Rats will become scarcer and scarcer in Paris. . . . These haughty infatuated Frenchmen must be humiliated much more before they will listen to reason."

The causes of the triumph of Germany in 1870-1 were accidents that will hardly recur; and Europe, which thought France blotted out twenty-three years ago, has awakened to a perception of her colossal strength. Moltke really knew little about

France, and nothing shows more how ill he understood Frenchmen than the following self-complacent remark:

"I believe a reconciliation between Germany and France to be possible—because sensible. The condition is a candid recognition of the Treaty of Frankfort."

Bathos is at its depths in this sneer at the resistance of Paris—John Gilpin, that hero of "a frugal mind," would, doubtless, have said the same thing of the cost: "In this way six or eight men are wounded every day. This cannot affect in the slightest degree the decision of the war, and is extremely expensive."

A large part of this volume is made up of letters that relate Moltke's wanderings in many lands. His descriptions of nature and her numberless scenes of grandeur and beauty are always good; his eye for the picturesque and his great learning appear in pictures that please intelligent minds. It is somewhat curious that a great warrior is not touched by the associations of war presented by many scenes in his travels; the ruins of Asia Minor do not remind him of the stations of the Legions, but of Genoese commerce; the passage of the St. Gothard does not recall one of the grand moves that led to Marengo; Zürich and Genoa do not speak of Masséna. He only alludes to Napoleon once on the many battle-fields of the modern Hannibal, and he does so in this bald and prosaic fashion:

"In the room which I occupy the Consul Napoleon Buonaparte once stayed; the gilt bed is still ornamented with the French eagles; the little room adjoining, where Henry sleeps, was probably that of his mameluke."

Moltke was a Prussian Junker, and abhorred democracy; but his strong understanding and keen sense revolted from wild socialistic dreams. The following is sound and wise:

"Real social progress can only be made slowly and by degrees. Natura non facit saltum, and civilisation just as little. Above all it is necessary to enlighten the lower classes as to their own interests. That must be the work of the Church and the school for the next century. But we are standing, may be, quite close before the eruption of a mighty movement, and have to prepare already to face the danger."

Germans, too, with 1870 before them, would do well to recollect these words, especially as they hold Alsace and Lorraine:—

"For how many years people have talked of German unity in poetry and songs, had national meetings and shooting meetings, taken resolutions, which resulted in nothing as long as 'logos' was merely translated by 'the word.' Not until our Emperor, with Roon, created the army, and Bismarck made 'the deed' unavoidable, was there power to realise this possibility."

The love of home, the strong family feeling, the care and affection bestowed on kinsmen, which were Moltke's best and most attractive qualities, appear in many passages in this book; but it is unnecessary to recur to the subject. He could not bear carelessness and waste in the young people he gathered around his hearth in old age:

"If in future anybody should offer to pay your bills—which, however, is not likely to happen often—I should advise you not to let him wait a fortnight for an answer. . . . He who spends a shilling more than he possesses is always a poor man, no matter if he has an allowance of 400 or 4,000 thalers."

Moltke, like most great soldiers, was a good man of business, economical and keen sisted in spending his money. He looked after his farming accounts at Creisau, as Wellington did at Strathfieldsaye—an estate which, the Duke said, would have ruined a less thrifty owner. Moltke, however, was a good and large-minded seigneur; and his liberality and forethought in founding schools, in building and endowing churches, and in raising the peasantry within his domain to a higher lot in life, do honour alike to his head and his heart. He insisted on making the young prudent:

"You would be delighted to see the infants' school; the day school, too, is prospering. Eighty-five little capitalists have savings bank books, and every one has some marks in the Provincial Savings Bank. It is, too, important to learn to save at an early age, as we know from our own experience. Our new generation has begun life with help, which none of us sisters and brothers have ever known."

This kind of commonplace on the A B C of prudence in money matters might have been spared. Marlborough would have done the thing and not maundered upon it; Wellington would have called laws of the kind, "damned twaddle."

"If stocks and land become depreciated, it does not alter the rate of interest nor the income. Of course, it is an advantage for the buyer under such circumstances. . . . If I could have bought Creisau for half the sum I paid, the income of the estate would have been the same, but I should have received double the interest. . . . The principal thing for me is the safety of the investment, not high interest."

We have written enough to say what we think of this book. We may now say "ohé jam satis est" of Moltke's lesser writings; we must irreverently acknowledge they sometimes make us yawn.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

"UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS."—The Jacobean Poets. By Edmund Gosse. (John Murray.)

THERE is no more fascinating period of English literature, and none more imperfectly understood, than that which is covered by the reign of the first James. The age of Sidney we know, and we know the age of Milton. Their ruling motives, the forces which in them determined and the conditions which limited literary production are familiar. But the motives, the forces, and the conditions of the more complex transition period are only vaguely adumbrated in any work which it has been my fortune to meet with. There is room for an essay in criticism which shall treat the first two decades of the seventeenth century from a broad standpoint, illuminating it by generalisations more deep-reaching than Johnson's, and co-ordinating our fragmentary views by tracing the characteristics of prose and poetry to their roots in national and social life. In the absence of such treatment, literary history becomes a catalogue of names and a cascade of epithets.

It is a merit of the little book before us that, in its opening chapters at least, it makes some attempt to provide just this general point of view, for which there is such extreme need. It is issued as one of a collection of University Extension Manuals. In a prefatory note the publishers say:

"This series is primarily designed to aid the University Extension Movement throughout Great Britain and America, and to supply the need so widely felt by students, of text-books for study and reference, in connexion with the authorised Courses of Lectures."

They further state that there are many "thoughtful persons" who desire Extension teaching, but who, by the circumstances of their local habitation, are unable to obtain it.

"It is for them also that this series is designed. Its aim is to supply the general reader with the same kind of teaching as is given in the Lectures, and to reflect the spirit which has characterised the movement, viz., the combination of principles with facts, and of methods with results."

And again:

"The statement of details is meant to illustrate the working of general laws, and the development of principles; while the historical evolution of the subject dealt with is kept in view, along with its philosophical significance."

These are brave words, though one would suspect that the adequate realisation of them would require a compass of something more than 217 small octavo pages. However, nothing could well be worse than the literary handbooks of, shall we say, the pre-Extension period; and, until the heaven-sent interpreter comes, we shall be grateful to any writer who will put before us the accurate results of modern scholarship, vitalised by those suggestions of higher criticism without which modern scholarship woefully fails to stimulate. It would be something merely to get rid of the inaccurate facts with which ignorant editors and compilers have bespread our way.

In many respects Mr. Gosse would appear to be an ideal person to write such a manual. He comes to the work with the prestige of an academic chair. He brings with him the sympathies of a poet, a book-lover's enthusiasm, wide reading, and nice literary perception. He has the gift, so rare and so attractive, of graceful appreciation, of defining in a few sentences the essential qualities of a writer, or of a literary form, or of a literary epoch. That is exactly what you want in order to get those glimpses of the higher point of view which the organisers of University Extension rightly put in the forefront of their programme. The introductory chapter of the present volume is a model in this kind, with its delicate analysis and discrimination of the characteristic Elizabethan and the characteristic Jacobean spirit in poetry: a distinction so marked in spite of overlapping, so illustrative of the universal law of rhythm, of ebb and flow, of action and reaction, in things literary. And throughout the book Mr. Gosse gives us, from time to time, passages of almost equal charm. One would select the pages devoted to Ben Jonson, and those to Beaumont and Fletcher, as likely to be especially helpful to any student, both for critical insight and for lucidity of expression. The chapter upon Donne, again, is of great value. I do not know where to find a juster or more subtle account of the individual qualities of his Titanic verse, nor does Mr. Gosse fail to indicate the predominant spell which "this enigmatical and subterranean master" exercised over his contemporaries and immediate successors.

But unfortunately this very chapter upon Donne, so refreshing, so fruitful from the purely critical standpoint, lets one into the secret of a fatal weakness in Mr. Gosse's work, when the purpose for which it was designed is regarded. It requires but a little knowledge of the rather intricate bibliography and literary history of Donne's poems to see at a glance that Mr. Gosse's scholarship is hopelessly to seek in the matter, that he has filled his pages with errors and mis-statements which might easily have been corrected from the most obvious sources. It will be well to give chapter and verse for a few of the more conspicuous inaccuracies. First of all, there is the assertion that Donne contributed ten sonnets to Davison's Poetical Rhapsody in 1602. Here Mr. Gosse appears to have been misled by some folly of Dr. Grosart's, of which Dr. Grosart has since repented. The sonnets in question have the initials I. D. attached to them in the Poetical Rhapsody; but they are quite clearly, as Mr. Bullen has pointed out in his edition of that anthology, by Sir John Davies. Secondly, there is the remark that Donne's famous philosophical satire, "The Progress of the Soul," "is conjectured to have been written not earlier than 1610." But unfortunately it happens that in every one of the seventeenth century editions of the Poems, with the exception of that of 1635, in which it has been misplaced by a printer's error, "The Progress of the Soul" is accompanied by a prefatory epistle in prose, which is headed "Infinitati sacrum 16 August, 1601." There is therefore hardly room for such a conjecture as Mr. Gosse indicates. Far more important, however, than either of these points is the following paragraph on the subject of Donne's religious verse, a very comedy of errors:

"A large number of 'Holy Sonnets,' which Izaak Walton thought had perished, were published in 1669, and several remain still unprinted. They are more properly quatorzains than sonnets, more correct in form than the usual English sonnet of the age—for the octet is properly arranged and rhymed—but closing in the sestet with a couplet. These sonnets are very interesting from the light they throw on Donne's prolonged sympathy with the Roman Church, over which his biographers have been wont to slur. All these 'Holy Sonnets' probably belong to 1617, or the period immediately following the death of Donne's wife. In the light of certain examples in the possession of the present writer, which have not yet appeared in print, they seem to confirm Walton's remark that, though Donne inquired early in life into the differences between Protestantism and Catholicism, yet that he lived until the death of his wife without religion."

Let me briefly correct the several misinterpretations of fact interwoven here. The "Holy Sonnets" which we have of Donne's were not first published in 1669. They were published in the editio princeps of 1633, and reprinted in 1635, 1639, 1649 or 1650, 1654, and finally 1669. There is no proof that these are the "Holy Sonnets" which Izaak Walton "thought had perished." What Izaak Walton really says, writing in 1670, with probably six editions of these sonnets on his shelves, is that Donne wrote a sonnet, which he quotes, to Lady Magdalen Herbert, together with a letter, which he also quotes, in which Donne sends her some "holy hymns and sonnets." And Walton adds, "These hymns are now lost to us, but doubtless they were such as they two now sing in heaven." It is the more probable that the "holy hymns and sonnets" which we possess are not those referred to by Walton, in that this particular sonnet to Lady Magdalen Herbert is not in any of the seventeenth century editions. But if they are the same, Mr. Gosse cannot possibly be right in attributing them to 1617, for it happens that the letter in which Donne encloses them is dated "Mitcham, July 11, 1607." Mr. Gosse's dates are rather apt to give way under him. I come lastly to the final statement of Mr. Gosse's paragraph, which he professes to find in Walton, that Donne "lived until the death of his wife without religion." I can unhesitatingly state that there is nothing bearing the faintest resemblance to such a "remark" either in the 1640, or in the 1658, or in the 1670, or in the 1675 edition of Walton's Life of Donne, nor is it in his verse-elegy on his friend. Nor is it, naturally, in the Compleat Angler. It is absolutely opposed to all that Walton does say about Donne's religious attitude, and it is inconsistent with the fact that he took orders in 1615. I do not know whether the libel on Walton or on Donne is the more grievous.

I have been the more careful to point out this defect in Mr. Gosse's otherwise valuable work, in that I am aware that to many critics it will appear a matter of the slightest importance. Appreciation is more than pedantry; and if the student is helped to feel and think with his poets, he will gain what no Dry-as-dust could ever give him. All which I fully admit, and have, indeed, hinted as much already. But it is generally the case, and Mr. Gosse's remarks on Donne's religious poetry are no exception to the rule, that inaccuracy in the weighing out of mint and anise and cummin leads directly to inaccuracy in the weightier matters of the law. Nor will it, I think, be denied that, if facts that are right are sometimes arid and uninteresting, facts that are wrong are always the very devil. It was open to Mr. Gosse to minimise the amount of solid information contained in his volume. This he did not choose. He tells us in his Preface that he "believes the copious use of dates to be indispensable to rapid and intelligent comprehension of literary history, and he has forced himself to supply as many as possible." Anything more calculated to damage the methods and ideals of University Extension than this slipshod scholarship I cannot imagine. The best friends of that interesting educational experiment must admit that one of its chief dangers is the danger of being superficial. The incomplete information of many of its apostles, the democratic method by which their services are invited, the necessity for "drawing" a paying audience—all these things make it increasingly difficult to keep up a decent level of erudition in the courses delivered. And if such work as Mr. Gosse's is to be held out as a model for imitation, the task will indeed become a hopeless one.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

The Life and Times of James the First, the Conqueror, King of Aragon. By F. Darwin Swift. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS is one of the excellent books which have grown out of the custom of offering prizes at the universities for historical essays on a given subject. It is the more restricted interest in the period that will alone prevent it from taking rank by the side of Mr. Bryce's The Holy Roman Empire. The bibliography prefixed, and the notes throughout, show with what care our author has read up his subject; and this not only in books and printed matter, but by personal research of MSS. in the libraries of Madrid and of the Escorial, and in the archives of Barcelona. Two essential requisites of all true history are particularly well looked to throughout—the chronology and the genealogies.

The book is clearly and carefully written; the only fault, if fault it be, that we should have to find in this respect is in the author's self-restraint. Without in the least detracting from its substantial value, the writer might have allowed himself somewhat more freedom on the picturesque side. The story of En Jaime's conception, even if not literally true, conveys a most striking picture of the manners of the age, and is quite paralleled by the marriage customs consigned in some of the Pyrenean Fueros and Fors. The meeting of two men physically so remarkable as the young En Jaime and Sancho el Fuerte of Navarre might have been more fully described—Jaime with his seven feet of glorious young manhood, Sancho not more than six inches shorter, in the unwieldy corpulence of age, but with the mighty arms that had wrenched asunder the chains at Navas de Tolosa. So, too, the pretty tale of the swallow's nest at Burriana is worth more than a passing notice; and the amusing speech of the king before the pope and cardinals at the Council of Lyons, with its misquotations of Ovid for Scripture, amid the smiles of the audience, might have been more than alluded to. These things really illustrate one side of the character of the sensuous, cruel, passionate, vain, shrewd, sentimental, yet, in some respects, simple-hearted king. On the consideration of his moral character, and the too favourable opinion of himself and of his contemporaries thereon, our author has overlooked the peculiar status in the society of the day of the barragana and her children, as given both in the Fueros and in Las Siete Partidas. The action of James in taking up from the opposite end of the Pyrenees the work of our Henry II., and of Becket, and of Richard I. before he went on the Crusade, of making a kingdom in the south of France, and the motives which compelled him to desist, are very well told, as also are the conquests of the Balearic Isles and of Valencia.

As said above, the book is carefully put together; but I am not sure that the plan of it is of the best, and, when adopted, it should have been disclosed to the reader earlier than on p. 141. There we read:

"The object, so far, of this work has been to set forth, as clearly as possible, the chief incidents—hitherto, in many respects, ill-arranged and imperfectly elucidated—of a long and important reign. It has been said somewhere that the best book which could be written would be a book consisting of premises only, from which the readers should draw their own conclusions; and on this principle the facts of James's life have been allowed to speak for themselves, without being rendered inaudible by a buzz of needless comments."

After this, from p. 149 onwards, a detailed account is given of the machinery, so to say, of James's government and administration, of the laws, commerce, customs, and manners in his dominions. All this is very good, and it is absolutely necessary to any due understanding of "the premises"; but unless the reader has this knowledge beforehand, he will require to turn back and read over again the preceding 150 pages in order to have any intelligent comprehension of them. The older plan, of a preceding sketch of the previous history and institutions to put the reader at a right point of view for understanding what follows, is, I think, preferable on the whole.

I spoke above of the fulness of the list of authorities consulted by the writer, of his examination of documents and archives. He cannot be too highly praised for this. All that relates to the older authorities is excellently done; yet I am obliged to add that, for want of consulting some special and more recent works, little known out of Spain, his view of the legislation is still only partial. The mistake is sometimes made of considering the date of the written code as the date of the origin of the laws themselves. Nowhere can the falsity of such an assumption be better shown than in the history of the legislation of Northern Spain. The laws of Castille and of Catalonia are in great part founded on the Lex Romana Visigothorum, of which the date is known. The Consular cities of Southern France, such as Montpellier, preserved a still purer form of Roman law; but the Fueros of Aragon, the Usatges of Barcelona, and still more the local customs and Fueros, contain traces of laws far older than these. If our author had compared the Fuero of Aragon with the Fuero of Navarre, he could not have written p. 151: "The Code of Aragon was sanctioned, indeed, by the Cortes, but it was initiated by the king and formulated by a body of lawyers." The Fueros of Navarre and Aragon are well nigh identical in their earlier parts, and James could have had nothing to do with the former; the changes or amendments which he introduced were mainly in the direction of feudality, and to the disadvantage of women. Absolute primogeniture, i.e., of the first-born, whether male or female, was the rule in many of the Fueros and Fors throughout the Pyrenees; the provisions mentioned in the note p. 207, were not merely ideal, but actual.

Another fact of which Mr. Swift has taken too little notice is the way in which, throughout Northern Spain, the local Fuero, For, custom, or Derecho, overrode the general Fuero, or law of the country, except in matters of political government, and sometimes even then. And these local Fueros, Derechos, usages, date often long before the written code, some of them even anterior to the introduction of Roman law. For it must not be forgotten that the laws of the civitates were Roman only as regards the Empire; local customs and laws still subsisted contemporaneously with these, and have, in some cases, persisted down, or almost down, to the present day. Thus the House-Community of Upper Aragon could hardly have been introduced there in Roman, or post-Roman times. Compare the mention of the respublicæ in Hübner's Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum (Nos. 4201-4, 257, &c.) with this passage of Bowles's Introducción á la Historia Natural y á la Geografía Física de España (pp. 294-5), written with no knowledge of the inscriptions of the Corpus, and then link together the continuous history of the two:

"Llaman los Vizcainos Republicas á las distintas jurisdicciones de su Provincia, las quales, á excepcion de una Ciudad y pocas Villas, se componen de barriadas dispersas y cascos solitarios que se han situado segun la comodidad de los terrenos y aguas."

There are also distinct traces of custom older still, when individual property was still unknown.

One reason why the Cortes of Aragon failed to preserve their liberties was because they had not the wise provision of the Cortes of Navarre and of the Basque Provinces, whereby the subsidy to the crown was always the last vote taken, after all petitions had been considered, and all wrongs and encroachments of the crown had been redressed. In place of this they put the Justicia, who alone had the defence of the Fuero against royal law and encroachment, and proved far less efficacious.

There are a few slips in the work: e.g., p. 121; it was not Richard of Cornwall, but his son, Henry of Almayne, who was murdered by Gui de Montfort at Viterbo. To a Spanish ear Señor before a baptismal name (Señor Victor Balaguer) instead of Don, is like a Frenchman's Sir Harcourt, instead of Sir William, to our own.

In recommending the use of some more recent works, I do not mean that there are errors in fact to be corrected, but rather that a change in point of view, especially of the legislation, might be the result. As it stands, the history deserves very high commendation, and I sincerely congratulate the author upon it.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Essays on Questions of the Day, Political and Social. By Goldwin Smith. (Macmillans.)

THIS little volume comprises a series of essays, mainly reprinted from periodicals, which differ widely in character and value. The philosophical tone of the first paper contrasts strikingly with the furious spirit in which our author deals with "The Political Crisis in England." This is not the place for detailed discussion on the subject; but it may be said that many of those who most fully appreciate the good work which Mr. Goldwin Smith has done in many directions will regret that he should have republished such unmeasured invectives against Mr. Gladstone as are to be found in the article in question. He can hardly in his calmer moments seriously believe the great Liberal leader to be a mere selfish demagogue. However, there is much better matter than this in other parts of the book.

The opening essay on "Social and Industrial Revolution" contains an able statement of the arguments in favour of individualism, though it seems to minimise the extent to which socialistic principles have already been recognised in legislation. Incidentally it may be noticed that Mr. Goldwin Smith falls into a very common error in speaking of the national workshops at Paris of 1848 as "the creation of the Socialist Louis Blanc." Often as this statement has been repeated, it is, nevertheless, demonstrably inaccurate. We have the distinct and unequivocal denial of Louis Blanc himself, which will be sufficient evidence for all who can appreciate the character of one of the purest and most single-minded of modern Frenchmen, whatever they may think of his views. He thus writes in his Recollections of 1848:—

"That public opinion in Europe should have fastened upon me the charge of being the founder and the organiser of the national workshops—a charge the falsity of which was made so undisguisedly patent—is certainly one of the most extraordinary illustrations of the power of calumny when used as the common weapon of divers hatreds conspiring for the destruction of an idea, in the person of a man."

If confirmation of this statement is required, we may appeal to the testimony of Lamartine, the leader of the Anti-Socialist Republicans, who says of the workshops: "So far from being in the pay of Louis Blanc, as has been said, they were the device of his adversaries."

In treating of "Woman Suffrage," Mr. Goldwin Smith writes in a strain which will cause him to be described by the friends of the measure as an inveterate misogynist; but some of his remarks are none the less worthy of attention. The substantial truth of these words can hardly be denied:—

"The movement in favour of woman suffrage is part of a general attempt to change the relations between the sexes: to set women free from what have been hitherto considered the limitations of her sex, and make her the competitor instead of the helpmate of man."

The author's well-known anti-Semitic views appear conspicuously in the essay on "The Jewish Question," but here again it will be found that he has rather more to say for himself than might be thought. He points out that it is a mistake to ascribe the animosity felt in many countries against the Jews exclusively or even principally to religious bigotry. "The cause of quarrel appears to be economical and social, not religious, or religious only in a secondary degree."

In the article on "The Irish Question," it is to be feared that Mr. Goldwin Smith's political opinions have to some extent warped his historical judgment, in which respects he contrasts unfavourably with Mr. Lecky. It is not that any of his facts are incorrect, but that he seems to select almost entirely such as may give an unfavourable impression of the Irish character in all ages. He certainly draws too dark a picture of the state of Ireland before the Norman invasion, and appears unduly sceptical as to the intellectual culture claimed for the early Celtic Church. A land that in the darkest period of the middle ages produced such a philosophical genius as John Scotus Erigena can hardly have been utterly barbarous. Mr. Goldwin Smith goes to a length which is almost surprising in approval of Cromwell's Irish policy; and when we come across such an apology as the following for the suppression of the Catholic worship, we might almost fancy we were reading an extract from Mr. Froude. "When we consider what the Mass is, what it has done, and how soon the common people would have been weaned from it, we may be rather disposed to wink at this departure from religious liberty." At this curious exhibition of heterodox bigotry, we can only wonder and regret. Mr. Goldwin Smith follows other anti-Irish writers in calling attention to the act of attainder passed by James II.'s Irish parliament against the adherents of William III.; but he does not mention the fact, brought to light by Mr. Lecky, that the English parliament in the same year passed a precisely similar act against James's supporters, which certainly renders it ridiculous to cite this measure as a proof of the exceptional depravity of the Irish nature. It is a much too confident assertion to make when Mr. Goldwin Smith says "that the Union was carried by bribery has been conclusively disproved by Dr. Dunbar Ingram." Mr. Lecky, though his political views coincide with those of Mr. Goldwin Smith on the Irish question of the present day, is by no means so certain about the matter.

The essay on "The Empire" is one of the most thoughtful and valuable in the volume. The author is moderately imperialist with regard to India, but decidedly anti-imperialist in reference to the colonies. The volume concludes with an able discussion of the question "Is the tendency to war declining?" which he inclines on the whole to answer in the affirmative.

In an appendix to the book is reprinted an interesting account, written twenty years ago, of the Oneida community of American Socialists.

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

Bright Celestials. By John Coming Chinaman, with a Preface by Archibald Lamont. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. LAMONT has written a novel of considerable interest and some value. But the interest were more sustained and the value more definite, if he had chosen a less ambiguous method. No one can be expected to take a novel with a purpose quite seriously; for one thing, every side of a debateable question is never fairly declared, for another, the artistic merit of the book is destroyed. Mr. Lamont shows in this book that he could have contrived a real novel of the Flowery Land, but he has preferred to spoil his work by discussions on theological and moral questions. He possesses sufficient knowledge to have written an aggressive essay; but he has weakened his facts and theories by attempting, unduly, to make of them the muscles and sinews of history. Yet he writes with considerable skill, for the book is often easy to read. But it is sad to recognise that it is the work of a man who might have made it altogether a success. Like so many modern novelists, Mr. Lamont needs to be reminded that it is a novelist's duty to write a novel. Theology and social questions have nothing to do with the narrative art. As he has chosen to ignore this time-worn platitude, he must not be annoyed if his facts are often mistaken for fiction and his fiction for fact. Our regret, from a literary point of view, is all the keener because China is a new field for the teller of stories. And he might conceivably have done for it what Kipling has done for India and Loti or Mitford for Japan. He possesses in a notable degree the quality of writing picturesquely, of properly appreciating essentials. To improve on his account of the graduate's funeral would be difficult, it alone redeems the book from the danger of being commonplace. There are other scenes, too, scarcely less striking. Take, for example, his description of a Chinese secret society, quite legitimately woven into the plot; the study of native and coolie life at Singapore and on the tobacco plantations of Deli, all of which are novel and entertaining. Again, the opening pages of the story are ingeniously designed and capably written. They introduce us to strange peoples and customs, and they are full of sympathy—a rare quality in the European writing of Orientals. Quite masterly is the vivid contrast between Punkwi, the Cantonese merchant, and Ming Kiang, the thoughtful, earnest student. Indeed, so much is good that it is impossible to rest satisfied with the novel as it stands. For these people, about whom so much curiosity is awakened, have but little to do with the story they initiate; and their places are but poorly filled by eager, and rather mawkish, missionaries.

Mr. Lamont, it would seem, has had to fight against two contending factions—his sympathies and his religious beliefs. The former would have led him to write a genuine novel, adequate as to narrative, true as to character, truthful as to atmosphere. That he has not done so is due to his inordinate desire to preach, and to thrust his personal fads down the throat of the unwilling reader. Though the jam is of the best, it cannot conceal the bitterness of the powder. The author has a sense of humour, yet he can allow himself to write a death scene that is almost absurd. The young missionary Ball, while he is dying, describes a dream of considerable length, and preaches a sermon long enough to tax the energy of a physically strong man. Moreover, it is quite inadequate, and would never have claimed the respectful consideration of Scholar Wu, whom it is represented as converting to the Christian faith. Conversions throughout the book are too frequent, unreal, and decidedly irritating.

Mr. Lamont cherishes an unpleasant belief in what he calls "the natural resisting deadness of man's heart to spiritual life." So morbid a faith cannot command sympathy, even if it commands respect. Artistically it is criminal; for it leads the author to clog his story with frequent discourses on alien matters, to convert his characters into prigs, and to ruin many of the scenes that might have been effective. Only the villains of the tale smoke opium, for no virtue, we are assured, may be allotted to one indulging in the habit. In a portentous digression we are told that drunkenness

"being more social is a more contagious disease, the drunkard feeling most at home in the company of others like himself. Opium smoking, on the other hand, treats society more as a combination of independent, separate beings. The confirmed opium smoker loves the corner where he may be left to darkness and to himself. He is not so much a social animal as a lover of self and pelf."

It is not possible to discuss the ethics of opium smoking here—a Royal Commission is doing it for us; but it should never be discussed in a novel. One is somewhat astonished, though, after reading the above indictment, to find that its writer has none but kindly feelings towards tobacco. But Mr. Lamont hurls himself into controversial topics at every opportunity. In his chapter headed "The Social Cancer," he touches on a more dangerous subject still, with results yet more unsatisfactory. Of course the Cantonese girl, rescued by the good missionary ladies, has our sympathies, and we feel happier after her escape. The opportunity for a fine piece of dramatic writing was to hand; but Mr. Lamont ignores it, treating the whole matter from a controversial and not very enlightened standpoint. It will convince no one who has thought about the question; it will mystify and rather bore the average novel reader, and it should annoy Mr. Lamont's own followers.

Throughout the book are plentifully strewn tirades against the scientist "who never had a sister," and against the civilian who declares that "missions in the East are a failure and ought not to exist," and who is, naturally, represented as having "no conscience." The Christian faith, as represented by Evangelical missionaries, is damaged by the crudeness of Mr. Lamont's theology, and its exponents are spoken of as heroes, presumably because they are uninteresting. The natives become the sentimental offspring of the author's brain, save those who resist the appeals of the preachers, docked of their nationality in all but name. Admirable, inciting, unique at the beginning, the latter half of the book is weak, confused, dogmatic. Let Mr. Lamont write two new books, one a genuine Chinese novel, the other a study of his favourite subjects, and let him not blond his materials. The novel, at any rate, will be successful.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

NEW NOVELS.

My Child and I. By Florence Warden. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Best of Her Sex. By Fergus Hume. In 2 vols. (W. H. Allen.)

A Devoted Couple. By J. Masterman. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Hetty's Heritage. By Noel Dene. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Standishes of High Acre. By Gilbert Sheldon. In 2 vols. (Cassells.)

Inscrutable. By Esmé Stuart. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

The King of Schnorrers. By I. Zangwill. (Heinemann.)

MISS FLORENCE WARDEN certainly deserves the reputation she has acquired. Ever since the appearance of The House on the Marsh, her novels have been eagerly read; and, though subsequent performances have occasionally been disappointing, we are now and then gratified by a production first-rate of its kind. My Child and I is one of this class. A girl, born and bred in affluence, is reduced, on the death of her father, to penury, and has to serve as assistant to her aunt, who keeps a private hotel off the Strand. A man of worthless character secures her affections and marries her, but dies before her child is born. As the deceased husband appears to have had a wife living all the while, the aunt thinks herself justified in contriving to spirit the child away, under pretence of its death, in the hope of securing a more successful second marriage for her niece. Twenty years afterwards, Perdita Farbrace, the niece, who has now married a rich city man, learns the deceit which has been practised upon her, and after frantic efforts discovers, as she thinks, her long-lost child, who turns out to be even a greater scamp than his father. Here the pathetic interest of the story comes in. Her new-found son sponges upon her until she hardly knows where to turn for money, openly robs her, and finally murders her husband and destroys a will which the latter has framed for the express purpose of guarding his wife, when she becomes his widow, from the chance of being further imposed upon by the scoundrel. But, proud and sensitive woman as she is, nothing shakes her affection for the child she has found; and even when he turns out not to be her son at all, she still accords to him a sneaking preference over the model young man who owns her as mother. It is a capital story.

We congratulate Mr. Fergus Hume upon having abandoned the schoolboy line of fiction, and set himself to work upon a tale which will be sure to meet with acceptance, and which is in many ways an improvement upon nearly all his previous performances. The Best of Her Sex is a thoroughly artistic production. As its main theme is the foisting of a sham medicine, named T'ho, for the cure of nervous disorders upon the public, its appearance at this time has an appropriateness which will to many be a further recommendation. There is a laudable paucity of characters in the story. We have only Jocelyn Lorraine, a Bloomsbury physician; Dick Lorraine, his brother, a backwoodsman, sharper, and general adventurer; Sir Melancthon Brege, an agreeable but good-for-nothing and selfish old gentleman in reduced circumstances; his daughter Beatrice, an invertebrate and foolish young person; and Hetty Leskins, her companion. The main interest of the story is created by the cool villainy of Dick Lorraine, his adroit enlistment of Sir Melancthon as a partner in his scheme, the audacious introduction of T'ho—a worthless South American plant—as a specific for all nervous disorders, and the skill with which its sale is promoted. Mr. Hume's descriptive powers have seldom appeared to better advantage than in this amusing book.

The gambols of the nursery and prattle of the schoolroom, however faithfully recorded, are not subjects which afford sustained amusement to the mature mind; and when spread over a large portion of three volumes, as in A Devoted Couple, they become wearisome. Mr. and Mrs. Vernon, the "devoted couple," have six sons, whose ages range from nineteen downwards, when we are first introduced to them; their friends, the Marleons, have three daughters, likewise in statu pupillari; and other youthful scions also appear frequently on the scene. A feature of the story is the extreme respectability and virtue of its characters. With the exception of one wicked uncle, there is not a man, woman, or child who might not be fitly decorated with a medal for perfect propriety of conduct, and almost the only trace of the Old Adam that can be discovered is in the case of the youthful Harold Vernon, who develops a propensity for frightening his little brother with bogey stories. Any notice of the book would be incomplete which did not call attention to the amazing carelessness of the writer. The mention of a Tripos at Oxford may be allowed as a pardonable blunder, nor does it matter much that Miss Leicester is often alluded to as Miss Lester. But that a respectable missionary, named Lathom, should every now and then appear as Lambton is a gratuitous piece of mystification; nor is it at all apparent why Miss Constantia Marleon, having accepted Lieutenant Osborne in one chapter, should in the next be found wedding Mr. Lathom (alias Lambton); whilst her sister Titania, who was about the same time betrothed to Mr. "Lambton," should "become Mrs. Osborne in the early winter." There are other blunders scarcely less astounding than the above.

Hetty's Heritage is a work of rather mixed merit. The characters are well drawn, and stand out vividly. The half-sisters, Hetty Morris and Joan Delmaine, afford an excellent contrast. On the other hand, the story is crowded with characters playing subordinate parts and not very interesting ones; the writer shows great carelessness in occasional expressions and sentences, e.g., "truth is always a more trenchant weapon than mendacity"; and there is a provokingly frequent recurrence of platitudes and truisms, such as, "These were small matters in themselves, but so much depends on the How, When, and Where in this life; that which to some people is a very trivial occurrence means a stupendous event to others." However, the book ends well, and may be perused with pleasure, even if it does make us wish that the author had bestowed more pains on the dialogue and less on instructive remarks.

The anatomy of madness is not the most healthy or desirable subject-matter for a novel; and persons of morbid temperament are not recommended, especially if insanity is endemic in their family, to turn to The Standishes of High Acre for light reading. A more gruesome and depressing book could hardly be found on the shelves of any library. The Standishes farm their own freehold land, acquired during the Civil War at the expense of a county family named Arundell, whose lands are intersected by the Standish property. These Standishes are a doomed race. Every member of the race who lives at High Acre goes mad. For several generations the madness of the Standishes has assumed two distinct shapes. Some have believed themselves to be Satan, and have gone hopping about on all fours seeking—like that roaring lion—to devour, in a literal sense, their neighbours, until knocked on the head or shot by persons they have assailed. Another set murder their wives, and then commit suicide. To the latter class belongs Ralph Standish, the subject of the present tale—at all events, he believes he belongs to it, and his progressive stages of mental inequilibrium are the main theme of the narrative. As nearly the whole of the dramatis personae get killed off before the end of the book, Ralph himself furnishing matter for the absolutely last page by dying of cold and exhaustion in the middle of a swamp, it may be imagined that the story is not a very lively one, though it must be admitted that the writing is powerful and dramatic.

The latest work written by Esmé Stuart differs considerably from those we have been accustomed to. Until now we have usually been entertained with narratives of half-hearted swains, who desert their first loves for something they imagine they like better, and are only brought to their senses in the last chapter. There is nothing of this sort in the pages of Inscrutable. It is a downright realistic story, full of mystery right up to the end, and comprising, among other features, a good old-fashioned house, with sliding panels and secret passages, and large secret rooms, the latter adorned with fabulously rich Eastern tapestry and tenanted by a prisoned maiden, with other familiar accessories of melodrama. The reader must be prepared for a considerable tax upon his credulity in perusing the narrative. Lancelot Dighton arrives at the house of his uncle—Garrick Bloodworth—an ordinary house, forming part of a Cathedral Close—and is shown the rooms from top to bottom by his relative. Yet after living there for some time he discovers whole suites of large apartments, the existence of which he had never suspected. Marvellous appearances and disappearances of persons take place; and the explanation of the mystery, when it does come, depends upon such complicated problems of family history that it is scarcely intelligible and might almost as well have been omitted. This author's works have come before the world during the last few months with such rapidity as to suggest the possible existence of a whole deskful of fiction that has been awaiting a favourable moment for publication. If this is so, we should judge Inscrutable to be one of the earliest written members of the group; certainly it bears marks of crudeness that are not noticeable in other novels by the same hand.

On the principle of cuique in sua arte credendum, we must take for granted that Mr. Zangwill has given us a faithful picture of Jewish customs and intercourse in The King of the Schnorrers, which deals with the habits of professional Jewish beggars, the date of the events recorded being the end of the last century. The author's intention is, he tells us, to "incarnate the floating traditions of the Jewish Schnorrer, who is as unique among beggars as Israel among nations." There are nearly a score of other short stories in the book, all worth reading, and many of them uncommonly amusing.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

SOME SCOTCH BOOKS.

Convivial Caledonia. By Robert Kempt. (Chapman & Hall.) It must be allowed that Mr. Kempt has made a readable little book out of wonderfully slight and easily accessible materials. A number of the conventional good stories he tells are familiar as "chestnuts." Who, for example, in Scotland, or for that matter in England, has not heard of the Edinburgh physician who, prone to drinking too much at dinner, characterised himself as "Drunk, by Jove," when trying to feel the pulse of a lady patient, and subsequently received from her a bank note for a hundred pounds as hush-money for "discovering the unfortunate condition in which she was when he last visited her"? Some of Mr. Kempt's explanations, too, give one the impression of being rather superfluous. Take for example that—it follows close upon the heels of the anecdote just mentioned—of Pleydell's statement to Mannering "we sat birling till I had a fair tappit hen under my belt." Mr. Kempt tells with becoming gravity that "a tappit hen was a pewter measure or stoup holding three quarts of claret served from the tap with the figure of a hen upon the lid." Had Mr. Kempt gone very seriously into the subject indicated by his title he might have produced a work quite as exhaustive, and perhaps quite as interesting, as Mr. T. F. Henderson's Old-World Scotland; but he has probably cared simply to interest and amuse the hurried modern public, which likes books small, and not too profound. He has been wise in his generation in prattling about "Bon Accord," "Auld Reekie," "Pains and Penalties for Drunkenness in the Fifteenth and Seventeenth Centuries," "Highland Inns," "Convivial Haunts of Robert Burns," "The Ettrick Shepherd and Tibbie Shiels," and "Sir Walter Scott's Landlords and Landladies." This is a work about which at once the best and the fittest that can be said is the old commendation—that it is a book that can be taken up at odd moments, at least by Scotchmen who are not ashamed of the habits of their grandfathers.

Byways of the Scottish Border. By George Eyre-Todd. (Selkirk: James Lewis.) It cannot be said that there is anything exceptional in the character of Mr. Eyre-Todd's poetically passionate pilgrimage, or in his experiences as he travelled. In the autumn of 1886 he and an artist friend spent some ten days walking by easy stages from Moffat eastward through the best known section of the Border country. He wrote articles descriptive of his wanderings in various periodicals, and these with illustrations—reproductions from water-colours—he now prints under one cover. Mr. Eyre-Todd is pleasantly realistic, gently enthusiastic, and has any number of quotations from Scott, Hogg, and Wordsworth at his finger ends. Such of the titles of Mr. Eyre-Todd's chapters, such as "In the Wizard's Country," "By Lone St. Mary's," "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," and "Flodden's Fatal Field," indicate the general character of his subjects, which are treated in a flowing style that not unfrequently rises into prose poetry. Mr. Eyre-Todd is perhaps seen at his best and quietest in such sketches as "The Gypsy Capital"—Yetholm—and the final "East of the Ballad Country." This is a book which is certain to be popular because of the agreeable blending which it supplies of graphic description, legendary information, and historical narrative.

In Rosneath, Past and Present (Alexander Gardner), Mr. W. C. Maughan has given an interesting account of a peninsula which forms one of the most beautiful portions of what is very comprehensively known as the "Clyde scenery." Perhaps some Scottish stalwarts may find in his volume a little too much of "God bless the Duke of Argyll," who, feudally speaking, has dominated the peninsula for a considerable period; and even others, artistically rather than politically hypercritical, may think Mr. Maughan might very well have done without the poem by Lord Lorne which takes the place of a preface. It is an eminently respectable and (domestically) pious performance; but as it contains no lines which rise above the level of

"He who rode through Party's phases, borne aloft o'er sneers and slanders
As he rode with poet's praises through the Frenchmen's ranks in Flanders."

it can hardly be questioned quite epoch-making. But there is no question as to the influence of the Argyll family in the Rosneath peninsula, and having to deal with and publish facts, Mr. Maughan could not ignore it. He properly bestows a good deal of pains on the ecclesiastical history of the peninsula. It is not far from Row, one of whose parish ministers, Macleod Campbell, was a famous "heretic" in his time. The parish minister of Rosneath, Robert Story, was a personal friend of Campbell, and would appear to have been influenced by him to some extent. But, apart from his connection with Campbell, Story was obviously an admirable example of the quiet, thoughtful, yet hard-working country minister. He was succeeded in his parish by his son, Robert Henry Story, who subsequently became one of the Professors in the Faculty of Divinity at Glasgow, and has this year been nominated to the Moderatorship of the General Assembly, in which he had already won a high position as a debater. Mr. Maughan's handsome book is, in all respects, a painstaking performance.

Barneraig, by Gabriel Setoun (John Murray), is a most promising, unpretentious, and delightful book, dealing with certain of the quieter phases of life in the Scotland rather of yesterday than of to-day. It is farther to the credit of the young author who writes under the pseudonym of "Gabriel Setoun" that he is no imitator—of Mr. Barrie or of anyone else. It is an attempt to reproduce, by means of photographs, a village which still exists—and not simply as a type—but which is "no more than a street and wynds; a somewhat muddy harbour at one end, and a retiring inn at the other." Barneraig as a harbour (on the Fifeshire coast) in which Dutch-built ships are still to be found, has, no doubt, had a history, but at the period of which Gabriel Setoun writes it was dominated by a colliery; and a considerable portion of the book is taken up with the conversations on persons, politics, religion, philanthropy, of the villagers—most of them have charmingly inappropriate nicknames—at their various corners for conference after the conclusion of the day's work, such as the "Haw Head" and the "Cox'l." The life depicted in Barneraig differs, therefore, from life as it has been given in other books dealing with Scotland which have recently been published, although it too is all compact of humour and pathos. Practical jokes, love, prosaic and very much the reverse, and such incidents of village life as electing a precentor, have all their proper place here, and are all adequately treated. It is not easy to choose for commendation from among stories all of which are excellent; but the pathos of "For Her Sake," which is the story of a miner's self-sacrifice, and the dry humour of "A Prosaic Romance," telling of an apparently happy marriage, may well be contrasted. Gabriel Setoun ought surely to be able to write a readable Scotch novel.

Michael Lamont, Schoolmaster, by Jessie Patrick Findlay (Hodder & Stoughton), is one of those agreeable works of fiction which appear, from the character of their contents, to inform their readers that, like well-known Scotch books of the type of Christopher North's Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life, they are at least based upon fact. The book looks all the more real that the leading character in it is anything but heroic. One sometimes feels that Will Lamont, the steady lad who in course of time develops into a capable professor of botany, should have been given the place of honour, and not the vain, volatile, tipling Michael, who has to abandon all his ambitions in life and love, and to be content to spend his days as parish schoolmaster of Portmoak, with the somewhat commonplace Nan, and not the brilliant Phyllis, by his side. And yet whoever knows Scotch country life is quite aware that Michael is more truly "national" than Will. This book is, in fact, "a study in temptations" of a very matter-of-fact and non-Hobbesian type. The drawing of the minor (the ostensibly minor) characters, such as Dr. Winter, the worthy clergyman, and old Weaver Lamont, Michael's shrewd, sarcastic father, is perfect.

Ballads of Bairnhood, selected and edited by Robert Ford (Alexander Gardner), is one of the best and at the same time most discriminating selections of poems dealing with a particular subject which has ever been published. Starting with Whittier's dictum,

"Childhood has had its litanies
In every age and clime,"

Mr. Ford goes right through Scotch poetical literature in search of poems dealing with child-life. Rather singularly, perhaps, the majority of the giants of that literature appear to have steered clear of the nursery. Burns and Hogg are represented in this collection by only one poem apiece; Dunbar, Ramsay, and Robert Ferguson are not represented at all. Some of the best, if not positively the best, of Scotch song-writers are men who may fairly be considered of the present generation, such as Mr. Alexander Anderson—it may be doubted if there has ever been published anything of its kind better than "Jamie's Wee Chair"—although Delta Moir's "Casa Wappy" remains without a superior, if not without an equal, in point of tenderness and pathos.

"Thy bright brief day knew no decline,
'Twas cloudless joy;
Sunrise and night alone were thine—
Beloved boy!"

Child-worship is undoubtedly one of the features or fashions of our time: it has, indeed, gained in favour as love between man and woman has become the plaything of farce, or the subject of a Bourget analytic. It has, of course, its weaknesses: it has undoubtedly a tendency to encourage "bairniness," which is even worse than femininity, in man. But, as exhibited in Mr. Ford's volume, there is nothing weak, morbid, or exaggerated in the love indicated by Scotch mothers and fathers—at all events, belonging to the classes in whose case life must be regarded as a perpetual keeping of death at arms' length. Mr. Ford has, necessarily, included in his book a good deal of verse which cannot justly be described as first-class, but, on the other hand, he has not reproduced anything which is absolutely inferior. Among the best productions are those of Mr. R. L. Stevenson, Mr. Alexander Anderson, Mr. William Freeland, and Mr. George MacDonald.

Poems. By James Thomson, Weaver of Kenleith. (Constable.) This is a new and very handsome edition of a small volume of poems that was first published in 1801. The author was a respectable weaver who, born four years after Burns, plied his trade and brought up his family in Kenleith, a little village some six miles west of Edinburgh. There is an air of reality about all his poems, whether descriptive or mildly humorous, which will give them a certain value in the eyes of any who are interested in investigating Scotch poetry after Burns. His original biographer and editor said cautiously but truly, "His poems on Summer, Winter, and Spring, though short, contain a number of minute descriptions interspersed with moral sentiments, conveyed in simple and natural language." His philosophy is the "contented wi' little and canty wi' mair" of "the late Mr. Robert Burns" as Thomson describes his contemporary, whom he survived fully a generation. The "bite" of his sarcasm may be judged by this epigram:

"Ye doctors, use your greatest care
Your patients' lives a while to spare;
On this alone depends your wealth,
To keep alive, though not in health."

MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER has issued a new and revised edition of his Ballad Minstrelsy of Scotland and a third edition of his Songs of Scotland. They are both of the thesaurus character; and, being handsome and yet handy volumes, well supplied with introductions and notes, they ought to be found valuable for purposes of consultation, especially in a period of hurry and titbits like the present.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON will publish early next week Lord Walseley's Life of Marlborough, which has been so long announced, and of which the preface is dated June, 1893. The present instalment consists of two large volumes; but it steps with the death of William III., when Marlborough was already fifty-two years of age, but had still his reputation to win as a great general. It is abundantly illustrated with portraits, and with several sketches of the old manor-house of Ash in which Marlborough was born.

MR. SWINBURNE'S new volume, Astrophel and other Poems, is also to be published next week.

THE speeches and addresses of the late Earl of Derby, which have already been printed for private circulation, will be published shortly by Messrs. Longmans & Co. in two volumes. They have been selected and edited by Mr. T. H. Sanderson and Mr. E. S. Roscoe, and Mr. W. E. H. Lecky contributes a prefatory memoir.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS have in hand a new History of Germany by Dr. E. F. Henderson (already known for his volume of Select Historical Documents), who has for years been busied with his subject. The first volume will extend to the year 1272, and ought to fill a gap in our historical literature. The history of the middle ages in Germany was, practically, the history of the whole continent of Europe; and a careful delineation of the rise and fall of the great medieval Roman Empire has never yet been attempted in English.

THE Unpublished Letters of Count Cavour to Mme. Circourt will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. in a few days. The Countess de Circourt was well known a generation ago as one of the last of those ladies whose salons played so important a part in French—it may also be said in European—society and politics. Of all her friends and correspondents, none was more eminent than the great statesman to whom Italy owes her existence as a kingdom. The letters have been translated by Mr. A. J. Butler.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces An Unrecorded Chapter of the Indian Mutiny, being the personal reminiscences of Reginald G. Wilberforce, late Fifty-Second Light Infantry, compiled from a diary and letters written at the time. The book will be illustrated.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately a book by Mr. John Rae, entitled Eight Hours for Work.

In the course of next month, My Paris Note Book, by the author of "An Englishman in Paris," will be published by Mr. Heinemann. It treats chiefly of the political personages and the social conditions of Paris since the war of 1870, and is, as might be imagined, full of anecdote and gossip.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK will publish shortly Hertfordshire during the Great Civil War and the Long Parliament, by Mr. Alfred Kingston. The book will embrace three parts—a general narrative of events in Herts and neighbouring counties; the leaders in the strife; and the effects of the war upon public life.

MR. R. E. M. PEACH, the historian of Bath and its neighbourhood, has just finished a new book on the Life and Times of Ralph Allen, "the Man of Bath," to which is prefixed a brief notice of the early history of the two parishes of Lyncombe and Widcombe. The volume will be illustrated with a reproduction of Hoare's portrait, and a view of the mansion of Prior Park. It will be published by Mr. Charles J. Clark, of Lincoln's Inn Fields.

AMONG the new volumes in the "New Library of Ireland" will be a Short Life of Thomas Davis, by the editor-in-chief, Sir Charles Gavan Duffy.

FOLLOWING just one year after Marlborough, Rossall will celebrate its jubilee this summer. In connexion with that event, a History of the School has been written by Mr. J. F. Rowbotham, formerly captain, afterwards scholar of Balliol, and well known by his books on music. Besides chronological annals of the school, it will give biographical notices of masters and boys, records of games, and anecdotes and traditions. It will also be illustrated with views and portraits. The publisher is Mr. John Heywood, of London and Manchester.

MRS. PIATT'S poems will shortly be issued in two volumes by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. These two volumes will comprise all the author's verses hitherto published in this country—with the exception of those contained in An Enchanted Castle and Other Poems, the collection of her pieces referring to Ireland that appeared last year—but with many additional ones.

MR. HALL CAINE has contributed an appreciation of Charles Whitehead to a new edition of Mr. Mackenzie Bell's book about that author, with extracts from his writings, which Messrs. Ward, Lock and Bowden are about to publish. Some of Whitehead's letters, and recollections of his career in Melbourne, will be given by Mr. James Smith, a veteran Australian author.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish early in May a novel by Miss Ella Hepworth Dixon, entitled The Story of a Modern Woman.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER will publish at an early date, a novel, William Blacklock, Journalist, by Mr. T. Banks Mac-lachlan, editor of The Weekly Scotsman. It is a story of an ambitious young Borderer's career on the press and in love. Most of the press scenes are drawn from real life; likewise more than one of the principal characters—notably the talented and eccentric "Dandy" Russell, formerly editor of the Scotsman. The localities are all in Scotland.

THE forthcoming volume of the "Anglo-American Library of Fiction," to be published on May 1, will be Girls of a Feather: A story of New York society life, by Amelia E. Barr.

THE late Talbot Baines Reed left in a practically finished state a story, which will shortly be published, under the title of Kilgorman, by Messrs. Nelson & Sons. Mr. John Sime has seen the work through the press, and has prefixed a short memoir of the author; and Mr. J. Williamson, whose illustrations to the "Dryburgh Scott" are familiar, is illustrating the story. We hear also that a fund has been collected by friends of Mr. Reed for the purchase of a library of two or three hundred volumes of boys' books, which is to be presented to the Literary and Scientific Institution at Highgate, where Mr. Reed lived and died.

MR. HALL CAINE will take the chair at the annual Shakspeare Birthday Dinner, which is to be held at Anderson's Hotel next Monday.

COLLECTORS of Ruskin's first editions will hear with interest that a third copy of his pamphlet entitled The Queen's Gardens has been discovered, and is now in the possession of Miss Millard, of Teddington. Of the other two copies known to survive, one is in the Ashley Library (Mr. T. J. Wise), and the other is in the Rylands Collection at Manchester.

WE observe that the authorised American edition of Mrs. Humphry Ward's Marcella is published in two small duodecimo volumes, in a box, at the price of two dollars.

THE American papers record the death of a novelist named "Jane Austin."

ON Monday and Tuesday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell what are apparently two separate collections of autographs, both of an historical rather than a literary character. One is of a general nature: we can only mention that it includes twelve quarto pages by Bossuet, relating to the negotiations at Rome for the liberties of the Gallican Church. The other is confined to letters and other documents connected with the Napoleonic War. The admirals, from Nelson to Sidney Smith, are specially well represented.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE National Review for May will contain an article by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, reviewing the Home Rule movement since 1886, and summarising the present situation.

MR. WILLIAM GRAHAM, who recently caused some stir by his Clermont conversations, will contribute to the May number of The New Review an article on "Keats and Severn," which will contain certain fresh facts and reflections upon the poet.

THE Newbery House Magazine has changed hands. The May number will for the first time bear the imprint of Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co., of Bedford-street, who will publish it for the future. Although the connexion with Newbery House has ceased, the title will for the present remain unaltered.

New and Old, the popular parish magazine, has been taken over from Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co. by the Religious Review of Reviews, Limited, and will be published by them at 34, Victoria-street. Many new features will be introduced.

The May number of The Woman at Home will contain an illustrated interview with Paderewski, by the Baroness von Zedlitz; and an article on "Two Rothschild Homes in Bucks," by Mr. W. J. Laey.

DR. CONAN DOYLE is to write a series of articles for Great Thoughts, of which the first will appear on May 5.

THE Rev. E. A. Stuart will contribute the second of a series of papers on "The Gospel for All" to Home Words for May.

MANY years ago the Rev. J. Jackson Wray founded a popular monthly under the title of Good Company, which after his death was conducted by his daughter, Miss Marion E. Jackson Wray. She has just retired from its editorship, but will commence with May a new magazine under the title, Round the Hearthstone.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. I. GOLLANCZ will deliver four courses of lectures this term at Cambridge, in connexion with the special board for mediaeval and modern languages—on "Gawain and the Grene Knight," on "Elizabethan Literature," on "Shakspeare," and on "Milton and Dryden."

THE two new lectureships in modern languages at Edinburgh have been filled up as follows: M. Charles Saclea, in French; and Herr Otto Schlapp, in German.

TWO courses of lectures are to be delivered this term at University College, London, in the department of archaeology, each illustrated by lime-light. Mr. Ernest Melvill Bonus will give seven lectures on "The Ruins and Remains of Rome," on Tuesdays at 11.30 a.m., beginning on April 24; and Prof. R. S. Poole will give six lectures on "The Mediaeval Archaeology of the East," on Thursdays at 11.30 a.m., beginning on May 10. At the close of the session, there will be an examination in both courses.

IN connexion with the University Extension Society, a course of three lectures on "Leonardo da Vinci" will be given by Mr. Roger Fry at Chelsea Town Hall, on Mondays at 3 p.m., beginning on April 23. We understand that a complete sessional course on Italian art is being arranged for October.

THE fourth course of Turnbull Lectures at Johns Hopkins University has just been delivered by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton, his subject being "Dante."

WE congratulate the Rev. C. W. Boase on having completed Part II. of his Registrum Collegii Exoniensis (Oxford: printed at Baxter's Press), which forms a handsome quarto of just 400 pages. It contains an alphabetical list of all the Commoners, or members of the college not on the foundation, from the earliest times. As the first Caution Book begins only in 1629, and the Matriculation Book not till 1768, the earlier names have had to be taken from the University Registers (which Mr. Boase himself edited for the Oxford Historical Society), or from second-hand sources of information. It is only thus that we can associate with Exeter College Archbishop Courtenay in the fourteenth century, and Sir John Fortescue in the fifteenth. Both of these happen to be good examples of those West country gentle-folk, with which this book abounds. On the very first page, we find 12 Aclands, though none of the present generation; the Carews, Careys, and Carys together number 29; the Chichesters (now, we fear, an extinct family, at least in their old home), 19; the Courtenays and Courtneys, 18; the Drakes, 25; the Fortescues, 27; the Heles, 27; and—to pass rapidly to the end—the Yeos, 19. Taking individual names, it would seem that Exeter College was strongly represented in parliament, on the bench, and at the bar in Stuart times. We have noticed Sir John Eliot, Sir Bevil Grenville, Attorney-General Noye, Sir George Treby, and Serjeant Maynard. In literature the most conspicuous names are Joseph Glanvill and Mathew Tindall, though there are also a goodly number of antiquaries. Otherwise interesting are the father of the Wesleys (who seems to have spelt his name Westley), the father of Sir Joshua Reynolds, and the father of Martin Tupper. Finally, we must call Mr. Boase's attention to a distressing confusion between two contemporary painters on p. 167.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

HEATHER BURNING.

A LINE of hills, grey coombs of leafless oak,
Grey heights of wintry heath, are veiled in grey,
Because the heather-burners' cloud of smoke
Lies everywhere upon the tranquil day.

The sea is lost in gulf of dimmest space,
Where day or night is not, nor world nor sky;
Only a fringe of foam the eye may trace,
And ear receive a long-drawn rushing sigh.

Between grey hills and surf of hidden sea
The April meadows lie in ganzy air;
And, adding to the haze on all the lea,
The trees a haze of their own weaving wear.

The roadside elms like raindrops in suspense
Their pale-green buds on branch and suckers hold;
Between the fields each common osier fence
Is clad in shining mist of grey or gold.

The silver shafts of beeches in the copse
Spread forth long feathers, beaded, golden brown;
And brown upon the tangled alder tops
The catkin pennons hang, a faded crown.

And all the hues in this faint smoke are pale;
The pallid sunbeams fall and cast no shade;
Like bride's fresh beauty seen through filmy veil,
The lush spring colours glow, yet seem to fade.

Only the tint of air adds gleam more bright
To blackthorn's a creat of pearl in brake and hedge;
In cottage yards the pear is beaming white,
Full-blossomed, by white walls and roofs of sedge.

Aa, drowsy with faint scent of burning peat,
The birds pipe soft, and softly go and come;
Grey sheep are chewing cud of grasses sweet;
Bees by the willow blossoms suck and hum.

Alleles is still, except on low dim shore
The wave runs white and draws its tuneful breath,
And sea-gulls in the murky aught scar,
To wheel about the coombs and lofty heath.

J. L. DOUGALL.

Porlock Weir: April 4.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Altpreussische Monatsschrift for 1893 the principal articles of the last three quarterly parts deal with Kant. In the Heft for April—June, and that for July—September, Dr. Reicke continues his publication of the "Loose Leaves" from Kant's remains, from which he has already furnished so much material towards the minute history of Kant's later development. The subjects discussed in the present instalments belong to jurisprudence and ethics. In the concluding part for the year, Dr. E. Arnoldt gives a detailed and annotated list of the philosopher's lectures between the years 1755 and 1796. A shorter paper in the April Heft gives an address by O. Schöndörffer on Kant's definition of genius. Among the other articles, which touch on local history, folk-lore, and archaeology, may be mentioned two by C. Beckherrn (in parts 3 and 4 respectively) on remarkable stones in East and West Russia (such stones being of monumental or legendary fame) and on the Wiesenburg (site of an old fortress of the Teutonic Order); papers by Treichel, Bonk, and Sembrzycki in part 2, in continuation or correction of former contributions; by X. Froelich in part 3, on the domestic politics of Grandenz in 1640, and by G. Conrad on the arms of the town of Soldau; in part 4 by P. Simson, on the language of the Ferber Chronicle. The usual bibliography (of more than provincial interest) for 1892 forms a supplement to the volume.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- JENZIO, L. Adam als Erzieher. Stuttgart: Lutz. 1 M. 60 Pf.
JOUBERT, J. Endahabih du Caire aux Cataractes. Paris: Dentu. 7 fr. 50 c.
LEONÉ, Ludovic. Le Poète Théodore Aubanel: récit d'un témoin de sa vie. Avignon: Aubanel. 3 fr. 50 c.
MAYER, R. Das Sinken der Grundrente u. dessen mögliche soziale u. politische Folgen. Wien: Doll. 2 M. 50 Pf.
FRANZ, la Col. Topographie et défense des Alpes françaises. Paris: Foulard. 25 fr.
ROCHESSEN, J. Reichsgold od. Weltgeld. Berlin: Pott-kammer. 3 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- GBELL, Stéphane. Essai sur le règne de l'empereur Domitian. Paris: Thorin. 10 fr.
LÉMAN, Joseph. Napoléon 1er et les Israélites: la pondérance juive. 2<sup>e</sup> partie (1806—1815). Paris: Lecoffre. 5 fr.
NYS, Ernest. Les origines du droit international. Paris: Thorin. 10 fr.
REUSCH, F. H. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Jesuitenordens. München: Beck. 5 M.
STROHLER, Gaston. Le Maréchal Oudinot, duc de Reggio, d'après les Souvenirs inédits de la Maréchale. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
TROMA, W. Die colonisatorische Thätigkeit des Klosters Leabus im 12. u. 13. Jahrh. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY, ETC.

- ALBERT, Jeanne d'. Mémoires et poésies de, p.p. le Baron Alphonse de Ruble. Paris: Em. Paul. 7 fr. 50 c.
BONTOFFER, A. Die Ethik des Stoikers Epictet. Stuttgart: Enke. 10 M.
LEVAURE, E. Lexique géographique du monde entier. Fasc. 1. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 1 fr. 50 c.
LOCARD, Armand. Les Coquilles terrestres de France. Paris: Baillière. 15 fr.
PELNER, P. Introduction à l'étude des mollusques. Bruxelles: Lamertin. 6 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BACKHAUS, A. Der Gedankengang im 1. Buche d. Platonischen Staates. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
BOISSIER, Alf. Documents assyriens relatifs aux présages. T. 1. 1<sup>re</sup> partie. Paris: Bouillon. 12 fr.
HOLDER, A. Alt-celtischer Sprachschatz. 5. Lfg. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
JON, L. Le présent et ses dérivés dans la conjugaison latine. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MANUFACTURE OF SURNAMES (ESPECIALLY JEWISH SURNAMES) IN TIMES PAST AND PRESENT.

Sydenham Hill: April 8, 1894.

I recently saw in a newspaper the announcement that a German named Pranz, residing in England, had determined to give an English complexion to his name by changing it to Prance. Here there is a great similarity in sound, but none, that I am aware of, in sense. In other cases, however, the name adopted in a foreign land is a translation, or partial translation, of the original name, and may be added to it or substituted for it. Thus the well-known Blanco-White added the White when he settled in England; my father had it from himself. In the case of Mr. Beerbohm-Tree, or Tree alone, as he sometimes prefers to style himself, it is well known that his name originally was Beerbohm (= pear-tree in L.-G.; see Pott, 2nd edition, p. 104); and the translation of the second half (i.e., "tree") was added to the name.* A friend of mine, again, whose name has long been Clark, tells me he is of a Huguenot family, and that his name was originally Leclerc; and his French origin, though dating back something like two hundred years, is still manifest in his face. The late Dr. Schiller-Szinessy, too, for many years Reader in Rabbinic and Talmudic Literature in the University of Cambridge, came by his second name in this way. He was a Hungarian; and in 1848 the Hungarian Government decreed that every German surname in Hungary must be turned if possible, or as far as possible, into an equivalent Hungarian name. Now Schiller in German denotes that changing of colour which, when seen in certain stuffs, has obtained the name of shot, and Szinessy is the word which most nearly represents this meaning in Hungarian; and so it came about that for the last forty odd years of his life Dr. Schiller had Szinessy (pronounced Sinnesh-y) tacked on to his original name. And, indeed, his first name, Schiller, was not a German name like that of his great namesake, in whom the varying vein of the poet was accidentally, but not inaptly, denoted by his name. No, it too was a made-up name, as many Jewish Christian surnames are. I use "Christian" advisedly, because every Jew has, or ought to have, two sets of names, the one for Jewish, the other for Christian use. To the Christian world Dr. Schiller-Szinessy was known by that name; but his real Jewish name was, if I remember right, Sh'lomoh ben Meir, and by this name only (or principally) he would have been designated in any deed drawn up between him and another Jew.† But, to take up my thread anew, his ancestors lived centuries ago in Spain; and while there they were known to the Spaniards under the name Shil, which had, so far at least as the termination goes, a sufficiently Spanish sound. Now this Shil (in Hebrew letters שִׁיל) was made up of the initial letters of the first three words of the four שְׁמִי יְהוָה לִנְגְדִי (תמיד) which form the first half of Ps. xvi. 8, and of which the meaning is, "I have set Jehovah before me

* In one case, at any rate, the addition of the translation of the first word was purely accidental. I allude to the name Benson, in which "sen" is the translation of the Hebrew ben, and yet I am sure that the first person who bore the name (unless, indeed, he were a Jew, which is not likely) knew nothing more about the matter than that he was the son of a man named Ben = Benjamin.

† He dropped the ben, and used these two Jewish names as "Christian" names to his double surname.

(continually).” When the family was chased out of Spain and took refuge in a German-speaking country, probably Austria, they turned the Shil into the more German-looking Schill, and this, with er added, produced the thoroughly German name Schiller. This is no fancy tale, as I myself used to think when I first heard it from Dr. Schiller. Since then, I have come across several other names belonging to Jewish families, and German in appearance, but really made up in a similar way. Thus the names Back and Bach, especially the second, have a thoroughly German look, but when belonging to a Jew they are by no means necessarily German. Dr. Schiller, in a list of Hebrew abbreviations which he made for me, and which I still possess in MS., says these names Back and Bach often represent the Hebrew בן־בך, which are the initial letters of the two words בן־בך (בני) = the son (sons or children) of a martyr. In this case, also, he speaks with some authority, for he declares himself to belong to one of these martyr families on his mother's side. This name Bach, too, like the Schill mentioned above, is sometimes found with an added er, i.e., in the form Bacher; but in this case the er, to my mind, rather takes from than adds to the German appearance of the word. Another example quoted by Dr. Schiller is בר־י, which, though it really is made up of the initial letters of בן־יחידה לִיב, has such a very German look in the form of Brill, that the Rabbi is probably much better known as Joel Brill than by his real name, Joel (b. Jehudah) Loeb (or Loewe).

Other examples of the sort will be found in Perreau's work on Hebrew abbreviations, called Océano (2nd edition, Parma, 1883-84). Thus, in the Supplement (p. 24), I find Braun given as derived from the initial letters (ב־ר) of the words בן־רבי נחמיה, with a supplied vowel; Brak (ב־ר) from בן־רבי קאפפערל and Brasch (ב־ר) from בן־רבי שמעון. And, no doubt, many other similar instances might be found.

As Perreau has borrowed two out of the three examples quoted above from Grünwald's Additamenta zu Zunz's Namen der Juden, it is probable that Grünwald has devoted some attention to this Jewish mode of manufacturing surnames, and Zunz may have done so likewise. Unfortunately, I have not as yet seen either of these books. I must have said enough, however, to show that the study of Jewish surnames will offer much interest to those who have any inclination for this branch of etymology.

F. CHANCE.

[In this connexion, we may quote the following from the April number of the Economic Review (p. 272):—

“The Return showing the names of all aliens to whom certificates of naturalisation have been issued from August 1, 1892, to July 31, 1893 (House of Commons Paper, 1893, No. 425), contains 419 names. Germans number 164, Russians 131, Austrians and Hungarians 26, French 16, Turks 13, Swiss and Dutch 10 each. The list of 131 Russians includes a great many English or Anglicised names: Baker, Baron, Black, Bradlaw, Braidman, Cowen, Davidson, Dickson, Eddlestone, Ellison, Frost, Goldson, Goodman, Greenfield, Harris, Lewis, Lipkin, Miller, Millner, Morris, Newman, Phillips, Rust, Silverman, Stone, Swift, Watchman, Warman—to say nothing of distinctly Hebrew names which we scarcely regard as foreign: Cohen, Davids, Isaacson, Josephs, Levitt, and Levy.”—ED. ACADEMY.]

* The initial t of the fourth word was left out, probably because Shil would have had but little of a Spanish look.

AN ANCIENT FUNERAL CUSTOM IN WEXFORD AND PICARDY.

Carrig Breac, Howth: April 6, 1891.

Your readers interested in ancient customs may perhaps remember the funeral custom in the county of Wexford which I described in the ACADEMY on October 29, 1892 (No. 1059, page 390), and I hope they may care to hear that I have found mention of a very similar practice as still existing in France. This is noted by M. F. Darsy in the Mémoires des Antiquaires de Picardie, vol. xv., p. 165. After describing other religious customs in the valley of the river Bresle, dept. Somme, he says:

“Souvent le voyageur étranger s'étonne de voir une foule de petites croix de bois fichées en terre, au pied du crucifix qui s'élève d'habitude à l'entrée d'un village ou d'un carrefour: il n'en peut deviner la cause. Mais le bon paysan du lieu lui dira que chacune de ces croix a été placée là lorsque, portant un mort au cimetière, le cortège a passé près du crucifix.”

The church of St. Germain l'Ecosais in the canton of Gamache, where this practice continues, was founded by a Scotie pupil of St. Germanus of Auxerre, to whom the saint gave his own name at baptism. He is honoured on May 2, in the Martyrologies of Amiens, Eu, St. Germain des Prés, &c. He is titular of the churches of St. Germain d'Amiens, St. Germain sur Bresle, St. Germain d'Argoules in the Somme, and of a chapel at Ribemont in the Aisne, &c.

He is represented in art as holding the seven-headed hydra with his stole, being said to have captured this monster on landing on the shores of Normandy. His life is contained in a MS. in the library of Amiens, No. 465, and in two MSS. in the Vatican library.

It was on the shores of Picardy, to north and south of the embouchure of the Somme, that many of the early Irish pilgrims and missionaries landed, including St. Columbanus and his followers, St. Fursa and his disciples, besides many others of lesser note, such as Caidoc, Fricor, Fiacra, and Cadroc.

In such a community of old religious customs we may trace an interesting result of the passage to and fro of these early travellers.

MARGARET STOKES.

MORE ABOUT LOCKS, POUNDS, AND PATHS ON THE THAMES.

London: April 7, 1894.

That a “Lock” in the last century did not mean what we understand by it—a Pound-Lock, a Cistern-Lock—is clear from the Act of 1771 (11 George III., ch. 1. 51), which first enabled the Thames Commissioners to borrow money—not more than £50,000 (more was authorised by later Acts)—and really get to work. Section 7 of that Act enables them

“to erect and maintain Pounds or Turnpikes on the said rivers [Thames and Isis], where Locks or Weirs are now made use of, and at all such other places on the said rivers as the said Commissioners . . . shall judge proper, and so as each of the said Pounds or Turnpikes be of the dimensions of 130 feet long and 18 feet wide.”

Under this Act and its successors (15 George III., ch. 11, A.D. 1775, and 35 George III., ch. 106, A.D. 1795), the Commissioners built twenty-four Pound-Locks before 1804, as Zachariah Allnutt tells us in his Considerations (Henley, 1805). Now, allowing four or five of these Pounds for the river above Oxford—I forgot to note them—I find, by the reports of R. Taylor, that the following twenty-one Pound-Locks existed between Oxford and Maidenhead in 1791: 1. Ifley, 2. Sandford (? Nuneham a Lock, not a Pound), 3. Abingdon, 4. Culham (“the old Lock below Culham Pound-Lock”), 5. Sutton, 6. Day's or Dorchester, 7. Benson (Bensington)—? Moulsoford—8. Cleeve (built 1787), 9. Goring or Streatley, 10. Whitchurch and Pangbourne, (? Mapledurham, a Lock only), 11. Caversham, 12. Sonning, 13. Shiplake, 14. Marsh (just above Henley), 15. Hambledon, 16. Hurley, 17. Temple, 18. Marlow (? date of Cookham), 19. Boulter's. The twentieth, Romney, just below Windsor, was, as I said in my former letter, built in 1797. The Pound-Locks were, I expect, imported from the Canals.

Whether the Weirs at the sides of the early Pound-Locks were made “movable” or “opening” ones at the Pound-Locks, I doubt; for in 1805 Allnutt treats the weir at Windsor of 1798, with shifting gates and overfalls—the gates being big and at the bottom, while the overfalls (to stop the overfall of the water) were smaller and above the gates—as a new thing, and says that similar weirs, below Staines, would not impede the waterway, which “waterway or current is now much more impeded by the many solid weir-hedges, jetties, and works at present actually made, and standing at all seasons, on the shoals at Laleham Gulls (shallows), Chertsey Bridge-hill, Shepperton, Kingston, and other places, which have stood for years.”

These solid weirs generally left room for a barge to pass between one end and the bank near it (Havell's view from Streatley). This space, vacant in Havell's drawing, was, in the opinion of Mr. More, the engineer of the Thames Conservancy, generally closed by a lock with movable paddles. In narrow parts of the river, as at Radcot and Langley, above Oxford, the engravings show that at least half the weir or lock opened to let barges through.

The Thames Commissioners had to make side-cuts* along the arcs of shallow bends, and horse towing-paths and bridges where there were none, and to wharf or campsheet low parts of them. The haling or hauling of barges was formerly often done by man, whom the horses displaced. Section 24 of 11 George III. ch. 45, says:

“And, forasmuch as the drawing Barges by Horses instead of Men, on all or many more banks than at present have Horse Towing Paths, may deprive many Men who are now employed in drawing such Barges of their usual Livelihood, and as several such Men are, or may become, through sickness, age, or bodily infirmity, disabled from earning their daily Bread by any other Sort of Labour, be it enacted, That any Seven or more Commissioners at any General Meeting may certify to the Treasurer of the said District or to the General Treasurer, the Case of such disabled Man, and the treasurer is hereby required to relieve the said disabled Man with such Sum, not exceeding Four Shillings per Week, as shall be directed or specified by the said Commissioners.”

The towing-path used to begin at Mortlake (Brindley, 1770), though the “tides-end” was usually at Richmond, except in the spring tides, which ran to Teddington. But

“The City of London, among other very useful improvements, in the year 1776, caused a road, or towing-path to be made from Putney to Richmond, to assist and improve the navigation of the Thames. It is a work of great expense and labour, and in the course of it there are upwards of fifty connecting bridges, with occasional embankments raised from the bed of the river.”—1796. W. Combe in Boydell's Thames Views.

The reports of Mylne, &c., note several instances of owners' grounds stopping the towing-path—Sir Whitaker Ellis's still do at Richmond—men and horses having to walk round at the back of the house; and the Acts give the Commissioners powers to abate this nuisance.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

* These were made, before 1805, at Windsor, Temple, Hurley, Sonning, Godstow, Pinkhill, &c.—ALLNUTT.

"TABLE OF GREEN FIELDS."

London: April 18, 1894.

"His Nose was as sharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields."

This is the reading of the First Folio in the passage which is the subject of the most famous conjecture ever made on the text of Shakspeare. Probably most persons think Theobald's emendation as sound as it is unquestionably brilliant. Dr. C. Creighton, however, in an article on "Falstaff's Deathbed" in Blackwoods for March 1889, made a very good fight against the correctness of Theobald's reading, and in favour of the conjecture—apparently first proposed by "Mr. Collier's MS. corrector"—"on a table of green frieze." I was not exactly convinced by Dr. Creighton's arguments; but the article produced in my mind the unwelcome impression that it was very doubtful whether the felicity which I had been accustomed to see in the passage as usually printed was not after all due to the genius not of Shakspeare but of his much maligned commentator. The one thing that contributed most to sustain my wavering faith in the received text was the difficulty of supposing that "green frieze" could have been corrupted into "green fields."

It has occurred to me that some light may possibly be thrown on the problem by the following passage in the Liber Niger Domus Edw. IV., dated A.D. 1470 (Housh. Ord. 51):

"And suche dayes as the Kings chappell removeth, every of these children then present receiveth iiii d. at the grene feald of the countynghouse, for horse hyre dayly, as longe as they be journeying."

Now what is the "grene feald of the countynghouse"? Unless we are to suppose that it was a fixed rule that, wherever the Court might be on a journey, the counting-house should always have a grass-plot attached to it, there can be no doubt that "grene feald" here means the same thing as the "grene cloth," which is mentioned frequently in the same document. In the very next paragraph, for instance, we read:

"If this clerke lose torche, taper, mortar of wax, or suche other . . . then he to answer therefore, as the Steward, Thesaurere, Countroller, or the Judges under them, at the grene cloth, wull award by reason."

Can it be, after all, that the text of the Folio needs no other correction than the change of "and" into "on"? I leave this question for Shaksperian critics to decide, hoping that they may be able to dispel my gloomy apprehension that the more picturesque reading is not the true one.

It is, however, as a dictionary-maker that I am immediately interested in this matter. I have not met with any other instance of "grene feald" in this sense, and I shall be greatly indebted to any reader who can supply me with references to such. The spelling "feald" for "field" (O. E. feld) is very unusual in the fifteenth century, and I am not sure that it is not a different word.

HENRY BRADLEY.

CEDMON'S "OENESIS," 2906-7.

Ann Arbor, Michigan: March 18, 1894.

In the notes to his Anglo-Saxon Reader, p. 221, Prof. Bright, in treating of Genesis 2905-7:—

folmum sinum,      wolde his sunu ecwellan n æges dræore,      fjro sengan

says:

"It is probably best to read, as Bouterwek prefers, fjro sengan 'to bathe or quench the fire with the blood of his kin,' though gesengan (or sengan) in this sense is not found elsewhere. On the other hand, it is possible that the verb should be sengan 'molest' (Hart); retaining fjro, the next half-line might then be changed to his mæges dræor 'with fire to molest (consume) the blood of his kin.' Körner suggests fjro sellan mæges dræor (cf. 'Exodus' 402); but mæges dræor is rhythmically incomplete."

The first two conjectures and interpretations appear to me far-fetched and unwarranted. The last (while its rhythm is capable of being improved by prefixing his to mæges as above) is not likely: "to give his child [or the body of his child] to the flames" is all right, but hardly "to give the blood of his kinsmen to the fire."

I would suggest:

fjro sengan
mæges dræore,      "make the flames hiss with the blood of his kin," or—

fjro besengan
mæges dræore.      "make the fire hiss," &c.

Of course, the original meaning of (be)sengan is "to make sing (or hiss)"; the spelling sengan for sengan is parallel to that of erincan for erigan. I should prefer fjro (Northern plural for fjir, Sievers, §237 A<sup>5</sup>) sengan, but for the fact that I do not know that the plural of fjir "flames" was in use.

GEORGE HEMPL.

P.S.—I just now see that Grein (Gen. 2905, footnote) suggests "sengan" and "dreor?" In this case the rhythm would need his as above. And "to make blood hiss with fire," or "to scorch blood with fire," seems hardly as good as "to make the fire hiss with the blood of his child"; but perhaps I am prejudiced in favour of my own conjecture.

G. H.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 22, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: Discussion, "Can a Good Man be a Good Citizen?" by Mr. W. H. Fairbrother.

MONDAY, April 23, 2 p.m. Antiquaries: Anniversary Meeting.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "The Face of the Earth," by Prof. C. Lapworth.

8.30 p.m. Parkes Museum: "Meteorological Instruments and Observations, and their Representation," by Mr. G. J. Symons.

TUESDAY, April 24, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electric Illumination," IV., by Prof. J. A. Fleming.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Training of Rivers," by Mr. L. F. Vernon Harcourt; and "Estuaries," by Mr. H. L. Patriot.

WEDNESDAY, April 25, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Recent Developments of Photographic Chemistry," by Mr. Chapman Jones.

8 p.m. Geological: "Further Notes on some Sections on the New Railway from Romford to Uprainster, and on the Relations of the Thames Valley Beds to the Boulder Clay," by Mr. T. V. Holmes; "The Geology of the Pleistocene Deposits in the Valley of the Thames at Twickenham, with Contributions to the Fauna and Flora of the Period," by Dr. J. R. Leeson and Mr. G. B. Laffan; "A New Genitrite from the Lower Coal-Measures (Goniatites elegans)," by Mr. Herbert Bolton.

THURSDAY, April 26, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Mozart as a Teacher," by Dr. J. F. Bridge.

4.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "Municipal and Village Water Supply and Sanitation in the North-West Provinces and Cutch," by Sir Auckland Colvin.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Cost of Electrical Energy," by Mr. R. E. Crompton.

8 p.m. Parkes Museum: "Temperatures of Air, Soil, and Water," by Dr. H. R. Mill.

FRIDAY, April 27, 5 p.m. Physical: "The Mechanism of Electrical Construction," by Dr. C. V. Burton; "A Graphic Method of Constructing the Curves of Current in Electro-magnets and Transformers," by Major Hippesley; "The Design and Winding of Alternate Current Electro-magnets," by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

8 p.m. Viking Club: "The Bear's-head Dinner at Oxford and a Teutonic Sun God," by Dr. Karl Blind.

8 p.m. London Amateur Scientific: "What is a Genus?" by Mr. F. A. Bather.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Action of Light on Bacteria and Fungi," by Prof. H. Marshall Ward.

SATURDAY, April 28, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Literature and Journalism," II., by Mr. H. D. Tristram.

8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

IN advance of a formal catalogue, the Trustees of the British Museum have published a Descriptive List of the Hebrew and Samaritan MSS. under their charge, edited by Mr. G. Margoliouth. The following is the classification adopted, the order under each head being apparently that of the date of acquisition, beginning with the original collections—Cottonian, Harley, Egerton, &c., then Additional, and finally Oriental. (1) Biblical, subdivided into texts and commentaries. Last among the texts we notice the ninth century vellum of the Pentateuch (Or. 4445), about which Mr. Margoliouth has already written in the ACADEMY, as being probably the oldest known MS. of any part of the Hebrew Bible. The most notable feature here is the large proportion of Yemenite and Karaite MSS. among the recent acquisitions. (2) Midrashim, some of which are in the autograph of the several authors; (3) Talmud and Halakhah; (4) Liturgies, with the name of the local rite appended; (5) Kabbalah; (6) Ethics—a very small class; (7) Philosophy, including commentaries on Aristotle and Porphyry; (8) Poetry; (9) Philology, comprising vocabularies and grammars; (10) Mathematics and Astronomy; (11) Medicine, including translations of Hippocrates and Galen; (12) Miscellaneous, some of which seem to be placed here because it was undesirable to break up collections; (13) Charters, almost all English, of the thirteenth century—the substance of each and the names of the parties are abstracted; (14) Samaritan, beginning with the Cottonian MS. of the Samaritan rescension of the Hebrew text of the Pentateuch, and ending with a facsimile of a fragment of the same at New York. Finally, we have two indexes of titles and of authors. Under "Aristotle," the commentaries also should, we think, have been given. It is not every one who would look for them under "Muhammad ibn Ahmad."

Neue Beiträge zur semitischen Sagenkunde. By M. Grünbaum. (Leiden: Brill.) Dr. Grünbaum is already known by his laborious collection of Talmudic legends and plays on words. In the book he has just published he has put together the numerous tales and myths which have been attached to the persons of the Old Testament patriarchs by Jewish and Arabic Haggadah. A large proportion of the Arabic stories are derived from Jewish sources, though some of them are genuine old Arabic traditions, which originally had nothing to do with the Biblical personages with whose names they are now associated. With few exceptions, the legends of Jewish Haggadah all have a similar origin. They are derived either from attempts to supply supposed omissions in the Biblical narrative, or from grotesquely perverse interpretations of Hebrew names, words, and phrases. Bad etymologising is responsible for a large part of them. They are consequently of interest rather to the philologist than to the folklorist; to the historian and the Biblical student they are, of course, of no value at all. Dr. Grünbaum has arranged them under the names of the patriarchs, from Adam to David and Solomon, to whom they severally belong; but the usefulness of his compilation is impaired by the want of an index.

Die Geschichte des Dominus Märi, eines Apostels des Orients. Aus dem Syrischen übersetzt und untersucht von Richard Raabe. (Leipzig: Hinrichs.) A thoroughly legendary account of the evangelistic, or, as one might rather say, thaumaturgic activity of "the apostle Dominus Märi," who was sent by his teacher Addai, one of the seventy disciples of the Lord, to preach the Gospel in "the region of the East, the land of Babylon." Susiana and Persia, Armenia and Media, are also stated to have been visited by this strange missionary, whose miracles would certainly have surprised the compiler of our Acts of the Apostles. The author of this narrative (which is here translated from the Syriac) was a monk of the convent of Dörkouni, the church of which was said to have contained the tomb of its founder, Mâri. After a sufficient exposition of the manifold improbabilities of the story, the translator acquiesces in the judgment of Nöldeke that, though a man named Mâri may have preached the Gospel on the banks of the Lower Tigris at an early period, nothing further can be made out respecting him. The translation is accompanied by notes on difficult passages, with references to the Syriac text, both in the Berlin MS., and in Abbeloos' printed edition.

Einleitung in den Talmud. Von Hermann L. Strack. Second edition, revised and enlarged. (Leipzig.) This little work is probably the first attempt to give an objective and scientific account of the Talmud, and to introduce the student to its several component parts. The first edition was a separate print of the article "Talmud" in Herzog and Plitt's Realencyclopädie. The new sections in the second one contain notices of the Halachic Midrashim, and a specimen of a Halachic discussion. Many additions are made to the bibliography, and there is now no reason why even a non-Talmudist should not form an equitable and accurate opinion on the contents of the Talmudic literature. The work is dedicated to "two fair-minded scholars," Professors Cheyne and Driver.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be delivered by Prof. H. Marshall Ward, his subject being "The Action of Light on Bacteria and Fungi."

AT the last meeting of the Geological Society, Prof. E. S. Dana, of Newhaven, was elected a foreign member; and Prof. J. P. Iddings, of Chicago, and Prof. J. H. L. Vogt, of Christiania, were elected foreign correspondents.

THE Royal Meteorological Society and the Sanitary Institute have jointly arranged for a course of six lectures on meteorology in relation to hygiene, to be delivered in the Parkes Museum, Margaret-street, on Mondays and Thursdays at 8.30 p.m., beginning on April 23. Among the lecturers will be: Mr. G. J. Symons, on "Instruments and Observations, and their Representation"; Dr. H. R. Mill, on "Temperature of Air, Soil, and Water"; Mr. R. H. Scott, on "Barometric Conditions and Air Movements"; and Dr. C. Theodore Williams, on "Climate in Relation to Disease, and Geographical Distribution of Disease."

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SONS announce a Handy Atlas of the Moon for Students, by Mr. Thomas Gwyn Elge, consisting of a large scale map of the moon in four sections, with descriptive letterpress.

MESSRS. JAMES ELLIOTT & Co. will issue to subscribers on April 25 The Hermetic and Alchemical Writings of Paracelsus, in two volumes. It will contain, entire and unabridged, the large body of literature attributed to Paracelsus, which treats directly of alchemy and the transcendental doctrines and physics of the Magnum Opus; the whole Paracelsian literature of the Great Elixir and the Universal Medicine; and a collection of all the alchemical references scattered through the surgical writings of Paracelsus. The text which has been adopted for translation is that of Geneva folio of 1658, in Latin. The works ascribed to Paracelsus which are not to be found in that edition have been taken from other equally representative sources.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, March 31.)

MISS LOUISA MARY DAVIES, president, in the chair.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths read some "Notes on the Quartos of 'A Midsummer-Night's Dream.'" In connexion with the statements that the Fisher Quarto had manuscript authority, and that the Roberts Quarto was a piratical issue, it is of interest to note that Fisher became a member of the Stationers Company, by transference from the Drapers Company, on June 3, 1600, and on October 8 of the same year "A Midsummer-Night's Dream" was entered to him in the Stationers registers. This was his only Shakespeare publication. Roberts's freedom of the Stationers Company was obtained when Shakespeare was a couple of months old. Although in common with many of his fellow freemen an occasional grumbler and breaker of rules, he was in 1596 made a liveryman of his company, and in 1597 he was one of the three representatives of the company at the Lord Mayor's feast. In 1600, the year in which his issue of "A Midsummer-Night's Dream" was printed, he also printed "Titus Andronicus," and two editions of "The Merchant of Venice." He likewise printed the 1604 and 1605 "Hamlets." There is no entry in the register connecting his name with "A Midsummer-Night's Dream," and a close comparison of the texts of the two quartos seems to show that Fisher's is the earlier.—Mr. Arthur S. Way read a paper entitled "Blending of the Classical and Romantic Elements in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.'" It is almost a commonplace of criticism with respect to the tragedies of the greatest French dramatists of the age of Louis XIV. that their classical dramas are only nominally such, that the personages therein are one and all courtiers of the Grand Monarque, and their atmosphere that of the French court in its most artificial period. But even Macaulay in his most dogmatic mood would not have ventured to assert that Shakespeare's Romans are but Englishmen of the Tudor period masquerading in tunic and toga. The Romans of "Julius Caesar," "Coriolanus," and "Antony and Cleopatra," as also the Greeks of "Troilus and Cressida" and "Timon of Athens," are unmistakably the children of a far-off time and another civilisation than ours, so that if a cultured reader came for the first time upon one of these plays in a copy having no names prefixed to the speeches, he would have little difficulty in ascribing the plays to their proper epochs. There is, however, one play with respect to which there has not been the same consensus of opinion. "A Midsummer-Night's Dream" bears on the face of it certain incongruities which all critics have recognised, differing only in the number of counts on which they find the poet guilty of anachronism. The most obvious feature of this blending of the classical and romantic lies in bringing together the heroic age of Greece and a supernatural machinery of fairies unknown to the Greek thought of any period. And here we cannot avoid the conclusion that there is a real divergence from the Greek conception and spirit. The Greek Pantheon was peopled with stately presences, majestic and mighty as the powers of nature and the overmastering passions which they typified, and knew nothing of the tiny beings which seem emanations from flowers, breezes, and fountains. But there are critics who maintain that the anachronism spreads wider and stains deeper than this: that the human, no less than the supernatural, creatures are born out of due time, and that throughout the classical element is merely nominal. It is objected that the peasants of the play, while they may well be excellent delineations of Warwickshire rustics, are certainly not Athenians: least of all, peasants of the heroic age. Homer does not introduce full-length portraits of "low life"—albeit, in some of his similes, we have unmistakable evidence that human nature was the same in those days as now: the play of feeling and passion, with its grotesque and pathetic manifestations, was strikingly similar to what still moves our sympathy or our mirth—but Aristophanes does. Many scholars would be disposed to admit that the dialogue of these rustics of "A Midsummer-Night's Dream," translated into Greek iambs, would not seem incongruous in one of his plays. Shakespeare's method of holding the mirror up to nature, and his unerring instinct in discerning what that "nature" really is, are nowhere better exemplified than in his treatment of the central figure of the play. Shakespeare's curiously un-Homeric treatment of the character of Ulysses, who, in "Troilus and Cressida," becomes a sententious philosopher, may, in some measure, be ascribed to the influence of Chapman, who converts Homer's heroes into warring rhetoricians. But for the portrayal of Theseus, Shakespeare had his Plutarch before him; and Plutarch, though inclined to rationalise the old legends, was at least a Greek, both in habit of thought and in point of view. The reader is therefore tempted to enquire whether Shakespeare, consciously or unconsciously, departed from his authority, and, in drawing Theseus, set forth not an old Greek hero at all, but, as some maintain, a mediæval knight, or, as others say, a nobleman of the Tudor days. To resolve this doubt, we must first consider what manner of man was the Theseus of the old legends. As we unroll the ancient records, there rises before us a twofold figure—a mighty champion, and a strong, wise ruler and lawgiver. Alone, like an earlier King Arthur, he presses through dark forest and deadly fen, over haggard wastes and savage mountain ridges, redressing human wrongs, spoiling the spoiler, and making the cruel scorner drink of his own cup. He wrests his father's sceptre from the hands of the cruel usurper, and becomes a king ruling in righteousness, known through all the land of Greece as a champion of the weak, a strong deliverer. Wherever the cry of the trampled goes up, wherever there are tyrants to be tamed, wherever heroes are looking for a brother in arms, a helper in strange and terrible enterprise, there is found the unawed brow and the sinewy hand of Theseus, so that it became a proverb in the land, "Nothing without Theseus." The Amazons came down from the weird, unknown North, and the maids of war set their battle in array within the very city, between the market-place and the temples of Athens, and long the reeling battle swayed to and fro till their ranks were broken by the might of Theseus and till the bacchanals of war fainted in the stress of that stern grapple, and streamed away with ever-dwindling ranks towards their stormy hills and their ice-locked Thermodon, and left their glorious queen the hero's prisoner, left her to lead captivity captive and to hold her conqueror in thrall. And it is at this point when the last low thunders of the storm have died away in the season of calm weather, when all hearts are stilled with peace, that Shakespeare's Theseus rises before us. The old life of the wise lawgiver and the righteous judge, of the earth subduer and the hunter, has been resumed. The Quest of the Golden Fleece and the Trojan War were but episodes in great lives; and before we pronounce Shakespeare's Theseus unlike the Greek conception of an Homeric hero, we must correct impressions derived from the adventurous aspect of the heroic age by some of the rarer glimpses of its pastoral and home life, which are not wanting amid the storm and stress of the Iliad, and which form a fairly complete setting for much of the action of the Odyssey. Let us, then, note the points in which Shakespeare's Theseus corresponds to one of Homer's kings of men. We shall not expect to see the warrior side of his character. He makes but two slight references to his own exploits, and in these we remark that absence of boasting which is characteristic of the Homeric heroes. In peace he appears under two main aspects: as a judge and as a lord of lowly subjects. As a judge he may be compared with the Homeric kings who cherished deep reverence for law, for the statutes which, as they held, were delivered from Zeus, and the disregard of which would bring down calamitous visitation upon the land. In his sentence on Hermia he claims to be simply the mouthpiece of time-honoured law; and stern as his words are, there is no sternness in his mind: he is not uttering his own arbitrary pleasure. As a lord among his subjects, we may compare him with Ulysses, the only character portrayed in such a relation in Homer. But while Shakespeare's critical instinct would not suffer him in his portrayal of the character of Theseus to be false to the ancient heroic conception, we cannot resist the impression that as he wrote he was haunted by the living embodiment of that heroic ideal as revealed in more than one of the stately and noble men who made glorious the days of Elizabeth. And the poet's intuitive knowledge of human nature would teach him that there was nothing contradictory in the two conceptions; for as human nature is at bottom much the same all the world over, so similar circumstances tend to develop similar characters. Those two far-severed ages were alike periods of gallant enterprise, of maritime discovery and adventure, and of dauntless achievement in war. Even to the intellectual awakening of the sixteenth century we find a parallel in that old Greece whose very air quivered with harp notes and thrilled with the voices of bards who kindled men to mighty deeds. And so the Theseus of old lived again in the person of such an one as Sir Walter Raleigh or Sir Richard Grenville. But he did not die with the generation of the old Armada heroes; he is found again in the Cavaliers, whose uncalculating loyalty made them cast in their lot with a tottering throne, and whose influence rallied thousands to the king's standard; and again, in their children's days he re-appears as Sir Roger de Coverley, the most winsome type of an English rural magnate ever embodied in literature. And so, generation after generation, the character has never failed in old England, but is still worthily represented by men who, whether in troublous or in peaceful times, recognise the responsibility of their position and take up their share of the burden of their country's progress. Tennyson drew a portrait of such a character in his Sir Walter Vivian, and it is exemplified in the county magistrate of to-day.—The president, in a paper on "Peter Quince, Carpenter and Stage-Manager," said that, if the Interlude by the Anglo-Athenian artisans were not so pure an extravaganza, we might pause to ask why, although, indeed, the adaptor of this lamentable comedy, Quince was selected for this post of honour, when such a dominant personality as Bottom was doubtless to be had for the asking. On the lucus a non lucendo principle, a recognised canon of burlesque, he was apparently chosen manager because he would inevitably be managed. Quince is the most amiable of stage-managers: no word of impatience escapes his lips at the flippant contumacy of his unruly troupe; and he shows infinite tact in defending his point when Bottom, whose imagination is dazzled by the certainty of an encore for his roaring, is desirous of undertaking in his own person the three chief parts; and his implied flattery is too delicious not to be successful. In the part Quince selects for himself, his own modesty comes out noticeably; and it is probable that the more ambitious part he took at the performance was accepted rather by reason of a certain distrust of his colleague's "slow of study" than of a vainglorious wish to distinguish himself. From the conversation on the question of the Prologue we should, even if other direct evidence were wanting, feel certain that Quince of the mild and gentle spirit is a poet; and, marvel of marvels, being such, he endures in silence the tampering of the uninspired with the sacred question of metre. He suggests the old common metre of "Chevy Chase," but his noisy rival declares for rights to which he makes no audible objection. And the fact that the Prologue actually takes shape in the ordinary ten-syllabled metre shows that one at any rate of the company has fathomed, to some purpose, the truth that apparent concession is the quickest possession of your own way. For an impromptu moonlight effect the picturesqueness of his invention is not to be denied. There is no spice of exultation in his heart as he sees his merry tormentor in such evil plight through the mischief of Puck; and in his absence how generously he praises him, and on his return how enthusiastically he greets him! When the supreme moment of histrionic display arrives, the fell fascination exercised by so aristocratic an audience, combined with the bashfulness incident to a humble poet when reciting his own verses, produce a most awful effect on the unfortunate Quince; but the exchange of an abstract complimentary strain for concrete statement of fact is helpful to him, and he arrives at the conclusion without further catastrophe.

FINE ART.

FURTWÄNGLER'S MASTERPIECES OF GREEK SCULPTURE.

Meisterwerke der Griechischen Plastik. A. Furtwängler. (Leipzig-Berlin: Giesecke & Devrient.)

It is impossible in a brief review to give more than a very slight account of so large and so original a work as the present. We have been accustomed to find in German archaeological reviews from time to time papers which boldly drive a coach and four through received views. Sometimes such papers mark a decided advance, more often they fall into oblivion; but they have their uses. But it rather startles us to find a book of 750 pages, full from end to end of new and startling theories and of open disregard of most that has been supposed to be established in the history of ancient art. Such a work must be either epoch-making or very dangerous to knowledge. Prof. Furtwängler writes with his accustomed learning and ability, and with a knowledge of ancient monuments in which he can have very few rivals. One cannot speak of his book without a liberal use of superlatives. And yet it may be doubted whether it will really do much to extend the range of our knowledge of ancient art.

Since a selection must be made, this notice will be mainly confined to the first section of the work (pp. 1-263), which deals chiefly with Pheidias and his sculpture. In this section we may find Prof. Furtwängler at his best, and at his worst.

Lucian praises beyond all the works of Pheidias a statue of Athena which stood on the Acropolis of Athens and was dedicated by the Lemnians. The beauty of the face especially struck him. We know scarcely any facts in regard to this statue: but the probability is that it was of bronze, and perhaps dedicated by the Athenian colonists of Lemnos shortly after the middle of the fifth century. It is conjectured that on this occasion Pheidias represented the goddess, without helmet and shield, as a mild and placable, rather than a warlike, deity. Of this bronze figure Prof. Furtwängler supposes that he has discovered two faithful copies, in the same size as the original: two trunks and one head at Dresden, and one head, far more finely executed, at Bologna, which has hitherto been regarded as, perhaps, the head of an Amazon, and which has excited the utmost admiration in visitors to the Bologna Museum. In an extremely ingenious argument, Prof. Furtwängler tries to show that the restoration of these works to Pheidias is justified, alike by external indications, and by arguments derived from style. It is yet too early to say whether the Lemnian Athena is likely to take her place beside the Apoxyomenus of Lysippus and the Discobolus of Myron, as a recognised copy of a celebrated ancient masterpiece. If so, we shall certainly be obliged to re-cast our notions as to the Pheidian treatment of hair. But at least we must give Prof. Furtwängler the credit of originating a likely theory, admirably worked out, and full of suggestion.

It does not follow, however, because a theory is legitimate, and even convincing, that it will serve as a basis for a further enormous construction of theory. But Prof. Furtwängler proceeds mainly on the basis of the Lemnian Athena and the well-known statuettes copied from the Parthenos to determine among existing remains those which can be regarded as copied from Pheidian works; and he even thinks he can fix the order of those works in the life of the master and their date. The chain is lengthened out, each link being weaker than that which preceded it, until we reach results that will certainly be rejected by archaeologists. We find at p. 123 the extraordinary view that the Colossal Horseman of the Quirinal at Rome, which bore until the sixteenth century the inscription Opus Fidiæ, is really a copy of a Pheidian work. Prof. Furtwängler allows that the inscription dated from late Roman times, but thinks that it may have been transcribed from an earlier legend; and he endeavours to reinforce this mere may by an analysis of the artistic character of the work, in which he traces a likeness to the horsemen of the Parthenon frieze and the Theseus of the East Pediment. The companion horseman, which was inscribed Opus Praxitelis, is ascribed not to the well-known Praxiteles, but to a conjectural contemporary of Pheidias, who worked in a style like the Pheidian.

As regards this attribution, one can only say that, if it is accepted, it shows arguments founded upon style to be, in the present state of our knowledge, almost worthless. The ablest archaeologists, from K. O. Müller to Wolters, have been of opinion that the two Horsemen of the Quirinal are in the style of Lysippus, and this has passed almost as a truism. There is nothing in Prof. Furtwängler's arguments to refute this view, nor does he attempt to investigate its grounds. Yet if we do not know the difference between the style of Pheidias and that of Lysippus, we had better give up all argument in regard to style; in which case the whole of the book before us becomes valueless. Prof. Furtwängler does not claim infallibility. For example, he writes on p. 122 in regard to the Ares Borghese, "Fälschlich ist er früher (auch von mir in Roscher's Lexikon I. 489) zu Polyklet in Beziehung gesetzt worden, zu dem er in scharfem Gegensatz steht." The words used in the Lexicon are "Es ist eine mächtige gedrungene Gestalt, deren Bildung den deutlichsten Anschluss an den Doryphoros des Polyklet zeigt." If Prof. Furtwängler sees between two statues at one time "most obvious likeness," and, a few years later, "sharp contrast," it seems that the indications on which, in this instance at least, he based his judgment are not trustworthy. And we may regard it as not impossible that he will before long be reading a similar recantation in regard to many or most of the views contained in the present work. If archaeology is to be regarded as a field for the display of intellectual gymnastics, this may be quite right and natural; but meanwhile, the student, who is really in search of some solid knowledge, feels that he has lost a good deal of time, and laboured in vain.

In ten pages (143-152) Prof. Furtwängler revolutionises the dates of various classes of vases and of coins. As regards the latter, he writes, "Vorán sei indes bemerkt, dass wir uns von den landläufigen Datierungen der zu erwähnenden Münzen omanzipieren." The current dates from which he thus, by a stroke of the pen, emancipates himself are those fixed by numismatists, not merely on grounds of style, but for a variety of solid historical reasons and by processes of induction. If evidence is thus treated, what becomes of archaeology as an inductive science?

Perhaps the most interesting part of Prof. Furtwängler's book is that in which he deals with the dates and authorship of the Athenian temples (pp. 155-263). His views are carefully worked out and expressed in a style quite exceptional in German scientific works, so that they are very interesting reading. He maintains the earlier Parthenon to date from Themistocles rather than from Cimon, while the Erechtheum and the little temple of Nike were built under the influence of Nicias and the Conservative party. In the sculptures of the Erechtheum he sees the hand of Callimachus, the inventor of the Corinthian capital. In dealing with the sculptures of the Parthenon, he considers the central scene of the frieze to represent the offering to Athena of the peplos and of seats. In the side figures of the West Pediment he sees neither gods nor personifications of locality, but the primeval heroes and heroines of Attica; he will not allow even the male figure who reclines at the corner to be a river-god, but dubs him Buzyges. These views are less startling than those in the earlier and later parts of the book; but how far they will resist criticism is a question into which it is impossible here to enter.

Other great Greek sculptors—Calamis, Ageladas, Polycleitus, Cresilas, Myron, Praxiteles, Euphranor—succeed Pheidias, and are treated in much the same fashion. Of some of these, such as Ageladas, Cresilas, and Euphranor, we have no knowledge, except from literary sources, which can be called trustworthy. Yet Prof. Furtwängler finds for all, in the store-house of the great museums, series of works, not of course originals, but copies of various degrees of merit. In the case of more prominent artists, such as Polycleitus and Praxiteles, he is able to determine within a few years the date in their lives at which they produced each work fathered on them. Prudent archaeologists have been accustomed to start from acknowledged originals of Greek sculpture, and to feel their way carefully among the Italian copies, to see if here and there one may be found that can be classed by the originals. But Prof. Furtwängler neglects originals, which offer a less promising field to the hardy theorist, and often makes an attribution of an inferior late statue the starting-point of a whole series of further attributions. It is hard to believe that so accomplished an archaeologist can fancy that his bold hypotheses will be accepted by the learned world, however great be the skill with which he maintains them. His road really ends in chaos. Brunn sees a Praxitelean original in the torso of a Satyr in the Louvre. Furtwängler calls this an ordinary copy, but in his turn finds Praxitelean originals in the Eubuleus head of Eleusis and a head of Aphrodite at Petworth, the connexion of which with Praxiteles, whether as originals or even as copies, is problematic. Wolters publishes a head of Athena as a copy of a work of Cephisodotus; Furtwängler calls the same head Pheidian. And so the game goes on, on the principle of quot homines tot sententiae. And this, although of all classical studies that of archaeology, as resting on a substructure of undeniable fact, should be one of the soundest and afford the best possible training in the methods of historical investigation. Yet, in spite of all, there is not a page in Prof. Furtwängler's book which an advanced student of Greek sculpture can afford to pass by, so full is it of knowledge, of keen observation, and of valuable analogies; only it should be kept out of the hands of beginners.

It will be a long and laborious task for archaeologists to extract from the great work before us such parts as can claim a place in the fabric of archaeological science. This task will no doubt be mainly executed by Prof. Furtwängler's German colleagues. Most of these he has treated in a very unsparing fashion, and their counter-criticism is not likely to err on the side of leniency. It is fortunate that archaeology in England lies somewhat out of the path of these brilliant constructions. It is our more modest task to try to find fixed points in the history of ancient art, and to discern the comparative degree of probability of various theories. It may be that the soil of archaeology bears fruit to those who laboriously cultivate it, but that the conqueror who sweeps across it like a Tamerlane is likely to leave behind only smoking ruins. Prof. Furtwängler's reputation will probably rest rather on such works as his Catalogue of Vases or his Bronzes of Olympia than on the present work, with all its force and brilliancy.

PERCY GARDNER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BOTTICELLI'S "SPRING."

Hind Head, Haslemere: April 14, 1894.

A few weeks since, in writing upon this subject, I expressed a hope that fragments of some of the other Seasons of the supposed series might hereafter be recognised, and I determined mentally, when next at Florence, to search the drawings at the Uffizi and elsewhere in quest of studies. Already, quite unexpectedly, one such has occurred to me, and actually in England.

Among the Malcolm drawings now at the British Museum is a sketch by Botticelli of a female figure, draped, and holding a cornucopia, whom I take to be Autumn. In dress and aspect she closely resembles the Primavera. Two Cupids accompany her, with adumbrations of others. To her right, I conjecture, in the finished picture (if it was ever completed), stood the three Autumn months, September, October, November. To her left, in all probability, allegorical figures—say, Bacchus and Ceres—balanced the composition.

I hope that any reader of the ACADEMY who may notice any other figures in drawings of Botticelli's suggesting this group, or any of its sister pieces, will let me hear of them.

GRANT ALLEN.

A ROMAN PIG OF LEAD.

Christ Church, Oxford: April 15, 1894.

About three weeks ago a workman found on a moor near Matlock an inscribed "pig" of Roman lead, of the ordinary shape and size. If I may judge from squeezes, which Mr. G. E. Fox and others have kindly submitted to me, the inscription, divested of ligatures, reads as follows:—

P · RUBRI · ABASCANTI · METALLI · LVTVDARES that is, (plumbum) P. Rubri Abascanti, metalli Lutudare(n)s(is).

Lutudarun is mentioned by the Ravenna Geographer (429p.), though the form has hitherto been considered a genitive plural from Lutudae, and on other pigs of lead found near Matlock and elsewhere. It is evidently the name for some town or district in Derbyshire where lead was mined.

P. Rubrius Abascantus was, I suppose, the lessee of the mines: previously discovered pigs bear the names of three other lessees. I do not know whether it is more than an accident that such private personages are mentioned nowhere else in Britain. One of the Derbyshire pigs and all of the rest found in Britain bear emperors' names.

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE one-hundred-and-twenty-first exhibition of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours will open next Monday, at their gallery in Pall Mall East; and also the exhibition of the Society of Lady Artists, in the Drawing-room Gallery of the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.

MR. T. G. WHARTON, of Basinghall street, has been instructed to sell next month the personal goods and effects of the late Ford Madox Brown. The sale will include several of his own pictures, as well as those of other well-known painters; and also an interesting collection of presentation copies of books by his friends.

MR. H. R. ALLENSON will shortly publish Devonshire Antiquities, by Mr. John Chudleigh. It contains illustrations of eighty Dartmoor villages and wayside crosses, inscribed stones, stone circles, cromlechs, clapper bridges, tolmen, kistvaens, logan stones, &c.; and also a map of the district, with these objects of interest clearly marked.

A SECOND series of lectures will be given by Mr. P. le Page Renouf, on "The Language and Literature of Ancient Egypt," in the rooms of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 37, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, on Wednesdays at 4.30 p.m., beginning on April 25, and continuing through May.

MR. GEORGE ST. CLAIR begins this week a course of five lectures at the Home Missionary College, Manchester, on "Biblical Topography in the Light of Recent Research." He will treat of the geology and physical geography of Palestine, the route of the Exodus, battles and journeys of Scripture in the light of the topography of ancient Jerusalem, the worship of Israel and the life of Christ in connexion with localities.

MR. A. W. C. HADDEN, the well-known Scottish antiquary, has discovered that John Anderson, alluded to last week in our note on George Jamesone, was Jamesone's uncle. He was a brother of David Anderson, of Finzean, known as "Davie do a' things." He was still living in 1635.

DR. SERAFINO RICCI, member of the Italian School of Archaeology in Rome, is preparing a collected edition of the inscriptions of the Island of Amorgos. He intends to visit the island soon, in order to verify the copies.

THE STAGE.

THE theatrical event most worthy of comment this week is not the production of any new piece, romantic or eccentric, optimistic in accordance with the promptings of human nature, or pessimistic in obedience to the newer conventions of the stage. It is simply the return of Mr. Irving. That event is one which we may chronicle with the utmost satisfaction; for while it is well that the leader of the English theatre should receive his welcomes abroad, it is yet better that he should be in a position to receive them at home. And last Saturday he received them at the Lyceum, in the revival of "Faust." Mr. Irving's embodiment of "the spirit that denies"—that tempts, that leads astray, that mocks and scatters jibes along with its injuries among men—is not, of course, at all the most fascinating, but is yet one of the most complete of his impersonations. It is as finished and as highly wrought as a dagger by Cellini or a panel by Gerard Dow. The Margaret of Miss Ellen Terry—albeit, in the casket scene we may take exception to certain of its details—is a creation eminently poetic and agreeable, and full of those winning traits which are so characteristic of the artist. And Miss Terry, like Mr. Irving, has come back from America in the finest "form." The Faust of Mr. Terriss is the deliberately conceived and firmly executed performance of a very able actor: an ideal creation we do not attempt to call it. The far from unimportant character of Martha—a humorous character which it was within the power of Mrs. Stirling to endow with distinction—falls now into the hands of Miss M. A. Victor. The piece profits, as it has always profited at the Lyceum, by scenic effects both judicious and exquisite. For the time, this revival will be legitimately attractive; but what is to be Mr. Irving's next part?

If the speech of Mr. Sydney Grundy, at a recent theatrical festivity, was reported aright, that exceedingly capable, long-headed, matter-of-fact dramatist thought fit to lift up his voice in protest against such stage literature as aims above all things to be desperately instructive. He, it seems—though nobody will accuse him of lacking intelligence—is not of opinion that man's first promptings when he goes to the theatre are that he may be furnished with hard nuts to crack. And Mr. Grundy, in his speech, appears—as an illustration of his theory—to have instanced the present popularity of nearly everything that is light and amusing, and the present failure of well nigh all that is professedly didactic. Accepting the truth of his remarks—believing fully in their shrewdness and sagacity—is there not room, we may argue, for a larger share of that theatrical entertainment which, without priding itself precisely on the frivolous, has no ambition to stately and wearisomely teach? We want more pieces—but the ordinary playwright is, of course, incapable of producing them—in which, with an absence of pose and of self-consciousness, the dramatist shall give us, in a form that may reasonably claim to be agreeable, the results of his observations of life. Those observations—if the English theatre is to be healthy and interesting—will not be founded only on the experience of what is, after all, the very limited and so-called "cultivated" Society, whose abode is anywhere that you like between Chelsea and Hampstead. There will be embraced a wider and an ever more various world. Still less will the study of the dramatist be long confined to the already somewhat wearisome theme of the illegitimate love affair, or the not less rapidly palling subject of the difficulty of successfully legitimising a love affair which was irregular to begin with. The Second Mrs. Tanqueray—for instance—may be, in herself, an admirable study of character. As an individual, she may be permissible upon the boards; but, as a type, she will very speedily be de trop.

MR. F. R. BENSON has for the seventh time undertaken the Shaksperian productions at Stratford-on-Avon for the memorial performances commencing on Monday next. "Henry IV.," part 2, will be the special feature this year. This will make the eighteenth play of Shakspeare produced by Mr. Benson during his eleven years of management. The other plays to be given during the week are "Much Ado About Nothing," "The School for Scandal," "Richard the Third," and "As You Like It."

MUSIC.

DR. MACKENZIE'S "BETHLEHEM."

THIS new work, produced at the Albert Hall last Thursday week under the direction of the composer, is termed, not an Oratorio, but a Mystery. The words are written by Mr. J. Bennett; his task was no easy one, for he had to tell afresh the oft-told tale of the "Child of the Star." He has, as usual, displayed considerable skill, and some of the poetry is of a high order of merit. But who is responsible for the form of the book? Has Mr. Bennett carried out his own idea, or has he followed the suggestions of the composer? This is, perhaps, a mystery into which one must not inquire too closely. But a note to the vocal score states that each of the two acts or parts into which the work is divided is "complete in itself, and adapted for separate performance." Now the second part, as regards both words and music, seems to us decidedly superior to the first. If it was deemed essential that there should be two parts, the first, in its subject-matter, and, consequently, in its music, ought, surely, to have formed a strong contrast: the opposition of the darkness brooding over the earth and of "Hell's rabble rout" might have been insisted on at greater length. But now to the music. One cannot help admiring Dr. Mackenzie's earnestness of purpose; there is no pandering to popular taste. The composer seems always to be writing as the spirit moves him; and, indeed, there are moments when he is too absorbed, and forgets the duty of self-criticism. A little pruning here and there would add materially to the value of the work. To comment in this fashion on a second-rate work would be waste of time. But Dr. Mackenzie is a man of strong feeling, of sound knowledge, and practical experience; and one is able to speak boldly. There are moments in "Bethlehem" in which he reaches an exceedingly high level; and if that level were maintained throughout, the work would rank among the best English compositions in the department of sacred music.

In Act 1 the opening orchestral prelude is of simple structure, and not specially striking. The chorus of terrified shepherds is clever; the polyphonic accompaniment, with its quaint and prominent figure, is in excellent contrast to the voice parts. The two special features of Act 1 are the Angels' Anthem, and the Carol sung by the shepherds and folk of Bethlehem. In the former the composer has recourse to the old ecclesiastical style; the colouring of the accompaniment, somewhat of Berlioz type, is most appropriate. In the Carol the music is of a popular cast, and yet worked up with admirable art; the motive of the "World's Rejoicing" is introduced here with decided effect. The system of representative themes is employed by Dr. Mackenzie, but with moderation. His wisdom in this respect is beyond a doubt; but only those composers who go in thoroughly for Wagner's method of dealing with motives will seriously help to solve the question as to the advisability and practicability of such a system.

We must confine ourselves to a few of the many points of interest in the second Act. The slumber song, "The Blessed Mother singeth to her Babe," the words from Coleridge, is charming, but it has one little fault: the accompaniment, though full of clever work and delicious colouring, is over-elaborated; or, rather, the art is not sufficiently concealed. The solo and chorus, "O Holy Babe! O Majesty Divine!" is a number of marked elevation. The Eastern tonality and orchestral colour in the alla marcio, when "certain kings" seek the Babe, are effective. The closing chorus, "Come in the fulness of time" contains some admirable writing; but it is not, as it should be, the most impressive number of the work.

The performance on the part of choir and orchestra was good, if not brilliant. The solo vocalists were Miss Ella Russell and Miss M. Mackenzie, Messrs. Lloyd, Barlow, and Bispham, who all acquitted themselves well.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE "Grand Wagner Concert" at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening was a brilliant success. Of the programme little need be said. "Rienzi" was the Alpha, and "Parsifal" the Omega; and between these extremes came many other excerpts from operas and music dramas. The conductor was Herr Felix Mottl, of Karlsruhe and Bayreuth fame. A few years ago we had the pleasure of testifying to his ability and enthusiasm in connexion with the production of Berlioz's great work, "Les Troyens," at Karlsruhe; and now in the works of the greater master he is seen to equal advantage. There are many good conductors; but few who are able to infuse their personality into the players, to transmit their thoughts and feelings with rapidity and intensity. Such a man is Herr Mottl. His tempi in some of the numbers differed from those of Herr Richter in the direction of slowness; but such minor points need not be mentioned now. The welcome accorded to Herr Mottl was enthusiastic in the extreme. There was no mistake about his earnestness, and this was felt by the vast audience. The visit of Herr Mottl is shortly to be repeated, and then his programme will include, besides Wagner, Beethoven, Berlioz, Chabrier, &c. His arrival here is welcome; we are not overburdened with orchestral concerts, and he will do no harm—rather the reverse—to existing institutions. The excellent singing of Mr. Andrew Black in "Wotan's Farewell" deserves recognition.

MR. FREDERICK DAWSON gave a first Piano-forte Recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. He is remarkably intelligent, with excellent fingers, but, at present, has too much of the virtuoso element. He is also very impulsive; but that, for the moment, is a good fault—anything is better than tameness. His reading of Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, on the whole, deserves praise. The rendering of the one in E flat (Op. 81a) was, however, rather cold. The career of Mr. Dawson, who is still young, will be watched with interest. He promises no less than five Beethoven Sonatas at his second Recital on April 24. Is this not an excess of classical zeal?

SIR JOHN STAINER will preside at a meeting, called by the Incorporated Society of Musicians, to consider the question of the registration of teachers of music, which is to be held on Thursday next, at 11 a.m., in the rooms of the Royal Society of Musicians, Lisle-street, Leicester-square.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

NEW SECTION OF VOL. III. (EVERYBODY—EZOD), 5s.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A.

Vol. I., A, B; Vol. II., C, £2 12s. 6d. each. Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, LL.D.

* * * Parts of Vols. I. and II. are still sold separately.

✂ The Gelasian Sacramentary is among the books prescribed for the Honour School of Theology, in the Section of "Liturgics."

Just published, medium 8vo, cloth, with Two Facsimiles, 18s.

THE GELASIAN SACRAMENTARY. Liber

Sacramentorum Romanæ Ecclesiæ. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Notes, and Appendix, by H. A. WILSON, M.A., Fellow of S. Mary Magdalen College.

"A very valuable contribution to liturgical research. The work has been executed at the cost of great labour, and with a scholarly thoroughness worthy of all praise. It may, in brief, be declared to supersede entirely all previous attempts to exhibit the text of the ancient Roman Sacramentary with which the name of Gelasius has been from an early date connected. Even those who have ready access to the works of Tommasi (or Muratori) and Gerbert will find that for the study of the Gelasian Sacramentary Mr. Wilson's work not only supplies a more trustworthy text, but saves an incredible amount of time and labour if an attempt at comparison be instituted."—Academy.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SELECT STATUTES and other CONSTITUTIONAL DOCUMENTS, illustrative of the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I. Edited by G. W. PROTHERO, Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.

Just published, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY of MIND. Translated from the "Encyclopædia of the Philosophical Sciences." With Five Introductory Essays. By WILLIAM WALLACE, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, and Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford.

Just published, 8vo, with a Map, cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE LIFE and TIMES of JAMES the FIRST,

the Conqueror, King of Aragon, Valencia, and Majorca, Count of Barcelona and Urgel, Lord of Montpellier. By F. DARWIN SWIFT, B.A., formerly Scholar of Queen's College, Oxford.

SWIFT.—SELECTIONS from his WORKS.

Edited, with Life, Introductions, and Notes, by HENRY CRAIK. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 15s.

Each volume may be had separately, price 7s. 6d.

THE PRINCIPAL SPEECHES of the STATES-

MEN and ORATORS of the FRENCH REVOLUTION, 1789-1795. With Introductions, Notes, &amp;c., by H. MORSE STEPHENS. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

THE TABLE TALK of JOHN SELDEN.

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by SAMUEL HARVEY REYNOLDS, M.A. 8vo, half-roan, 8s. 6d.

SIR WALTER RALEGH: a Biography. By

W. STEBBING, M.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"RULERS OF INDIA."—New Volume.

Just published, crown 8vo, with a Map, cloth, 2s. 6d.

SIR THOMAS MUNRO and the BRITISH

SETTLEMENT of the MADRAS PRESIDENCY. By the late JOHN BRADSHAW, M.A., LL.D., Inspector of Schools, Madras.

"This compact and interesting book is most valuable for those looking forward to or engaged in the work of Indian administration."—Schoolman.

Just published Facs. III., small 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d. Parts I. and II. published, 2s. 6d. each.

A HEBREW and ENGLISH LEXICON of the OLD TESTAMENT. With an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic Based on the Lexicon of WILLIAM GESENIUS. Edited by FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., S. R. DRIVER, D.D., and CHARLES A. BRIGGS, D.D.

Just published, Second Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of PROJECTIVE GEOMETRY. By

LUIGI CREMONA, LL.D. Edin., &c., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Rome. Translated by CHARLES LEUDESORF, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford.

Just published, Second Edition, Revised, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the MATHEMATICAL

THEORY of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By W. T. A. EMTAGE, M.A., Pembroke College, Professor of Physics, University College, Nottingham, late Examiner in the School of Natural Science, Oxford.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE PRINCIPLES of MORALS. By Thomas

FOWLER, D.D., President of Corpus Christi College, and sometime Wykeham Professor of Logic in the University of Oxford; and JOHN MATTHIAS WILSON, B.D., late President of Corpus Christi College, and sometime Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A TREATISE on the FOREIGN POWERS and

JURISDICTION of the BRITISH CROWN. By WILLIAM EDWARD HALL, M.A., Barrister-at-Law.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. By W. E. Hall, M.A.

Third Edition. 8vo, 22s. 6d.

A HISTORY of FRANCE. With numerous

Maps, Plans, and Tables. By G. W. KITCHIN, D.D. In 3 vols., crown 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

Vol. I., to 1453. Third Edition. Vol. II., 1453-1624. Second Edition.

Vol. III., 1624-1793. Second Edition.

ELIZABETHAN SEAMEN, VOYAGES of, to AMERICA. Edited by E. J. PAYNE, M.A. First Series. HAWKINS, FROBISHER, DRAKE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

HISTORY of the NEW WORLD called AMERICA.By E. J. PAYNE, M.A. Vol. I., 8vo, 18s. Vol. II. In the Press.LANCASTER and YORK. A Century of English

History (A.D. 1399-1485). By Sir JAMES H. RAMSAY. 2 vols., 8vo, £1 16s.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1147.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

2 vols., large 8vo, 32s.

PRIMITIVE CIVILIZATIONS:

THE HISTORY OF OWNERSHIP IN ARCHAIC COMMUNITIES.

By E. J. SIMCOX, Author of "Natural Law," &c.

DIARY OF A CAVALRY OFFICER IN THE PENINSULAR AND WATERLOO CAMPAIGNS.

By the late LIEUT.-COL. TOMKINSON, of the 16th Dragoons.

Edited by his Son JAMES TOMKINSON, J.P., of Tarporely.

With Five Maps and Three Etched Plates, 8vo, 15s.

"A delightful book. It is a thousand pities it was not published long ago; for it is one of the works that go to the making of history."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Of the greatest interest to military and historical students. Excellent reproductions add to the charm of the book, which from cover to cover is full of good reading."—ST. JAMES'S.

"The unpretending work of a modest man and a good soldier."—THE TIMES.

"Just the kind of material the historian rejoices to possess. Gives us a better idea of the daily life under Wellington's command than any made book could afford."—LIVERPOOL POST.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH LANDED INTEREST

its Customs, Laws, and Agriculture. By J. RUSSELL GARNIER. Vol. I. EARLY PERIOD. Vol. II. MODERN PERIOD. 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

"He writes with a living knowledge of the rural England of to-day."—TIMES.

"Full of careful and far-reaching erudition."—SCOTSMAN.

"Eminently readable."—GLASGOW HERALD.

SECOND EDITION.

RIDDLES of the SPHINX: a Study in the Philosophy of Evolution. By F. C. S. SCHILLER, M.A. Oxon., Instructor in Logic and Metaphysics in the Cornell University. Second Edition. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"A complete system of philosophy in outline. Highly interesting, and will repay careful study."—PHILOSOPHICAL REVIEW.

"We hope the student will not neglect such an earnest and careful study of metaphysical problems."

THE SKEPTICS of the FRENCH RENAISSANCE.

By JOHN OWEN. 8vo, 10s. 6d. Montaigne, Ramus, Charron, Sanchez, Le Vayer, Pascal. Of the previous work, SKEPTICS of the ITALIAN RENAISSANCE, a Second Edition is now ready, at 10s. 6d.

THE BIBLE and its THEOLOGY as POPULARLY TAUGHT: a Review and Restatement.

By G. VANCE SMITH, Ph.D. 5s.

A CANDIDATE'S SPEECHES. By One who

HAS NEVER BEEN A CANDIDATE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"He shows wide knowledge and the capacity of handling political questions."

Western Daily Press.

"A handy 'crib' for candidates at the next General Election."—BEDFORD OBSERVER.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

NEW VOLS. EACH 2s. 6d.

73. TYRANNY of SOCIALISM. By Yves Guyot.

72. LAND SYSTEMS of AUSTRALASIA. By Wm. Epps.

71. THE RISE of MODERN DEMOCRACY in OLD and NEW ENGLAND. By CHARLES BORGEAUD. With Introduction by C. H. FIRTH, M.A.

70. HOURS and WAGES. By L. Brentano.

THREE NEW AUSTRALIAN STORIES.

1. THE NEW ARCADIA. By Horace Tucker.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

2. OUR ALMA. By Henry Goldsmith. Large

crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

3. TALES of the EARLY AUSTRALIAN DAYS.

By PRICE WARUNG. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE BEAUTY of BOSCASTLE. By T. Mullett-

ELLIS. 5s.

"A powerful and fearless piece of work."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"There is not a dull page in the story."—SCOTSMAN.

"Mr. Ellis knows well how to tell a story."—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

"It is a strong story; a singularly ingenious and intricate plot."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

NEW SOLUTION OF AN HISTORICAL MYSTERY.

THE STORY of LOUIS XVII. of FRANCE.

By E. E. EVANS. With 5 Engraved Portraits. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"It is a beautiful and interesting book, and must take the leading place in the literature of the subject. It makes out a strong case."

Mr. ANDREW D. WHITE, American Minister at St. Petersburg.

THE ACTS of APOLLONIUS and other

MONUMENTS of EARLY CHRISTIANITY. Edited, with General Preface, Introduction and Notes, by F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A., late Fellow of University College, Oxon. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"A series of vivid pictures of the practical working of Christianity during the first three centuries of its history."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Certain to attract attention, especially as bearing on the much-discussed but still obscure question of the relation between Christianity and the Roman Empire."—GLASGOW HERALD.

REFORMED LOGIC. A System Based on Berke-

ley's Philosophy, with an entirely New Method of Dialectics. By D. B. MAC-LACHLAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The strictly logical chapters are written with great clearness and undoubted ability. Many a good point is made, especially in the criticism of the syllogism."—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

BY THE NEW DEAN OF ELY.

CHRIST and DEMOCRACY: on the Relations of Christianity to Social Questions of the Day. By the Rev. CHARLES W. STUBBS. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.

THE NICENE CREED CATECHETICALLY

EXPLAINED, with Proofs and Illustrations from Holy Scripture. By the Rev. HENRY MORTON THOMSON, M.A. With an Introduction by the Rev. Canon T. T. CARTER, M.A. 6s.

DILETTANTE LIBRARY.—New Volumes.

RICHARD JEFFERIES: a Study. By H. S. Salt. With

Portrait. 2s. 6d. Large Paper, with 4 Full-Page Plates of "Jefferies Land," & B. Newcombe, 10s. 6d.

MENDELSSOHN.—SELECTED LETTERS. Preface by

Sir GEORGE GROVE. With Portrait. 2s. 6d.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. By Walter Jerrold.

With Portrait. 2s. 6d.

NEUROOMIA: a New Continent. A Manuscript delivered by the Deep. By G. McIVER. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

VOICES from AUSTRALIA: a Book of Australian Verse. By PHILIP DALE and CYRIL HAVILAND. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.—3s. 6d.

IL MAL OCCHIO: the Evil Eye. By G. S.

GODKIN, Author of "The Life of Victor Emmanuel."

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS		PAGE
LETTERS OF HARRIET COUNTESS GRANVILLE, by T. HUTCHINSON . . . . .
VERNON'S READINGS FROM DANTE, by MM. VILLARI . . . . .
JAMES'S ROMANTIC PROFESSIONS, by J. A. NORRIS . . . . .
NICHOLSON'S PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY, by J. BONAR . . . . .
NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE . . . . .
BOOKS OF TRAVEL . . . . .
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .
ORIGINAL VERSE: "DIVINE GENTRILIA LAVDER," by MAURICE HEWLETT . . . . .
THE YELLOW BOOK, by F. WEDMORE . . . . .
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .
CORRESPONDENCE—
The North-Fishish Inscriptions translated and explained, V., by E. W. B. Nicholson; Gordon's "Genesis," 2008-7, by Henry Bradley; Spencer, "Faerie Queens," I., II., 18, by C. E. Doble . . . . .
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .
BUDGE'S BOOK OF GOVERNORS AND DISCOURSES OF PHILOXENUS . . . . .
MATHEMATICAL BOOKS . . . . .
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . . .
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . . . .
WALLIS'S PERSIAN CERAMIC ART, by COSMO MONKHOUSE . . . . .
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .
STAGE NOTES . . . . .
"REBELION" "FAUST" AT VENICE, by ARTHUR SYMONS . . . . .
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . . . .
MUSIC NOTES . . . . .

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,
Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEE-NORRIS TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN
MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES FOR THE BEST ESSAY IN ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Poundress and "Glosses," 18. 6d.—For rules, and addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Ewch, Breconshire.

LITERARY, SECRETARIAL, or
CLERICAL WORK DESIRED by a LADY, who has had two and a half years' experience in a Government Office. Reads French, German, Dutch, Danes-Norwegian, and Swedish.—Address M. R. 11, Cornhill Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.
AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 49, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

MONDAY, MAY 7.—STOCK OF AN OPTICIAN.
MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by
AUCTION at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY, May 7, at half-past 12 precisely, the REMAINING PORTION OF THE STOCK OF MESSRS. JOHN ROWLEY & SON, comprising Telescopes, Microscopes, Mathematical Instruments, Graphoscopes, Stereoscopes, Models, Gold and other Spectacles, Lamps and Slides, Barometers, Thermometers, &c.; Shop Fittings, &c.
On view the Saturday prior, 12 till 4, and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.
Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.
Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquaries, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.
J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

CATALOGUES
FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.
AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 1, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

New ready. 8vo. pp. xxxii. + 516, about 4,000 titles. Cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d. net; on Dutch Hand-made Paper (100 copies), buckram, gilt top, 15s. net.
A CATALOGUE OF BOOKS printed at or relating to the University, Town, and County of Cambridge from 1221 to 1893, with Bibliographical and Biographical Notes by ROBERT BOWEN. 94 illustrations of head and tail-pieces, initial letters, &c. On sale by Macmillan & Bowe, Cambridge.
There are notes to upwards of 900 names by which it is sought to identify the writer with his books and to give the names of the authors of many anonymous Works. Among the contents are:—A specimen of the Press of John Siberch, and many of Thomas, Legate, Legge, and their successors; Milton's Lycidas, first edition and early editions of Gile and Phineas Fletcher, George Herbert, Crashaw, Randolph, Thomas Fuller, &c.; Books relating to the Fens; Cambridge printed Bibles and Prayer-books, including those of Baskerville; the Snob and the Gossamer (Thackeray), and a large number of University Periodicals; The Historical Works of Cooper, Willis and Clark, Mullinger, Wordsworth, Huber, &c.; and Works relating to the County, Wisbech, the Isle and City of Ely; Collections of Prize Poems, Essays, Sermons, and complete sets of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, the Cambridge Camden Society, the Cambridge University Calendar, &c., &c. A detailed prospectus can be had on application.
".... In many respects it is a model bibliography of a local press.... the descriptions leave nothing to be desired for fulness and accuracy.... Not the least valuable part of the catalogue is the short biographical account of each author appended to the description of his work. These notes are of great interest and contain information brought together, much of it for the first time, from many sources."—The Library, on Part A.

The Autotype Company, London,
Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class
BOOK ILLUSTRATION
Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.
AUTO-GRASURE
The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Bull, R.A., Outlets, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—
THE
AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,
Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by
"THE GREAT MASTERS"
from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.
Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free on any address.
The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 700 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.
New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.
The SUMMER SESSION will begin on TUESDAY, May 1st, 1894. The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds (including 75 for Convalescents at Swanley). Students may reside in the College, within the Hospital walls, subject to the Collegiate regulations.
SCHOLARSHIPS and PRIZES of the aggregate value of over £700 are awarded annually, and Students entering in May can compete for the Entrance Scholarship in September.
For full particulars apply to the WARDEN OF THE COLLEGE, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.
ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS AND EXHIBITIONS.
An EXAMINATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 26th, 1894, and exceeding days, for the awarding of the following:—
1. A Scholarship of £75 for one year to the best candidate in Chemistry and Physics who is under twenty-five years of age.
2. A Scholarship of £75 for one year to the best candidate in Biology (Animal and Vegetable) and Physiology who is under twenty-five years of age.
Candidates for these two Scholarships must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice of any London Medical School.
3. A Scholarship of £150 and the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition of £50, each tenable for one year, in Physics, Chemistry, Vegetable Biology, and Animal Biology. Candidates for these must be under twenty years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical or Surgical Practice at any Medical School.
4. Jefferson Exhibition of £21 for one year in Latin and Mathematics, with any one of the Languages, Greek, French, and German. (Classical book as in Matriculation of Univ. of London, June, 1894.) Candidates must not have entered at any Medical School.
The successful candidates in all cases will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination.
For full particulars apply to Dr. T. W. SNOOK, Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

THE GROVE, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
PRINCIPAL, Mrs. LACEY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Modern History; Oxford University Extension Lecturer.
VISITING TEACHERS:—
Miss J. W. KIRKALDY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Natural Science; University of London; Sciences Tripos.
Miss C. M. RIDING, Girton College, Cambridge; Classical Tripos.
Miss M. R. HOSTE, Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford; Honours, Classical Moderations.
Miss L. L. BARNARD, English Language, Elocution.
Mr. ARTHUR SOMERVELL, Professor at the Royal College of Music.
Miss GALLATLY, Associate of the Royal College of Music.
Mr. R. CARPUS (Violin).
Mrs. OLIPHANT (Dancing and Physical Exercises).
Mr. W. McNEILSON (Fencing and Drill).
REFERENCE PERMITTED TO:—
The Lady Laura Riddell; Miss M. St. John, Lecturer, late Principal of Somerville Hall; Mrs. A. H. Johnson, Hon. Sec. Association for the Education of Women, Oxford; Miss Maitland, Principal of Somerville Hall; the Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester; the Rev. Professor Symes, M.A., Principal of University College, Nottingham.
The NEXT TERM will begin MAY 4th.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.
MORAL PHILOSOPHY CHAIR.
The University Court are about to appoint a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair in this University, of which they intend to vacate.
The Professor will be required to enter on his duties from 1st October next, from which date the appointment will take effect.
The Salary of the Chair has been fixed by Ordinance at £500, subject to reduction to not less than three-fourths of that sum in the event of the Fee-Fund not being fully maintained. The Chair has an official residence attached to it.
The appointment is made ad vitam aut culpam, and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance.
Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, who will furnish any further information desired, 20 copies of his Application, and 20 copies of any Testimonials he may desire to submit, on or before Tuesday, 12th June.
ALAN E. CLAFFATON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS
GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA AND TITLE OF L.L.A. to WOMEN.
The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

EDWARD WHYMPER
will deliver a Lecture entitled
"TWENTY THOUSAND FEET ABOVE THE SEA,"
At 8.30, on MONDAY, APRIL 30.
In ST. MARTIN'S TOWN HALL, Trafalgar Square.
Tickets 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., from the Hall; at the principal Libraries and Ticket Agents; Spooner & Co., Strand; and the Lecture Agency, Ltd., The Outer Temple, Strand, W.C.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and
advanced Examinations.—STUDENTS PREPARED in Classes connected with North London Collegiate School, under Miss BISS's superintendence. Arrangements made for boarding in neighbourhood.—Address Miss TOPLEY, 145, Camden Road, N.W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.
Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best
University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BAZVOA, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 943.—MAY, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—A VISIT TO THE TENNYSONS IN 1839, Edited by Bartle Teeling.—FURTHER EXPERIENCES IN APULIA, by E. M. Church.—SOME VARIATIONS OF ETIQUETTE, by THE RICH MISS RIDDELL, by Dorothea Gerard.—A RAMBLE ROUND FOLKESTONE.—CAVALRY PROBLEMS, by C. Stein.—THE DEMON LEO.—THE AIM BEHIND AN EIGHT HOURS BILL, by Warneford Moffatt.—THE SOPA EXPEDITION AND THE WEST INDIAN SOLDIERS.—GOVERNMENT ON CROTCHES.—DESERTED HOMES, by "A Son of the Marshes."—A SHAM SOCIALIST BUDGET.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

MAY.

WOMAN and LABOUR. By Professor KARL PEARSON.
THE ORIGIN of CULTIVATION. By GRANT ALLYN.
THE MINES (EIGHT HOURS) BILL. By D. A. THOMAS, M.P.
SOME RECENT PLAYS. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
THE PROBLEM of CONSTANTINOPLE. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
THE ROYAL PATRIOTIC FUND. By HUDSON E. KEAPLEY, M.P.
THE APPRECIATION of GOLD. By ROBERT BARCLAY (Director of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce).
L'IMPERIEUSE BONTE. By OUIDA.
THE STAMP-COLLECTING CRAZE. By W. ROBERTS.
CYCLING and CYCLES. By CHESTON.
ENGLISH and FRENCH MANNERS. By FREDERIC CARREL.
A SOCIALIST in a CORNER. By W. H. MALLOCK.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, LTD.

New Review.

MAY, 1894.—Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

SECRETS from the COURT of SPAIN.
TELEPHONES: Past, Present, and Future. By J. HENNIGER HEATON, M.J.
A CHARACTER SKETCH: The Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, M.P.
THE TWO BABYLONS: London and Chicago. By W. T. STEAD.
ANNIVERSAIRE. By PAUL VERLAINE.
OUR DOMESTIC SERVANTS. By Lady JEUNE.
LONDON TREES. (Illustrated.) By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, M.P.
KEATS and SEVERN. By WILLIAM GRAHAM.
THE TRUTH about the LONDON BAKERIES. By the Editor of the "BAKERS' TIMES."
THE TYRANNY of WOMAN. By Mrs. EDMUND GOSSE.
ENGLISH CRICKET and CRICKETERS. By F. R. SPOFFORTH.
DAMNOSA DIABEREDITAS. (A Short Story.) By EVA ANSTUTTER.
CHIESS (with Problems). By I. GUNSBURG.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

THE BOOKMAN:

AN ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY JOURNAL FOR BOOKREADERS, BOOKBUYERS, AND BOOKSELLERS.

CONTENTS FOR MAY. Price 6d.

PORTRAITS: Professor ROBERTSON SMITH.
Miss BEATRICE HARRADEN.
MONTHLY REPORT of the WHOLESALE BOOK TRADE.
A NEW WRITER: Mr. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN.
PROFESSOR ROBERTSON SMITH.
MARY QUEEN of SCOTS.—I. From her Birth to her Coronation.
By D. HAY FLEMING.
IN the D'URBERVILLE COUNTRY. With Illustrations.
EARLY EDITIONS. By S. J. WISE.
NEW BOOKS.—NOVEL NOTES.—NEW NOTES.—THE BOOK-MAN'S TABLE.—THE BOOKSELLER,
&c.
&c.

London: HOBBS &amp; STOUTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

THE CRITICAL REVIEW.

Edited by Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.

The APRIL No. Ready Now.

Containing signed REVIEWS of all the important Theological and Philosophical Books published during the previous quarter, and NOTICES and RECORD of SELECT LITERATURE by the Editor.

Published Quarterly, price 1s. 6d. Annual Subscription (post free), 6s. Vol. III, in cloth binding, price 7s., now ready.

"The Student of theology will find it a most trustworthy guide."—Spectator.

Edinburgh: T. &amp; T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

Cloth, price 2s. 6d., post free.

RHEUMATISM and SCIATICA: their Nature, Causes, and Treatment. By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.
London: JAMES EPPS & CO. (LTD.), 170, Piccadilly, and 43, Threadneedle Street.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.*SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By Benjamin Kidd. Second Edition.

8vo, 10s. net.

TOWN LIFE in the FIFTEENTH CENTURY. By Mrs. J. R.

GREEN. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"The clearness of thought and expression conspicuous in her volumes almost hides from her readers the skill implied in the successful presentation of so complex a subject. Her book, besides presenting us with no scanty harvest of interesting facts, is full of suggestive criticism and independent thought."

NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"It is a book of exact knowledge, careful inference and logical discussion, as well as graphic statement and brilliant summary. In fact, it is history written as it ought to be written, a branch at once of science and of literature."

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. Green.

M.A. Illustrated Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORGATE. Part 22. Super-royal 8vo, 1s. net. (Volumes I., II., and III. now ready. Super-royal 8vo, 12s. net each vol.)

THE FLOWER of FORGIVENESS. By Flora Annie Steel.

2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"The two volumes of short stories which Mrs. Steel calls 'The Flower of Forgiveness' will confirm the reputation of this admirable writer.....The best of them are a pure delight, most cunning, most delicate, most pathetic.....They are mostly so good that we hardly know which to choose, but the 'Bhut Baby' and 'Feroza' are without flaw in their way."

A MODERN BUCCANEER. By Rolf Boldrewood. 3 vols.,

crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

A VALIANT IGNORANCE. By Mary Angela Dickens. 3 vols.,

crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

WORLD.—"The most skilfully constructed, most evenly written, most progressively and consistently interesting novel she has yet produced.....There is strong drawing in the character of Mrs. Romayne."

KATHARINE LAUDERDALE. By F. Marion Crawford. 3 vols.,

crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

PUNCH.—"Admirable in its simple pathos, its unforced humour, and, above all, in its truth to human nature.....There is not a tedious page or paragraph in the three volumes."

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN and his FAMILY. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 415.

MAY.

Price 1s.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1.—PERLYCROSS. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Chapters XXXVI.—XXXVIII.               | 4.—DITAS.  |
| 2.—THE PARLIAMENTS and MINISTRIES of the CENTURY. By C. B. ROLYANCE-KENT. | 5.—THE MELANCHOLY MAN.                           |
| 3.—A DISCOURSE on SEQUELS.  | 6.—BEGGING LETTERS and their WRITERS.            |
|   | 7.—THE CLIFF-CLIMBERS.                           |
|   | 8.—THE LAST FIGHT of JOAN of ARC. By ANDREW LANG |

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

"PUNCH" asks apropos of

THE YELLOW BOOK,

"Will it be a generally red book?"

The publishers beg to state that the FIRST EDITION (5,000 copies) was exhausted in five days. The SECOND EDITION is now likewise exhausted. A THIRD EDITION will be ready on Monday at all Booksellers, Libraries, and Railway Bookstalls.

THE YELLOW BOOK:

An Illustrated Quarterly.

Vol. I., APRIL, 1894.

Price 5s. net.

ELKIN MATHEWS &amp; JOHN LANE, THE BODLEY HEAD, VIPO STREET, LONDON, W.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tiedall, and many others.

HARRISON &amp; SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

This day, post 8vo, cloth, with Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

TWELVE YEARS' RESIDENCE on the WEST COAST of SCOTLAND. By Captain JAMES MASON, late of the 75th and 94th Regiments.
Glasgow & Jackson, 1, Paternoster Row (Mr. Van Voorst's successors).

SHAVING MADE EASY

AND BLOTCHES AVOIDED

BY USING

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

STICKS.—PREMIER, 6d. TOILET, 1/-, 1/6, 2/6. VESTAL, 2/-.
CAKES.—PREMIER, 1/- TOILET, 2/- VESTAL, 3/-.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS for MAY, 1894.

- I. A BEGINNER. Chaps. XIII.—XIV.
- II. THE POET'S HOME.
- III. VOLTAIRE'S FAVOURITE MORALIST.
- IV. A LEGEND OF GRANADA.
- V. QUOTATION.
- VI. THE LAST OF THE THRUSTONS.
- VII. FEBRUARY at ADARE.
- VIII. HORACE WALPOLE.
- IX. RALPH INGLEFIELD'S REVENGE.
- X. AND ONE UNKNOWN.
- XI. NIGHT SONG.
- XII. BY RIGHT OF WOMANHOOD.
- XIII. AN INTERLOPER. Chaps. XIII.—XVI.
- XIV. OF MARGUERITES (VILLANEUE).

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

THE LIFE OF JOHN CHURCHILL, Duke of Marlborough, To the Accession of Queen Anne.

By GENERAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

"By a happy combination of the arts of the historian, biographer, and the military critic, Lord Wolseley has produced a book which will charm and profoundly inform all classes of readers."—Irish Times.
 "Lord Wolseley has laboured with energy and enthusiasm, and his book will rank among the biographies of permanent interest and value."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS AT EVERY LIBRARY

NOW READY.

MISS BROUGHTON'S NEW NOVEL, A BEGINNER.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

Author of "Joan," "Dr. Cupid," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Displays all the author's powers of humorous characterisation; her amused sense of the comedy of life. It contains enchanting open-air word-pictures, delightful chatter of children, vivacious dialogue; it throbs with actuality and animal spirits; it, in short, is a characteristic specimen of her work."—Daily News.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTERS OF THE WORLD."

THOROUGH.

By MARY A. M. MARKS.

Author of "Dr. Willoughby Smith," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

(This Novel deals with the period of the Irish Rebellion of 1641, and the Events which led to the transplantation of Connaught.)

NOW READY.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON.

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"To turn from the unpleasant problems which occupy the attention of so many novel writers at the present day to a story about Red Indians and such adventures as those of Winnetka and 'Big Fish,' is quite a refreshing exercise."—Athenæum.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE.

By M. DEANE.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"An interesting romance."—Athenæum.

"A graceful romance with some very dramatic touches."—Morning Post.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN.

Author of "The Scots of Westminster,"

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A supremely entertaining novel."—Daily Telegraph.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
 Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOW READY. Price 10s. 6d.

COUNT CAVOUR and MADAME DE CIR COURT. Some unpublished Correspondence. Edited by COUNT NIGRA. Translated by A. J. BUTLER.

LORD A. LOFTUS.

SECOND SERIES NOW READY.

THE DIPLOMATIC REMINISCENCES OF LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, P.C., G.C.B., 1862 to 1879.

Demy 8vo, 2 vols., 32s.

The Second Series of these Reminiscences covers the Period of Lord A. Loftus's Residence at the Courts of Bavaria, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

BY G. A. SALA.

READY SHORTLY. 2 vols., 21s.

THINGS I HAVE SEEN and PEOPLE I HAVE KNOWN.

BY THE RIGHT HON. G. SHAW.

LEFEVRE, M.P.

NOW READY. Price 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH COMMONS and FORESTS.

The Story of the Battle during the last Thirty Years for Public Rights over the Commons and Forests of England and Wales. With Maps.

"The extremely valuable volume is at once a romance and a revelation."—Daily Chronicle.

BY JOHN PENDLETON.

JUST PUBLISHED. 2 vols., price 21s.

OUR RAILWAYS: their Origin, Development, Incident, and Romance. With nearly 300 Illustrations.

"In the infinite humour and adventures of the railway these volumes are rich."—Speaker.

"Mr. Pendleton's work bids fair to be the standard railway history."—Bookman.

VOL. VII. OF THE NEW AND REVISED EDITION OF

CASSELL'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

With New and Original Illustrations. The Text thoroughly Revised throughout. 9s.

"The most interesting, instructive, and entertaining history of our country which has yet seen the light is 'Cassell's History of England.'"—Standard.

BY LESLIE KEITH.

'LISBETH. Popular Edition. Ready

shortly. Price 6s.

"A really first-class novel by a master-hand."

Daily Telegraph.

BY E. W. HORNUNG.

TINY LUTTRELL. Popular Edition.

Now ready. Price 6s.

"It is a long time since we have read a novel so enthralling in interest and so sprightly in movement."—Weekly Sun.

BY STANLEY WEYMAN.

NOW READY. Price 3s. 6d.

THE MAN in BLACK. With Twelve

Full-Page Illustrations by Wal Paget and H. M. Paget.

"In 'The Man in Black' Mr. Stanley Weyman has followed up his recent brilliant adventures in the field of romance with a short story which we cannot but think must have charmed Victor Hugo himself."—Saturday Review.

BY STANDISH O'GRADY.

NOW READY. Price 5s.

LOST on DU CORRIG; or, 'Twixt

Earth and Ocean. With Eight Full-Page Illustrations.

"Nothing more thrilling or fascinating can be desired in the way of light literature."—Daily Telegraph.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
 LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

AMONG THE MOORS:

Sketches of Oriental Life.

By G. MONTABARD.

Author of "In Egypt," &c.

Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

M. Montbard, whose skill as an artist has been rendered familiar to everyone through the pages of the Illustrated London News, recently explored the highways and byways of Morocco, and made himself acquainted with the manners and customs of the natives, the characteristics of the scenery, the architecture of the cities and mosques, and every aspect of the social life of the people in town and country.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI AND THE PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT

Viewed in Relation to the Problems, Tendencies, and Purposes of Modern English Art.

By Mrs. J. W. WOOD.

With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The book contains some unpublished reminiscences of Rossetti's student days and career in art, and describes the Founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood and its long conflict with academic traditions.

"The best book yet written on Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelites. Besides being a work of philosophical value, the book is a most attractive record of comradeship, inspired by the noblest and most generous ideals of youth. The illustrations from some of Rossetti's greatest paintings are beautifully executed. In her treatment of the tragically pathetic incidents in Rossetti's life, Mrs. Wood displays the greatest tact and delicacy."—Daily News.

ON SHORT LEAVE TO JAPAN.

By Capt. G. J. YOUNGHUSBAND,

Queen's Own Corps of Guides, Author of "Eighteen Hundred Miles on a Burmese Tat," &c.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney CHRISTIAN, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. [Next week.]

The STORY of MY TWO WIVES

By ONE of THEIR HUSBANDS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Ready.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE.

By EDITH E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. [Immediately.]

FIRE ISLAND. By G. Manville

FENN, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth. [Shortly.]

A Dainty Novelty in size, price, paper, print, illustrations, and general get-up. Super-royal 32mo. Each Volume, IF SOLD SEPARATELY, parchment paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, gilt top, rough edges, extra, 2s.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Six Volumes complete in cloth case (each Volume cloth, gilt top), price 9s.; in cardboard box (each Volume in parchment paper covers), price 6s.

STORIES FROM SCRIBNER.

STORIES OF NEW YORK.

STORIES OF THE RAILWAY.

STORIES OF THE SOUTH.

STORIES OF THE SEA.

STORIES OF ITALY.

STORIES OF THE ARMY.

"Of a series entitled 'Stories from Scribner,' we have before us the last three volumes, 'Stories of the Sea,' 'Stories of Italy,' and 'Stories of the Army,' by various authors. In appearance they are charming little books, tastefully printed, prettily illustrated, and of a convenient size to put into the pocket; while the letterpress is very pleasant, comfortable sort of reading, if the epithet may be applied to stories which are never exciting or thought-awakening, and at the same time never actually dull."—Athenæum.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MAY NUMBER—CONTENTS.

SOME EPISODES OF MOUNTAINEERING, by a CASUAL AMATEUR. BOWLING LEAGUES, Illustrated by the Author. JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chapters XXX-XXXIV. GEORGE W. CARLE. (Began in January Number—to be continued.) THE PROVINCIALS: Sketches of American Types. OCTAVE TRACET. Illustrated.

A FOUNT of CURE: a Story of Monte Carlo. Chapters V-VI. WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP. (To be concluded in June.)

A CORNER in a MARKET. Painted by Jules Muenier. PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. With Full-Page Illustration (Frontispiece) and Portrait of Muenier.

THE AMERICAN CONGO. JEAN G. DEBRAY, Captain U.S.A. Illustrations from Drawings made in the Rio Grande region by Gilbert Gaul.

WOMANLINESS as a PROFESSION. ALINE GORREN. A NEW PORTRAIT of FRANKLIN. PAUL LEICESTER FORD. Illustrated.

WORKING GIRLS' CLUBS. CLARA SNEY DAYTOOE. Illustrated. THAT GOOD MAY COME. EDITH WHARTON.

TWO SONNETS: a Talking Race—To One who Sleeps. EDITH M. THOMAS.

CLIMBING for WHITE GOATS. GEORGE BIRD GRINNELL. Illustrated. Engravings by VAN NESS and CHADWICK.

THE ETHICS of DEMOCRACY.—Liberty. F. J. SIMSON.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1894.

No. 1147, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Letters of Harriet, Countess Granville, 1810-1845. Edited by the Hon. F. Leveson Gower. In 2 vols. (Longmans.)

THESE letters have a twofold claim on our attention. Not only do they chronicle, with delightful minuteness, the sayings and doings of that brilliant aristocracy which, employed in feasting, gambling, and intriguing, sped with feverish energy along the primrose path during the nine years of the Regency and the two reigns that followed (1811-1837): not only do they furnish us with many clever studies of celebrities home-grown and foreign—often the merest lightning-sketches achieved in three strokes, yet always characteristic and impressive; but along with all this they discharge another function which Lady Granville herself, we may be sure, never dreamed of their surviving to fulfil, by revealing to us, as we peruse them, a personality of rare and irresistible charm, adorned with each most precious grace of womanhood—with family affections ardent and deep, with a stainless purity of thought, word, and deed, and with a sunny benignity of soul, finding expression in a manner of such radiant graciousness as can have seldom failed to pierce through even the dullest, thickest fog of insensibility or dislike.

The letters contained in these volumes were, with few exceptions, written by Lady Granville to her elder sister Georgiana, Lady Morpeth, and to her brother, William Spencer, sixth Duke of Devonshire, who, in 1811, succeeded his father, and, outliving both his sisters, died unmarried in 1858. They are the eager, irrepressible, absolutely unpremeditated outpourings of her heart of hearts to these two beloved relatives; and in them consequently we have a faithful mirror of her inmost feelings, as well as of her impressions regarding the persons and things around her. Luckily, her son, the Hon. F. Leveson Gower, has taken a reasonable view of his duties as editor, and has wisely preferred to print the letters just as they were written, without omission or curtailment. Their value as a picture of contemporary life and manners is thus immeasurably enhanced, and the easy, spontaneous charm of Lady Granville's epistolary style preserved unimpaired. The information conveyed in the Introduction and Notes, however, is not always to be depended on. It seems odd that a man should need to be set right concerning the details of his own family history; but surely it is not strictly in accordance with the facts to assert (Introduction, p. vii.) that Earl Granville was the second son of the first Marquis of Stafford? Lord Stafford's son by his second marriage was, we know, the first Duke of Sutherland; his son by the third marriage was Earl Granville; but besides these two, there was also a son by Lord Stafford's first marriage, that with Elizabeth Fazakerly, of Prescott, Lancashire—a son who died in infancy. Again, it was not the fifth, but the fourth Marquis of Lansdowne (i., p. 63) who, in 1843, married Mlle. Emilie de Flahault, afterwards Baroness Nairne. And, further, it is erroneous to state, under the year 1830, that Abercromby (afterwards Lord Dunfermline) "had long sat in Parliament for one of the Duke of Devonshire's boroughs." It was not any borough of the Duke's, but one belonging to the Marquis of Lansdowne, namely, Calne in Wiltshire, that Abercromby represented for a period of eighteen years (1812-1830), at the end of which he was succeeded by no less a personage than Thomas Babington Macaulay, who sat for the little pocket-borough until 1833, when he was elected member for the newly enfranchised town of Leeds. But it is only fair to add that slips of this character are of exceedingly rare occurrence.

Lady Harriet Cavendish was the second daughter of William, fifth Duke of Devonshire and his wife, "the beautiful Duchess," of whose transcendent charms and angelic goodness the whole country at one time resounded with the praise. Of all her countless admirers the mother had none more passionately devout than her younger daughter.

"You would be tired of the endless repetition," writes Lady Harriet to the Duchess in 1805, "if I were to tell you how constantly I wish to be with you. I must be very different from what I am before I could feel worthy of belonging to you; but if to love you and admire you, not only as the most indulgent of mothers, but as superior to any human being I ever met with, is to deserve it, you would scarcely find any that could deserve it so much." "I am sure you alone could inspire what I feel for you: it is enthusiasm and admiration that for anybody else would be ridiculous, but to deny it to you would be unnatural."

To such a daughter as this the loss of such a mother must have been a desolating blow. At the Duchess's death in 1806, Lady Harriet, not yet of age, was left wholly dependent upon her elder sister, who, five years before, had married George, Viscount Morpeth, for counsel, consolation and support. With this affectionate protectress she spent most of her time during the three ensuing years, until the happy event of her marriage with Lord Granville Leveson Gower on December 24, 1809. How grateful she was for the loving care bestowed upon her by Lady Morpeth during these years of loneliness and depression, we may gather from a hundred passages throughout the letters in which her obligations are frankly and cordially acknowledged. One or two of these must here be given. From Sandon, the Staffordshire seat of her husband's sister, Lady Harrowby, she writes, as an eight months' bride, to Lady Morpeth:—

"I never wished so much to see you again after any absence as I do now. To-day is my birthday (29th August), and the first I have been away from you for a long time, and I have been all day thinking how triste it is not to see you. God bless you, my beloved G., and repay you for all your kindness to me. If you had loved me less, I should have been a very unhappy and perhaps worthless person. My heart would have been shut up against everything about me, the faults of my character confirmed, and I should neither have had fortitude nor almost the desire to struggle against a lot that without you would have been almost a hopeless one. All this you saved me from, and in fact have been the cause of all the happiness I have since felt."

And again, in 1811, she writes:—

"How could I not love you, not think of your comfort, when I recollect that for years you were the only person that gave any to me? Happiness may have engrossed my time, and even altered my attentions to some of my friends; but for you I have invariably felt the same strong affection and anxious solicitude about everything that concerns you. You, my dear G., are, after Granville, everything to me everywhere. I long to be with you, 'to tend your chamber all the night, and squire you by day.' God bless you. Promise me not to lie in without me."

Lady Granville's marriage was one of bright and unclouded happiness. She is never done singing the praises of "Granville, adored Granville, who would make a barren desert smile"; and, in truth, there can be no doubt but that in him she had won one of the highest prizes which the matrimonial lottery of the day had to bestow. Nor, on the other hand, was he less fortunate in his choice. Lady Harriet was endued with every virtue, every grace which even the most exacting lover could require. Admirably fitted to shine among the brilliant stars of society, she was nevertheless devoted heart and soul to husband and children. Her mind was clear and vigorous, and had been improved by reading and reflection; she had a delightful gift of kindly humour, which played like harmless lightning over the follies and foibles of her friends and acquaintance. Her lot compelled her to pass the greater part of her life in a society which was thoroughly uncongenial to her; but, though she never ceased to long for the blessings of privacy and domestic leisure, she yet contrived to play her part with the best possible grace, supporting all its fatigues and incidental désagréments "with untired spirits and formal constancy." In 1825 she writes to her sister from the British Embassy at Paris:

"The Duchesse de Maille came to me yesterday evening and said, 'Mme. l'Ambassadrice, vous êtes une femme unique. Vous menez avec une grâce parfaite la vie du monde que vous détestez le plus. A vous voir, on ne s'en douterait pas, et on vous en sait doublement gré.'"

During the first fifteen years of their married life Lord and Lady Granville resided in England, dividing their time between London and the country. From 1809 to 1819 they rented Tixall in Staffordshire, the county which Lord Granville represented in Parliament from 1800 until his elevation to the peerage in 1815. At Tixall they were in the midst of friends and relatives—the Staffords at Trentham, the Harrowbys at Sandon, the Bagots at Blithfield, the Talbots at Ingestre, and many others. Here is an amusing account of a house-party at Trentham in 1811, which included the Comte d'Artois (afterwards Charles X. of France) and his son the Duc de Berri :

"We are in the midst of Monseigneurs and amazing noise, not propitious to a headache. Monsieur forgets we are all beyond our teens and plays at bo-peep with Lady Stafford and me. The little hideous Duc de Berri smouches us all. He is clever and sings well—warbles delightfully all the opera duets and trios with Lady Harrowby and her daughter Susan, a little angel who sings beautifully and grows prettier every day. But he is difficile à vivre, and tries Lady Stafford by finding fault. To-day the eggs at breakfast were abominable. 'Ma foi, Madame, Mesdames vos poules ne s'acquittent pas bien.' They laugh unmercifully at the Baron, who, being now lightened of the Baronne, is quite outrageous with spirits and liberty. You should have heard the shout when he said by mistake, 'Monseigneur, si jamais j'ai le gouvernement d'une vielle,' instead of 'ville.' They all think it a good joke my loving Granville, just as they might if I was amouchée of some snuffy old Frenchman, shout if they find us together, pretend that I go pour battre les buissons before him when he shoots. Lord help them!"

This would probably be thought by most people a fairly easy and unconstrained mode of living. However, to Monsieur and the Duc it seemed as though they were suffering une contrainte mortelle. Arrived at Sandon, kind, gay Lady Harrowby's home, they hopped about like two birds escaped from a cage, and seemed to breathe easier and tread upon air :

"Monsieur, dear, good-natured man, does not like to be puzzled with persiflage, and here he may shout his lungs out if he pleases. We drove him to Shugborough yesterday, and found Lady Anson with about a dozen women prepared for him. You should have seen all her nerves at work, Mrs. George bursting, with every now and then a strong fit in a corner. Little Miss Black more demure, more like Miss Trimmer [Lady Granville's former governess] than ever. Monsieur and Berri balancing in the midst of them. Monsieur with the only joke he ever cuts. 'Ah! Ah! Lady Anson [i.e., 'Lady Andsome'] Ha! Ha!' and then universal shouts from all sides. There was a splendid meal prepared—entrées, ragoûts of all sorts and sizes, wines, ices, prepared and devoured. As we returned—'Charmante femme Lady Anson, des dents magnifiques; des truffes, uais des truffes comme on n'en voit pas.' The Baron—'Je n'ai rien mangé.' 'Oh! Baron!' 'Hé bien, Monseigneur, une douzaine d'écrevisses, quelques glaces, je n'appelle pas cela manger!' This is a specimen of French stomachs."

Of course Lord and Lady Granville visited Paris after Waterloo, to see the Allied Armies assembled without the city, and the Parisians themselves "quite wild with rapture at having been conquered again." Lady Granville was astounded at the levity displayed by the French in the hour of their country's humiliation. Even on the road to Paris, she observes, the men were smiling and complacent, and the women in ecstasies; only "the soldiers were gloomy and silent to a degree not to be mistaken." She went to the Opera :

"The house was full and brilliant beyond measure; all nations, all embassies, boxes for every king and emperor of the known world, and scarcely a reputable woman besides myself. But what do you think they shout at, applaud, piment de rire over. They dance the Battle of Waterloo in all its details! The Imperial Guard wounded form dejected groups, embrace the National Guard, whilst a smart English officer makes most brilliant entrées. This héros de la pièce ends the ballet with presenting a French officer whom he has taken prisoner to his mistress, who had imagined him lost. They both kneel to him and kiss the hem of his garment, and dance a finale amidst bursts of applause. Metternich sat by me at supper at Lady Castlereagh's, and we agreed that it was worth coming any distance to see this proof of national character, and confirmation of what that character is reduced to. Even the Emperor of Russia is shocked at their frivolity. It is universally believed that Louis is only safe whilst the Allied Armies are here, at least, unless it can be made so decidedly the interest of Fouché and others to keep him on the throne that no speculation of villainy and perfidy can profit them in a change."

Two years later on the Granvilles revisited Paris to find Fouché disgraced and in exile, and M. Decazes the leading minister of the day :

"Granville dined yesterday with M. Decazes, near St. Cloud. His sister, Mme. Princeteau, did the honours, and those who like to laugh at the king say he is desperately in love with her. She goes by the name of la coquette bourgeoise or la coquette royale. She has neither beauty nor manner. Granville found a number of the députés there at dinner. He says they were very unlike Frenchmen, and that it put him in mind of a dinner at Brompton [Mr. Canning's residence]: great discussion, no talk of dress or women. He says these unpolished men have neither the petit maître or grand polished manner of vieille cour Frenchmen. Puysegur,* who called here yesterday, with eyebrows and hair as black as jet, passes his life in the foyer of the Théâtre Français, abhors Decazes, and mourns over the décadence of Frenchmen and galanterie. 'Aussi les pauvres femmes sont d'un ennui! La galanterie n'existe plus. Les maris jouissent d'une sécrité. Il faut aller en Angleterre pour chercher un séducteur! Mais voyez donc ce Standish, formé par M. Montagu, il a une affaire Proctor. A présent il doit se croire homme parfait, il est au pinnacle!'"

Elsewhere she writes :

"It appears to me that Louis' name should again be changed from l'Inévitable to l'Impossible. He has not more power in France than I have, and I think less consideration. The princes are extremely agissant, too short-sighted to understand any measure of policy, and too presumptuous to foresee any difficulty; they do all the harm that at such a moment ill-timed and ill-judged severity can do. The ultras are very violent and more injudicious—so much hatred and abuse can never be of advantage. I believe Puysegur would willingly play the part of Guy Faux. After Ney's execution he went with Monsieur to the play. There was some applause when they entered, upon which Puysegur patted Monsieur on the back, and said: 'Encore deux ou trois petits pendus de plus, et la France est à vos pieds.' When he was one day wishing for the good old times, and somebody said they were afraid les abus would creep in along with them, he exclaimed in an ecstasy, 'Et c'est surtout les abus!' He now talks of little else but beauty and intrigue, and is very proud of having had an affaire with Mlle. Goslin, a figurante, though she has jilted him for the first tenor of the Opera."

* A zealous ultra-Royalist, who was with the Comte d'Artois during his sojourn in England in 1811. Lady Granville describes him in that year as follows: "M. de Puysegur is really concentré into one wrinkle. It is the oldest, gayest, thinnest, most withered, and most brilliant thing one can meet with."

Not every Frenchman, however, shared Puysegur's views on the subject of galanterie. Lady Granville tells her sister of "a little, neat Duc de Rohan," whom she meets at Charles Ellis's and elsewhere, warbling about ruisseaux et les premiers amours.

"Horror of Mr. Montagu [the Mentor of Puysegur's 'M. Standish'] and of M. de Flahault [with whom every Frenchwoman and many Poles and Russians were madly in love], and a very reasonable share of self-approbation, seem his leading characteristics. His vanity is really like a farce. Somebody was complimenting him one day on his having an expressive countenance. He replied: 'Oui, mais il faudrait me voir quand je prie.'"

Of another Duc, she writes :

"M. de Gramont is the only one of his family not very ultra. He keeps his politics at dinner pitch, so that there is no society in which one has not the advantage of meeting him."

Of Talleyrand, Lady Granville records an admirably witty observation:—"Le Roi se sert de sa charte comme de son parapluie: il ne l'étale que quand il fait mauvais temps, il le garde sous son bras quand il fait beau."

Early in 1824 Lord Granville was named ambassador at the Hague, and at the end of that year was transferred to Paris. He resigned this post in June, 1828, when Huskisson, Charles Grant, Lords Dudley and Palmerston, and the other Canningites retired from the Duke of Wellington's ministry. He was, however, re-appointed to Paris in 1830, upon Lord Grey becoming premier; and (with the exception of a few months during Peel's first administration) he remained there as ambassador until the autumn of 1841.

For some time after her arrival in Paris, Lady Granville took a very desponding view of her position and prospects. To Lady Morpeth she writes :

"Private and Confidential. My dear, French people are—what shall I say? what I don't like, as most comprehensive. I believe the exquisite set into which it is my good fortune to be admitted is the worst specimen of the kind. They begin by thinking themselves ce qu'il y a de mieux au monde. Their talk is all upon dress, the opera, Talma. There is not as much mind as would fill a pea-shell. I am told they are charmed with me. They ask me to their most intimate coteries. They—in a word, they protect me, and I come from their égards humiliated by their kindness, oppress by their bienveillance.

"I walk in and am put upon a couch. Up comes a jeune duchesse or an old marquise, and gives me five minutes, such as I, to my shame, have sometimes given to a country neighbour, or to some distant connexion.

"It is odd that their effect upon me is to crush me with the sense of my inferiority, whilst I am absolutely gasping with the sense of my superiority. What a thing to write, but it is only to you. But the truth is they have an aplomb, a language, a dress of convenance, which it is as impossible for me to reach as it would be for one of them to think for five minutes like a deep-thinking, deep-feeling Englishwoman."

As years went by, however, her ideas on the subject of Paris and the Parisiana underwent considerable modification; and when the time came for her to make preparations for her departure from the Embassy, she could write to Lady Carlisle (Morpeth) as follows (June 12, 1828):

"Nothing ever was like the kindness of the regrets expressed here, and I shall have some; but there are immense compensations. . . . I love the people here for their excessive kindness, and for the universal and strong feeling of admiration and esteem felt for Granville. I have the delight of seeing how entirely his character is appreciated, and his departure lamented. . . .

"He is very sorry, but sorry like an honest, noble-minded man—no repining, no irritation. He stands by his own conduct, without one shade of bitterness or unfairness. In short, I think more highly of him than of any human being—happiness enough for any woman, Lady Carlisle."

And here we must take leave of Countess Granville, although there are a thousand admirable things in her more recent letters which, did space allow, we would gladly transcribe for the benefit of our readers. But, after all, this would be but a superfluous task, since these volumes, which have already reached a second edition, cannot fail to be widely and carefully studied. On their importance to the historian there is no necessity to enlarge here; but to many it will seem that their chief value lies in the vivid impression they convey of the character of the letter-writer herself—of the high-minded, tender-hearted English lady, whose devout affection and companionship proved, to quote the words of Mr. Charles Greville, "incomparably the greatest of the many blessings vouchsafed to Lord Granville through the whole course of his prosperous career."

T. HUTCHINSON.

Readings from Dante's Inferno. By the Hon. William Warren Vernon. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

THE name of Vernon has long been nobly linked with that of Dante. Lord Vernon, the author's father, spent much time in Florence, and proved his enthusiasm for Italy's greatest poet in various ways. He not only gave most generous encouragement to Dante students for the promotion of critical research, but he also devoted his own knowledge and resources to the same task by publishing a splendid edition of the Divina Commedia and faithful reproductions of two ancient commentaries on the Inferno, i.e., the "Chiose" attributed to Dante's son, Jacopo Alighieri, and the "Comento d'Autore anonimo," since ascertained to be the work of Ser Graziolo de Bambagioli, Chancellor of Bologna.

Mr. William Warren Vernon is a Dantist of established fame, and has continued the family tradition with equal earnestness and still greater energy. His first care was to complete the task, projected by his father and brother, of giving to the world the only perfect edition of the Latin Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola, declared by experts to be the most learned exposition of the Divina Commedia produced in the poet's time, as likewise the richest in its records of contemporary life and thought. Meanwhile Mr. Vernon was engaged on independent studies of the great poem, and these resulted in the Readings from the Purgatorio, published a few years ago. Originally, these were real "readings," prepared for the benefit of certain friends, and delivered to them in a picturesque Florentine room. It was a delicate pleasure, keenly enjoyed by us all, to hear Dante's verse with a running commentary from our learned host. We were ravished from the work-a-day world to a region of reverent delight: a temple of poesy in the heart of Dante's own city. For the windows of that room framed the olives, oleanders, and cypresses of the hillside, rising to San Miniato from the storied Via de Bardi.

Long residence in Italy and thorough mastery of its language and literature have specially fitted Mr. Vernon for the task of translation, enabling him to render difficult idioms and fine shades of meaning with a precision scarcely to be attained by distant scholars whose knowledge of Italian is chiefly derived from books. This is the verdict of more than one leading Italian writer. In Tuscany, Dante's language is still to a great extent the living vernacular of the people. For Dante became the father of modern Italian when he decided to express his ideas in the vulgar tongue "in which oven housewives chat together." To this day every peasant you meet in the Pistoian hills will be found to use phrases and expressions of the true Dantesque stamp.

Mr. Vernon's present work, built on the same lines as the Readings from the Purgatorio, is an equally valuable and even more comprehensive guide. After conning its pages students may freely plunge into the text of the Inferno, and enjoy its beauties unchecked by any difficulty of phrase or allusion. The author's method of exposition sweeps all obstacles from the reader's path, while keeping his mind on the alert by a store of fertile suggestions. First of all, a general outline of each Canto is presented. Next, one or two terzine are given in the original, followed by an accurate prose version. Then all particulars, allusions, similes, &c., are explained, commentators quoted, abundant references supplied from Dante's own works, the Scriptures, classics, and poets of all countries; sources of inspiration are verified, and numerous other illustrations and comments added in the footnotes. Thus, thanks to the author's vast range of study, the work is not only a Dante encyclopaedia, but also a guide to the literature of the period, and to the main stream of medieval thought and theology.

To the hasty reader, two stout volumes on the Inferno alone may possibly seem alarming, but let him tackle them bravely. He will find the contents so well arranged as to enable him to confine his attention at first to the original text, its English rendering and indispensable elucidation, leaving the wealth of critical and historical notes to be studied at leisure. Besides, on so steep a course, is not victory to the tortoise rather than to the hare?

Mr. Vernon's special study of Benvenuto da Imola has not blinded him to the merits of other commentators, ancient or modern. Indeed, one would be tempted to assert that he was familiar with them all, were it not impossible for any one man to grapple with the accumulated mass of Dante literature, or follow every turn of the fantastic labyrinth through which the thread of the poet's meaning has been arbitrarily dragged. For instance, that learned Dantist, Prof. A. D'Ancona, cites an individual who considered that the draining of the Maremma was plainly foretold in Canto I. of the Inferno, and consequently that verse 90, "Ch'ella mi fè tremar le vene e i polsi," proved that Dante was feeling the effects of the Maremma fever, and so on.

Touching the much contested significance of the famous "Veltro," Mr. Vernon quotes numerous authorities, discusses their respective theories, and explains his own view of the question. He holds that the "Veltro" referred to in Canto I. is undoubtedly Can Granda della Scala, but that, as Dante firmly believed in a future liberator whose identity was not yet revealed, his hopes were probably fixed on different personages at different times. Certainly, at one period, while an eyewitness of the lofty promise and ambition of the youthful lord of Verona, Dante may well have thought him destined to play the part of his ideal emperor. Prof. D'Ancona maintains, on the contrary, that Dante looked to an ideal Pope as the coming saviour of Italy. But there is no space here to discuss the respective proportions of the poet's Guelph or Ghibelline tendencies, much less the changes wrought in his creed by the force of public events.

Regarding Beatrice, we are grateful to Mr. Vernon for rejecting the modern heresy, reducing that lovely lady to an allegorical abstraction. Is not the Vita Nuova a human document of "palpitating reality"? Knowing in how glorious and divine a light the object of their calf-love is seen by the most ordinary young eyes, it is natural that the Florentine poet should have idealised the heroine of his youthful dreams, and later on, amid the stern vicissitudes of his life, remembered her as a perfect being, a guardian angel, invested with every heavenly attribute as well as earthly charm. Even Prof. Bartoli, after asserting his disbelief in many volumes, has been converted to the flesh and blood theory, and acknowledged the existence of Beatrice dei Portinari. His retraction is due to the following passage in the Comento of Pietro Alighieri (Ashburnham Codex, No. 841):

"Et quomodo hic primo de Beatrice fit mentio, de qua tantus est sermo maxime infra in tertio libro paradisi, premittendum est quod revera quidam domina nomine Beatrix insignia valde moribus et pulchritudine tempore auctoris vixit in civitate florentie, nata de domo quorundam civium florentinorum qui dicuntur Portinari, de qua Dantes auctor proci fuit et amator in vita dicte domine, et in ejus laudem multas fecit cantilenas: qua mortua ut in eius nomen in fauam levaret, in hoc suo poemate sub allegoria et typo theologie eam ut plurimum accipere voluit" (chap. ii., Inferno).

In conclusion, these "Readings" claim the heartiest welcome from all lovers of Dante. Their author is so imbued with the spirit of Italy, so versed in its language, literature, and history, that he pilots the student through the intricacies of the poem, even as Virgil led Dante through the shades of Hell.

Dr. Moore furnishes a valuable introduction; and the work is farther enriched by a full index, prolegomena, chronological tables, and an explanation of Dante's cosmography.

LINDA VILLARI.

Romantic Professions, and other Papers. By W. P. James. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

If I express the opinion that there is not very much that really needs to be said about Mr. James's essays, I hope the remark will not be taken as one of depreciation. To avoid the possibility of such a misapprehension, I hasten to add that the perusal of them has occupied several hours in a very pleasant fashion; and when one can honestly say this of a book, the confession—though it be autobiography rather than criticism—has some of the effectiveness of critical eulogy. The volume is enjoyable, because it is composed of the bright and easy discourse of a well-informed and able man upon topics in which all cultivated people are more or less interested. There is not much to be said about it, because Mr. James's style lacks the individuality which gives charm and quality to the essays of such very different writers as Mr. R. L. Stevenson and Mr. Augustine Birrell: it reminds one rather too strongly of cast iron; it has the impersonal cleverness which characterised the Saturday Review in its palmy days, coupled however with an urbane geniality alien to the columns of that once formidable journal. If Mr. James be a young man—a supposition discredited by much internal evidence—it is very curious that he should have hit upon the literary manner favoured by the generation preceding his own.

Of course, in eight longish essays, each of which deals with a set theme in a fashion which, though light, is worthily business-like, there are to be found "views" which might be talked about through any number of columns, possibly in an interesting manner; but a critical journal does not exist to provide space for such discursive expatiation, howsoever agreeable it may be. One of Mr. James's most readable essays is devoted to "The Naming of Novels," and the first purely critical remark that suggests itself concerns the name which he himself has given to his collection of miscellaneous papers. In this essay Mr. James makes many suggestions—most of them good ones—but in this connexion it is only needful to mention three. The first is that what may be called fancy titles, such for example as "Not wisely but too well" or "What will he do with it?" are generally objectionable. The second is that a title should, if possible, excite curiosity without satisfying it. The third is that the best title will often be one which steers clear of the principal object of interest in the work ("Ivanhoe" is an instance in point), as the author will thus be saved from the necessity of writing up to his title-page. Mr. James has himself acted upon every one of these three rules, and I think that they are all good; but only the first two seem valid when applied to literature in general as distinguished from the literature of fiction in particular. Judged by them "Romantic Professions" is excellent. It is not a whimsical title like "Three-Cornered Essays," or "The Harvest of a Quiet Eye," and it certainly excites curiosity, because, owing to the double meaning of the word "professions," no intending reader can be quite certain what is meant by it. But just as Ivanhoe is a comparatively unimportant person in the romance to which he gives a name, so the title-paper of Mr. James's volume is the thinnest and least valuable item in its table of contents; and in the case of a collection of essays the third rule is, to say the least, of doubtful application. The writer's thesis is that there are certain callings in life which cannot possibly lend themselves to romantic treatment. The profession of a soldier, a highwayman, or even a barrister may be treated romantically in a satisfying manner; not the equally, or more, useful callings of a tailor, a hatter, or a butcher. It will be seen that the main proposition is almost crudely obvious; and obviousness of idea, though not in itself objectionable, demands to be relieved by light-handedness of treatment. Now, Mr. James in this essay is not light-handed. Each page of the paper is in itself bright and light enough, but there are too many pages: Mr. James piles his examples and illustrations upon the top of each other, as if he were proving a dogma acceptance of which was necessary to the soul's salvation. The theme is really a good one, and the only defect in the treatment of it is the over-emphasis given by undue copiousness. It is a theme that would have attracted Lamb had it occurred to him; but he would have played with it instead of working at it: "Romantic Professions" as an essay of Elia would have left us with an appetite rather than with a sense of repletion.

The essays "On the Naming of Novels" and "Names in Novels" are less obnoxious to this criticism, because in them the field is wider, and a certain prodigality of illustration is necessary to the covering of it, though in the first-named paper the matter taken from so very familiar an authority as Forster's Life of Charles Dickens might perhaps have been condensed with advantage. Both papers are, however, so excellent and interesting that anything in the way of carping criticism seems to savour of ungraciousness. The principles which, in Mr. James's opinion, should regulate the naming of novels are admirable; I would say unimpeachable, were it not that these are days in which the paradox-monger will impeach anything. Nor are his applications of the principles less to be commended, though one of them is surely a little doubtful. Mr. James seems to consider "Ivanhoe" a good title, because Ivanhoe, the man, is not a dominating character in the book; and yet he implicitly condemns the title of "Daniel Deronda" on the very same ground. The reviewer is known to be an expert in the manufacture of inconsistencies; but unless I have misapprehended Mr. James's meaning, here is an inconsistency ready made.

To many readers the essay on "Names in Novels" will prove the most interesting in the book, though it raises rather than answers the question, whether the mere look or sound of a proper name has any suggestiveness apart from associations connected with it. The novelists as a body have answered in the affirmative, though with varying degrees of definition. The old-fashioned idealists simply gave pretty names to their heroes and ugly names to their villains, but were not careful about subtler niceties of nomenclature. Dickens gave himself a choice of names which seemed about equally appropriate to the character, and his final selection seems to have been often little more than fortuitous. For Balzac and Flaubert, however, there was only one possible name for each imaginative creation, and if it did not come it must be found. The story of how Balzac dragged Léon Gozlan half over Paris, and was rewarded by finding "Marcas" over a tailor's shop, is pretty well known; but Mr. James quotes a less familiar story of Flaubert and M. Zola. Both novelists were engaged in writing a book, and the living novelist described to his friend the part allotted to one of his characters for whom he had just found the name of Bouvard:

"Some days later a common friend came to Zola informing him that Flaubert was in despair; that Bouvard was precisely the name he had fixed upon for one of the characters in his own book; that it had cost him six years of research and labour to find it; that he had discovered it at last in Normandy, in a village near Yvetot, and could never hope to replace it. It was all over with him if he could no longer couple the name of Bouvard with that of Pécuchet, for together they were the keystone of the work. 'Well,' said Zola, gravely and sadly, after a long pause, 'let him have it. But I must love him very dearly to give up such a unique and unapproachable name as Bouvard. However, it belongs to an idiot whose sign I can see every day from my windows.' The news of the concession was carried to Flaubert, who immediately started to embrace and thank his friend, fully appreciating his disinterestedness, and frankly confessing his inability to have done the same."

"The Great Work" is a brightly written and ingenious protest against the demand that every literary artist shall produce a magnum opus; and "The Poet as Historian" is an effective plea for the imaginative treatment of history. "Romance and Youth" is the slightest and "The Historical Novel" the most solid of Mr. James's essays; but the book from first to last is pleasant reading.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Principles of Political Economy. By Prof. J. Shield Nicholson. Vol. I. (A. & C. Black.)

PROF. NICHOLSON tells us in his Preface that his book is meant to cover the same ground as Mill's Principles, and we may take it as meant to do for Mill what Mill meant to do for Adam Smith—namely, to bring his book up to date. But there is no minute imitation of Mill's arrangement of subjects, nor, as a matter of fact, does Mill figure much more prominently in the book than other economists. Prof. Nicholson, in fact, gives us very good reasons why he should not (p. 6).

The book before us has the special characteristics of the present period of economic writing. Besides discussions of economic method, and of land, labour, and capital, we have sections on utility, consumption, and the notion of consumer's rent. The last is only mentioned to be criticised; and final utility itself (though the theory is not disputed, but held over for use in the second volume) is shown to be much more individualistic—if we may so apply the word—than many writers have interpreted it:

"It is the attempt to measure utility in terms of money that appears to me delusive. For strictly speaking, we can never get beyond one individual, and that, too, under hypothetical conditions" (p. 59).

Another modern feature is the introduction of illustrations from history and from present trade and industry. The history is introduced not (as by Marshall) chiefly in one chapter by itself, but in the course of the book where the subject seems to require it.

Yet—and this is no less a modern feature—the book is essentially theoretical in the good sense of the word. It is a careful re-statement of theory. The "law" of diminishing returns (chap. x.) is in this way restated, after a discussion which is, perhaps, the best in the book, good as the rest are. It may be doubted, however, whether Prof. Nicholson has been able to maintain the uniqueness of the position of land in this case, or (later) in regard to rent. He says:

"In any single factory there is a limit to the advantageous increase of the labour of machinery employed; but for practical purposes the number of factories can be indefinitely increased, and equal quantities of labour and capital will give at least equal returns" (p. 160; compare also p. 173)."

But it might be replied that the limit in the case of the factory is not to the amount of product, but to the amount of profit, and the only peculiarity of land is that there is a limit of product. The limit of profitability is soon reached even in factories; and it is the common existence of diminishing returns of profit that justifies the inclusion of both agriculture and manufacture under some law of diminishing returns.

When we pass to the second book and deal with Distribution, we have at the outset an original criticism of Mill's attempt to separate Production as under physical law from Distribution as arbitrary and of human institution. Prof. Nicholson considers that Mill founded this view unconsciously on Austin's theory of Sovereignty. Mill's idea is that the sovereign power can lay down what rules it chooses for the distribution of wealth (p. 223). And our author contends (after Maine and others, and even with the support of Mill's French authorities) that the sovereign's sovereignty may be more truly said to be due to conformity with an existing distribution than the distribution to the precept of the sovereign (p. 225). Prof. Nicholson here and elsewhere appears as a powerful critic of sweeping schemes of state interference. "The distribution which admits of the greatest liberty may be more properly described as economic than that which aims at greatest utility" (p. 233). Naturally, under the head of Distribution the author has greatest scope for historical references; but there are besides these, even in this volume, theoretical discussions (as on Wages) of great value. It is interesting to note that the strong opinion he held in 1883 (in Tenant's Gain) in favour of compulsory compensation of tenants for almost all improvements has been shaken by the unsatisfactory working of recent Acts (p. 322).

In the second volume, not yet published, we may expect to find the problems of exchange, government, and taxation treated in an equally thorough manner. The professor's writings on currency are well known, and anything that comes from his pen on the subject will be received with respect even by those who disagree with him.

J. BONAR.

NEW NOVELS.

In Direst Peril. By David Christie Murray. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Benefits Forgot. By Wolcott Balestier. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

The Shibboleth. By Mrs. Vere Campbell. (Ward & Downey.)

The Travels of Matthew Dudgeon, Gentleman. (Longmans.)

Maria, Countess of Saletto. By E. Arbib. Translated by Sydney King. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Farewell Love. By Mathilde Seralo. Translated by Mrs. Henry Harland. (Heinemann.)

The Queen against Owen. By Allen Upward. (Chatto & Windus)

Outlines. By Florence Henniker. (Hutchinson.)

A Study in Colour. By Alice Spinner. "Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

CAPTAIN FYFFE has faced danger in every quarter of the globe. He meets his fate in Violet, the daughter of a patriot Italian, the Count di Rossano. The Count has fallen into the hands of the Austrians, and is confined in a loathsome dungeon. Fyffe undertakes his rescue. He accomplishes his purpose with ridiculous ease, but his troubles have only begun. The Count soon becomes eager for fresh enterprises, and Fyffe is drawn into the conspiracies by which Italy is to be freed from her oppressors. Treachery is rife around him. His friend, George Brunow, lured by the Baroness Bounar, the Jezebel of the piece, sells himself to the Austrians. One after another Fyffe's plans for rescuing the Count from his perilous position fail him; and in the end he has to resort to the desperate expedient of breaking into the room where Violet's aunt is sleeping and forcibly taking from her the sum of £40,000, which, destined by Violet for her father in payment for arms and ammunition, would otherwise have fallen into the hands of Italy's foes. Of course, all this is as thin as could be. The faults of the tale are conspicuous, too, in Mr. Murray's characterisation. It is true that George Brunow is an exception. He is real enough to satisfy the sternest realist. We all know the type—the irresponsible farceur and liar, congenitally incapable of speaking the truth, who does not feel disgraced when detected in the most glaring falsehood. The defects of the novel are the defects inseparable from melodrama. If these be granted, it will be possible to enjoy Mr. Christie Murray's lively fancy and fluent style; while no one need lay this book aside in the confident expectation of finding a more interesting one.

With all its fine qualities there is much to forgive in the late Mr. Balestier's story. Brimming over with cleverness as it is, the author had not a happy method of narration: he slides away from his point aimlessly, losing his scheme in a maze of useless detail and verbiage. No doubt this prolixity serves to bring us into direct touch with the ways and manners of camping life, but the tall talk of an American mining town becomes peculiarly irritating when pursued through countless pages. The book must be taken frankly and unreservedly: its readers must possess their souls in patience; the better kind will come to accept its defects uncomplainingly, in deference to its virtues. It is distinguished by a high seriousness, a nobility of thought which renders it peculiarly agreeable reading. Mr. Balestier evidently believed that woman holds the conscience of the community; and if it be objected that in Dorothy we have Margaret in replica, it must be remembered that about all really good and pure women there is a strong family likeness. It is only in the nature of things that Philip Deed should be a replica of his father, and that in Jasper we should see the father again, though another part of his complex nature is emphasised in his elder son. James Deed ruins himself in order to punish his son, not for robbing him of his worldly goods, but for taking from him in doing so his most valued possession—his love for and trust in that son. The consequences of his act are terrible enough: they come near tragedy, and the resulting situations are treated with subtlety and art. But in nothing was Mr. Balestier more admirable than in his analysis of character and motive. Toward the final chapters he relaxed; his tense mood suffered a rebound. He seems almost to give away the moral positions for which he has fought. I perceive the intention, but I cannot think it was well-advised. The book is distinctly Meredithian. Mr. Balestier delighted in check and counter-check. He played with a character, a situation, a phrase even, and then by a bold and adroit stroke would suddenly achieve his intention.

Mrs. Vere Campbell's book will perplex many minds. Not a few will regard it as so much rodomontade; others will imagine it was written under the influence of opium—indeed, one needs to read and re-read many pages before one frees one's mind of this suspicion. It is difficult reading; the light which leads us to the author's meaning is sometimes merely a glimmer, but now and again it shines brilliantly, and, being modest, we ascribe to our own density what of obscurity remains. It is, however, unnecessary to abase one's self too absolutely; for I am confident that much of the work was as fitfully conceived by the author as it is perceived by the reader. This is not said in condemnation. The novel is the outcome of a high state of mental exaltation, by which I do not mean to hint at cerebral disorder. To say of it that it is a rhapsody in prose would be to deny inferentially the fine rhetorical qualities it undoubtedly possesses. Sometimes one suspects Mrs. Campbell of being in alliance with the neurotic writers of the hour; the women we all pity, in that a malady, half mental, half physical, has afflicted them with what may be fitly called a dry-rot of the passions, so that they mistake impotence for purity. But this suspicion, coming again and again in the earlier chapters, is dispelled once and for all before we are half way through the volume. Nor do we adhere to an opinion dimly adumbrated, that Mrs. Campbell intends a tremendous satire on the good easy man, whose conception of monogamistic happiness is to catch a woman in the rough and mould her to himself. The main idea of the story is an extraordinary one. Julian Hawthorne conceived something like it, and so, too, did Charles Dickens in Great Expectations. Here we have a man, blasé of all experience, filled with hatred of himself and his kind, resorting to the ghoulish expedient, in the direction of obtaining relief and satisfaction, of creating his counterpart in a woman in whom he hopes to fulfil his duality. Now, despite intermittent lapses into incoherence, the idea is worked out with skill, and sustained with remarkable spirit. The book attracts by a carefully regulated balance between admiration and horror; now it touches on the infinite, then it plunges into the muddiest depths of materialism. Its pathos is sometimes exquisitely poignant: we wander in the dark labyrinths of the soul, its innermost depths, but we see light. Impressionistic to the last degree, The Shibboleth is full of beautiful pictures and allegories; it is a cunning amalgam of realism and idealism. Latimer Uden and Estelle Eyrith, even Rosemary Ffrench and Christine Linn, may not be exactly flesh and blood, but they are decidedly not symbolic types: no one who has made their acquaintance will readily forget them. The cleverness of the book, in parts, is extraordinary, some of its situations are superbly wrought; its insight is rather masculine than feminine, and sometimes one is amazed that the work is a woman's. The mischief of the book is that its full comprehension can only come to those who have divined deep into the dark waters of spiritual experience—who have been on the rack and submitted themselves to the torture rather than turn apostate. The question may be asked, is such reading as this beneficial to folk already sufficiently punished for eating of the fruit of the forbidden tree?

We are told to expect from Matthew Dudgeon, Gentleman, a true relation of his travels and adventures in Algiers, the long time of his slavery there, and the means of his delivery; but we are cheated of our expectation, getting instead the narratives of the adventures of persecuted ladies and disappointed swains, of all and sundry, but very little about Dudgeon. Of course this method of story-telling has the sanction of the earliest romances—Boccaccio, the Arabian Nights, and the rest; but other times, other manners, and anything more inconceivably wearisome than this constant shifting of scenes, I cannot, for my part, imagine. We travel further and further away from verisimilitude; the author should at least keep some coherent thread of interest going. Let him take lesson from Mr. R. L. Stevenson's Dynamiter.

"We English," says one of the characters in Signor Arbib's comedy, "have not the habit of falling in love with other men's wives," and certainly this vivid description of Florentine society, where every one neighs after his neighbour's wife, might tempt Englishmen, whose memories are short, or whose experience is limited, to smite their breasts and thank God they are not as other men. Signor Arbib lets us loose in a menagerie of satire; and whatever his intention, he produces the effect of boundless contempt for the dirty crew. We know from independent sources that his picture is not overdrawn; but it is significant that even the men whom he depicts as honourable, such as Roberto Chignolo and Achille Spontini, are by no means free from reproach. The story of the Duchess di Belfiore's patient and successful contest with a wanton who has beguiled her husband, of Elvira Oviglio's impregnable virtue, and above all of the Countess of Saletto's marvellous endurance under the neglect and worse of her morose husband, sweetens what would otherwise be a nauseating narrative of bestiality and corruption.

In Furcwell Love we continue Signor Arbib's parable, though as a work of art Mme. Scarfoglio's novel is greatly in advance of The Countess of Saletto; but then this accomplished lady has been singularly fortunate in her translator. Addio Amore was published in 1887, and is therefore anterior to Hedda Gabler, with which drama it has some points of general resemblance. Cesare Dias, who, without making any definite effort to that end, wins the hearts of two sisters, is so consistently and powerfully presented that he stands out distinctly among the spectres who flit across the pages of modern fiction. Dramatic, terse, and convincing, the fortunes of Anna Acquaviva, the victim of neurotic degeneracy, will be followed with interest, and the reader will respect the artist who gave her life.

Mr. Allen Upward's novel is ingenious, though its plot rests on an insecure basis.

There was not a ghost of a chance of the judge summing up in the way suggested, the evidence being purely circumstantial as well as flimsy. Again, the law technicalities are too laboured to be picturesque, and a vast amount of foreign matter is introduced which in no way furthers the action of the piece. Nevertheless the satire on the wonderful way of a judge with a jury is good, if a little overdone. We are taken behind the scenes and shown how a British jury comes to its decision. The satire here is as effective as anything in the book.

The Hon. Mrs. Henniker is best in the first and last of the tales she offers us. The story of the statesman, who, despite his inflexible morality, falls in love with his wife's cousin, and of the cruel way in which fate robs him of his reward when he might have claimed it honourably, is pathetic. The quartet is calculated to make one cry rather than laugh; but Mrs. Henniker is never tiresome, nor does she lack art.

I cannot call to mind a more graphic or readable description of life in the West Indies—Creolia the author calls the island she has selected for treatment—than is supplied by this latest volume of the Pseudonym Series. The idiosyncrasies of the black, brown, and "whitey-brown" population are admirably presented, though the frank paganism of these primitives, and the fearless way in which we are made to see them as they really are, will frighten some good folk. The negro's strong desire that his family should rise in the world by making his black brown and his brown white, must be taken into consideration by Mr. Charles Pearson and the rest when they pronounce upon the future of the black races; for the creole makes a poor show in resisting disease.

JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.

SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

In the Track of the Sun. By F. Diodati Thompson. (Heinemann.) This is a large and noble work, beautifully illustrated and printed, describing a seven months' tour of the author from New York westward, via Japan, China, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, and England, until he returned home again to America. Although he is very particular in recording the dates of his arrival and departure from place to place, Mr. Thompson has wisely avoided the pitfall into which most travellers fall of wearying his readers with commonplace extracts from his journal, or with trite observations on men and things as comic relief from the monotony of daily events on shipboard or on land. The letterpress is illustrated with a series of pictures from the pencil of Mr. Harry Fenn, or reproduced from photographs, which are finely executed, and excellent specimens of the processes employed. The slight prejudice which Mr. Thompson exhibits against British manners and methods is exemplified by the contrast he draws between the Japanese and ourselves, much to the advantage of the former.

"In habits the people most directly their opposites are the English, who eat enormous quantities of meat and drink largely of spirits, and who are, as everyone knows, great bullies, both individually and as a nation. It is fortunate for the Japanese that they have reached a point in civilisation where it is not likely that England, France, or Russia can seize their country on some flimsy pretext, as might have been done years ago."

Probably the time to which Mr. Thompson alludes must be the arrival of Commodore Perry in 1854. But this misunderstanding of British aims is almost effaced when his course of travel brings him to India. The sight of the Residency at Lucknow and its memories stirs his blood, and he remembers that "we Americans, being of the same race, take a kindred pride in the glorious deeds of England's soldiers." Like all travellers, he felt the unspeakable fascination of the Taj, and expecting to be disillusioned he found its beauties beyond expression; and so, like a wise man, he has interpolated into his narrative the description by Sir Edwin Arnold, with which he delighted us in his Seas and Lands. In bidding farewell to India, the author makes the amende honourable for his earlier disparagements of the British:

"My recollections of India," he says, "will ever be pleasant, although I did not depart with the same keen regret as when I sailed away from Japan. However, I certainly left with the best wishes for the wonderful country whose population is composed of so many races, creeds, and castes, and I was firmly convinced that the government which Great Britain has given to the natives is the best one possible for them."

During his stay in Egypt, Mr. Thompson joined the tourist parties up the Nile, and ascended as far as Assouan; and he gives a capital account of his excursion and visits to Karnak, and the tiresome journey from Luxor to the Tomb of the Kings. But he must not imagine, because his patriotic heart was thrilled by three lovely young English girls singing to banjo accompaniment the familiar airs of "Marching to Georgia," "Way down upon the Suwanee Rivers," that these American songs have only just reached England. From Egypt to Palestine, to visit the holy places, is the last Eastern excursion recorded. The illustrations of this part are especially good, and the descriptions of Jerusalem and its environs full of interesting matter. The book gives one the impression of having been written by a clear-sighted and well-informed man, who can recount the incidents of his travels in sound and sensible language.

Picturesque Ceylon. By Henry W. Cave. (Sampson Low.) When the east wind bites the cheeks and chills the bones, these pages transport one to the blessed island of Ceylon, and gently waft one to Colombo and the Kelani Valley, with its palms and feathery bamboos and fragrant warmth. The series of photographs, thirty-six in number, embrace the various scenes which meet the eyes of travellers and sojourners in and around Colombo. They give a faithful representation of the wonderful flora of the island and the life of the natives. The reproductions of still life are more effective than those of the streets and markets, for the camera has to contend against the ludicrous postures and high prancing movements which the instantaneous process fixes upon the plate. But Mr. Cave has done good work, and must be congratulated upon the handsome volume he has produced. Amongst many plates of excellence, the Afterglow from the shore of Bambalapitiya, No. xxii., and the Kelani River, No. xxxii., stand out as fine specimens of the photographic art. Plate xxx., Jak Fruit, though marred by the enormous disproportion and deformity of the native feet in the foreground, gives to those who have never gazed upon that remarkable tree an idea of the comical way in which the great green bags, its fruit, are hung at odd corners and even upon the trunk itself. Mr. Cave describes his work as a pictorial, not a literary effort, in which he does himself an injustice; the letterpress is short, interesting, and to the point.

A Japanese Interior. By Alice Mabel Bacon. (Gay & Bird.) The series of letters sent to friends in America by Miss Bacon during her stay in Japan, and now edited by her for publication, are natural and charming and full of touches and descriptions which take us behind the shutters of a Japanese home and make us partakers of the simple life within. The author was appointed a teacher in the Peeresses School at Tokyo, which is under the management of the Imperial Household department and enjoys the direct patronage and visitation of the Empress herself. For one year Miss Bacon lived in the closest intimacy with the accomplished ladies who taught in the school. She shared with them a little house half foreign and half Japanese. She was the proud possessor of both a native pony and a kuruma built expressly for her, whilst the twofold duty of groom and kurumaya was discharged by the faithful Yokasu. Of his domestic relations and how he got a new wife the author gives an amusing account.

"When he was engaged he said he had a wife at Utso-no-miya and that he would send for her to come to Tokyo that she might guard the stable when he went out with the kuruma. We have been wondering why his wife did not come, but the other day it came out that there had been a division in the family. Yokasu had written to his wife to come, but the woman had sent back word that she had work now and did not want to come at present. Thereupon Yokasu replied that if she could not come now, she need not come at all. This message did not move her, so he divorced her, and is now on the look out for another and a more dutiful helpmeet. He thought of taking Miné's cook, an exceedingly green and stupid country girl, but concluded that it might inconvenience Miné to have her cook taken away and for that reason gave her up."

Poor Yokasu had many disappointments before he was finally suited. He even went to the length of pawning his summer clothes to pay for some stylish cards with his name on them in Japanese and Roman letters, and had prepared a two dollar wedding feast and missed a lucky day through the bad behaviour of his relatives who did not produce the bride on the day fixed. The housekeeping with delightful Madame Miné, the picnics, the shopping, and the great event of all, the visit of the Empress to the school, when, such was the excitement felt by everybody that the bell-ringer forgot to ring the bell, the graceful manners and the dainty ways of the little ladies, are described so naturally that the reading of the book is a pleasure. Few works of this kind have been better done.

Round the World by Doctor's Orders. By John Dale. (Elliot Stock.) In the preface to this book Mr. Dale disarms criticism by stating that, by the advice and counsel of many friends, he reluctantly placed the history of his travels before the public. If blame there be, it must be given to the friends and recipients of his letters and not to himself. But the impression that a perusal of work gives us is that it would have been wiser to abstain from publication. The amusements in vogue on board the Australian liners have been described again and again; Victoria, New South Wales, and New Zealand are not entirely terra incognita; Japan and China have been treated of in travellers' English in tiresome frequency; and the Canadian Pacific Railway has not been remiss in advertising its innumerable attractions. When you find pages of the diary conveying the valuable information that "November 27th, Friday, was another splendid day; very hot; amusements as usual, with the additional attraction of a cricket match between females on board. Sailed 325 miles," the repetition annoys, and the wish that Mr. Dale had not yielded to the importunities of his friends is intensified. We have some remarkable statements of fact, for the author faithfully reproduces the information he received on the spot; but that in the process of gold recovery the quicksilver should "absorb all the other metals, and leave the gold pure, worth £1 3s. 4d. per ounce," is not in accordance with the usual action of that metal. From Sydney Mr. Dale sailed to China and Japan, and was much amused by the funny ways of John Chinaman. He thus describes a scene in Shanghai:

"We saw a grand 'Jost' procession; the fluery was immense, and the paraphernalia quite indescribable. Jost was in a grand sedan chair, with green robes embroidered most profusely with gold, but whether Jost himself was alive or dead we could not decide. He had a full moon sort of a face, with a gin and-water nose and codfish eyes."

But at Nikko Mr. Dale becomes less jaunty, and does give a fair description of the place, but wisely refers his readers to fuller details in Murray's Handbook. However, he assigns the mausoleum to one Tegasu, a Shogun who is not known in Japanese history, and suggests that the weight of the well-known water-tank must be 1000 tons, and states that "the tomb is shrouded with huge cedar-trees or cryptomerias, each one presented in former times by nobles, who must have been like flies in summer, for there are thousands of trees." The book is illustrated with some rough engravings and photographs, and will afford more entertainment to the author's friends than to the general public.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE two volumes on Yachting, in the "Badminton Library" will be published in the course of next month. Among the contributors are—the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, the Earl of Onslow, Lord Brassey, Sir Edward Sullivan, Sir George Leach, the Rev. G. L. Blake, and Mr. E. F. Knight. The illustrations will be from original drawings by Mr. R. T. Pritchett, and from photographs. A volume on Archery, by Mr. C. J. Longman and Col. H. Walrond, will follow in July.

SIR ALFRED LYALL'S Rise and Expansion of the British Dominion in India, which originally appeared as a volume of the "University Extension" series, will shortly be issued by Mr. John Murray, in a new library edition, considerably augmented and brought down to the time of the Mutiny.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will publish on May 1 a volume by Mr. Spenser Wilkinson, on the present international situation in so far as it affects the British Empire. Mr. Wilkinson advocates a national policy, and bases his argument on a review of the two principal European questions of the day, the rivalry between France and Germany and between Austria and Russia. He discusses the connexion between war and national policy, and examines in some detail the Egyptian question, the colonial disputes of England with Germany and France, and the subject of the Indian frontier. Under the title of "The Great Alternative," he also treats of the policy of Great Britain, and concludes with a chapter on "The Revival of Duty."

MR. JOSEPH POLLARD, of Truro, announces for publication by subscription The Autobiography of a Cornish Smuggler, printed from the original manuscript of Captain Harry Carter, who was the most famous smuggler of Prussia Cove, in Mount's Bay, in the latter half of last century. After being captured by the revenue officers, Carter escaped to America, where he was converted to Methodism; subsequently, he was a prisoner in France during the Terror. The book will be illustrated with a map, and a frontispiece by Mr. A. Chevallier Tayler.

MESSRS. LONOMANS & Co. will publish in a few days Christianity and the Roman Government: a study in imperial administration, by Mr. E. G. Hardy, formerly fellow of Jesus College, Oxford.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish early next week the first volume of his new series, to be called the "Autonym Library," which, as already announced, will be similar to the "Pseudonym Library" both in form and in price, while the covers will be brilliant in Venetian red. Not a few of the authors who have hitherto been content to be known by pseudonyms will now make their appearance under their own names. This first volume will contain two short stories by Mr. F. Marion Crawford, both of which have already appeared in magazines—"The Upper Berth" and "By the Waters of Paradise." The former, which gives its title to the book, is an example of the author's sensational vein; the latter of his dreamy poetic style.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD & SONS have in the press a sporting novel by Mr. John Bickerdike, author of the "Curiosities of Ale and Beer." The title is A Banished Beauty, and the scene is chiefly laid in the most picturesque part of the island of Lewis. The plot to some extent reflects the influence of the Land League agitation in Ireland upon the minds of the Hebridean crofters.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces, as the new volume of the "Book-Lover's Library," Walton and the Earlier Writers on Fish and Fishing, by Mr. R. B. Marston, editor of the Fishing Gazette.

MR. CHARLES WEEKES, author of a volume of poems entitled Reflections and Refractions, published last year, is about to publish a series of booklets in belles lettres.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co. announce The Message of Israel in the Light of Modern Criticism, by Miss Julia Wedgwood, author of "The Modern Ideal."

MESSRS. C. BURNET & Co. will publish next month a translation of a work by M. Charles La Grange, Astronomer Royal at Brussels, written to show the agreement of the measurements of the Great Pyramid with the literal chronology of the Bible. It also argues that Brück's historic period in his "Life of the Law of Nations" is measured, and its places symbolised, in the Great Pyramid of Gizeh. M. La Grange's attention was directed to this subject by the late R. A. Proctor's volume, in which he makes merry at the expense of the pyramidalists. Having examined Mr. Flinders Petrie's later measurements, made under the auspices of the Royal Society, his conclusion is that they only confirm the conclusions of Mr. Piazza Smyth.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS announce a book by Mr. William Brough, entitled The Natural Law of Money, in which the successive steps are traced from the days of barter to the introduction of the clearing-house, and the principles of currency are examined in their relation to past and present legislation.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS will issue shortly an illustrated volume, entitled Sunrise Land; or, Rambles in East Anglia, by Mrs. Alfred Berlyn, author of "Vera in Poppyland."

THE Sunday School Union announce: Ralph Rotherburgh's Revenge, by Evelyn Everett Green, in the "Blue Cover Library," and a prize temperance story, by the Rev. Reuben Vennel, entitled Driven into the Ranks.

MR. ALFRED AUSTIN has been elected by the committee to be a member of the Athenaeum Club.

PROF. EDWARD DOWDEN, of Dublin, will deliver a lecture at Toynbee Hall, on Friday, May 4, at 8 p.m., on "Eighteenth Century Literature—The Romantic Movement." On Friday of this week he was to read a paper to the Goethe Society, of which he is president, on "Werther, as illustrated by the English Sentimental Movement."

THE Canadian Bookseller for April contains some interesting statistics. During 1893, the total number of copyrights registered throughout the Dominion was 449, of which only ten were novels. The total value of books, &c., imported during the year was 890,000 dollars (£178,000), the United States contributing 476,000 dollars, as compared with 327,000 dollars from Great Britain. English authors will be more interested to learn that the imports of copyright books, on which they are supposed to receive a royalty of 12½ per cent., ad valorem, amounted to only 13,000 dollars (£2600). Under the new tariff it is proposed to abolish the collection of this royalty, and to impose a uniform duty on all books (other than music, maps, and prints) of six cents per pound avoirdupois.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

ON the occasion of Prof. Weismann's visit to Oxford on Wednesday next, to deliver the third Romanes Lecture, the University will confer upon him, on the morning of that day, the honorary degree of D.C.L.

THE statute establishing a School of English Language and Literature will come up for discussion in Congregation at Oxford next Tuesday.

MR. WILLIAM ESSON, of Merton, has been unanimously elected deputy Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford, in view of the permanent incapacity of Prof. Sylvester. Mr. Esson proposes to lecture this term on "Projective Geometry."

THE Rev. Thomas B. Strong, of Christ Church—who is, we believe, a brother of Mr. S. Arthur Strong, the Assyriologist—has been elected Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for 1894. For the following year there will be no election, owing to the serious decrease in the value of the farm that constitutes the endowment.

MR. CRACKANTHORPE, counsel to the University of Oxford, has been elected to an honorary fellowship at St. John's College.

PROF. PERCY GARDNER announces a public lecture, on "The Sarcophagi from Sidon," to be delivered in the University Galleries at Oxford next Friday.

THE announcements of the Cambridge University Press include:—an edition of the Syriac Gospels, transcribed by the late Prof. Bensly, Mr. J. R. Harris, and Mr. F. C. Burkitt, from the MS. discovered at Mount Sinai by Mrs. S. S. Lewis; a series under the title of "Studia Sinaitica," including a Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. in the Convent of St. Catharine on Mount Sinai, compiled by Mrs. Lewis, an Arabic version of certain of the Epistles from a MS. in the same convent, and a catalogue of the Arabic MSS. in the convent, both edited by Mrs. Gibson; and a tract of Plutarch, the Syriac text edited from a Mount Sinai MS. by Dr. Nestle; a Grammar of Modern Egyptian Arabic by Vollers, translated by Mr. Burkitt; the first volume of the translation from the Pali of the Jātaka; the third and concluding volume of Dr. Swete's edition of the Septuagint; an edition of Origen's Commentaries on St. John, by Mr. A. E. Brooke; and, as the next publication in the series of "Texts and Studies," the Rules of Tyconius, by Mr. Burkitt.

FROM the report of the Non-Collegiate Students Board at Cambridge, we learn that there have been several cases where students have been admitted to work at special subjects, without any intention of graduating. Two were students from Japan, studying law and economics; two were from America, one of whom resided three terms to study theology, and the other (a graduate of Harvard) studied history and economics for two terms, after having spent three months at the University of Berlin.

PROF. ALEXANDER STEWART, of Aberdeen, has been appointed by the Crown to be principal of St. Mary's College at St. Andrews.

PROF. A. FARINELLI, Barlow Lecturer at University College, will deliver a course of twelve lectures, in Italian, on "Dante's Purgatorio," on Tuesdays and Fridays at 3 p.m., beginning on May 1. Admission is free.

THE University of Halle will celebrate in August the two-hundredth anniversary of its foundation.

THE annual report of President Dwight, of Yale, states that since 1886, when the name of the institution was changed from College to University, the number of students in the graduate department has risen from 42 to 103; the law and medical schools have increased threefold, and the scientific school has more than doubled. The University has now 1116 students.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

DIVAE GENETRICIS LAYDES.

THE streaming skies have wept our lonely death;
Straitened we lie and hapless wait for thee:
Thou art our Mother! Warm us with thy breath—

Whether within a hollow of the sea,
Or in some yet unravish'd dell of cresses,
Or ferny thicket where no frost may be,

Thou dwellest, or where desolate cypresses
Toss their black plumes upon a thin blue air,
And wailing seas fling high their stormy tresses:

Lo! in thy myrtle groves the doves prepare
Their homesteads and their broodful murmurs float
Out to the wintry beam; and here and there

The ousel thrills his mellow-chorded rote:
In broader diapason all thy choir
Prelude the rapture of thy honey throat.

Now in the drenched pasture, spire on spire,
Uplifts the tender undergrowth of grasses;
Now the sun tinges blushing woods with fire

Where, westering tardier, glowing he passes,
As loth to miss thine advent when from over
The even sea thou glidest: white-arm'd lassies,

Lapful of flowers young-ey'd, stray to discover
The crocus' purple chalice gemm'd with gold,
And pencil'd wood-sorrel, shy April's lover,

To deck thy sylvan altar. Now, behold!
The sacrifice, fruit of thy dewy breast—
Balm and new milk, the firstlings of the fold,

Rose-sharded anemones and garlands drest
For festival, and milk-white eggs of doves
Taken warm from the sanctuary nest:—

So, Aphrodite, grey-eyed Queen of loves,
Come, bringing foison and full tilth and store,
Thou quickener of everything that moves,
Rise from the dead, nor leave us any more.

MAURICE HEWLETT.

"THE YELLOW BOOK."

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE have issued the first number of The Yellow Book, a new and bulky and well-printed miscellany, which is to be published once a quarter. Its cover, I am sorry to say, might go a long way to damn it as a serious venture; for tasteful people can only suppose that the design was a joke of a third-rate order, sent back as unacceptable from the office of Pick-me-up. Mr. Aubrey Beardsley—a gentleman of some parts, though not much known to fame—is, I understand, the author of this cheerful eccentricity. Nor are his efforts in The Yellow Book confined to this design: he has several in the body of the volume, perhaps equally meaningless, and quite as unhealthy. His "Education Sentimentale" is a comic puzzle, not without a certain attractiveness of "line"; but before he can do justice to that measure of talent which I conceive him to possess, Mr. Beardsley must forget the Japanese, as surely as Mr. Houseman must forget the sexless modern Pre-Raphaelite. Mr. Will Rothenstein, another illustrator, is at least as deserving of being known as either of the gentlemen we have named. Indeed, he has more of individuality than Mr. Houseman; but he, too, counts somewhat, it would seem, on the advantage of eccentricity in securing prompt notoriety of a certain sort and degree. In his case this is superfluous, for he is exceedingly clever. His portrait of a lady lying on her stomach will doubtless best please the initiated—in other words, an out-of-the-world clique of limited sympathies and yet more limited knowledge; but the plain man and the qualified critic will agree to entertain a preference for Mr. Rothenstein's "Portrait of a Gentleman." Mr. Rothenstein's gentleman is young and pleasant and comparatively healthy, and is very ingeniously presented: "Que diable va-t-il faire dans cet galère?" Yet he has some companions not unworthy of him. In an effective study of artificial light Mr. Walter Sickert drops the tear of regret over the old Oxford Music Hall.

Coming to the letterpress, some of which belongs to literature, and some to the puffed nonsense of the moment, there is a clever story by Mr. Henry James, which is nothing at all if it is not a satire on that "larger latitude"—in other words, the license to talk about ugly things inartistically—which finds itself indulged in one or two improbable stories contained within the covers of this very Yellow Book. Good as Mr. James's satire is, it is hardly likely to last, if only because the kind of thing that it satirises is itself so certainly doomed.

Of the further contents of the first number of this new miscellany we have only time and space to mention three items. Mr. William Watson sends a sonnet of distinction and real dignity, called "Night on Corbar Edge"; somebody contributes "A Defence of Cosmetics"—a worthless, silly article on an insignificant theme; and by Mr. Arthur Waugh there is a sane and manly, an instructed and well-written essay, on "Reticence in Literature." Here is, indeed, a very curious, perhaps almost an unexampled, mixture of the steadily excellent with the cheaply eccentric. In the next number let the latter, if it cannot be banished, be at least accorded a less prominent place!

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BRUNOT, Ch. La Vie Nationale: la Politique. Paris: Chaillay. 4 fr.
 DREIER, G. Untersuchungen über das gleichseitige Dreieck als Norm göttlicher Baupropportionen. Stuttgart: Cotta. 3 M.
 JOUKOWSKY, C. de la. L'Armée à l'Académie. Paris: Perrin. 7 fr. 50 c.

- JUNONHAENDL, M. Aegypten. Heliogravuren. Mit Vorwort u. erläut. Text v. G. Ebers. Berlin: "Cosmos." 100 M.
 MOSTARD, G. A travers le Maroc: Notes et croquis d'un artiste. Paris: Lib. Illustrée. 12 fr.
 OUNET, Georges. Le Droit de l'Enfant. Paris: Ollendorff. 3 fr. 50 c.
 STROH, R. Achim v. Arnim u. Clem. Brentano. Stuttgart: Cotta. 7 M.
 STRINDHAL, Lucien Lenwen. Roman inédit. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
 VERLAINE, Paul. Dans les limbes. Paris: Vanier. 3 fr.
 YRIARTE, Ch. Le Livre de Souvenirs de Maso di Bartolomeo dit Masaccio. Paris: Rothschild. 60 fr.

THEOLOGY.

- CASPARI, C. P. Der Glaube an die Trinität Gottes in der Kirche des 1. christl. Jahrh. Leipzig: Faber. 1 M.
 DORSCHEUTZ, E. v. Studien zur Textkritik der Vulgata. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 8 M.
 KATTENBUSCH, F. Das apostolische Symbol. 1. Bd. Die Grundgestalt des Taufsymbols. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 14 M.
 TEXTE U. UNTERSUCHUNGEN. 10. Bd. 2. Hft. Ausser-canonische Paralleltex-te zu Matthäus u. Marcus. Gesam-melt u. untersucht v. A. Resch. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 14 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BESTIN, G. Madame de Lamballe d'après des documents inédits. Paris: Flammarion. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GUILLON, E. Les Complois militaires sous le consulat et l'empire. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 HÉRISSE, la Comte de. Un Pair de France Polier (1815-1872). Paris: Ollendorff. 8 fr. 50 c.
 RÉVOLUTION FRANÇAISE, la, en Hollande: la République batave. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
 VOYAGES des pèlerins bouddhistes, traduits en français par E. Chavannes. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BRITÄGER zur Methodik der Erdkunde als Wissenschaft wie als Unterrichtsgegenstand. Hrg. v. R. Lehmann. 1. Hft. Halle: Tausch. 2 M. 70 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED.

V.—"Ip" and the St. Vigeon's Stone.

Bodleian Library, Oxford.

All readers of these letters know that the O of Irish surnames is the Irish o, "grandson" or "descendant." Of this the modern dat. pl. is ibh, which (as that case in Old Irish ended in -b) suggests an earlier ib. But of o there is an older form aue, which again suggests an older dat. pl. aib. And (as that case eventually changed its ending to -bh) this in turn suggests a later form aibh. Moreover, we know that in Ulster ai is pronounced ē, so that we get the possibility of Old Irish dialectal forms eb and ebh. We know also that Irish ai is almost invariably represented by Pictish e (we have had fourteen instances in eight inscriptions), and that the Highlander delights to change his b's into p's: so that for aib and ib we get possible Pictish ep and ip.

Let us now tabulate these forms:

O. Ir.	do. dialectal?	Pictish?
aib ?	eb	ep
ib ?		ip
aibh ?	ebh	ebh
		ev
ibh		ibh
		iv

We know also that the land occupied by tribes of families was called by the names of those families, and that it was common in such cases to use the dat. pl. as an abstract locative.

Consequently, if the descendants of a man named Cu (gen. Con) held land, that land might possibly have been called in the oldest Irish Aib Con, or in later Irish Ibh Con. If these died out, or migrated, or were expelled, and the land fell to the descendants of someone else, it might still be called Aib or Ibh, but with another name following. And there arises the possibility that, in consequence, these terms aib, ibh, and their congeners would be used to indicate a family-holding apart from the name of any particular family, and without retaining any plural sense.

Let us now see what this hypothesis will explain.

I. It supplies an origin not only for O'Reilly's "ibh, s. a country, a tribe of people," but also for his "aibh, s. . . a tribe."

II. It explains Ptolemy's name (second century) of the people in Ireland (II. 2 § 8) called Eblanoi (which reading I prefer to Eblanioi), and the city Eblana (ib § 7). These names represent Eb-lan. As Irish th only = h, and Zeuss (Gram. p. 71) gives instances of its being dropped in the middle of a word (e.g., én for ethn); this lan = lāthn, gen. pl. of lāth, a hero, so that Eb-lan meant "descendants of heroes." And I doubt not that Legin, the name of the men of Leinster (in which the Eb-lan and their city lay), is only another form of the same patronymic and = Lathgin, "hero-born" or "hero-clan."

III. It explains the twofold mediaeval Irish name of Dublin — (1) Baile-Atha-Cliath = "town of the hurdle-ford," and (2) Duibhlinn — together with the connexion between the latter and Eb-lan. There were various Ath-Cliath's in Ireland (Joyce, Irish Names of Places, p. 351), and the particular one at the settlement of the Eb-lan would be called Baile Atha Cliath du (= at) Ibh-linn. The change of vowel in linn might arise from a shortening and subsequent infection of the a, as i is a form of a infected; but possibly the false derivation from duibh linn (= black pool) is at the bottom of it. As the preposition du frequently dropped its vowel before a word beginning with a vowel, we also get the spelling and pronunciation Divlin explained.

IV. It explains part of the name of the five isles to the north of Ireland, which Ptolemy (II. 2 § 10) calls Aibodai. Each of the two most westerly was called Aibouda—obviously because each was inhabited by the same Aib or trihe.

V. It explains part of the name of Ptolemy's Epidion, the fifth and most easterly of these isles. As it was on the Pictish coast, its name began not with Aib, but with Ep. Indeed, when we come to his description of the corresponding part of Caledonia, we find there a tribe called the Epidioi, and an Epidion akron, Epidion promontory, or Promontory Epidion. This was, no doubt, the Mull of Kintyre, and was probably identical with the supposed isle to which he gives the same name. Kintyre is all but an isle, and, looked at from Antrim, it would be taken for one: "In ancient records Kintyre is occasionally described as an island" (Orig. Paroch. Scotie ii., pt. i., p. 1).

As for Pictish ip, we have already had it in the tenth or eleventh century Newton Stone. It had clearly become crystallised in the meaning of "family-holding," with all plural sense lost, before the Pictish dat. pl. changed its ending from b (p) to bh (v); so that we actually get renn ip Ua Rosir, "in front of ip of O'Rosir's," where early Pictish would have given renn Ip Rosir, "in front of O'Rosir's." But we still have the name of a family attached to it.

In the (twelfth century) Gaelic entries of the Book of Deer, we seem to get a further advance. There ip is apparently used without the name of any family at all.

We are told (plate v. of the Spalding Club edition) that certain persons gave to Christ and * Pliny (IV. § 104) had called them the Haebudes, but it is obvious that the h is a Latin's erroneous reading of the name out of some Greek geographer. h not being a letter in Greek, and usually not even indicated at that time in MSS. by the rough breathing, the reader would have to guess whether or not to aspirate the word. Similar instances of wrong guessing in the contrary direction have led to Annas and Arimathaea in our New Testament, instead of Hannas and Harimathaea.

to Columcille and to Drostan báll dōin ipet ipair, which is translated (p. 94) "Ball Domin in Pet Ipuir." This translation, however, seems to me virtually impossible, because it puts a ball inside a pet, whereas all the evidence goes to show that a pet was a single homestead, and on p. lxxxiv. seven instances are given of pit and bal being "used indiscriminately" as names of the same places. I suggest that the words in question denote three distinct holdings: (1) Ball do min (= Farm at (the) green); (2) Ip "Et"; (3) Ip "Air." Et would of course be the familiar ett of our Pictish inscriptions = hearth (i.e., homestead); and in the St. Vigean's Stone we shall find another ip described as an ett, Air is an adjective meaning "ploughed."

There is another passage in the Book of Deer where one is sorely tempted to find ip. We are told (plate iv.) that the Mormaor of Buchan gave to Columcille and Drostan uádoic itiprat gounice chloic pette nūc garnait, which is rendered (p. 92) "from Cloch in tiprat to Cloch pette mic Garnait"—i.e., from Stone of the (in) Well (tiprat) to Stone of Farm of m'c Garnait. In the reprint of a former letter I have divided itiprat differently, as = int ip Rat; but for int one would have expected ind, I cannot quote an instance of rat = rath, and in any case it ought to be in the genitive, and is not—so I recant. The well in question was doubtless either Abbey Well or St. Drostan's Well.

But note that in this passage we have evidence as early as the twelfth century of march-stones (clochan) of property, which is what I have been insisting that almost all our inscribed Pictish stones are; and note that the stones here mentioned are also stones which define the boundaries of property of Columcille and Drostan; and the St. Vigean's Stone, which we are about to consider, is also a stone which serves as the boundary between property on the one side belonging to Drostan and an ip or holding called Ev Bhret on the other, which was the ett or homestead of a man called Forcus (O'Bhret?).

The "Drosten" Stone, as it is commonly called, is now in the porch, and was once in the kirkyard, of St. Vigean's, in Forfarshire. On one face it has a cross of interlaced ornament, with borders containing animals, &c., treated decoratively. On the other it has a man kneeling with drawn bow and arrow; in front of him a wild boar; above him several Pictish symbols and a variety of animals, chiefly wild, including a bear. Both the long edges between these two faces are also ornamented, and at the bottom of one of them is the inscription, in excellent Latin half-uncials:

dRōfzen-
IP'eu²b'Rez² εΖΖ'F'OR,- cuf.²

Before explaining this inscription, it must be said that the stone is, by all accounts, so placed that the inscription—which is only raised about a foot above the ground—is not very easy to study minutely; but that I have worked with a microscope on an admirable photograph, taken by Mr. James Milne, photographer, of Arbroath, before the stone was placed where it now is. Let me also say that—although no one has previously suspected it—the Latin letters are cut over a scratched Ogam inscription. I hope some day to be able to properly define the Ogams, but I doubt its being possible from my small photograph—at least, without still further shortening sight already too much shortened by such work.

The small punctuation-mark like a figure 2 always denotes the end of a word. The first line also has at the end a stop something like this, /, . The third line has at the end the punctuation -, - which is meant to have the effect of our hyphen. And there is a - at the end of the entire inscription. The ' is also employed after the consonants b and p to raise them in the genitive case to bh and ph, like ' in Irish.

The b in the second line has always been mistaken for an o: I only discovered the stumpy head of the Irish b when examining the punctuation-marks with a microscope. We had a very similar case in the bolo of the Newton Stone.

In the third line, where Forcus is raised to the genitive and becomes Fhoircus, the i is placed crosswise inside the o. In the first line, where Drostan is raised to the genitive and becomes Drosten or Droisten, an i seems to be placed crosswise over the o: in this position it comes very near other lines in the stone which run in the same direction, and apparently belong to the previous Ogam inscription, and it looks to me as if for the purpose of further defining this stroke a small i has been written on top of it.

The first line means "Of Drostan," Pictish e as usual equalling ai. It means that the property on the left—the side of the stone which bears a cross—belonged to a church or monastery dedicated to St. Drostan. "The great number of sculptured stones which have been found about the church point it out as a site of early ecclesiastical settlement, and suggest that the old parish may have been the territory of an early Celtic monastery" (Stuart, Sculptured Stones of Scotland, ii., p. 7).

The other three lines refer to the property on the right—the side of the stone which has the man and animals on it. The second line gives the name of this property Ip Ev Bhret. It was an ip or family-holding, and was according to custom called by the name of its occupants in the locative-dative case, just as in the Logie Elphinstone Stone, and, as we shall see by-and-by, in the Aboyne Stone. The family were descendants (grandchildren?) of Brat, the genitive of whose name would be Bhrat, Pictish Bhret, here written B'ret; as his descendants they were called aibh, Pictish ev.

The last two lines tell us that this O'Bhret property is the ett, i.e., the "hearth," or homestead, of Forcus. Ett, which exact form is also found on the Lunastone, has been already fully explained in former letters: to those who have not read them I can only now say that it is the Pictish equivalent of the Irish aith. Prof. Rhys has pointed out on p. 269 of his paper that the actual form Forcus (= Fergus) is found in Adamnan's Life of Columba, at the end of the seventh century, as the name of an Irish king of the sixth century. Here it makes a genitive Fhoircus, written F'hoircus.

Forcus himself was very possibly one of the O'Bhret family. The ancestor of this family was a brat or "judge"; and from some newspaper abstract of a paper by Prof. Mackinnon, kindly lent me by Lord Archibald Campbell, I find that in a Gaelic charter of 1408 a man bears the name Mac-a-bhruiin, meaning "Son of the Judge."

The entire inscription may be rendered thus, "Drostan's—Holding O'Bhret's, hearth of Forcus."

My next letter will include all the remaining stones which belong to my subject.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

C. EDMON'S "GENESIS," 2906-7.

London: April 20, 1894.

The emendation seogan for the unintelligible sencan is so exceedingly obvious that it may be presumed to have been the first thought of every person who ever read the passage. The scholars who have not accepted it, therefore, must have deliberately rejected it. Probably they have done so because they did not see how to make it yield a satisfactory sense without resorting to supplementary emendations of little probability. I agree with Prof. Hempl that none of the suggestions hitherto made, from those of Bouterwek and Grein downwards, can be accepted as fairly plausible; but his own proposal pleases me less than any other. It will not do to assign to seogan a sense which the verb is not known to have had in any Germanic language. The only authenticated sense is "to singe, burn"; if fire is mentioned in connexion with the verb it is always as instrument, never as object. And then the meaning given to the passage by the emendation is hardly tolerable. It may be conceded that the author of the "elder Genesis" has very little claim to be called a poet, and a good deal of bathos may be allowed to the emendator of his text; but it is possible to abuse the privilege.

I think, however, that the reading seogan is probably right. If I may venture to add another attempt to the many that have been made to correct this difficult passage, I would suggest that a line may have been omitted. It is very unlikely that any conjecture can exactly hit the mark; but possibly the sense may be approximately represented by the following:—

"wolde his sunu cwellan folmum sinu; fyre seogan wite wynsunne; weobedd seodan (cf. 2931-2, where read onrēad)
mages dreore."

Another mode of filling up the gap would be:—

"Eofes lichaman; Uffruman cweman."

The kind of enjambement supposed in these conjectures is fairly common in the "elder Genesis." It is very possible that my suggestion may be wrong; but I have the satisfaction of feeling that, at any rate, it cannot be worse than some of those which have previously been made.

HENRY BRADLEY.

SPENSER, "FAERIE QUEENE," I. ii. 18.

Oxford: April 23, 1894.

Mr. H. Littledale's suggestion has been anticipated and discussed in Notes and Queries. At 7 S. viii. 478, I quoted a parallel passage occurring in F. Q. iv. vi. 13, which seems to show that Dr. Kitchin's interpretation is correct, and that there is no need to alter the punctuation of the first and the best subsequent editions. The entire stanza may be quoted:

"So, as they coursed here and there, it chaunst
That, in her wheeling round, behind her crest
So sorely he her strooke, that thence it glaunst
Adowne her backe, the which it fairly blest
From foule mischance; ne did it ever rest,
Till on her horses hinder parts it fell;
Where bying deepe so deadly it imprest,
That quite it ehynd his backe behind the sell,
And to alight on foote her algates did compell."

It (= in both passages, the sword on its stroke) in the one case "glances down his shield," and in the other "adowne her backe"; "blame" = "mischance"; and "blest" delivered. The parallelism is exact; and the grammatical construction of "glancing down," if we were inclined to adopt Mr. Littledale's interpretation of the passage, is not apparent.

C. E. DOBLE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 29, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Some of George Meredith's Women," by Miss Alice Woods.
MONDAY, April 30, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Typewriting Machines," by Mr. H. C. Jenkins.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Epictetus," by Mr. R. J. Ryle.
8.30 p.m. Japan: "Aspects of Social Life in Japan," by Archdeacon Shaw.
8.30 p.m. Farke Museum: "Barometric Conditions and Air Movements," by Mr. R. H. Scott.

8.30 p.m. St. Martin's Town Hall: "Twenty Thousand Feet above the Sea," by Mr. Edward Whymper.

TUESDAY, May 1, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Rabies," I., by Prof. J. W. Ridd.

8 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "The Russian Language," by Mr. A. Kinloch.

5 p.m. Royal Institution: Annual Meeting.

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "Greek and Other Legends of the Deluge," by Mr. F. Le Page Renouf.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Manufacture of Biquette Fuel," by Mr. W. Colquhoun.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Echinoderms collected during the Voyage of H.M.S. Penguin and by H.M.S. Egeria, when surveying Macleodfield Bank," by Prof. E. Jeffrey Bell; "Studies in Teleostean Morphology from the Marine Laboratory at Clouthorpe," by Mr. Ernest W. L. Holt; "Field-notes on the Wild Camel of Lob Nor," by Mr. St. George Littledale.

WEDNESDAY, May 2, 8 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Remedies in the Sloane Collection and Alchemical Symbols," by Mr. F. C. J. Spurrell; "Photographs of Stones, from the Drift Deposits, Long Island, U.S.A.," by Mr. F. C. J. Spurrell; "Rubbing of a Monumental Brass, lately found in Tong Church, Shropshire."

4.30 p.m. Camden: General Meeting.

8 p.m. Royal Society: Conversazione.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Nickel," by Mr. A. G. Charleton.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Shakspeare's As You Like It," by Mr. J. A. Jenkinson.

THURSDAY, May 3, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Solid and Liquid States of Matter," I., by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Linnean: "The Habits of Certain Species of Lemna," by Mr. H. B. Guppy; "The Fertilisation of Certain Malayan Orchids," by Mr. H. N. Ridley.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Structure and Chemistry of the Cyanogen Flame," by Prof. Smithells; "The Condition in which Carbon exists in Steel," by Mr. J. O. Arnold; "Hydride and its Derivatives," by Mr. Kipping; "Volatile Compounds of Lead Sulphide," by Mr. J. B. Hannay.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: James Forrest Lecture: "The Relation of Mathematics to Engineering," by Dr. John Hopkinson.

8.30 p.m. Parkes Museum: "Moisture: its Determination and Measurement," by Mr. W. Marriott.

FRIDAY, May 4, 8 p.m. Philological: Anniversary Meeting: Presidential Address by Prof. A. S. Napier.

8 p.m. Viking Club: "The Orkney and Shetland Lamp," by Mr. Edward Lovett.

8 p.m. Toybee Literary Association: "Eighteenth Century Literature—The Romantic Movement," by Prof. Edward Dowden.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Sound Production of the Lower Animals," by Prof. C. Stewart.

SATURDAY, May 5, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Colour Vision," I., by Captain Abney.

SCIENCE.

DR. BUDGE'S "BOOK OF GOVERNORS" AND "DISCOURSES OF PHILOXENUS."

The Book of Governors: the Historia Monastica of Thomas, Bishop of Margā, A.D. 840, Edited from Syriac MSS. in the British Museum and other Libraries, by E. A. Wallis Budge. Vol. I.: The Syriac Text, Introduction, &c. Vol. II.: The English Translation. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

The Discourses of Philoxenus, Bishop of Mabbōgh, A.D. 485-519. Edited from Syriac MSS. of the Sixth and Seventh Centuries in the British Museum, with an English translation by E. A. Wallis Budge. Vol. I.: The Syriac Text. (Asher.)

SYRIAC scholars not many years ago were indebted to the author of these two works for furnishing them with a model edition of the Syriac text, together with an English translation, of The Book of the Bee, a work which was soon followed by his History of Alexander the Great, being the Syriac version of the Pseudo-Callisthenes (see the ACADEMY, 1890, No. 926). We are now put under fresh obligations to Dr. Budge, who, within the last few months, has brought out, in a manner worthy of a pupil of the late Dr. Wright, two of the most important texts of Syriac literature which had hitherto remained unpublished.

The "Historia Monastica" of Thomas, Bishop of Margā and Metropolitan of Bēth Garmai, consists of two volumes. Vol. I. contains the Syriac text, which has been edited from four Nestorian MSS., two of which Dr. Budge himself procured in the East for that purpose. By closely following the pointing of these MSS., the author probably enables scholars to form an exact idea of the actual pronunciation of Syriac by the Nestorians in the ninth century. In addition to this the book contains a valuable introduction, in which the life and work of Thomas and the history of the monastery of Bēth Abbē are set forth; and a full description of the rise and development of Christian monasticism and asceticism in Mesopotamia has been here given, so far as we know, for the first time. A history of Rabban Hormizd and the foundation of his monastery at el Kōsh has been appended; and, in connexion with this subject, we are glad to see that Dr. Budge has lately announced the edition of a Syriac text, by Sergius of Adhorbaigān, which, up to the present day, is once a year recited at el Kōsh, in commemoration of its founder. The indexes of proper names and of Greek and Latin words used in the Syriac, with which Vol. I. concludes, will prove especially useful to the philologist. Vol. II. contains a literal English version of the book, accompanied by a considerable number of footnotes. By adding these the author has conferred an invaluable service on all those who are interested in the history, chronology, and geography of Mesopotamia; and having travelled in that part of the East himself, he has often been able to put in a few words of comment a more graphic and detailed description of localities or high roads than anyone could give who has gained his knowledge from books only. We must not pass over in silence the important extracts from Ishō-yabh III., Patriarch and Catholicus of Adiabene, and from the "Paradise" of Paladius, quoted in explanation of Thomas' narrative, with which the notes to the translation as well as the introduction of Vol. I. are interspersed. A perusal of Dr. Budge's Book of Governors raises the hope that he may give us more such specimens of Nestorian life and literature, such as are contained in the two beautifully printed volumes before us.

Especially welcome to Biblical students will be Dr. Budge's edition of the Discourses of Philoxenus, Bishop of Mabbōgh in the first half of the sixth century, which he has undertaken for the Royal Society of Literature. This eloquent writer, who was born at Tahal in Bēth Garmai, circa A.D. 460, and was the author of the celebrated Philoxenian Version of the New Testament, also wrote, besides numerous other works, thirteen homilies, the Syriac text of which (comprising 625 pages royal octavo) has now been edited by Dr. Budge from eight MSS. in the British Museum, of which the earliest dates from the sixth century. A comparison shows that the text of these discourses was handed down to at least the ninth century without any essential corruption; and we may thus hope to form a fair judgment as to the Biblical text the author had either before him or in memory, and to advance a step in the investigation of the history and development of the Syriac version of Scripture. In a second volume Dr. Budge proposes to give an English translation of the Discourses, and to print extracts from the unpublished treatises of Philoxenus which throw light upon difficult passages therein. The handsome binding of Vol. I. adds to the attraction of the book, which is further enhanced by four photographic plates giving specimens of the most important MSS. from which the text is published. Let us hope that his new duties as Keeper of the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities at the British Museum will not prevent the author from an early issue of Vol. II.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

American Journal of Mathematics—Vol. xv. 4; Vol. xvi. 1. (Baltimore.) The contents of the first number are: a paper by Mr. Basset on "Toroidal Functions," which embodies results laid before the London Mathematical Society by the author last year; a valuable Note by Dr. F. N. Cole on "Simple Groups as far as Order 660," which is a continuation of like work by the author in vol. xiv. W. H. Echols writes on "The Expansion of Functions in Infinite Series." E. W. Brown gives the completion of his memoir on "The Elliptic Inequalities in the Lunar Theory." A short Note follows on "The Multiplication of Semi-Convergent Series," by Prof. Cajori: it is an attempt at the extension of results given by Voss (Math. Ann., vol. xxiv., p. 44). The longest paper in the number is by T. F. Holgate, on "Certain Ruled Surfaces of the Fourth Order." In continuation of work by Cayley and others, the writer considers "those species which may be generated by two projective sheaves of planes of the second order." Prof. Cayley sends a Note on the so-called quotient  $G/H$  in the theory of Groups. The second number, which is furnished with an excellent likeness of Prof. Lie, opens with a memoir by E. B. Van Vleck "Zur Kettenbruchentwicklung Hyperelliptischer und ähnlicher Integrale." This exhaustive piece of work is illustrated with numerous diagrams and references. Mr. Basset contributes a paper on "Waves and Jets in a Viscous Liquid." In vol. ix., Prof. Greenhill discussed the principal cases of wave-motion in a frictionless liquid which had been solved up to that date; Mr. Basset now considers certain problems of a similar character when the viscosity of the liquid is taken into account. The remaining papers are "Sur l'inversion des integrales de fonctions a multiplicateurs," by M. E. Picard, and on orthogonal substitutions that can be expressed as a function of a single alternate (a skew symmetric) linear substitution, by Dr. H. Taber.

Plane Trigonometry. By S. Loney. (Cambridge University Press.)—Elementary Trigonometry. By H. S. Hall and S. R. Knight. (Macmillans.) Each of these little books is excellent, and the student might well be content with either. There is, of course, the old familiar material, but it is decked out in such attractive guise as the authors could contrive. Each is more elementary than some recent works on the subject which have been based on De Morgan's ideas; but the second is the more elementary, as the writers have eschewed the use of infinite series and imaginary quantities. From our point of view, which is that of a school teacher, the latter, therefore, is the book which we should recommend for boys. It is drawn up with that skill which shows the writers to be past masters in the art of teaching, and is quite on as high a platform for Trigonometry as their previous books on Algebra are for that subject. We have read the text with care and have thoroughly enjoyed it. Logarithms are not relegated to Algebra, but come in for a full and careful discussion; the worked-out examples will furnish capital models for pupils and should "cure that inaccuracy which is so often due to clumsy arrangement." The chapters on heights and distances, properties of triangles and polygons, and the final chapters on miscellaneous transformations and identities, and on miscellaneous theorems, strike us as being very well done. A good deal to the same purport may be said of like parts in the first book, but for the reason stated we have gone more carefully over the other. We have found the examples we have tried correct, with the exception, in the second book, of p. 219, ex. 7, interchange sines and cosines; p. 353, xxiii. (a), 1, answer should be  $\sin^2 n\alpha$  not  $\frac{\sin 2n\alpha}{2\sin \alpha}$ . The books differ on one point. The first book devotes seven pages to a list of formulae, whereas the other is opposed to the practice. Something may be said on both sides, though we ourselves various senses in which Mr. Bradley recognises the self were distinguished—the sentient self and the self as a psychological construction being apparently the most important. It was urged that it is necessary to recognise also the self as the unity of experience and as the ideal involved in knowledge; and it was contended that by introducing these conceptions certain modifications would be rendered necessary in Mr. Bradley's system, especially (1) a removal of the antithesis between truth and reality; (2) the introduction of a positive instead of a merely subversive dialectic; (3) a modification of the analysis of psychological elements, through the explicit recognition of three stages in the development of consciousness; (4) a reconciliation of the two sides of self-assertion and self-denial in the moral ideal; and (5) a more fully developed view of the finite world as the revelation of the Absolute. It was acknowledged, however, that on all these points Mr. Bradley has, to a considerable extent, supplied his own correction.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, April 19.)

MR. OSCAR BROWNING in the chair.—Mr. C. P. Merrian was elected a fellow.—A paper was read by Prof. T. F. Tout on "The Earldoms under Edward I." in which the policy of the Crown towards the great territorial houses was explained and illustrated by an examination of the distribution of the several earldoms, based upon the actual returns contained in the Inquisitions post mortem and other records.—Sir James Ramsay, Mr. Sidney Lee, Prof. Cunningham, and Mr. H. E. Malden took part in the discussion.

FINE ART.

Persian Ceramic Art, belonging to Mr. F. Ducane Godman, F.R.S., with Examples from other Collections. The Thirteenth-Century Lustred Wall-Tiles, by Henry Wallis, with Illustrations by the Author. (Privately printed.)

THIS volume concludes what is one of the most sumptuous of illustrated catalogues. The special function of the art of chromolithography has never perhaps been so fully shown as in these pictures of lustred Persian pottery, unless, indeed, it be in those wonderful facsimiles of old book-bindings with which the skill of Mr. Griggs adorned the illustrated catalogue of the Burlington Fine Arts Club exhibition in 1891. The colours of some of the vases pictured in the previous volume of the Godman collection were more powerful and the whole effect more gorgeous; but we are inclined to think that Mr. Samuel Hodson has hit his colours in the present plates with a nicer exactitude, and has rendered the lustred surfaces with even greater success than before.

If we begin by speaking of the illustrations, it is Mr. Wallis's own fault (or, rather, virtue); for in that graceful and interesting essay embedded between the catalogue and the appendix, which he has framed with a lovely margin of design, from a Persian MS. in the British Museum, and inlaid with figures of tiles all printed in gold, he tells us that he has thus adorned his text with the benevolent intention of enabling his readers to refresh their eyes when tired of his own literary performances. This attests a generosity and a concern for the happiness of his fellow creatures which are quite oriental in their scale, and also quite in accordance with the spirit of that beautiful art of which the volume is a record.

But, indeed, the illustrations may be regarded as part of the text. They are, in modern parlance, "documents" in a true sense. When sifted and compared with the patience and artistic instinct of Mr. Wallis, these tiles reveal certain variations in design which enable him to place them in something like chronological sequence, and they also bear inscriptions (and in a few instances dates) which are a great assistance to the historian of art. Unfortunately, with regard to these most beautiful and interesting examples of the art of Persia in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries there is little to help such internal evidence; but what Mr. Wallis has done shows how much more may possibly be accomplished when the comparatively few examples which have reached Europe in recent years are supplemented by others belonging to the same and to preceding periods. That they exist in the ruins of once great cities like Rey can scarcely be doubted; and we may hope that before very long these precious dust-heaps will one day be excavated by a Schliemann, a Dieulafoy, or a Flinders Petrie.

Meanwhile, what we already possess of the ancient ceramic art of Persia in the British Museum, at South Kensington, and in private collections, nay, even this very volume itself, is sufficient, if not to satisfy the historic appetite, at least to raise the vision of a world like that of the Arabian Nights: a world of groves and nightingales, of gardens and gazelles, of palaces glittering with gold and gems, and of a people careless and luxurious, lovers of the chase and the wine cup, clad in purple and fine linen, and faring sumptuously every day. Even the wall-tiles of their ruined buildings breathe still that "joy of life" which once possessed them, and have inspired Mr. Wallis (not perhaps without a tinge of professional envy) to write this eloquent description of a painter's Utopia.

"The Persian artist of the times when these tiles were produced had not to roam the world for subjects. Seated in his open shed, the gorgeous procession of Eastern life passed before him. The images of the gallant noble on his curveting charger, the sedate merchant, the dainty maiden, the laughing children, were photographed on the tablets of his memory, to be represented in the lustred line when occasion required. So, also, the gorgeous and profuse flora suggested endless motives for decoration in his 'unpremeditated art.' But beyond and above all was the ever-present source of inspiration, the light that is known only in the East, and in which his spirit rejoiced. His wants were few, and bountiful nature is liberal in the East. Calamity might come; but then, generally, it was the sharp stroke that smote, and body and soul parted. He knew little of 'the weariness, the fever and the fret' of modern Western life, and he would not import into his art—so sensitive and responsive to all outward phenomena as well as to all spiritual emotions—that of which he had no experience. Hence it has come to pass that these few square inches of glazed pottery carry with them, like the notes of the nightingale and the skylark, an ever-flowing sense of joy and gladness; and it is not surprising if one sometimes finds on the walls of those whose work lies in our substantial, matter-of-fact, not unpleasant but often too smoky Western cities, a plaque that still, at the distance of six centuries, reflects the sunshine, the art, and the poetry of the far-off East."

So perhaps the Persian artist of the thirteenth century lived and had his being; so, we fear, notwithstanding Mr. Wallis's sanguine view of the future of Iran, the Persian artist will never live again. "There are no birds in any last year's nest."

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE New Gallery opens next week. But the Royal Academy, adhering rigidly to its rule of the first Monday in May, will not open until the week after; the private view is fixed for Friday, May 4.

THE forty-first annual exhibition of pictures by British and foreign artists at the French Gallery, Pall Mall, will also open next week. The special attractions are Turner's "Meeting of the Waters," and a series of studies from nature by Prof. C. Heffner.

WE may further mention that a collection of pictures and sketches, by the late Charles Jones, of the Royal Cambrian Academy, is now on view at Mr. A. Bertram Lond's studio, Ryder-street, St. James's.

THE following have been elected members of the Royal Society of British Artists: Messrs. Robert Christie, Reginald Machell, E. H. Read Montague Smyth, Frank Spenlove Spenlove, and Holland Tringham.

AN exhibition of works by past and present students of the City and Guilds of London School of Technical Art will be held in the hall of the Skinners Company from May 1 to May 9. The exhibition will include sculpture, modelling, engraving, drawing, painting, design, house decoration, and wood engraving. Among the past students of the school who will contribute are Miss Barlow, Mr. Harry Bates, Mr. George Frampton, Mr. W. G. John, and Mr. F. W. Pomeroy.

ON Monday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a second instalment of the valuable collection of old silver plate formed by Mr. Robert Day, of Cork. The larger portion is of Irish manufacture, including not a few examples of the seventeenth century, made at Dublin, Cork, and Youghal. There are several chalices and patens. The catalogue is illustrated with three photographic reproductions.

THE April number of the Studio (Bell) is in some respects the most noteworthy that has yet appeared. A lithograph by Mr. Whistler, entitled "Les Gants de Suède," is a remarkable picture, and is printed hors texte. And à propos of it there are two interesting little notes on lithography; one of them by Mr. Rothenstein, whose art now attracts much attention, and the other by Mr. Way, the most artistic of practical lithographic printers. Then, in addition to a report in extenso of the lecture in which Mr. Frederick Wedmore throws cold water by the bucketful upon the average art student and the ordinary painter, for whom he does not conceal his indifference, there is a short paper by Mr. Lys Baldry, on the late Albert Moore, several of whose designs are reproduced in exquisite fashion. Mr. Moore's "Summer Night," we cannot help thinking, actually gains by the absence of colour.

THE new Part of Archæologia Aeliiana, published by the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle (London: Andrew Reid), is, as usual, full of interesting matter and excellent illustrations. First, there is a brief report of the committee appointed to make excavations per lineam vallii. Two series of cuttings were made at different parts of the vallum. One led to the discovery of a bronze axehead and a flint scraper, suggesting whether the vallum may not possibly be a work of the pre-Roman period; the other disclosed traces of a wide road running parallel with the wall, but apparently of later date. Then we have a detailed account of the Roman bridges over the North Tyne near Chollerford, and two articles upon the Roman altar to the goddess Garmangabis, which was found at Lanchester, in Durham, last July (see ACADEMY, August 19, 1893). General Sir William Crossman describes a bull of Pope Adrian IV., relating to Neasham Priory in Durham; Mr. Cadwallader J. Bates treats of the battle of Flodden from contemporary records, in supplement of a former paper by Dr. T. Hodgkin; and there are also several good papers on local churches and families. Finally we may mention an article on the Goldsmiths Company of Newcastle, who branched off from the Plumbers in 1702, and who discontinued the privilege of assay in 1881. The Company itself still exists, and possesses a circular copper plate, upon which the punches of no less than 287 makers have been impressed.

THE STAGE.

It is true, certainly, that at half the London theatres the serious pieces are doing badly, or have done so badly that they have now ceased to do at all. Changes in the bills are announced in every direction, though whether they will produce a success, either popular or distinguished, yet remains to be seen. Meantime, an actor of excellent comedy—a man whose voice, whose appearance, whose gait, whose manner have been quaint comedy itself (we mean Mr. Edward Terry), has taken again to burlesque, from which, so to say, he sprang. Miss Kate Vaughan—one of the earliest revealed of the modern Muses of the Dance—has forsaken the old writers for a return to the extravagances in which she was wont to be nimble. Burlesque or fantastic opera—opera supported by no serious and no artful strains—is what pays best of all: it is quite curious to witness, even on a brilliant Saturday afternoon like that of last week, the eagerness of the public to regale itself with song and dance. In the banquet of the drama, solid fare is neglected, and appetite is roused only upon the appearance of the entremets.

ON Friday in last week the annual public reading by the members of the Shakspeare Reading Society, under the direction of Mr. William Poel, took place at the Steinway Hall, the play of "Richard II." having been selected for the entertainment of the evening. Very wisely, we consider, was the piece chosen, for on the regular stage—notwithstanding the play's individuality of interest and its unquestionable charm of diction—we are never, we fear, likely to behold it. Mr. Poel always contrives to get the best that is to be got out of the ladies and gentlemen whom he teaches to read, and a great deal is to be got out of the highly intelligent members of the Shakspeare Reading Society. Though dispensing with scenic effect, Mr. Poel does not scorn the aid of music, and Mr. Vinning composed for the occasion an appropriate chorus.

MUSIC.

BERLIOZ' "FAUST" AT VENICE.

THE performance of Berlioz' "Faust," which was given on April 19 at the Fenice Theatre, is quite an event for Venice. None of Berlioz' music had ever been heard here before; and that which is most often played here is the music of Rossini, varied by "Crispino e la Comare." The performance of "La Damnazione de Faust" was a purely local effort, due entirely to the energy and enterprise of the Cavaliere P. A. Tirindelli, who got together a chorus of 120 and an orchestra of 80, partly from the Liceo Musicale Benedetto Marcello, and partly with the aid of amateurs, many of them society people. The undertaking was certainly a hazardous one; but it has proved, on the whole, very successful. The soloists were not specially remarkable; but the chorus had been brought into very workable order, and the orchestra kept together extremely well. The brilliance of Italian voices, their sharp staccato way of attacking a melody, a certain jollity in singing, suited some parts of Berlioz' music admirably. And there were certain things in it—certain snaps, and dashes, and leaps—which I have never heard better done than by this Venetian orchestra. An Italian orchestra is always at its best in passages of loud brilliance; but it can never stay to give all the fine shades. And in German music, such as the selection from Weber's "Euryanthe," which the band was playing the other day in the Piazza, it loses the whole character, the whole effect, of what was intended by the composer. The music of Berlioz is much more possible to an Italian orchestra than perhaps any other serious foreign music; for Berlioz has all the brilliance of the Italians, with a finesse which one would like to call French if any other French composer had manifested it. It must be said, however, that the Cav. Tirindelli's orchestra never quite got that silvery quality which Berlioz' music, at its loudest, always has if properly played. That was not the fault of the conductor, who over and over again carried his orchestra with him by the mere force of his will, and seemed to wring his effects out of them.

The house was crowded; the audience a little puzzled, not without enthusiasm, but not inclined to be over enthusiastic. What seemed to me curious with an Italian audience was that some of the parts which produced least effect, so far as I could see, were just those parts in which Berlioz had really done what their favourite composers had always been trying to do: those parts in which he hurls a mass of sound at you like a bomb-shell; those explosions which in Rossini are ludicrous, in Verdi fine, but which no one has ever managed like Berlioz. A Venetian audience could not but recognise, and could not recognise without admiration, the astonishing mastery and novelty of Berlioz' orchestration. But I fancy they still preferred, and will continue to prefer, the orchestration of Ponchielli.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

RECENT CONCERTS.

BERLIOZ' "King Lear" Overture was performed at the third Philharmonic Concert at the Queen's Hall, on April 19. This work was one of the sins of his youth. It was programme music; and Berlioz himself, who, at the time at which it was written, had just been the victim of treachery and faithlessness, was the real hero. There is plenty of passion in this Overture; but the ideas are not deep, and the workmanship is not striking. The piece, however, is scored with consummate skill: in fact, with genius. Berlioz had not much to say, but said that little remarkably well. The performance, under Dr. Mackenzie's direction, was spirited. The programme included another Overture, one by Dr. C. H. H. Parry, "To an Unwritten Tragedy," heard for the first time at these concerts. The music is interesting, the subject-matter is attractive, and the developments show skill. The work is good and worthy of its composer, though scarcely likely to increase his reputation. We cannot agree with the remark in the programme-book: that "the title tells us enough for guidance as to the mood in which the piece can best be heard." It seems to us that the title and the music were at variance, for the latter scarcely rose to a tragic level. M. Sapellnikoff, the Russian pianist, gave an interesting performance of Schumann's Concerto in A minor, though the reading was, perhaps, a little too objective to pass as pure "Schumann." Certain traditions have been handed down by the gifted widow of the composer, and it is difficult for a critic to approve of even the slightest departure from them. One must, however, beware of becoming narrow-minded. M. Sapellnikoff met with a brilliant reception, and, by way of encore, played a Liszt Rhapsody. Miss Ella Russell sang in place of Miss Amy Sherwin. She came, in fact, to listen, but kindly volunteered to assist the directors, who, at the last moment, learnt that Miss Sherwin was unable to appear.

Mr. Bevan gave a concert at St. James's Hall on Monday evening; and, to commemorate the anniversary of Shakspeare's birth, settings of some of his songs were included in the programme. The idea was a good one, and it seems a pity that it was not carried out more thoroughly. It would not be difficult to draw up a long and attractive programme of "Shakspeare" music, both vocal and instrumental. Miss Samuell, Miss Clara Butt, and Mr. Lloyd achieved special success. The Dilettante Vocal Quartette sang a glee by Spofforth, and a part-song by Buck; while the Meistersingers Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Norfolk Megone, performed three dances from Mr. German's Incidental Music to "Henry VIII."

Mr. Frederick Dawson gave his second Pianoforte Recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The programme commenced with Bach's Fantasia Chromatica and Fugue, which was followed by Beethoven's Sonata, (Op. 31, No. 2), in the same key. It was a happy idea to place these two works in juxtaposition, for in mood they greatly resemble each other. Mr. Dawson's reading of the former was neat, but colourless. In the Sonata, especially in the Adagio, he showed more warmth; there was, however, great lack of delicacy in the Allegretto. It is not given to all pianists to achieve success with the "Appassionata" Sonata. It cannot be said that Mr. Dawson failed, yet in his rendering there was evidence of thought and study rather than of feeling. This was followed by Beethoven's last three Pianoforte Sonatas (Op. 109, 110, and 111). The first was somewhat roughly handled; in the second, however, the pianist rendered far more justice to the composer and to himself. His technique was admirably neat, and his conception of the music good. In the last there was, again, excellent playing, and yet the pianist did not reveal the full message of the music. Mr. Dawson deserves every encouragement; he has Beethoven at his fingers' ends, and when his hear-service is as great as his head-service, he will, indeed, be a splendid player and true artist. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Royal Academy of Music has just completed its seventieth year of work. A commemorative concert will be given at the Queen's Hall on Thursday, May 10. The whole of the music will be selected from the works of past students (such as Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir Stenning Bennett, F. Corder, E. German, Sir G. Macfarren, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, and Sir A. Sullivan), and all the performers will be either present or past students. The proceeds of the concert will be devoted to the fund for assisting poor and deserving students by the payment of fees.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

THIS DAY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE NEW NOVEL BY JEAN MIDDLEMASS.

THE MYSTERY OF CLEMENT DUNRAVEN.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A GIRL IN A THOUSAND," &amp;c.

DORA RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.

A HIDDEN CHAIN. By the Author of "Footprints in the Snow," "A Great Temptation," &amp;c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. [In May.]

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THREE EMPRESSES.

Josephine, Marie-Louise, Eugénie. By CAROLINE GEAREY, Author of "In Other Lands," &amp;c. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"This charming book..... Gracefully and graphically written, the story of each Empress is clearly and fully told.....This delightful book."

BY ALFRED SMYTHE.

SIR DUNSTAN'S DAUGHTER, and other Poems. By the Author of "The Warlock," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. With Portrait. [Just out.]

LOVE, MARRIAGE, and

HAPPINESS. By "ISIDORE." Crown 8vo, elegant cloth, 2s. 6d.

YORKSHIRE POST.—"A thoroughly sensible, a thoroughly practical, and prettily got-up volume."

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO., 18, Bouverie Street, E.C.

MUDIE'S*SELECT*LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

41, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

- 1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.
- 2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast P'aste.
- 3) ANYBODY go one better?

G. CARDELLA'S SECOND NOVEL.MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., beg to announce that the NEW NOVEL, by the AUTHOR of A KING'S DAUGHTER, one of the most successful Novels of the year 1892, is now ready, in 3 vols., at all the Libraries, entitledTHE PERFECT WAY OF HONOUR.Of A King's Daughter some of the leading Papers said, "The name of G. Cardella is new to us, but we venture to predict if she or he puts out more books of the character and strength of A King's Daughter it will not be long before her name is familiar to all who like wholesome, well-written, interesting fiction"; "The Novel is so good that we should be glad to see another from the same pen"; "Extremely attractive"; "Instinct with humanity"; "Powerful and pathetic"; "A careful, conscientious performance."

SWAN SONNENSCHN &amp; CO., LONDON.

THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY.

READY, MAY 1st.

WOODSTOCK. 2 vols.

TEN ORIGINAL ETCHINGS BY W. HOLE, R.S.A.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14 KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "SUPERNATURAL RELIGION."

Just published, 8vo, price 6s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER: a Study.

By the AUTHOR of "SUPERNATURAL RELIGION."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION: an Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. 3 vols. Revised and Complete Edition. 8vo, 36s.

A REPLY to DR. LIGHTFOOT'S ESSAYS on "SUPERNATURAL RELIGION." 8vo, 6s.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; CO.

The Autonym Library
A Companion to the "Pseudonym"
Volume I. "The Upper Berth"
Now ready
By F. Marion Crawford
Paper, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s.
 London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each.

IRISH LINEN

2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10yd., each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8yd. per yard; Nursery Sheet, 4yd. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 3d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS. Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c. woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST.*BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,*TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY ANDREW LANG.

BAN and ARRIÈRE BAN: a Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. By ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE SENSES and the INTELLIGENCE. By ALEXANDER BAIN, Emeritus Professor of Logic in the University of Aberdeen. Fourth Edition, with Emendations. 8vo, 15s.

PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT in the BRITISH COLONIES. By ALPHEUS TODD, LL.D., C.M.G. Second Edition. Edited by his Son. 8vo, 30s. net.

THE HISTORY of TRADE UNIONISM. By SIDNEY and BEATRICE WEBB. With Coloured Map and a Full Bibliography of the Subject. 8vo, 18s. [On May 1.]

* This work, the result of three years' special investigation, will describe the growth and development of the Trade Union Movement in the United Kingdom from 1700 down to the present day. Founded almost entirely upon materials hitherto unpublished, it is not a mere chronicle of Trade Union organisation or record of strikes, but gives, in effect, the political history of the English working-class during the last 150 years.

CHRISTIANITY and the ROMAN GOVERNMENT: a Study in Imperial Administration. By E. G. HARDY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH and the SEE of PETER. By the Rev. LUKE RIVINGTON, M.A., Magdalen College, Oxford. With an Introduction by the CARDINAL ARCHBISHOP OF WESTMINSTER. 8vo, 18s.

LAW and THEORY in CHEMISTRY: a Companion Book for Students. By DOUGLAS CARNEGIE, sometime Scholar and Demonstrator in Chemistry of Gonville and Caius, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RECORDS of the TERCENTENARY FESTIVAL of the UNIVERSITY of DUBLIN, held July 5-8, 1892. 4to, price 10s. 6d.

Now ready, Price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE—MAY.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WOLFORD. Chapters XXVIII.—XXX.

HUGH PEARSON. By A. K. H. B.

APOLOGIA PRO SCRIPTIS SUIS. By AUSTIN DOBSON.

A POT o' REER. By Mrs. STEPHEN BATSON, Author of "Dark."

THE BEGINNINGS of SPEECH. By GRANT ALLEN.

THE SILVER OTTER. By HORACE HUTCHINSON.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNUNG. Chaps. I.—IV.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

THE DOCTRINE OF EVOLUTION.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. 16s.

PRINCIPLES of BIOLOGY. 2 vols. 34s.

PRINCIPLES of PSYCHOLOGY. 2 vols. 36s.

PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY. Vol. I. 21s.

Ditto. Vol. II. 18s.

ECCLESIASTICAL INSTITUTIONS. 5s.

PRINCIPLES of ETHICS. Vol. I. 15s.

Ditto. Vol. II. 12s. 6d.

THE DATA of ETHICS. (Separately.) 8s.

JUSTICE. (Separately.) 8s.

THE STUDY of SOCIOLOGY. 10s. 6d.

EDUCATION. 6s.

Ditto. Cheap Edition. 2s. 6d.

ESSAYS. 3 vols. 30s. (Or 10s. each vol.)

SOCIAL STATICS and MAN v. STATE. 10s.

MAN v. STATE. (Separately.) 1s.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

L. REEVE & CO.'S NEW WORKS.

To be published in Ten Parts, royal 4to, each with 8 beautifully Coloured Plates, price, to Subscribers for the complete work only, 10s. 6d.; or £1 11s. 6d. for the complete work if paid in advance.

FOREIGN FINCHES in CAPTIVITY.

By ARTHUR G. BUTLER, Ph.D., F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S., Corresponding Member of various Foreign Societies.

A Part will be issued every six weeks, commencing June 15th. The whole will form a large and handsome volume of between 300 and 400 pages, with 60 Plates, by F. W. Fownhwa, beautifully coloured by hand. Only 300 copies will be printed; early application is therefore necessary to prevent disappointment. Should any copies remain unsold on the completion of the work, the price will be raised to Six Guineas net or more.

Prospectus on application.

Now ready, Part XX., 7s. 6d.; also Vol. VI., 36s.

FLORA of BRITISH INDIA.

By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I., C.B., F.R.S., &c.; assisted by various Botanists. Parts I. to XIII., 10s. 6d. each; XIV. to XIX., 9s. each. Vols. I. to IV., cloth, 32s. each; Vol. V., 38s.

THE HYMENOPTERA ACULEATA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Parts I. to IV., with 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. each. Prospectus and Form for Subscribers may be had on application.

THE HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete in 1 volume. Small Edition, with a Structural Plate, 14s. Large Edition, with 31 Coloured Plates, 48s.

THE LEPIDOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Vol. I. (RHODALOCEA), with 40 Coloured Plates, 53s. Parts XI. to XVI., each with 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. Prospectus and Form for Subscribers may be had on application.

THE COLEOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Large Edition, complete in 6 vols., with 180 Coloured Plates, £14. Small Edition, complete in 6 vols., with 2 Structural Plates, £4.

CATALOGUE of BRITISH COLEOPTERA. By D. SHARP, M.A., F.L.S., and Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Price is. 6d.; or printed on one side only, for labels, 2s. 6d.

THE BUTTERFLIES of EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D., F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, £3 18s.

THE PHYSIOLOGY of the INVERTEBRATA. By A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), F.C.S. Demy 8vo, with 81 Illustrations, 13s. net.

BRITISH FUNGI, PHYCOMYCETES and USTILAGINEÆ. By GEORGE MASSEE. 8 Plates. 7s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of the BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Sixth Edition. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.E., K.C.S.I., F.R.S. 10s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. FITCH, F.L.S., and W. G. SMITH, F.L.S. 1,315 Wood Engravings. Third Edition. Revised and Enlarged. 10s. 6d.

British Insects. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates. 14s.

British Beetles. By E. C. RYE. New Edition. Revised and in Part Rewritten by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Butterflies and Moths. By H. T. STANTON. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Bees. By W. E. SHUCKARD. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Spiders. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

The Edible Mollusca of Great Britain and IRELAND. With Recipes for Cooking Them. By M. S. LOVELL. Second Edition. 12 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Zoophytes. By A. S. PENNINGTON, F.L.S. 24 Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Wild Flowers. Familiarly Described in the Four Seasons. By THOMAS MOORE, F.L.S. 24 Coloured Plates. 16s.

British Grasses. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Ferns. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

British Seaweeds. By S. O. GRAY. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

Synopsis of British Mosses. By C. P. HOBKIRK, F.L.S. Revised Edition. 7s. 6d.

No. 593. MAY, 3s. 6d.

THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE: Figures and Descriptions of New and Rare Plants. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S., &c. Third Series, Vols. I. to XLIX., each 42s. Published Monthly, with 6 Plates, 3s. 6d. Coloured. Annual Subscription, 42s.

A SET OF

CURTIS'S BOTANICAL MAGAZINE, Complete from the commencement to the end of 1892. 118 vols. and Index to the first 53 vols. in 95 vols. The first 79 vols. and Index in 56 vols., half green morocco, the remaining 39 vols. new, in cloth, price £126 net cash.

L. REEVE & CO.,

Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments,
6, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

MESSRS. ISBISTER'S NEW BOOKS.

TENNYSON. His Art and Relation to Modern Life.

By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., Author of "Early English Literature," &c. On deckle-edge paper, pp. 496, medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The DAILY CHRONICLE says:

"It is marked by the most minute and accurate knowledge of Tennyson's poetry, and a wide acquaintance with the movement of thought and the history of his time; by the most loving care, the most generous praise, combined with the most faithful and sincere attitude towards imperfections and limitations—the whole blending in a wise, discriminating, and essentially just view of one who was, in his critic's estimation, alike a great poet and a great man.....it is pretty safe to hazard the assertion that the ultimate view taken of Tennyson's work and personality will be that expressed in this admirable and suggestive piece of criticism."

The TENDERNESS of CHRIST.

By the Right Rev. A. W. THOROLD, D.D., Lord Bishop of Winchester, Author of "The Yoke of Christ," &c. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. [Just published.]

THE HEROIC in MISSIONS. Pioneers in Six Fields.

By the Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND, M.A., Morning Preacher at the Foundling Hospital. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

"A readable and vivid account in short compass of some noble lives.....we heartily commend these stirring chapters." Christian Leader.

NEW VOLUMES OF "THE GOSPEL AND THE AGE" SERIES.

Each large crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

10. THE COMRADE CHRIST, and other Sermons. By the Rev. W. J. DAWSON, Author of "Makers of Modern English," &c. [Just published.]

11. CHRIST and SCEPTICISM. By the Rev. S. A. ALEXANDER, M.A., Reader of the Temple Church. [Next week.]

12. LABOUR and SORROW. Sermons on some Aspects of Human Life. By the Rev. W. J. KNOX-LITTLE, M.A., Canon of Worcester Cathedral. [In the press.]

13. ESSENTIAL CHRISTIANITY, and other Sermons. By the Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, M.A. [In the press.]

14. VOICES and SILENCES. Selected Discourses. By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. [In the press.]

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

THE SON of MAN AMONG the SONS of MEN.

Studies of the Influence of Christ on Character.

By the Right Rev. W. BOYD CARPENTER, D.D., Lord Bishop of Ripon. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.

"Stirring, striking, suggestive."—Times.

IN the HIGH HEAVENS.

By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., &c., Lowndean Professor of Astronomy at Cambridge University. Author of "In Starry Realms," &c. With numerous illustrations. Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The freshest knowledge, and the best scientific thought." Scotsman.

FRAGMENTS in BASKETS.

A Book of Allegories.

By Mrs. BOYD CARPENTER. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

"This is a delightful book."—Literary World.

ISBISTER & CO., LIMITED, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, London.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1148.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NEW VOLUME OF PROFESSOR JEBB'S SOPHOCLES.

SOPHOCLES.—ELECTRA. PART VI. of the PLAYS and FRAGMENTS. With Critical Notes,

Commentary, and Translation in English Prose, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Part I. OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. Third Edition. 12s. 6d.

Part II. OEDIPUS COLONEUS. Second Edition. 12s. 6d.

Part III. ANTIGONE. Second Edition. 12s. 6d.

Part IV. PHILOCTETES. 12s. 6d.

Part V. TRACHINIAE. 12s. 6d.

"The whole edition, so far, exhibits perhaps the most complete and elaborate editorial work which has ever appeared."—Saturday Review.

CATALOGUE of SCIENTIFIC PAPERS COMPILED by the ROYAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

Vol. X.

[Nearly ready.]

THE STEAM-ENGINE and other HEAT-ENGINES. By J. A. Ewing, M.A., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E.,

Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 15s.

[Immediately.]

ANCIENT SHIPS. By Cecil Torr, M.A. With Illustrations, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BEOWULF. Edited, with Textual Footnotes, Index of Proper Names, and Alphabetical

Glossary, by A. J. WYATT, M.A. Lond., B.A. Cantab., sometime Scholar of Christ's College. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

A DISCOURSE of the COMMON WEAL of this REALM of ENGLAND. First printed in 1581, and commonly attributed to W. S. Edited from the MSS. by the late ELIZABETH LAMOND, Girton College. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"It is our opinion that for interest and importance, few books recently published in the department of social history have approached this discourse on the 'Common Weal of this Realm of England,' and that none has surpassed it for editorial patience and insight."—Educational Review.

New and Cheaper Edition, fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT in the ORIGINAL GREEK, according to the Text followed in the Authorized Version, together with the Variations adopted in the Revised Version. Edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, by the late F. H. A. SCRIVENER, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D.

ADVERSARIA CRITICA SACRA. With a short Explanatory Introduction. By the late F. H. A.

SCRIVENER, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D. Demy 8vo, 10s.

KINSHIP and MARRIAGE in EARLY ARABIA. By the late W. Robertson Smith, M.A., LL.D.,

Fellow of Christ College, and Professor of Arabic. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A NEW MANUAL FOR CONFIRMATION CANDIDATES.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM EXPLAINED. By the Rev. A. W. Robinson, M.A., Jesus College,

Cambridge, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Wakefield. Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

The BISHOP of SALISBURY.—"Contains much useful information and sensible instruction."

The DEAN of ST. PAUL'S.—"It will be most useful in assisting those engaged in teaching children the real meaning of the Church Catechism."

A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. By J. Greaves, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Christ College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"Throughout the book is of great merit."—Guardian.

PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By S. L. Loney, M.A., late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College,

Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. Or in Separate Parts:—Part I, up to and including the Solution of Triangles, 5s. Part II, ANALYTICAL TRIGONOMETRY, 3s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE SERIES.

HEAT and LIGHT. By R. T. Glazebrook, M.A., F.R.S., Assistant Director of the Cavendish

Laboratory. Crown 8vo, 5s.

The Two Parts are also Published Separately.

HEAT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK. Crown 8vo, 3s.

LIGHT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK. Crown 8vo, 3s.

"Teachers who require a book on Light, suitable for the class-room and the laboratory, would do well to adopt Mr. Glazebrook's work."—Nature.

A further List of Forthcoming Volumes in this Series will be forwarded on application.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

CASIMIR DELAVIGNE, LOUIS XI. Edited with Introduction and Notes, by H. W. EVE, M.A., Head Master of University College, School, London. 2s.

"Mr. W. H. Eve has done notable service to French teachers, but he has, perhaps, never done a better than when he prepared for the Pitt Press the Edition of Delavigne's Louis XI. before us. The text itself is eminently suitable for boys in higher middle forms, and no one is better qualified than Mr. Eve, either by scholarship or teaching experience, to provide notes for them."—Guardian.

GUIZOT.—DISCOURS SUR L'HISTOIRE DE LA REVOLUTION D'ANGLETERRE. Edited by H. W. EVE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPÆ. By C. E. Graves, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

[Immediately.]

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. With Introduction and Notes by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

TACITUS.—AGRICOLA and GERMANIA. Edited by the Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College. 3s. [Nearly ready.]

PLAUTUS.—ASINARIA. Edited by Rev. J. H. Gray, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of Queen's College. [Nearly ready.]

CAESAR.—DE BELLO CIVILI. Book III. Edited by A. G. PECKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

A NEW ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

THE ELEMENTS of ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By A. S. WEST, M.A. 2s. 6d.

"Will soon become a standard text in secondary schools, and mark an epoch in the teaching of English grammar."—Guardian.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CAMBRIDGE MILTON FOR SCHOOLS.

PARADISE LOST. Books III. and IV. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. W. VERIFY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD'S MARCELLA, by LAUREL JOHNSON	363
FLINT'S HISTORICAL PHILOSOPHY IN FRANCE, by A. W. BENN	365
BRADBURY'S SIR THOMAS MURDO, by J. I. MINCHIN	368
THE EXCHEQUER ROLLS OF SCOTLAND, by the Rev. C. W. BOASE	370
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE	371
SOME BOOKS OF VERSE, by GEORGE COTTERELL	371
NOTES AND NEWS	371
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	371
TRANSLATION: TWO SONNETS OF BOCAGE, by EDGAR PRESTAGE	371
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	371
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	371
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Septuagint versus The Hebrew Text of the Bible, by Sir H. H. Howorth; Some Basque Customs, &c., by the Rev. Wentworth Webster; Shakespeare's "Dunciad" and Milton's "Phaëton," by B. Dawson; The Novels of Chaucer, by L. F. Mott	371
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	373
PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS	373
TWO CLASSICAL REVIEWS	374
SCIENCE NOTES	375
PHILOLOGIST NOTES	375
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	375
MORELLI'S STUDIES OF ITALIAN PAINTERS, by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	376
THE CHAMPS DE MARS SALON, by C. NICHOLSON	378
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	379
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	379

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to receive RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. R. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

AUTHORS desirous of controlling the Publication of their Works, and acquiring the largest proportion of the Profits, may do so by applying, in the first instance, to "D." care of Watson's Advertising Offices, 150, Fleet Street, London, E.C. MSS. should, in no case, be forwarded until after communicating with the advertiser.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture, Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES FOR THE BEST ESSAY IN ENGLISH written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Fanny and "Gossip." 1s. 6d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to Rose Mary Crawshaw, Blich, Breconshire.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. 4th. References. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum).

Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

Catalogues on application.

ORIENTAL WORKS.

MESSRS. LUZAC & CO. have a large Stock of ORIENTAL WORKS, and can supply them, if not in stock, quickly and at moderate prices.

LUZAC & CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.

Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly.

Annual Subscription (post free), 1s.
"The Academy," Feb. 1894, writes: "Messrs. Luzac & Co's Oriental List...deserves the support of Oriental students...it gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere."

Vol. V., No. III., March, 1894, just out. A few copies of Vols. I. to IV. are still to be had (half-bound, with full Author's Index, &c.) at 6s. net each volume.

List and Catalogues of Oriental Works to be had on application.
LUZAC & CO., Publishers to the India Office, 46, Great Russell Street (opposite the British Museum), London, W.C.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY.

ALTERATION OF DATE.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, in the month of JULY or some subsequent date, proceed to the appointment of a PROFESSOR to occupy this newly-instituted Chair.

For the present, the duties are as follows:—The Ordinary Course will consist of 100 Lectures, the Honours Course of 50 Lectures, and the Professor will not be required to teach for more than six months.

The Normal Salary attached by Ordinance to the Chair is £200. The appointment will be made ad vitam et eulpanam, and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance.

The undersigned will give full information as to the duties, &c., and Candidates are requested to lodge with him twenty copies of their application, and of any Testimonials they may desire to submit, on or before Tuesday, 12th June.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
21, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY CHAIR.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, in the month of July or some subsequent date, proceed to appoint a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair in this University, recently rendered vacant.

The Professor will be required to enter on his duties from 1st October next, from which date the appointment will take effect.

The Normal Salary of the Chair has been fixed by Ordinance at £200. The Chair has an official residence attached to it.

The appointment is made ad vitam et eulpanam, and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, who will furnish any further information desired, twenty copies of his Application, and twenty copies of any Testimonials he may desire to submit, on or before Tuesday, 12th June.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
21, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

The following EXAMINATIONS will be held at Owens College, Manchester; University College, Liverpool; and Yorkshire College, Leeds, in June:—

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Medicine), on MONDAY, JUNE 18th, and following days.

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Medicine), on MONDAY, JUNE 18th, and following days.

A PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION (introductory to the Faculties of Arts, Science and Law) on THURSDAY, JUNE 14th, and following days.

The Examination Fee (£2), accompanied by a list of the subjects presented, must be sent to the REGISTRAR, from whom conditions of entrance and further particulars can be obtained on or before June 1st. Manchester, April, 1894.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

PROFESSORSHIP OF CHEMISTRY AND METALLURGY.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above PROFESSORSHIPS.

Applications, accompanied by thirty-six copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than the 26th of May, 1894.

The successful Candidates will be required to enter upon their duties on the 1st of October, 1894.

Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing. Further particulars may be obtained from

Geo. H. MOORE, Secretary.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street,

E.C.—TWO LECTURES by J. LAIRMOIR, D.Sc., F.R.S., on "THE AETHER and its RELATIONS to MATERIAL PHENOMENA," will be given on TUESDAY, May 8th, and Wednesday, May 9th.—TWO FINAL LECTURES of the COURSE on "CHANCE," will be given by K. H. PEARSON, M.A., on THURSDAY, May 10th, and Friday, May 11th. All Four Lectures are Free to the public, and commence at 6 p.m.

THE GROVE, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPAL Mrs. LACEY.
HEAD-MISTRESS—Miss LACEY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Modern History; Oxford University Extension Lecturer.

MISS J. W. KIRKALDY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honour School of Natural Science.

MISS A. G. EARP, Newnham College, Cambridge; First Class Natural Sciences Tripos.

MISS M. ROBINSON, Girton College, Cambridge; Classical Tripos.

MISS M. R. HUSTE, Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford; Honours, Classical Moderations.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY (English Language, Elocution).

MR. ARTHUR SOMERVELL, Professor at the Royal College of Music.

MISS GALLATRY, Associate of the Royal College of Music.

MR. R. CARRON (Violin).

Mme. OLIVIER (Dancing and Physical Exercises).

MR. W. McILHON (Fencing and Drill).

REFERENCE PERMITTED TO:—The Lady Laura Ridding; Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, late Principal of Somerville Hall; Mrs. A. H. Johnson, Hon. Sec. Association for the Education of Women, Oxford; Miss Maitland, Principal of Somerville Hall; the Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester; the Rev. Professor Symes, M.A., Principal of University College, Nottingham.

The NEXT TERM will begin MAY 4th.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and

advanced Examinations.—STUDENTS PREPARED in Classes connected with North London Collegiate School, under Miss Bess's superintendence. Arrangements made for boarding in neighbourhood.—Address Miss TORLES, 145, Camden Road, N.W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—

Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Dorscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutor, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. LEEVEN, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

Salvage of the valuable Library of a Nobleman; Scientific and Philosophical Libraries of Two Gentlemen, and other Collections; Two Pen-and-Ink Sketches by Thackeray; Engraving after Constable, 'The Cornfield,' &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY-LANE, W.C., at 1 o'clock each day, as under:—

On TUESDAY, May 8, SALVAGE from the valuable LIBRARY of a NOBLEMAN, including Gould's Grand Works on Ornithology, 48 vols.—and other Important Works on History, Science and Art. Bibliography, &c., which, being only externally injured, are capable of being re-bound.

On WEDNESDAY, May 9, and Two Following Days, the SCIENTIFIC and PHILOSOPHICAL LIBRARIES of TWO GENTLEMEN, including the Writings of G. H. Lewes, Bain, Herbert Spencer, Mill, Hamilton, Lange, Lotze, Ueberwey—Frichard's Insectoria—Walker's Insecta Britannica—Duffy's Mollusca—Cohn's Biologie der Pflanzen, 2 vols.—Koch's Deutschlands Crustaceen, 5 vols.—Journals and Proceedings of Learned Societies—Sets of Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews—Theological Works in handsome bindings by Riviere, Bedford, Clark, Mackenzie, &c.—Notes and Queries, a nice set, 76 vols.—Early Editions of the Works of Lever, Dickens, and Thackeray—Two Original Sketches by Thackeray—Drawing by Smirke and an Album of Plates by G. Cruikshank—Franks and Autographs—Engravings, 'The Cornfield,' after Constable—Schloss's Bijou Almanac for 1842, &c.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.

On TUESDAY, May 8, at 4 p.m. H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK

Will preside at a Lecture to be delivered in THE WESTMINSTER TOWN HALL.

By Major CONDER, R.E., on "FUTURE RESEARCHES IN PALESTINE"

(A Firm for Excavations at Jerusalem having been granted by the Sultan's Porte).

Doors open at 3.30 p.m. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d. and 5s.: Unreserved, 2s. 6d. and 1s. Early application should be made to the Palestine Exploration Fund, 24, Hanover-square, W.

By order, GEORGE ARMSTRONG, Assistant Secretary.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in

WATER-COLOURS.—The One Hundred and Twenty-first EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—The

EXHIBITION will OPEN on MONDAY, the 7th Mar. Admission (from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m., except on first day, when it opens at 10 a.m.), 1s. Catalogue 1s. and 1s. 6d. Season Tickets, 2s.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall.—

The 41st ANNUAL SPRING EXHIBITION OF PICTURES by British and Foreign Artists, including "The Meeting of the Waters," by J. M. W. Turner, R.A., and a Collection of Pictures and Studies from Nature by Professor C. HEFFERNAN, is NOW OPEN. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian).

"Interesting and faithful reproductions."—The Observer, Oct. 7, 1883. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SEEL & RALTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 5752. Telegraph, "Africa," London.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to their excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London of selling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own, STANFORD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,	LOUVRE, PARIS,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,	LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
WINDSOR CASTLE,	ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,	HERMITAGE, ST. PETERSBURG,
PITTI, FLORENCE,	BRUSSELS,
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,	PRADO, MADRID,
FLORENCE,	VATICAN, ROME,
AMSTERDAM,	HAARLEM,
THE HAGUE,	FRANKFORT,

AND THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES.

suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.*EIGHT HOURS for WORK. By John Rae, M.A., Author of "Contemporary Socialism." Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By Benjamin Kidd. Third Thousand. 8vo, 10s. net.The LETTERS of EDWARD FITZGERALD. Edited by W. Aldis Wright. 2 vols. New Edition. Globe 8vo, 10s. [THE EVERSLY SERIES.]READINGS on the INFERNO of DANTE, chiefly based on the Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola. By the Hon. WILLIAM WARREN VERNON, M.A. With an Introduction by the Rev. EDWARD MOORE, D.D., Hon. D.Litt., Dublin, Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 30s.

* * * Uniform with "Readings on the Purgatorio of Dante," by the same Author.

ACADEMY.—"Long residence in Italy, and thorough mastery of its language and literature, have specially fitted Mr. Vernon for the task of translation, enabling him to render difficult idioms and fine shades of meaning with a precision scarcely to be attained by distant scholars whose knowledge of Italian is chiefly derived from books. . . . Mr. Vernon's present work, built on the same lines as the 'Readings on the Purgatorio,' is an equally valuable and even more comprehensive guide."

TIMES.—"The reputation of the author and the high merit of his former work sufficiently attest the quality and merit of his present labours."

PRACTICAL BOTANY for BEGINNERS. By F. O. Bower, D.Sc., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow, Author of "A Course of Practical Instruction in Botany." Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.MATERIALS for the STUDY of VARIATION. Treated with Especial regard to Discontinuity in the Origin of Species. By WILLIAM BATESON, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 8vo, 21s. net.

Prof. A. MACALISTER, F.R.S., in the EXPOSITOR.—"He has earned the gratitude of all biologists by his boldness in acting as pioneer in a most arduous task, and he deserves the thanks of all thoughtful men for the spirit in which he has carried out his researches."

NATURAL SCIENCE.—"It is impossible to exaggerate the skill and care with which this has been done, and there can be no question that a most excellent introduction to the study of variation has been written."

A MODERN BUCCANEER. By Rolf Boldrewood. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

SPEAKER.—"Mr. Boldrewood possesses something of the secret of Defoe. He tells his tale with so much precision and so much detail that he compels the reader to accept it. . . . We congratulate Mr. Boldrewood upon having again achieved a real success."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Singulantly vivid and natural in its description of the most desperate and startling incidents."

A VALIANT IGNORANCE. By Mary Angela Dickens. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

WORLD.—"The most skillfully constructed, most evenly written, most progressively and consistently interesting novel she has yet produced. . . . There is strong drawing in the character of Mrs. Romayne."

BOOKMAN.—"She is an analyst of character, merciless often, always unflinching, but honest, serious, and capable."

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—NEW VOLUMES.*A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN and his FAMILY. By Mrs. Oliphant. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.THE SECOND SON. By Mrs. Oliphant. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.BARRACKS, BIVOUACS, and BATTLES. By Archibald Forbes, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

PART I., now ready, price 4s. net.

A NEW SYRIAC LEXICON.

By DR. C. BROCKELMANN, Breslau.

With a Preface by PROFESSOR T. NÖLDEKE.

NOTE.—The Parts will be issued in steady succession, and it is hoped that the publication will be completed early next year. The price (in parts) will not exceed £2. A detailed Prospectus, with SPECIMEN PAGE, will be sent by the Publishers free on application.

EDINBURGH: T. &amp; T. CLARK, 38, GEORGE STREET.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT &amp; Co., Limited.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,*ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON
New Edition, pp. 324, cloth, 1s., post free.

HOMŒOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By Drs. H. and W. ERSS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases.
London: JAMES ERSS & Co. (Ld.), 43, Threadneedle Street, and 179, Piccadilly.

TO AUTHORS AND EDITORS.*NORTHERN NEWSPAPER*KENDAL. SYNDICATE,

JUST PUBLISHED.

With 6 Illustrations, royal 8vo, 5s. net.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD:

Proceedings and Addresses on the Occasion of the Opening of the College Buildings and Dedication of the Chapel, October 18, 19, 1893.

Lond<sup>n</sup>

MANS, GREEN &amp; Co.

Supplies high-class short and serial fiction; bright sketches; articles on general subjects.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S
NEW BOOKS.

Ready immediately at all Libraries and Booksellers.

POLAR GLEAMS.

An Account of a Voyage in the Yacht, "Blencathra," through the Kara Sea to the Yenesei River.

BY HELEN PEELE.

With a Preface by the MARQUESS of DUFFERIN and A.V.A.
And Contributions by Captain JOSEPH WILGINS and FREDERICK G. JACKSON.

With numerous Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

Ready this day at all Booksellers.

NEW EDITION OF MR. MILNER'S IMPORTANT WORK.

ENGLAND in EGYPT. By Alfred MILNER, formerly Under-Secretary for Finance in Egypt. New and Cheaper Edition, with an additional Prefatory Chapter on Egypt in 1891. Large crown, 8vo, with Map, cloth 7s. 6d.

A NEW STORY OF IRISH LIFE.

MISTHER O'RYAN: An Incident in the History of a Nation. By EDWARD McNULTY. Small 8vo, elegantly bound, 3s. 6d.
[Uniform with "Stephen Remark."

Sixteenth Thousand now Ready.

STEPHEN REMARK: A Story of Society and Religion. By the Hon. and Rev. JAMES ADDERLEY. Small 8vo, paper, 1s.; elegantly bound 3s. 6d.

Parts I.—IV. now ready.

WILD FLOWERS in ART and NATURE. An entirely new and beautifully illustrated Work. By J. C. L. SPARKS, Principal of the National Art Training School, South Kensington; and F. W. BURIDGE, M.A., Curator of the University Botanical Gardens, Dublin. In Six Parts. 2s. 6d. each.

"The illustrations are really beautiful. They are of the natural size, excellently grouped, and the colour printing is exceptionally good."—Guardian.
"The letterpress is excellent and the drawings are admirable."—Black and White.

EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

A NEW FRENCH TEXT BOOK edited by Mr. BOJELLE.

LE MILLION DU PERE RACLOT By EMILE RICHEDOUROU. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

A FIRST FRENCH COURSE. By James BOJELLE B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Officier d'Académie, Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

A FIRST FRENCH READER and EXERCISE BOOK. By W. J. GREENSTREET, M.A., Head Master of the Marlborough School, Stroud. With Vocabularies. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

BALZAC.—Une TENEBREUSE AFFAIRE. Edited by JAMES BOJELLE. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

STAHL.—MAROUSSIA. Edited by James BOJELLE. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

HUGO.—QUATRE-VINGT-TREIZE. Edited by JAMES BOJELLE. 2s. 6d. net.

DUMAS.—MONTE CRISTO. Edited by FRANCIS TAYLER, M.A. 2s. 6d. net.

GREVILLE.—PERDUE. Edited by James BOJELLE. 2s. 6d. net.

DUMAS.—Les TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES. Edited by Prof. BUMICHRAST. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

FRENCH REVOLUTION READINGS. Edited by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., and C. M. DIX, M.A. Square 8vo, cloth, 2s. net.

MODERN FRENCH READINGS. Edited by A. J. SMITH, M.A. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

WORKS By DR. WORMELL.

THE MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC. By Dr. WORMELL, Headmaster of the Central Foundation Schools of London. Large crown, 8vo. Complete Work, 3s. 6d.; with Answers, 4s. Parts I. and II. separately, 2s. each; Answers only, 1s.

TEXT-BOOK OF MECHANICS. Specially adapted for the Science and Art Department and other Examinations. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. net. A Volume of SOLUTIONS for Teachers and Private Students, 2s. net.

LECTURES on SOUND, HEAT, and LIGHT. Popular Courses of Instruction for Junior Students and Evening Classes. Each in one vol., with numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net each.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE ON FOURIER'S SERIES, and SPHERICAL, CYLINDRICAL, and ELIPSOIDAL HARMONICS. With Applications to Problems in Mathematical Physics. By W. E. BYERLY, Ph.D., Professor of Mathematics in Harvard University. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

LONDON:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.
Publisher to the India Office.

The only Full and Adequate Fine Art Representation of the Royal Academy.

Ready Next Week, Part I., price 1s., of

ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES, 1894.

To be completed in Five Parts, 1s. each, or 1 vol., price 7s. 6d.

This unique Work embraces the following, amongst other important characteristics:—

I. The PICTURES are produced SUFFICIENTLY LARGE to give an admirable idea of the originals.

II. The PICTURES are reproduced with such care as to ensure PERFECT IMPRESSIONS.

III. It will contain some IMPORTANT ACADEMY PICTURES, which will appear EXCLUSIVELY in this publication.

IV. NOTES of an explanatory character will be issued in the Concluding Part.

N.B.—Orders should at once be given, as the Work has each year been out of print within a few days of publication, and it will not be reprinted.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.50, THE COTTON KING. Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Cartwright, A. Williams, E. O'Neill, Herbert Fleming; Mesdames Alma Stanley, Hall Caine, Dion Boucicault, and Miss Marion Terry.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, FROU-FROU. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, H. R. Irving, Will Dennis, Crawley, &c.; Miss Vane, Miss Marie Linden, Miss Radclyffe, Miss O'Brian, Miss M. Butler, and Miss Winifred Emery.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Merrick, Clayton, Nina Boucicault. Preceded, at 8, by IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, O. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, M. Marsden, and Miss May Yohé. At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Haye, W. Passmore, Scott-Fisher, Gridley, S. Russell, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, JAUNTY JANE SHORE. Messrs. Harry Paulton, Edward Lewis, Fred Emney, Arthur Nelstone, Alfred P. Phillips, Chas. Lovell; Mesdames Grace Huntley, Emmeline Orford, Florence Daly, Ada Dorée, Carrie Coote, Hilda Hanbury, Millie Marion, Nellie and Maggie Bowman, and Miss Alice Atherton.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, OO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Rubie Temple, and Letty Lind; Messrs. Harry Grattan, George Crossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, Sidney Howard, Frederick Rosse, and John L. Shine.

365 SHAVES

For 6d.

A STICK OF VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP IS SAID TO LAST A YEAR.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, and 2/6.
VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/-.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

Notice.—The First Article on the Royal Academy by M. H. Spielmann, with 8 Studies by Sir Frederic Leighton, Bart., P.R.A., appears in

MAGAZINE OF ART

For MAY, price 1s., which contains—

"THE FAN." By ALBERT MOORE. Photogravure.

"GREAT YARMOUTH." Original Etching by PERCY ROBERTSON, A.R.P.E.

PRIVATE PICTURE COLLECTIONS IN GLASGOW and WEST of SCOTLAND.—MR.

ANDREW MAXWELL'S COLLECTION. By ROBERT WALKER. With 7 Illustrations.

EMMANUEL HOSPITAL, WESTMINSTER. By the Rev. W. J. LOTTIE. With Three Illustrations.

"LITTLE ROUBILLAC" In Two Parts. By AUSTIN DOBSON. With Three Illustrations.

RECENT ILLUSTRATED VOLUMES. With Four Illustrations.

THE AUTHENTIC PORTRAITS of ROBERT BURNS: a Sketch. By the late J. M.

GRAY, F.S.A. Scot. With Nine Illustrations.

AVE MARIA in ROME. Poem by Miss MATHILDE BLIND. With Three Illustrations by JOHN FULLEYLOVE, R.I.

WILD NATURE in LONDON: as Seen by an Animal Painter. With Five Illustrations.

OUR ILLUSTRATED NOTE-BOOK. With Seven Illustrations.

THE CHRONICLE of ART: Art in April.

THE FREE REVIEW: A MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Edited by JOHN M. ROBERTSON.

CONTENTS.

PROFESSOR ROBERTSON SMITH: a Problem. By SCOTTLUS.
THE SHADOW of the TUDOR LEGEND. By S. BARBARA BOOTH.
THE CRY of the CURATES. By C. N. BARNHAM.
THE USEFULNESS of PROFIT-SHARING. By LEONOLD KATSCHER.
MARRIAGE in EAST LONDON. By W. F. DUNTON.
MORAL LUNATICS. By A. L. LEE.
"INTIMATIONS of IMMORTALITY." By W. KNOX JOHNSON.
THE RIGHT to LABOUR. By J. T. BLANCHARD.
THE FUTURE of CHRISTIANITY in INDIA. By A NATIVE OF INDIA.
THE MORALITY of a PEOPLE. By ARTHUR LYNCH.
London: SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co., Paternoster Square, E.C.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes)
at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

EPPS'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

A thin beverage of full flavour, now with many beneficially taking the place of tea. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting
the system.—Sold in Packets and Tins, by Grocers, labelled
"JAMES EPPS & Co., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

THE ROYAL ENGLISH DICTIONARY AND WORD TREASURY.

By THOMAS T. MACLAGAN, M.A.,
Of the Royal High School and the Heriot-Watt College, Edinburgh.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The Dictionary consists of 714 pages, printed in a clear, distinctive type.

The Derivation or Source of each word is given,
and the pronunciation shown.

The Definitions and Meanings are stated in simple terms, and following the meaning is a List of SIMILAR or SYNONYMOUS WORDS—a specially useful feature and literary help, which will commend itself to all users of a dictionary, not only materially assisting to a clear understanding of the word sought, but providing a choice of alternative words, from which the most appropriate for any purpose may be selected.

Besides the Dictionary proper there is an Appendix containing Words, Phrases, and Noteworthy Sayings, from the Latin, Greek, and Modern Languages;
Abbreviations in common use; Prefixes and Affixes;
and List of Geographical Roots, with Meanings.

"One of the best of the smaller dictionaries that we have seen."—Westminster Gazette.

"Mr. MacLagan merits high praise for his work, and has given good grounds for entrusting his name among scholarly British lexicographers."—Educational News.

Post 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

T. NELSON & SONS, 35, PATERNOSTER ROW,
LONDON, E.C.
PARKSIDE, EDINBURGH; and NEW YORK.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer,
Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PERCENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT
repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S LIST.

Dedicated by special permission to Her Majesty the Queen.

MEMORIALS of OLD HAILEY-BURY COLLEGE. By the late BRAND SAPTE, Sir MONIER MONIER-WILLIAMS, FREDERICK CHARLES DANVERS, PERCY WIGRAM, Sir STEUART COLVIN BAYLEY, and many Contributors. Fcap. 4to, buckram, 21s. net.

A small Edition on Hand-made Paper, with Plates on Japanese Paper, 42s. net.

THE WHITEHALL SHAKE-SPEARE. Printed in Large Type on antique laid Paper. A readable and handy Volume. Vols. I., II., and III., already published. In buckram and in cloth, 5s.; in half-parchment, with gilt top, 6s.

The ORIGINAL INHABITANTS of INDIA. By Dr. GUSTAV OPPERT. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 20s.

SOME MEMORIES of BOOKS, AUTHORS, and EVENTS. By JAMES BERTRAM. Being Reminiscences of De Quincey, Scott, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

GOLD, SPORT, and COFFEE in MYSORE. By R. H. ELLIOTT, Author of "Experiences of a Planter." With a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.

The INDIAN EYE on ENGLISH LIFE. By B. M. MALABARI. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE RIVAL POWERS in CENTRAL ASIA. By JOSEF POPOWSKI. Translated by A. B. BRABANT and Edited by CHAS. E. D. BLACK. With a MAP of the PAMIRS and PART of AFGHANISTAN, measuring 25 inches by 18½ inches.

This Map has been specially compiled from the most recent data, and gives in a concise form a correct view of the situation in the Pamirs. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, Map in Pocket, 12s. 6d.

A MONOGRAPH on the COINS of the HINDU STATES of RAJPUTANA. By Surgeon-Capt. W. W. WEBB. With 12 Plates and a Map in Colours, showing the Mint Towns in Rajputana. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 16s. net.

VOL. V. OF CONSTABLE'S ORIENTAL MISCELLANY.

RAMBLES and RECOLLECTIONS of an INDIAN OFFICIAL. By Sir W. H. SLEEMAN. Edited by VINCENT ARTHUR SMITH, B.C.S. 2 vols, 12s. net.

THE ARTIST.

Edited by VISCOUNT MOUNTMORRES.

NEW AND ENLARGED SERIES.

SIXPENCE MONTHLY.

LONDON: A. CONSTABLE & CO.
14, PARLIAMENT STREET.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, New and Enlarged Edition (1072 pp.). with numerous Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, 9s., net.

JOHNSON'S GARDENER'S DICTIONARY.

A NEW EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED, AND CONSIDERABLY ENLARGED.

By C. H. WRIGHT, F.R.M.S., and D. DEWAR (Curator of the Glasgow Botanic Garden).

"We are glad to see the publishers of this valuable work again in the field with a new edition, thoroughly revised and considerably enlarged. It is without doubt one of the most reliable and important gardening dictionaries that has ever been published; in fact, as a dictionary and guide for gardeners, amateur or professional, its equal is not to be found in horticultural literature.... forms a marvellous digest of matters horticultural, and a standard work for the guidance of all interested in the art and science of Gardening. It is beautifully printed, and the style in which it is turned out is highly creditable to the eminent publishers."—The Horticultural Times.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

POUSHKIN'S PROSE TALES. The Captain's Daughter—Dobrovsky—The Queen of Spades—An Amateur Peasant Girl—The Shot—The Snowstorm—The Postmaster—The Coffin-maker—Kirdjali. Translated from the Russian by T. KEANE.

Now ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s., New and Completely Revised Edition of SCRIVENER'S PLAIN INTRODUCTION to the CRITICISM of the NEW TESTAMENT. For the Use of Biblical Students. Edited by the Rev. EDWARD MILLER, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College, Oxford. Illustrated with Portrait and numerous Lithographed Plates.

"This, the Fourth Edition of this Standard Work, while including much new matter left by the late Dr. SCRIVENER himself, has been largely rewritten and carefully edited by the Rev. EDWARD MILLER. In his editorial work Mr. MILLER has had the assistance of distinguished scholars who are leaders in their several departments."

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

EARLY AND LATE POEMS.

By C. J. RIETHMÜLLER.

"Musical, healthy in thought, elevated in tone."

Birmingham Gazette. "Some tuneful and graceful lyrics, which decidedly deserve not the burial 'under a miscellaneous mass of literature' of which the author speaks in the preface. 'Men of England' and 'The Parting of Comrades' are stirring songs, and 'Oblivion' is not less excellent in a very different style of sentiment."—Saturday Review.

"Such pieces as 'Artist and Statesman,' the many ballads, and the three closing poems, make one wish for more of these cheerful strains."—Liverpool Mercury.

NEW VOLUME OF THE ALDINE POETS.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THOMAS PARNELL. Edited, with Memoir and Notes, by GEORGE A. AITKEN. With Portrait.

THE SERIES NOW INCLUDES:

Blake. Edited by W. M. ROSSETTI.

Burns. Edited by G. A. AITKEN. 3 vols.

Butler. Edited by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. 2 vols.

Campbell. Edited by the Rev. A. W. HILL.

With Memoir by W. ALLINGHAM.

Chatterton. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SKEAT.

2 vols.

Chaucer. Edited by Dr. R. MORRIS. With

Memoir by Sir H. NICOLAS. 6 vols.

Churchill. Edited by JAMES HANNAY. 2 vols.

Coleridge. Edited T. ASHE. 2 vols.

Dryden. Edited by Rev. R. HOOPER. 5 vols.

Gray. Edited by J. BRADSHAW, LL.D.

Herbert. Edited by Rev. A. B. GROSBART.

Herrick. Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. 2 vols.

Keats. Edited by the late Lord HOUGHTON.

Milton. Edited by Dr. BRADSHAW. 3 vols.

Pope. Edited by G. R. DENNIS. With Memoir

by JOHN DENNIS. 3 vols.

Prior. Edited by R. B. JOHNSON. 2 vols.

Raleigh and Wotton and the Courtly Poets, from 1540 to 1650. Edited by Ven. Archdeacon

HANNAH, D.C.L.

Rogers. Edited by EDWARD BELL.

Scott. Edited by JOHN DENNIS. 5 vols.

Shelley. Edited by H. BUXTON FORMAN. 5 vols.

Spenser. Edited by J. PAYNE COLLIER. 5 vols.

Vaughan. Sacred Poems and Pious Ejaculations.

Edited by the Rev. J. LYTLE.

Wordsworth. Edited by PROF. DOWDEN. 7 vols.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

NOW READY.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each volume.

THE EPISTLES of ST. PAUL to the THESSALONIANS, GALATIANS, and ROMANS.

WITH NOTES AND DISSERTATIONS.

Including an Essay on the Interpretation of Scripture, originally published in "Essays and Reviews."

By the late B. JOWETT, M.A.,

Master of Balliol College, Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford.

Declarer in Theology in the University of Leyden.

Edited and Condensed by LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D.,

Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews.

This work was first published in 1855. A second and thoroughly Revised Edition appeared in 1859, and was rapidly exhausted, but the author did not reissue the work during his lifetime.

The present Edition is so divided that the text of the Epistles, together with the Notes and Introductions, forms the First Volume, whilst the Essays and Dissertations are contained in the Second Volume.

The Volumes can be purchased separately.

A NEW, ENLARGED, AND REVISED EDITION.
8vo, 18s.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S CLASSICAL DICTIONARY of MYTHOLOGY, BIOGRAPHY, and GEOGRAPHY. A New, Enlarged, and Revised Edition, with many New Plans and Illustrations. Edited by G. E. MARINDIN, M.A., formerly Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. With over 800 Illustrations.

BOOKS TO READ.

2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

LIFE and CORRESPONDENCE of ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY, late Dean of Westminster. By ROWLAND E. PROTHERO, M.A. [Third Edition.

8vo, 16s.

CORRESPONDENCE of MR. JOSEPH JEKYLL with his SISTER-IN-LAW, Lady GERTRUDE SLOANE STANLEY. Edited, with a Brief Memoir, by the Hon. ALGERNON BOURKE.

Crown 8vo, 21s.

THE PAMIRS. By the Earl of DUNMORE. 2 vols. With Maps and Illustrations. [Second Edition.

Medium 8vo, 18s.

ALONE with the HAIRY AINU. Travels in Yezo and the Kurile Islands. By A. H. SAVAGE LANDOR. Maps and Illustrations.

8vo, 12s.

A POLICY of FREE EXCHANGE. Essays by various Writers. Edited by THOMAS MACKAY, Editor of "A Plea for Liberty."

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE JACOBÆN POETS. By EDMUND GOSSE. Forming a Volume of "MURRAY'S UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS." Edited by Professor KNIGHT.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

MAY.—Sixpence.

1. NOTES OF RECENT EXPOSITION—THE EDITOR.
2. THE THEOLOGY of ISAIAH—Prof. A. B. DAVIDSON, D.D.
3. THE HEBREW LEGEND of CIVILISATION in the LIGHT of RECENT DISCOVERY—W. ST. CLAIR BOSCAWEN.
4. PROFESSOR W. ROBERTSON SMITH—Professor SALMOND.
5. HEBREW PROPHECY and MODERN CRITICISM—F. H. WOODS, LL.
6. KESWICK at HOME—Rev. CHAS. G. MOORE.
7. THE PARACLETE—Rev. JOHN ROBINSON, D.D.
8. THE GREAT TEXT COMMENTARY.
9. THE BOOKS of the MONTH.
10. INDEX to MODERN SERMONS.
11. SHORT EXPOSITORY PAPERS.

DARWINIANISM: WORKMEN and WORK. By J. HUTCHISON STIRLING, F.R.C.S. and LL.D. Edin. Post 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

"This book is undoubtedly the most trenchant criticism of Darwinianism that has yet appeared.... The book is a work of art." Prof. M. KENDRICK, in the Critical Review.

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 38, GEORGE STREET.
LONDON: SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

"A great study of a great man."—Leeds Mercury.

THE LIFE OF
JOHN CHURCHILL,
Duke of Marlborough,
To the Accession of Queen Anne.

By GENERAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

"This remarkable book—remarkable alike for its subject, its author, and their very felicitous association—will be eagerly sought by a multitude of readers. It cannot but add greatly to the literary reputation of Lord Wolseley."

The Times.

Notice.—THE TEMPLE

BAR MAGAZINE for MAY contains, among other articles of interest:—A BEGINNER. By RHODA BROUGHTON. Chaps. 13-14.—VOLTAIRE'S FAVOURITE MORALIST.—A LEGEND OF GRANADA.—THE LAST OF THE THRUSTONS.—HORACE WALPOLE.—RALPH INGLEFIELD'S REVENGE.—BY RIGHT OF WOMANHOOD.—AN INTERLOPER. By F. M. PEARD. Chaps. 13-16; &c.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

A NEW NOVEL BY MISS BROUGHTON. A BEGINNER.

By RHODA BROUGHTON,

Author of "Nancy," "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"There is a very large and growing public to whom a new novel by Miss Broughton is a distinct event, and to them 'A Beginner' will be no disappointment. We have passed from the old days of stupid, ignorant prejudice against a writer who had the audacity to be herself, to a new era of grateful recognition of an artist who never fails to provide us with that rarest of modern joys—entertainment."

Manchester Guardian.

NOW READY.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A work of rare charm and excellence; it is real literature and real life, too—of an out-of-the-way kind, but convincing, and consistent with the theatre of the events and its occupants. The very unusual power of the writer so deeply interests us in the catastrophe that we want to implore him to change it."

World.

NOW READY.

A NEW NOVEL by the AUTHOR of "THE MASTERS OF THE WORLD."

T H O R O U G H.

By MARY A. M. MARKS,

3 vols.

"A remarkable book. Apart from its historical value, it abounds in quaint touches of character, humour, and shrewdness, and in exquisite bits of Irish landscape."

Scottish Leader.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER OF the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON,

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"One of the best stories of Indian life we have ever read. The frequent battles and skirmishes are vividly described, love interest is not wanting, and the dénouement is powerful and pathetic."

Daily Chronicle.

"The interest of the story increases as one proceeds, and in several of the more exciting chapters it is maintained at a high state of tension."

Literary World.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE.

By M. DEANE.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"The book is most admirably written. The style has the ease and grace which comes of care and thought. The author has placed a fascinating personality in the thick of an interesting period."

Daily Chronicle.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

RECTORIAL ADDRESSES

NOW READY.

DELIVERED AT THE

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

1863-1893,

Sir William Stirling-Maxwell to the
Marquis of Bute.

Edited, with an Introduction,

By WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.,

Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of St. Andrews.

Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

"The volume should command an appreciative welcome from a far larger circle of readers than that represented by the graduates and students of St. Andrews."

The Times.

"The volume, in fact, is a memorial of what St. Andrews has done for the cause of education in the North, and a singularly interesting epitome of the views on the same subject of many clear and courageous minds."

Daily Telegraph.

"This is a volume of very deep and very varied interest."

Freeman's Journal.

"This is a volume that will be treasured by alumni of St. Andrews whereas the fates may have borne them. It will revive sunny memories of days departed, and vividly recall scenes that time has obscured but not obliterated."

Dundee Advertiser.

"The volume is both valuable and attractive, and it is got up in a style worthy of the 'City of the Scarlet Gown,' of which it is meant to be a memorial."

Scotsman.

"Besides being of special interest to all whose student days are recalled by them, appeal more generally to those who wish to understand the aims and ideals of our Scottish universities during the latter half of the nineteenth century."

Glasgow Herald.

"Materials so brilliant required the support of no editorial sponsor. The value of the book is, however, increased by the interesting introduction by Professor Knight."

Aberdeen Free Press.

NOW READY.

SANTA TERESA:

Being some Account of her Life and Times,
together with some pages from the
History of the last great Reform in
the Religious Orders.

By GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.

In 2 vols.

Illustrated with Two Autogravure Frontispieces.

Demy 8vo, price 32s.

"She has not merely studied much original and previously inaccessible material for the life and times of Saint Teresa, but is also specially qualified for the work she has undertaken by her intimate acquaintance with the country and countrymen of the saint. She has patiently and not un-constructively examined the difficult psychological question of Teresa's mysticism, and her study of the rise of the Discalced Carmelite Order may be acknowledged to throw an interesting light on the general history of the period."

Times.

"A truly noble work, written with such profound knowledge and understanding sympathy that the book has spirit and vitality which no merely graphic skill could impart to it."

World.

"The work is of great and enduring interest."

Aberdeen Free Press.

"No one can take up the book without quickly perceiving that it is written with care as well as with enthusiasm."

Leeds Mercury.

"A notable biography of a remarkable character. It is impossible to withhold admiration for the zeal and devotion of Teresa di Cepeda as depicted in the glowing pages of Mrs. Cunningham Graham."

Dundee Advertiser.

"It must be admitted that the authoress of the present chronicle has completed her labours, from her own point of view, with scientific thoroughness and a consistently cultivated skill."

Daily Telegraph.

"By the power of sympathy and of patient and self-sacrificing labour Mrs. Cunningham Graham may be said to have performed a miracle as remarkable as any attributed to Teresa the nun: she has painted a saint who is also a living and breathing woman."

Scotsman.

"Exceedingly well written, very picturesque, complete, accurate, sincere, enthusiastic, and, above all, extremely readable."

Fall Mail Gazette.

"The secret hiring of houses, the surreptitious midnight entries of two or three faithful nuns or friars, the consecrations by stealth of these make-shift convents in town after town, together with the fertility of resource displayed by their foundresses in keeping them out of the clutches of this or that outraged authority—all this fills up hundreds of pages of almost exciting, and certainly profoundly interesting, history. The difficulties, triumphs, and death of the saint, and her subsequent canonisation, are subjects exhaustively and well depicted. Such honest labour as the biographer has devoted to her elaborate monograph deserves the frankest recognition. Her glimpses of sixteenth-century life in Spain are vivid and fascinating."

St. James's Gazette.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI

AND THE

PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT

Viewed in Relation to the Problems, Tendencies, and Purposes of Modern English Art.

By Mrs. J. W. WOOD.

With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings.
8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."

Times.

"A notable feature of the book is its wealth of illustration in the shape of reproductions (in tint) of Rossetti masterpieces."

Globe.

"The best book yet written on Rossetti and the pre-Raphaelites."

Daily News.

The book contains some unpublished reminiscences of Rossetti's student days and career in art, and describes the founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood and its long conflict with academic traditions.

AMONG THE MOORS

Sketches of Oriental Life.

By G. MONTBARD,

Author of "In Egypt," &c.

Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

".....What he saw in Morocco gave rich material in the way of incident and colouring both for pencil and pen."

Times.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."

Scotsman.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

SARAH: a Survival.

By SYDNEY CHRISTIAN,

Author of "Lydia."

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

The STORY of MY TWO WIVES

By ONE of THEIR HUSBANDS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MAY NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

A CORNER in a MARKET. Painted by Jules Manner. PHILIP GILBERT HAMKROK. (Frontispiece.)

SOME EPISODES OF MOUNTAINEERING, by a CASUAL AMATEUR. EDWIN LORD WEEKS. Illustrations by the Author.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chapters XXX-XXXIV. GEORGE W. CARLE. (Begun in January Number—to be continued.)

THE PROVINCIALS: Sketches of American Types. OCTAVE THAËT. Illustrated.

A POUND OF CURE: A Story of Monte Carlo. Chapters V-VI. WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP. (To be concluded in June.)

THE AMERICAN CONGO. JOHN G. BOURKE, Captain U.S.A. Illustrations from Drawings made in the Rio Grande region by Gilbert Gaul.

WOMANLINESS as a PROFESSION. ALINE GORREN. APOFT. CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF FRANKLIN. PAUL LEICESTER FORD. Illustration from a recently discovered terra-cotta medallion.

WORKING-GIRLS' CLUBS. CLARA SIDNEY DARTDOCK. Illustrated. THAT GOOD MAY COME. EDITH WHARTON.

TWO SONNETS: a Talking Race—to One who Sleeps. EDITH M. THOMAS. CLIMBING FOR WHITE GOATS. GEORGE BIRD GUINNELL. Illustrated. THE ETHICS OF DEMOCRACY.—Liberty. F. J. STIMSON. THE POINT OF VIEW.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1894.

No. 1148, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Marcella. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. In 3 vols. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THAT Marcella is a good novel, and a very much better novel than Robert Elsmere or David Grieve, would seem to be the unanimous verdict of its readers. It may be not amiss to consider the reasons of this clear superiority to its predecessors.

Mrs. Humphry Ward, in a quaint preface to David Grieve, defended with great energy her choice of theme and treatment in that book, and in Robert Elsmere. Undoubtedly, fiction in prose has been successfully written with so infinite a variety of aims and ideals, written so lightly and loosely, so sternly and strictly, so waywardly and airily, so straightforwardly and precisely, that it is impossible to say what is or is not a novel: what a novel may or may not contain. But one thing is certain. If a novel be fantastic, capricious, a curious combination of humour and philosophy, and wisdom and wit, constantly digressing and divagating, a thing of whims and fancies: why, if the writer be a writer of genius, he may discuss the differential calculus or Home Rule, death duties or the North Pole, at any point in his narrative. But if a writer sets out with certain strong convictions concerning matters in which the truth, whatever it be, is a question of spiritual life and death to the majority of civilised men: matters, too, intimately connected with scholarship and learning of many kinds: then, a fair treatment of those matters in a novel is impossible. A man's loss of faith in traditional Christianity is a possible theme for a novelist, if minute detail, points of critical scholarship, be avoided, and the tragedy, or tragi-comedy, be presented with the strong and human features of its spiritual drama. But some readers of Robert Elsmere were perpetually leaving their chairs, to consult their books: "Yes! but So-and-so has answered that in his first chapter." "That view is shaken by the discovery of such-and-such a document." "They are beginning to question it in Germany." "Perhaps so, but even the Vatican Decrees do not demand that." "Where did I put the last number of the Something-or-other?" Now, few readers care to read novels under those conditions. Imagine a novel turning upon a scholar's change of view about the Homeric problem, written by an ardent advocate of the "advanced" view: imagine the scholarly reader exclaiming, "Very likely, but Wilamowitz-Moellendorf is not infallible," and "Wolf would not maintain that now." It would have been possible to let the reader understand, that critical studies in history had destroyed Elsmere's old faith, without any unfair or inartistic treatment of the matter; but Mrs. Ward was not content with that. She introduced definite examples of the historical difficulties, in a way necessarily superficial, and therefore unfair. It would have been at once fairer and more artistic, more reverent and more scholarly, to have pre-faced the story by a reasoned and elaborate essay upon the question. As it is, the treatment hurts the feelings of orthodox Christians, and must irritate those of scholars, orthodox or not. A second blemish was the description of the orthodox Christians. Consumptive, emaciated, hectic, wasted, unearthly, gaunt, worn, thin, starving, ascetic, mystical, passionate, vehement, agonized, ardent, and uncritical: these were the adjectives. Their eyes were dreamy and bright, their hands long and thin, their voices had a vibrating intensity. They were often most loveable, and had a magnetic charm of personality. The intellect was a snare to them, and they fled from the learning of Germany with a Vade Satana! Newcome, the High Church vicar, "had the saint's wasted unearthly look, the ascetic's brow high and narrow"; when he appealed to Elsmere, it was with "a hurricane of words hot from his inmost being." Wishart, the young Liberal Catholic convert, was "a pale, small, hectic creature, possessed of that restless energy of mind which often goes with the heightened temperature of consumption." He poured forth "a stream of argument and denunciation which had probably lain lava-hot at the heart of the young convert for years." Ancrum was a valetudinarian, sinking out of sheer exhaustion into the arms of Rome. Catherine Elsmere and Dora Lomax were womanly and devout and strong, but with something of a mulish obstinacy in their religion. It was always a religion of passionate dreams passionately believed. Mrs. Ward's orthodox Christians were amusing to her orthodox readers; but as representatives of orthodoxy, they seemed somewhat inadequate caricatures.

Marcella has none of these defects, or of defects like them; no political economist, no social reformer, will impatiently put the book down to confute its reasonings out of Mill or Marx. No class of politicians, or of social theorists, is represented by obviously unfair examples: no one is intolerably and divinely right, no one pathetically and stubbornly wrong. No reader can say that whole chapters should have been cast into an independent essay or pamphlet. Yet the story is no less ardent and earnest than its predecessors: like them, it deals with matters of immense importance, matters keenly debatable and extremely difficult; like them, it is full of human passion and spiritual trial, full of conflict and love and death. Unlike them, it is a good novel: they were but novels with good things plentiful in them: this novel is a satisfying whole. It is largely planned, some readers may think too largely and elaborately. Even so, the workmanship may be held atonement enough for the elaboration. Mrs. Ward is not of those fashionable writers whose agitation over their psychology makes them ignore their grammar. There is an occasional excess of phrase, overwrought expressions, and an encumbering weight of words; but never any clumsy carelessness, no huddled jumble of sentences, unrhythmical and disproportioned. Of all the general impressions made upon the reader by Mrs. Ward's book, the strongest impression is that here is very careful work. Perhaps no impression is less commonly left by modern writers. Mrs. Ward's novels are written with a very vigilant eye to demonstrating the necessity of "conduct," of a resolute morality, of a care for the things of the spirit; but what human, what delightful worldliness, what a sense of living forces, the writer brings to her task! The background, environment, atmosphere, whatever be the right word, are admirable in their reality and truth. "Society," the "masses," the "landed class," the "political world," the "old families," the "new generation," the "labour movement," Mrs. Ward may depict them rightly or wrongly, but her portraiture is enchantingly alive. M. Jusserand, the latest writer upon Langland and "Piers Plowman," dwells upon Langland's feeling for crowds of men, the miscellaneous and moving multitudes, the variegation of life, its human stir, but with the varieties distinctly shown:

"Langland nous fournit ainsi ce qu'on ne trouve chez aucun de ses contemporains: des foules, des groupes, des classes, vivants et individualisés: classe marchande, monde religieuse, Communes d'Angleterre."

Mrs. Ward's books are masterly work, seriously to be considered, comfortably to be enjoyed; the abominable amateur of cleverness has had no hand in them. One can fancy Dr. Johnson rolling out sonorous condemnation of certain monstrously fashionable novels of to-day, somewhat in this manner: "Madam, you have not atoned for the tedium of your narration by the novelty of your morals, nor for the disorder of your style by the indecorum of your sentiments." But though we may dislike Mrs. Ward's stories, we cannot be disrespectful nor contemptuous towards them. Even the vitriolic and vivacious exquisites of criticism, who flout the "earnest" novel as only fit for "Brixton parlours," cannot flout away the honourable excellence of Marcella.

As in its predecessors, so in Marcella, the burden of the story is the progress of some strenuous soul towards reason, patience, self-discipline: a regulated and well-grounded ardour, as Mrs. Ward comprehends and realises them. Difficulty! that is the characteristic word: the recognition of complexities in life: an ordeal never ended, always to be endured: a testing and a purifying of fine gold in the fire. There is a moral collision of two fine natures, with a shock rending the hearts of both: on one side, clear-eyed and wise patience, strong to stand firm, in spite of passion persuading, not ignobly, the contrary course; on the other side, a vehement spirit of protest, revolt, impatient conviction, born of a not ignoble intolerance of a sad wisdom, just, and proof against the folly of an emotion, unjust in its very generosity. On one side Aldous Raeburn, on the other Marcella Boyce; common to both, a sense of social disorder, sorrow, trouble. Aldous has the "strength to sit still," the power to serve, if need be, while he "stands and waits": a depth of moral purpose, a depth of mental courage, a depth of emotional sincerity. Marcella has the storm and stress of youth, inexperience, personal ambition, and headlong sympathy. Both have family pride: Aldous in its finer form of real "nobility," implying responsibility; Marcella, in the more sentimental form, picturesque and vivid, less assured and unassertive. Her father's conduct in earlier life had outcast him from his equals: she had been brought up apart from her parents, a prey to her childish cravings for sympathy, full of nervous passion, impressionable and restless and expectant. She falls in with "Venturist" socialism in her London youth, with an exciting Bohemianism of thought and feeling: her beauty, ardour, pride, give her visions of becoming a Saint Teresa, a Joan of Arc, to "the social movement," the cause of the poor and the oppressed. Her father's succession to the old place in the country brings her front to front with village life, as a field for her half-unconscious patronage and wholly genuine commiseration. Aldous Raeburn, heir to a great estate and title, living hard by with his grandfather, falls in love with her, discerning her better than she knows herself. And at this point begins the active drama of the book, which we will not attempt to tell. It is enough to say that Aldous and Marcella are parted by the means that joined them, their common concentration upon social difficulties. As she was passionately prejudiced by her personal feelings of compassion in the matter that separated them, so also her love for him was at heart a yielding to personal ambition. At the end, great suffering, a quickening of her conscience and deepening of her mind, a purgation in manifold and multifarious trials of life, bring her back to him. She had passed through the fires.

A number of admirable characters assist in the drama. The most memorable is Harry Wharton, "gentleman labour leader," young and able, and all that the part seems to demand. His character is one of the most masterly and natural in recent fiction. Honestly a champion of the poor; intellectually and emotionally a social reformer of "advanced and progressive" views; winning and buoyant, a notable personality, he sells his labour journal to a syndicate of capitalists at the crisis of a great strike which he has fostered. He sells it to relieve his personal necessities, largely due to gambling debts incurred at a very aristocratic and retiring haunt. He is a familiar figure at great gatherings of "society," a favourite with great Tory dames and magnates of all kinds. He wins Marcella to his side, by maintaining with equal fervour and far greater knowledge her policy of "thorough." The discovery of his conduct, no surprise to Aldous and others, acquaintances of his early youth, was among her severest wounds: she had almost loved him. Seldom has a novelist portrayed with finer truth the divorce between intellect and conscience, between sentimental public sympathies and cynical private selfishness. A divorce: yet the elements and various strains so subtly intermix and overlap that the character is always easy, unforced, persuasive. The expositor of "Hohenstiel-Schwangau" would have enjoyed the exposure of Harry Wharton. Edward Hallin is less masterly, because he is the whitest of white souls: the scholar-priest of social reform, neither scholar nor priest by profession, but very much of both in his life. He is the idealist with a grasp of facts: the sternest of believers in the strength of justice, truth, complete and absolute honesty. The Cambridge friend of Aldous, he inspired Aldous with his spirit, the spirit that never compromises with half lies and expedient immoralities, and the "necessary" insincerities of public life. A little more insistence upon his virtues, and he would have been a tedious saint, an Aristides: as it is, he is pleasant, and human, and pathetic. He stands over against Wharton, as an influence upon Marcella; and he is throughout, by his influence, the better and guardian angel of her and Aldous, in their love. Mrs. Boyce, Marcella's mother, is an impressive figure; whether she be an acceptable figure or not, is less obvious. Her husband's disgrace killed her pride in him, and her joy in existence: she lived apart, unapproachable, but not repellent. She lived in her past, she loved Dante, she was no cynic; but she was a quietly embittered spectator of the life about her, a little ironical and very loveable, whilst neither wanting nor accepting any love but that of her irritable and no longer brilliant husband. Aldous' grandfather, Lord Maxwell, is as stately an old noble of a type familiar both in literature and in life, as his sister is a narrow and dignified lady, unable to comprehend "modern notions." The labour leaders, the "Venturist" theorists, all the examples of rugged force, or democratic culture, or self-educated enthusiasm, or business-like energy, devoted in various ways to the solution of "the social problem," are happily drawn; they are neither idealised, nor caricatured, nor yet presented with indifference. They help to illustrate the complexity of our tangled life, the characters and natures of the powers at work in it: the necessity of the work, the partiality and imperfection of all methods, apart from honesty and knowledge and faith. The book seems to suggest that the co-operation of the highest qualities of all classes can alone do any good: to suggest, for the book, though intensely moral, is not didactic. In the play of life upon life, the personal struggles of men and women, with their humour and gravity, hope and fear, sorrow and joy, all very human and alive, Marcella succeeds and satisfies. It has an abundant brilliance of scenes, either passionate or amusing. Here is a rendering of modern life, crowded and moving, in which high tragedy and excellent comedy take their parts, each with a bearing upon the other, that is true to life and true to art.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

History of the Philosophy of History: Historical Philosophy in France and French Belgium and Switzerland. By Robert Flint. (Blackwoods.)

TWENTY years ago Prof. Flint published a volume on the history of the philosophy of history in France and Germany, intending to follow it up by another dealing with the same study as cultivated in Italy and England. The assumption of other duties interfered with the completion of his plan as at first projected, and at the same time gave him an opportunity for re-considering and greatly enlarging the original scheme. He now believes himself capable of making his work, "instead of simply a connected series of studies, a real and comprehensive history." When completed it will, apparently, extend to four volumes, and will form such a complete repertory of information on the subject of historiography as is to be found in no other language. For, be it observed, Prof. Flint gives us a great deal more than his title seems to promise. His present volume is by no means limited to a survey of the historical theories put forward in the French language. Nearly every French historian of any importance finds his labours acknowledged and reviewed with satisfactory fulness in its pages; and the introduction gives a copious account of historical literature in classical antiquity and the middle ages, during neither of which periods can a philosophy of history be said to have existed.

Some writers prefer to talk about a philosophy, others about a science of history. Prof. Flint, for his part, refuses to draw a sharp line of demarcation between the two, and claims the right to use both terms interchangeably. If they must be distinguished, he would assign to science "the task of ascertaining the course, plan, and laws of history itself"; to philosophy "that of tracing the relations of causation and affinity which connect history with other departments of existence and knowledge" (p. 21). But, so understood, the two methods, as he excellently observes, cannot profitably be pursued apart from one another. Special exception has been taken by Mr. Goldwin Smith to the idea of a science of history, on the ground that it is rendered nugatory by man's free will. Our author, although himself apparently a believer in free will, has no sympathy with the objection, and urges that "intelligent defenders of free agency do not oppose it to causation, but represent it as the highest type of causation" (p. 17). But is there not a certain ambiguity in this plea? The action is indeed caused by the volition, but the volition itself must be either uncaused or unfree; and if uncaused, it is surely not amenable to any scientific law except perhaps the theory of probabilities. One of the philosophers reviewed in this volume, M. Renouvier, being a strong believer in free-will, fully accepts its inevitable corollary, the contingency of history, and has illustrated it in an ingenious romance called Uchronie, the object of which is to show how, at a certain epoch, the whole subsequent course of events might have been radically altered by a different determination of the will. And since Prof. Flint assents to "all the fundamental principles and positions" of M. Renouvier's historical doctrine (p. 671), he can, to say the least of it, scarcely regard human history as a possible science in the same sense as, for example, geology. Thus the difference between him and Mr. Goldwin Smith is, after all, merely verbal.

The great majority of the systems analysed in this volume are little more than ambitious party pamphlets, in which history merely serves to verify the social or political theories of the writer. Bossuet leads the way with his famous Discours; the reforming or revolutionary philosophers of the eighteenth century follow suit on the opposite side; the Revolution calls forth a violent reaction, which finds its theorists in such men as De Maistre and De Bonald; juste milieu constitutionalists attempt to trim the balance between the two; the advent of democracy is proclaimed as the ultimate outcome of progress in tones of welcome by Michelet, and in tones of warning by De Tocqueville; the Socialists, aiming at a much more radical transformation of existing conditions, seek in the light of their ideal for a more complete reinterpretation of the past; finally the greatest of all modern French thinkers, Auguste Comte, unites in one vast synthesis all the conflicting tendencies of his time, and sketches an outline of universal history, which after fifty years may still be read with unabated interest, and which, I believe, will alone among such efforts survive as an immortal masterpiece of philosophical genius.

A theist, and, of course, much more a Scotch Presbyterian theist, must necessarily regard the founder of Positivism as fundamentally mistaken in his reading of history. All the more creditable is it to the candour of Prof. Flint, and, I may add, to the power of Auguste Comte, that the sketch of universal history contained in the fifth and sixth volumes of the Philosophie Positive should be here characterised as, in some respects, surpassing all previous attempts of the kind (p. 600). But we might wish that the leading features of the sketch had been reproduced with somewhat greater fulness of detail, even on the condition of allotting less space to the horde of mediocrities, with whose dreary deliverances this volume is encumbered. Not that the author can be accused of excessive indulgence as a reviewer. He justly regards "the notion, at present so prevalent, that all criticism ought to be sympathetic, and occupy itself chiefly in the discovery of merits or excuses, as a superficial conceit of a literary dilettanteism, itself the product of unbelief in truth and morality" (p. 684).

But there are some ineptitudes to which Prof. Flint pays an extravagant compliment by taking the trouble to refute them, some windbags that would be more fitly treated by a single prick of the pin than by repeated blows of the mallet, and some inflated counterfeits of speculation, like Victor Cousin's, for example, that have long ago collapsed of themselves. For these Prof. Flint has every severity but the severity of letting them alone. Some of the space occupied by the exposition and refutation of these ephemeral futilities might well have been spared for an examination of Renan's forecast of the future of humanity, for which we are referred to two of his own works, or for an account of Fustel de Coulanges' La Cité Antique, which is not even named, although the author is highly commended in a few lines of small print, or of M. Frédéric Passy's Formes des Gouvernements, which, with its author, is passed over in complete silence. It is true that the work last named has had to suffer from a great misfortune and a great fault. The misfortune was that it appeared on the eve of the Franco-German war; the fault that it demonstrated the impossibility of establishing a Republic in France. Nevertheless, M. Passy is a thinker whose mistakes—if he be mistaken—are more instructive than the correct judgments of lesser men speculating after the event.

Taine, whom posterity will probably count as, next to Auguste Comte, the greatest French philosopher of the nineteenth century, is rather ungraciously treated by Prof. Flint. Although entirely opposed to Spiritualism, the author of De l'Intelligence should not be counted among the Positivists, from whom he is at once differentiated by his scientific disinterestedness, his faith in the perfectibility of human knowledge, and his dislike to governmental interference. Nor is it true to say that Taine's Origines de la France Contemporaine "bears no traces of that historical theory" which is expounded in the historian's other works (p. 637). On the contrary, there could not be a better exemplification of that theory. The Revolution, its causes and its consequences, are handled throughout as a mechanical problem; and the celebrated characterisation of Napoleon is the most brilliant specimen extant of Taine's peculiar method. The three elements of "race," "medium," and "moment" are all there, and are combined with a master-hand to explain the career of the Corsican conqueror and legislator.

Still, after every deduction and exception that can be made, Prof. Flint's work remains a marvellous monument of learning, of candour, and of lucid penetrating criticism. If it contains nothing quite so brilliant as the famous epigram, "Bad German philosophies when they die go to Oxford," one recognises the same hand in such sarcasms as that "worse than Bossuet's idolising of Louis XIV. as a kind of god on earth is his imagining God to be a kind of Louis XIV. in heaven" (p. 227), in the designation of Comte's Politique as "an atheistical Popery, with himself for chief priest and sole prophet" (p. 581), and in the neatly antithetical statement that Comte "gave up what was true in the doctrine of Rousseau for what was false in that of De Maistre" (p. 591).

A few chronological errors, doubtless due to the printer, may be noted. The date of Mme. de Staël's birth is given as 1746 (p. 348) instead of 1766; the date of Benjamin Constant's death as 1837 (p. 350) instead of 1830; and the date of Augustin Thierry's death as 1826 (p. 353) instead of 1856.

ALFRED W. BENN.

"RULERS OF INDIA."—Sir Thomas Munro.
By John Bradshaw. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

OF the great men who at the commencement of this century laid broad and wide the foundations of our Indian empire, the subject of this biography has always exercised a peculiar fascination on those who, like myself, have spent a life in the revenue administration of the Madras Presidency, and who regard Munro as their special teacher and guide. For seven years I was in charge of Kurnool, the central portion of the Ceded Districts, and often has my camp been pitched near the well at Pattikonda, where the father of his people died; and especially in those Talooks of Bellary now attached to the Kurnool District have I had the opportunity of appreciating the reverential affection with which the Ryots still cherish the memory of their benefactor and friend. No one can have mixed much with the agricultural classes of India without acquiring an affection for their honesty, their simplicity, and their goodness of heart. And it was this sympathy, added to his complete knowledge of every detail of Indian administration, that made Munro the greatest ruler ever known in the Southern Presidency. He is popularly credited with having been the founder of the Ryotwar system of land revenue; but in this justice has hardly been done to Capt. Reid, under whom Munro worked as an assistant in the first settlement of the Baramahal. For it was by the untiring industry of both these men that the Ryotwar system was evolved and developed, which, after time had purged it of some passing errors, has proved itself the most perfect system ever devised by the wit of man for raising a fair revenue from land held by peasant proprietors.

When towards the close of the last century the servants of the Company, until that time employed in trade, were called upon to raise revenue from the districts ceded to them as the prize of war, they were probably in total ignorance as to the tenures on which the land was held by the agricultural classes, and were only aware that a portion of the produce was always paid with more or less willingness as the share of the government of the time. When the civilians were for the first time taken from the pursuits of trade, and appointed to develop a land revenue, it was therefore natural for them to resort to the easiest and worst methods of their predecessors under the ever-changing Native governments, and to obtain a revenue by farming out the villages to the highest bidders.

Reid and Munro, who were appointed to settle the Baramahal ceded by Tippoo in 1792, were, fortunately for Southern India, men of a different stamp; and they both possessed the genius essential for their duty, the genius of taking pains. In the course of seven years they lived on familiar terms with the cultivators, learned thoroughly their wants and capabilities, and by personal inquiry became acquainted with their true position. They found that these men had for generations owned the land they tilled, and were in fact the proprietors, subject only to the payment of the assessment imposed by successive governments. With the help of the Village Accountants, they made a survey of the villages field by field, and fixed in grain the proportion of the produce to be charged on each plot of land as an assessment in coin. And as they acted on a principle novel at the time, and not fully adopted for half a century by later administrators of the system, that each cultivator should be at liberty every year to throw up whatever land he wished to relinquish, it became necessary to have a yearly settlement in each village, not to settle what each peasant should pay for the land he held, but to settle what land he might wish to keep in his possession, and to free him from all liability for such land as he no longer wished to hold. This, briefly, is the Ryotwar system: not sprung from the brain of any enthusiastic admirers of peasant proprietary, but patiently worked out from the existing facts by men who willingly gave a life of labour to master the details of the duty submitted to them. When the Districts of Bellary and Cuddapah were ceded by the Nizam at the close of the Mahratta War, Munro was appointed to their civil charge, and again for seven years carried out in his new sphere the same continuous labours with the same successful result.

The exigencies of the Government, however, to a great extent checked that success; and it was not until some thirty years after his own death, that Munro's principles were effectively carried out in their integrity, and his Ryotwar system purged from the errors which so long vitiated its efficiency. There were two points which from the first were strenuously advocated by Munro—a moderate fixed money assessment on each field; and absolute liberty to each Ryot to cultivate as much land as he chose, and to throw up at the commencement of each year any field that it did not pay him to work. The settlement of the Ceded Districts was at first based on the pecuniary wants of the Government, and a reduction of one quarter of the assessment then fixed was openly stated by Munro as necessary for the welfare of the country. When, fifteen years later, he was Governor of Madras, he insisted on the reduction being carried out, which, in opposition to his original views, had been till then postponed. But such was the fear of loss of revenue felt by the local officers, that the reduction was in effect nullified by the Ryots being compelled to pay for waste—i.e., uncultivated land, to the extent of the reduction allowed. In 1820 Sir Thomas Munro issued orders to carry out the reduction; in 1824 he made a tour through the Ceded Districts, and discovered how those orders had been frustrated. The collectors of Cuddapah and Bellary were both removed from their posts, and Munro's original intentions as regards the amount of the fixed assessment were at last carried out. But it was years before the best points of his Ryotwar system were truly grasped, and it was not until thirty years after his death that they were in practical force throughout the Presidency.

The real test of a successful Ryotwar Settlement is that the land should be saleable, and in consequence full security for the Government revenue. When, in the year 1860, I was appointed to Kurnool, which was settled on a pure Ryotwar, I found that the native officials, their former illegal practices having been stopped by the Torture Commission, looked to the sale of the Ryots' pots and pans (they have little other personal property) for the collection of arrears. In those days I was young and confident, and informed them that I would allow no coercive process except the sale of the land. They smiled in derision, and thought that the new Dora would soon be brought to his senses by huge and uncollectable arrears, the greatest reproach to a collector as the result of inefficient management. The long list of evictions that went up week by week for the sanction of the Board of Revenue doubtless shocked its native officers; but the revelations of the Torture Commission had done away with the philanthropic folly which, by not permitting legal coercive process, had for years caused the land revenues to be collected by illegal coercion, and the requisite sanction was granted. As a fact, not a single case of actual eviction was ever required: when it came to paying their assessment or giving up their land, the Ryots preferred to pay, and to the astonishment of the Tahsildars the efficiency of the new system was proved by the entire absence of all arrears. Before I left the district in 1867, even the threat of an eviction became unnecessary. It would be impossible to find on the face of the earth a more contented and thriving body of peasant proprietors than were the Ryots of Kurnool in my time.

Mr. Bradshaw's volume of the "Rulers of India" has brought back to my mind my own veneration for its hero, and the happy memories of my own revenue work as a successor in his fields. Mr. Bradshaw became an inspector of schools in the Madras Presidency shortly before I left the service. The genius loci has inspired him with sufficient enthusiasm for his subject; and from his little book the general reader will be able to gather a fair conception of the character of a man whom his followers regard as the leading administrator of his time.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

The Exchequer Rolls of Scotland. XIV. (1513—1522). Edited by G. Burnett and A. J. G. Mackay. (Edinburgh.)

HARDLY sufficient attention, perhaps, is paid to the publication of the Scotch Exchequer Rolls. The reason may be that the Register House at Edinburgh does not seem to distribute them very liberally.

This volume is specially interesting, since it enables us to trace the events during the nine years that followed the battle of Flodden, and the over increasing influence of England and Scotland over each other. For the marriage of the Stuart king, who fell at Flodden, with Margaret Tudor, was almost as eventful a marriage as that of Ferdinand of Aragon with Isabella of Castille; and in both cases it took long ages to really unite the countries, notwithstanding the dynastic connexion. A Greek tragedian might have written the tragedy of the House of Stuart, as he did the tragedies of the doomed Houses of Thebes or Argos. For, with some great and some fascinating qualities, there was a want of tact and judgment that marred the career of nearly all these kings. Clarendon himself sums up against them:

"It was the unhappy fate and constitution of that dynasty that they trusted naturally the judgments of those who were as much inferior to them in understanding as they were in quality, before their own, which was very good; and even their natures, which disposed them to virtue and justice, to be prevailed upon and altered and corrupted by those who knew how to make use of some one infirmity that they discovered in them; and by complying with that, and cherishing it and serving it, they by degrees wrought upon the mass, and sacrificed all the other good inclinations to that single vice. They were too much inclined to like men at first sight, and did not love the conversation of men of many more years than themselves, and thought age not only troublesome but impertinent. They did not like to deny, and less to strangers than to their friends; not out of bounty or generosity, which was a flower that did never grow naturally in the heart of either of the families, that of Stuart or the other of Bourbon, but out of an unskilfulness and defect in the countenance: and when they prevailed with themselves to make some pause rather than to deny, importunity removed all resolution, which they knew neither how to shut out nor to defend themselves against, even when it was evident enough that they had much rather not consent; which often made that which would have looked like bounty lose all its grace and lustre."

It is true that in Scotland they had to deal with one of the most turbulent and dangerous aristocracies in Europe. It might almost be described as the settled policy of the nobles to get their kings killed off as soon as they had children, in order that during a long minority they might enjoy all the license of the feudal anarchy, which was their beau ideal of government. This volume therefore is naturally rather a history of the nobles than of the monarchy. It is a history of their quarrels, and especially those of the Hamiltons and Douglasses. The Hamiltons supported the French monarchy, while Angus made the last throw for the Douglasses in the game in which the Crown was the stake; so of the Humes, and other border families, "who laid about them at their wills and died." The Regent, the half-French Duke of Albany, tried to keep a little order, and gave office to a number of his French followers on whom he could rely, but some of them were murdered. Margaret Tudor had to speak French when they met, that Albany might understand her. The long English wars had naturally thrown the country into the hands of France, and Scotland was long a pawn on the French chessboard. Law, architecture, art, had all taken a French colouring; but in this volume we reach the turning-point between mediæval feudalism and the times we call modern. Whatever opinion we may form of Mary Queen of Scots, the main results of her policy were the loss of the chance which Catholicism had of regaining its power, and the severance of the old tie with France. The course of the history begins to turn towards England. But still this volume is mainly about the way in which the nobles get hold of the crown lands, and fortify their castles and houses, and control the adjacent burghs. The death-roll of Flodden, compiled by the editors, is the history of the great families; the widows of the chiefs who fell were as masterful as their husbands had been, there were many who represented Scot's Lady Buccleugh. The nobles and gentry also contribute the two authors of the period: Gavin Douglas, "who gave rude Scotland Virgil's page," and James Bellenden (he calls himself Ballantyne), who translated Livy, and Boece's Chronicles. James V., like his daughter Mary, was brought up on Livy, and history was deemed a necessary part of the education of those who were to govern. There was even a native printer, Walter Chapman; but the demand must have been small, and Scottish writers had to get their works printed at Paris, and, later on, at London. But the production of two such translations as those of Virgil and Livy before any similar translations appeared in England is most creditable to early Scotch scholarship, while England has little to boast of in the way of fine printing: her choicest books had to be printed at Paris. The writers, too, belong to the class of nobles or gentry, as in France; the time for plebeian authors was yet to be. We have not yet come in fact to a Scottish people; that people was the creation of John Knox. Our poet Cowper speaks strongly of the ingratitude of the moderns to the Reformers. The parish schools instituted by John Knox gave the Scottish people, hitherto one of the most backward of any, a distinct lead in Europe. What would Cowper have said if he had lived to see the revival of mediaevalism in the hands of Scott, who created a past that had never been a present, and even brought the Lowlanders to admire the dress of the Highland savages, whom their ancestors looked on as mere mountain wolves.

This volume does contain some notices of the burghs, and of the professions that were gradually making their way there, especially of the surgeons who sprang from the craft of barbers. The Royal College of Surgeons at Edinburgh possesses a charter granted by the Town Council in 1505, and ratified by James IV. in 1506, to their predecessors the Surgeon-barbers. It is several years earlier than the similar charter of Henry VIII. to the Surgeon-Barbers of London, the gift of which is commemorated in Holbein's portrait group.

The book is admirably edited by Dr. Mackay, who completed the work of the late George Burnett. The table of prices in the appendices is specially noteworthy; and there is an excellent index by Mr. R. Anderson, an index which does not disdain such entries as ale and barley, but beer does not yet occur. We hope we may, without offence to Scotland, claim both editors for Oxford, and their work as one of the excellent results of the Union between Scotland and England.

C. W. BOASE.

NEW NOVELS.

The Story of Margrèdel. By D. Storrar Meldrum. (Blackwoods.)

Dave's Sweetheart. By Mary Gaunt. In 2 vols. (Edward Arnold.)

In Cupid's College. By Mabel Hart. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Ending of my Day. By Rita. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Hero of the Pelican. By Percy de Lisle. (Digby, Long & Co.)

An Unsatisfactory Lover. By Mrs. Hungerford. (White.)

The Copperhead. By Harold Frederic. (Heinemann.)

Jim B. By F. T. Carew. (Methuen.)

The Teleporon. By W. H. Stacpoole. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Heavens! By Alois Vojtech Smilovsky. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

It has yet to be seen whether Mr. Meldrum is resourceful enough to write a novel of the ordinary length; but The Story of Margrèdel proves beyond all doubt that he can reproduce certain simple aspects of Scotch life with photographic accuracy, and—which is perhaps even more to the point—that he can mask a plot very skilfully. It may be almost heresy to speak thus of any writer who exhibits the lights and shadows of Scotch life as it was lived yesterday; but it is the simple truth that the central and most attractive character in this book is neither of the brothers Oliphant nor Margrèdel herself, but her uncle, the irascible Malbert, professor of languages. Whenever he appears on the scene, tragedy makes its appearance with him. One sees at once that his mission is to track down and destroy the coquin who has ruined his sister. The discovery of a clue to the seducer is very cleverly managed; and although one would naturally wish to have seen Dug Oliphant himself punished for his sin, it is quite in accordance with the creed that some years ago must have held sway in Kirkcaldy, that the son should suffer for the father's transgression. Self-restraint is the note of The Story of Margrèdel; so far as mere style is concerned, perhaps too much the note. Mr. Meldrum does not make quite enough of anything or of anybody—of the differences between the well-contrasted brothers Oliphant, of the hopeless love affair which makes Margrèdel after a fashion the avenger of her mother, even of the toddy and gossip of Kirkcaldy. When Mr. Meldrum "lets himself go," it will then be seen whether we really have secured in him a new master of humour and pathos.

Dave's Sweetheart is as grim and has as dismal an ending as any fin de siècle novel-reader could possibly wish, and then it is delightfully Australian. But there is a great deal of power in it: quite as much power as there is, for example, in the writings of Mr. Gilbert Parker and Mr. Rolf Boldrewood. The poor, infatuated woman who figures in it is as incapable of placing duty before passion as any Dodoesque matron in modern Society. So well does its author do his work, that one gets positively to hate the creature who can desert the loyal and kind Sergeant Sells for the selfish robber and murderer Dave Anderson. The duel between the two men also is admirably sustained. The closing scene in which the sergeant hunts down the man who has ruined his life, and yet is balked of personal vengeance by having to hand him over to the law, is painful, but artistically perfect.

In Cupid's College is insufferably long, and the story told in it is almost beneath contempt. But the writing is bright without being overwhelmingly smart, and, with perhaps one exception, the characters are very cleverly sketched. The best of these is—perhaps, of course—as a human being the most despicable. Marsden fills is, in the ordinary young lady's sense, the hero of the story—for does he not get engaged to the wrong girl and nevertheless marry the right one after all?—but Marsden père is emphatically the best drawn character. It would not be easy, indeed, to find in contemporary fiction a better example of a perfectly cold-hearted, shallow, and indolent man, whining at his luck in matrimony, shunning practical life, and a legitimate object of contempt to his family and all around him. There is a certain amount of eerie fascination about Ethel Carre, the Madonna-like girl, with her terrors and her imperfect mental endowment; but most readers will not be displeased that the place she almost secured in the life of Jim Marsden is ultimately given to one of these eminently sane Hope girls. "Bless you, Althea! you may be shy, but you aren't stiff, and you shall wear just whatever face you choose." This is the true note of In Cupid's College, and those portions which are inspired by it are thoroughly delightful. The rectory sort of talk, of which there is abundance, is also admirable.

The Ending of my Day differs from the novels turned out regularly by its author only in being longer and more tedious than the average. Belle Ffolliott, who here tells her own story as "a little devil," is indeed sinned against rather than a sinner. It is true that she is divorced before the end of the third volume is reached, and disappears from the scene as the unhappy wife of Sir Denis Dalrymple, not as the happy wife of Jack Trefusis. But she was quite innocent of anything worse than taking up with certain "fads" of the women's rights kind, and of being in the smart scandal-loving set of Lady St. Omer. In point of plot, therefore, The Ending of my Day is very weak. But, as the mouthpiece of the views on men, women, and things of such delectable folk as Lady St. Omer, and her friends at home and still more abroad, it will quite hold its own with work of the ordinary "Rita" class. Both themselves and their conversation are sufficiently naughty and nice.

The "good ship" Pelican, commanded by Captain Wilson, is, while lying in the harbour of Calcutta, hailed by "a gentleman of striking appearance, but somewhat shabbily attired, accompanied by half-a-dozen coolie porters, bearing between them a heavy iron-bound box and a couple of portmanteaux containing his personal effects." After some difficulty the stranger is allowed to become a passenger, and is distinguished from the others as a man of mystery. By and by, however, the Pelican is threatened by a pirate ship. The man of mystery then comes to the rescue, and by a contrivance of the infernal machine type gets rid of the pirates. As a consequence he is worshipped as a hero, especially by the writer of this story. The plot is interesting, and, whenever the peppery Major White and the undisclosed Fenian appear, the dialogue is lively and Marryattish. But the volume is too large; it ought to have been but half its size.

All that need be said of An Unsatisfactory Lover is that it is one of the best of Mrs. Hungerford's "pot-boilers," and that it is in every way characteristic. There is in it, of course, the natural, slightly hoydenish, Irish girl Terry (Torentia) O'More, who is impecunious (for a time), not specially careful in matters of dress, and rather partial to having more strings to her bow in the persons of lovers than one, but who, of course, succumbs to one if he is endowed with the adequate amount of masterfulness. Equally, of course, Mrs. Hungerford supplies this masterful lover in the person of an Englishman, who reminds one just a little of the second husband of Diana of the Crossways, although he is not blessed by nature with quite so much Anglo-Olympian serenity. On the whole, one may spend a half hour harmlessly enough over An Unsatisfactory Lover.

Mr. Harold Frederic has already shown his capacity to write fiction of the orthodox length; but he has done nothing better than what is contained in this collection of short stories dealing with the American Civil War, and particularly with the part played by the North in its course. These stories are all good, showing both American humour and American pathos at their best. The story which gives the title to the collection is the longest and also the best, at all events in the sense that the characters in it are the most elaborately drawn and the most skilfully contrasted. It may be questioned if anywhere in fiction has the cutting asunder of family ties, caused by the Civil War, been better illustrated than by the dispute between Abner Beech and his son Jeff. Happily the pathos of this quarrel is relieved by the comic amatory affair of Jeff and the daughter of Abner's political aversion, old Jee Hagadorn. The abiding charm of "The Copperhead" is, however, to be found in the fact that it presents a delightful picture of rural life and society during the War. It is not even in the smallest detail suggestive of strain or artificiality. The shorter stories give here and there the idea of artistic touching up for the sake of effect, but their brightness atones for all other deficiencies. "My Aunt Susan," the last in the collection, is an exquisite combination of not too pronounced Yankee character, humour, and pathos.

Jim B. is too obviously a "can-can" in modernity, with its sensuality, selfishness, suicide, slang, and Schopenhauer. Even the author confesses

"There is something exquisitely ridiculous in the idea of a man—young, well-dressed, with plenty of money, smoking a good cigar—getting into a state of excitement about religion in the Empire, especially when the ballet that happens to be running is 'exceptionally brilliant.'"

Being quite up to date, Jim B. is, of course, a tragedy from beginning to end. The luckless hero is perpetually getting into scrapes, partly because he has a troublesome conscience, and partly because he is always brooding on religious and theological difficulties. Finally he marries a shallow, selfish "Gaiety girl," who does not understand him, and has the fashionable craving for excitement. She falls a very easy prey to his relative Sir Henry Beverley, who takes her to supper and plies her with champagne and passionate embraces. Thereupon Jim B. dies. This is all as it should be. A strain of farcicality in some of the incidents and characters would seem to prove that its author is but a beginner. He has evidently considerable acquaintance with the ways of young London, and his writing is "not half bad."

The little volume by Mr. W. H. Stacpoole, which has been published by Mr. Arrow-smith, consists of stories of a kind that may be said to stand half way between "good" and "rattling good." Most of the situations are not unnatural; the bulk of the dialogue is not too artificially clever; and, as a rule, neither the humour nor the sensationalism is overdone, although perhaps in the last story Captain Barclay takes a trifle too much brandy by way of preparing to murder his prospective son-in-law. In a word, Mr. Stacpoole is no imitator, but writes simply and naturally and as his imagination dictates. Thus "Farewell" is an excellent story of a bogus marriage which turns out to be a real one; there is both excellent mystery and excellent misunderstanding in "Mr. Carton's Will"; and the character of the young woman in "Kate Seymour" is admirably drawn. "The Teleporon" itself is rather disappointing. The impecunious position of the hero is cleverly sketched in the first pages; but the device that is resorted to by way of extricating him from it is deficient in true humour, even although it smacks of Conan Doyleish ingenuity.

Heavens! deserved translation at the competent hands of Prof. Maurer, of Prague. It is a pleasant picture of (literally) Bohemian life. Loveable, impecunious, unselfish, Father Cvok is just such another as the Vicar of Wakefield. The heroine, too, is sister to Olivia. But she is actually seduced by her Squire Thornton; she has the good sense, too, to decline to marry him, and to prefer a worthy merchant, who is a glorified—a very much glorified—Jenkinson; while she places her child for the purposes of tuition in the hands of Father Cvok. Cvok's brother, parson Leddecky, and his snappish money-saving cook and housekeeper, Miss Regina, are delightful sketches. Altogether Heavens! is a model of simplicity. English novelists, please copy.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME BOOKS OF VERSE.

The Burdens of Belief, and Other Poems. By the Duke of Argyll. (John Murray.) The Duke of Argyll is distinguished in so many ways—as orator, statesman, man of science, man of letters—that he can well afford to forego the bays of the poet. But this volume shows that, if he had given to verse as zealous a regard as he has bestowed on the other occupations in which he has won distinction, he might have excelled in it also. The Muse is an exacting mistress. She reserves her best gifts for those who bring her their whole devotion. Among her favourites she permits no half-love, no divided homage. Outside this inner circle there is a larger one, and those who are privileged to be members of it pay an occasional tribute and receive a passing smile in return. It is pleasant to find the Duke of Argyll among the gentle spirits who compose this larger, but still select, company. A familiar figure in the halls of science and in the senate, it is an agreeable surprise to meet him also in the courts of poesy. The duke argues with much force, in an interesting preface, that there is no real contradiction between poetry and science—that the transcendental suggestions of science "go to establish in our minds the most fertile, perhaps, of all poetic conceptions, that, namely, of the Unity of Nature, and therefore of its manifold and inexhaustible relations with the human spirit." But though this be true, as of course it is, the poet must beware of using verse as a medium for the crystallising of transcendental suggestions into plain facts. Verse is better employed in giving suggestions to the inquiring instinct of science than in receiving them. Nothing that the most imaginative poet could now say about the electric telegraph would compare with Shakspeare's

"I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes."

"The Burdens of Belief" suffers as a poem from its purely didactic aim, and from the scientific method which enters into it. But it is nevertheless a poem of much beauty, and better worth having than a cartload of the erotic verse which passes in these days for the current coin of poetry. The following natural and perfect illustration of a great truth, profound in its very simplicity, deserves to rank among the best poetic work of the time:—

"As in a land of lakes
Deep-valleyed with a thousand rills,
The mighty pulse of ocean makes
Far home among the hills,
And every fisher's boat,
In wooded creek with smoke up-curved,
Still rests upon the seas that float
And circle round the world,—
So does God's Kingdom wind
Its arms beneath all ways of men;
Far wandering sails of human kind
Can be turned home again."

Some of the most successful poems in the volume are contained in the section called "Songs of Nature and the Birds." Here the poet entirely throws off the restraints of the scientific mood—as, for instance, in these delightful stanzas from "The Danbury Swallow":

"And one familiar bird there came,
That ever sounds her twittering note
By cottage eave and latticed frame,
From creamy breast and russet throat.
"O'er half the world she finds her way
To skim each year this English lawn:
Her flight is part of summer day,
Her wings are busy with the dawn.
"She loves no solitary place,
Nor forest lands, nor moor, nor fen,
She moveth ever in the face
And round the meadowed homes of men."

- "One year, for nest, she chose instead
Of barn, or eave, or raftered door,
The lowly vestibule that led Unto a little chapel floor.
- "All that fair week she carried straws
And built her fragile house with clay:
No hand enforced the household laws
That would have stopped her happy way.
- "Next year she came, and flew around,—
On one bright morn of perfect calm
Her place was echoing to the sound
Of children's chanting of a psalm.
- "She sat entranced, and heard the praise
That David sang of homing bird;
She heard her name from ancient days,
And wondered at the gracious word;
- "Then, waiting till the parting few
Had passed into the blossomed air,
On to God's altar straight she flew
And laid her young ones there."

Orchard Songs. By Norman Gale. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.) That Mr. Norman Gale has a true and delicate gift of song does not need to be said. He has caught the spirit of an ideal rustic life, and he expresses it with much happiness of phrase and truth of colouring. I confess, however, that the obtrusive "naturalism" (of white breasts, ungartered knees, and so on), which he imports into his least natural pastorals jars upon my own sense of what is fittest in poetry. This sort of thing was all very well in Herrick—though even in him it was artificial—but we ought to have got beyond Herrick in these days. By all means let us have as little sophistication as possible; and I can imagine that Mr. Gale thinks he is delivering us from sophistication by his pictures of the very free loves of so-called shepherds and milkmaids. With all respect, be it said, he is mistaken. What he gives us as examples of simplicity are only an affectation of a state of things that never did exist and never can. When he describes the genuinely natural life of the country, Mr. Gale is a true poet, and there is an irresistible charm in what he writes—as in this passage, for instance:—

"The lesser whitethroat in the orchard growth
Beneath an apple planned
A hive for nest,
And as we lay and watched
The while she matched
Each grassy joist and beam,
The fluffy architect, unstirred,
Rounded the entrance with her beak,
Or smoothed the cup
Where she would dream
Upon her family of eggs,
And warm them into song
Where pears and pippins throng."

Here, too, is an example in which a distinctly high level is reached:—

"We stood upon the forehead of the hills,
And lifted up our hearts in prayer;
And as we halted, reverent,
Meseemed that Nature o'er us bent,
That she did bid us snp
From bread she gave and from her cup.
There at her large communion did we feast,
Herself the Substance and herself the Priest.
The immaterial wine she poured,
And standing on the Cotswold sward,
Administered to us
Beneath the unsupported sky
Her sacrament of revery."

One may be permitted a verbal criticism as to the epithet "unsupported," which seems meaningless and awkward. The poet has also made a slip in representing Nature, instead of the recipients of her sacrament, as "standing on the Cotswold sward." But these are comparatively small blemishes, which do not detract from the profound beauty of the passage. In these extracts the poet's sincerity is unmistakable. That, as it seems to me, can hardly be said of some of the more personal and smutty pieces,

Dramatic Pictures, English Rispetti, Sonnets, and other Verses. By Alexander H. Japp. (Chatto & Windus.) Vigour and variety are perhaps the most striking notes in Dr. Japp's poems. The contents of the present volume range from elaborate character-pieces in dialect to dainty lyrics in a single stanza. He is very happy in one or two of the former—especially, perhaps, in his sketch of the Yorkshireman who thus expounds a north-country philosophy to a south-country boy:

"Folks don't respect you, lad, for what you spend
Nor what you give, but just for what ye keep:
You mark it, lad, 'tis what you have and keep
Makes men lift oop their hats, and honour tha;
You ga and spend it round, and then they think
You are a fool just like unto themselves,
And 'come familiar, sidlin' oop to tha.
No, no, lad, every piny I can I keep,
And lay them oop, and then i' t' North they say—
'There's a Higgle, faith, a warm man every bit'—
And honour Higgle as both wise and warm."

But there is nothing better in the volume than detached lines of the single stanzas describing the songs of birds. These are the opening lines of the stanza on the nightingale:

"Sweet heart of secret minstrelay—how far
Thy golden notes, like lightnings in the dark, Flash full."

The first lines of the stanza on the lark are still better:

"Soul of the common field, where grass is green;
Melodious voice of morning and of light."

The blackbird is apostrophised thus:

"Oh, minstrel of the morn, like light, thy note Hath magic as if rolled through golden throat."

And here is a good description of the song of the thrush:

"Bird of the liquid note that grows and swells,
Repeated till the rapture rises clear,
And all around is thrilled, as though there dwells
A melody within the atmosphere."

A Lay of the Southern Cross and Other Poems. By the Very Rev. Henry Jacobs, D.D., Dean of Christ Church, New Zealand. (Skeffington.) These poems are all, either directly or indirectly, concerned with religious subjects. The longest of them, which gives its title to the volume, tells in five cantos and in Spenserian stanzas the story of the evangelisation of New Zealand, and of the founding and expansion of the Church of England in the colony. Unquestionable piety and admirable zeal are evident on every page. Dean Jacobs writes with the enthusiasm of an evangelist; and perhaps, if his materials had been better suited to poetic treatment, it would have been found that he could give to his work the essential quality of poetry. That was hardly possible in the actual circumstances. The following stanza, which refers to the late Bishop Selwyn, is a fair example of the merits and defects of Dean Jacobs's verse:

"High works he shall attempt: in counsel great,
And wise to gather from each man his best;
Patient for opportunities to wait;
Well knowing when to urge, and when to rest;
Fearless to meet, and resolute to breast
Each adverse tide, he shall behold the day,
Whereto he hath unceasing onward pressed,
When the Church fabric shall reposing stay,
Built on consenting Orders, Bishops, Clergy, Lay."

The first six lines are excellent, both for their aptness of expression, and as being a forcible description of a great prelate whom they picture as he was. The seventh is very faulty, and the last two are irredeemable bathos.

The Crucifixion of Man. By George Barlow. (Sonnenschein.) In almost all his books—and they are numerous—Mr. Barlow's remarkable facility as a metrist betrays him into redundancies and errors of taste which mar what might otherwise be good work. His choice of subject is seldom of the happiest, and the result of these peculiarities combined is one to be regretted in so able a writer of verse. I do not at all complain that Mr. Barlow, in this poem, renounces the traditional view that woman is the victim and slave of man, and adopts the opposite one, that she is "as often the crucifier and destroyer of the soul of man." He is perhaps right in so thinking. But when one finds this idea worked out—first, in the betrayal of a man's honour, and her own, by a woman; next, in the ruin of an innocent woman by the injured man, as a brutal revenge upon the very sex of woman; again, in the descent to prostitution of a country girl who is lured away to London, to the despair of the country preacher who loved her; and, again, in the drowning of two lives by the preacher, his own and that of the daughter of his dead love, in order that the girl might be saved from her mother's fate—the whole theme becomes nauseous. Lyric verse is not a fitting medium for such matter.

Doorside Ditties. By Jeanie Morrison. (Blackwoods.) Full of pathos, and of truth to human nature in some of its humbler aspects, these "ditties" would compare well with more ambitious work. They are records of devotion and suffering which fill the eyes with tears, and the heart with a new sense of the nobleness of life. No mere extract could give a fair impression of their quality, and each piece is too long to admit of its quotation as a whole; but readers should turn to the book for themselves.

Poems. By Florence Peacock. (Hull: Andrews.) There is much inequality in Miss Peacock's verses. At their best they are good; at their worst they are marred by bad rhymes and defective rhythm. The good, however, preponderate, and their quality may be judged from this average specimen:

"AMOR IN EXTREMIS.

"Lord, I have sinned; yet grant me grace
Once more again to behold her face,
Ere I go to mine own appointed place.

* * * * *

"Yet for my vow there is naught to show,
I broke no lance with the heathen foe,
Lord, I have lied unto Thee, I know.

"Lied, because a woman was fair,
And the sun shone warm on her golden hair,
Ah! but her beauty was passing rare!

"Blame her not, Lord, for the sin was mine,
She had not sworn to fight for Thy shrine.
Let me drink of the cup that is bitter as brine.

"But, Lord, if I ever found grace in Thy sight,
Let no drop from that cup dim the gold so bright
Of her hair; which drew me away from the light."

Griselda. A Society Novel in Rhymed Verse. (Kegan Paul & Co.) A Song for the Season, and other Poems. By Geoffrey Lane. (Sonnenschein.) These two books, which it is convenient to notice together, will not claim many words. Why the first was written it is difficult to conceive, for it is an odious performance. Society novels in their ordinary form are a nuisance, but done into verse they are almost a crime. A writer who puts into poetic language—though it be, as in this case, very indifferently stuff—a record of scandals and adulteries, ought to be pilloried. The second of the two books is a satire, and is no doubt well meant, but it lacks power.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce A Constitutional History of the House of Lords, from original sources, by Mr. Luke Owen Pike, of the Public Record Office.

MR. JOHN MURRAY has in the press a new edition, revised and enlarged, of Smith's Classical Dictionary of Mythology, Biography, and Geography, edited by Mr. G. E. Marindin. It will have more than eight hundred illustrations and plans, many of which are new.

THE new volume of Mr. Elliot Stock's "Popular County Histories" will be Westmorland, by Chancellor Ferguson, who wrote the history of Cumberland in the same series. The volume will contain much fresh material, and some important unpublished information relating to the Roman occupation.

A TREATISE on Bimetallism, by Mr. Henry Dunning MacLeod, will shortly be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co.

UNDER the title of Sober by Act of Parliament, Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. are about to publish an account of the results obtained from various systems of drink legislation at home and abroad, written by Mr. F. A. McKenzie. Commencing with the story of the state saloons of South Carolina, the book goes on to describe the colonial laws, the state distilleries of Switzerland, prohibition and high license in America, and the growth of the English licensing system. One chapter is devoted to the connexion between whisky and politics in the United States, and an attempt is made to outline a moderate scheme of liquor law reform which would be acceptable to Liberals and Conservatives alike. Parts of the book have already appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette, but most of it will now be published for the first time.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish shortly a little book on The Savoy Opera, by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, with sixty illustrations and portraits.

MESSRS. A. CONSTABLE & Co. have in the press a work entitled Thames Rights and Thames Wrongs, dealing with the Conservancy question, by Mr. John Bickerdyke, author of "The Book of the All-Round Angler."

A BOOK on The Elements of Modern Dress-making, for the amateur and professional dressmaker, by Miss Jeanette E. Davis, principal of the women's work department of the Manchester Technical School, will be published in a few days by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

A NOVEL by Mary C. Rowsell, entitled The Friend of the People, will be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, in three volumes, towards the end of May. We may mention that the novel has already been dramatised by the author, in co-operation with Mr. H. A. Saintsbury; and that a public reading of the play, for the purpose of securing copyright, took place at the Haymarket Theatre in February of last year.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS announce, for early publication in two volumes, a novel by Mrs. Leith Adams (Mrs. De Courcy Laffan) entitled Colour Sergeant No. 1. Company, which has already appeared in serial form in All the Year Round.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press a new edition of Dr. Mannington Caffyn's novel, Miss Milne and I, which has been out of print for some time. The book is a study of a female character of a very extraordinary type, and might well have been written to match A Yellow Aster.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of the Hull Press, will publish at an early date,

Flamborough: All About It, by various writers, edited by the Rev. R. Fisher. It will deal with the history, antiquities, scenery, natural history, &c., of the famous Yorkshire village.

MESSRS. CARTER & PRATT, of Glasgow, are about to publish North Again: Golfing this Time—the scores recorded by Mr. W. Ralston. The volume will consist of a number of sketches detailing the experiences of three tourists who went on a golfing tour in Ayrshire.

It is announced that the Rev. Dr. McCosh, ex-president of Princeton, is engaged upon his autobiography, which will not appear until after his death.

MR. ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT, author of A History of Civilisation in Ancient India, has just been appointed Commissioner of a Division in Bengal, being the first native of India to reach that rank in the civil service.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD's Marcella has already passed into a fourth edition, in three volumes.

THE Hon. Roden Noel will give a lecture on "The Poetry of Sir Samuel Ferguson" before the Irish Literary Society, on Tuesday, May 8, at 8 p.m.

ON Thursday of this week, Messrs. Sotheby were to begin selling the library of Mr. Hugh Galbraith Reid, which is so extensive that the sale will last altogether for twelve days. The collection is representative of all departments of literature, though it does not seem to include many of those rarities which the modern bibliophile most affects. We have noticed the second and fourth folios of Shakspeare; some of Milton's tractates; quite a number of first editions of Defoe; Gibbon's Essai sur l'Etude de la Littérature (Londres, 1761); Bliss's edition of Athenae Oxonienses, with a collection of more than 1100 portraits; a long series of books illustrated by Cruikshank; the publications of the Bannatyne and Maitland Clubs; and Blades' Catalogue of Books Printed by Carton, which rarely comes into the market.

THE Comision de Monumentos de Guipuzcoa has lately published, in the Euskal-erria of San Sebastian, the baptismal certificate of the Mouja-Alferez Catherine de Erauso, De Quincey's "Spanish Military Nun":

"Año de 1592, Folio 21, Partida 4, No. 37.

"Catalina de Herauso 37.—batizose Cat<sup>a</sup> de herauso en diez de hebrero deste dho año hija legitima de Miguel de herauso y mya pr<sup>a</sup> de galarraga. padrinos P<sup>o</sup> de galarraga y mya Velez de Aranzalde. M<sup>o</sup> el vic<sup>o</sup> alviza."

The ministro, or maestro, the vicario Albizua, was afterwards cura of San Vicente. The full name of the mother is Maria Perez de Galarraga. The family had dropped the initial H of their name before the close of the last century.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE preamble of the statute establishing an English School at Oxford was approved by Congregation on Tuesday by a majority of 120 votes to 46. Last December the voting in favour of an abstract resolution to the same effect was 110 to 70.

THE series of resolutions, proposing the establishment of new degrees, to be granted after a special course of study or research to persons not necessarily graduates, will be submitted to the vote of Congregation at Oxford on Tuesday next.

MR. HERBERT J. C. GRIERSON, of Christ Church, Oxford, has been nominated by the Crown to the newly founded Chambers chair of English literature at Aberdeen, which represents one portion of the dual functions performed by the late Prof. William Minto. We understand that Mr. Grierson was one of Prof. Minto's favourite pupils, and that he has been lecturing on English at Aberdeen during the past session.

THE two studentships for classical research at Cambridge have both been awarded to members of King's College: the Craven, to Mr. A. G. Bather; and the Prendergast, to Mr. E. F. Benson, of the English School at Athens.

As a memorial to Dr. Luard, the late Registrar at Cambridge, it is proposed to publish the original documents bearing on the internal history of the University, beginning with the earliest grace books. These contain not only the graces, but the proctorial accounts, including the degree fees, which are the only record of the degrees taken at this time. The first volume, covering a period from 1454 to 1487, edited by Mr. Leathes, is ready for the press; and other volumes will follow, if a sufficient number of subscribers can be obtained. The subscription is one guinea a volume.

DR. M. GASTER has been appointed for the second time to give a course of lectures on the Ilchester foundation at Oxford. The lectures will be four in number, and will be delivered on Tuesdays and Thursdays, beginning on May 8. The subject chosen is "The Sources of Popular Imagery in Russia, Religious and Secular."

MR. W. R. MOREFILL, reader in Russian at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture, on Friday of this week, upon "Historical Composition among the Slavs."

WE notice that there are twenty-eight candidates for the first examination for the degree of Bachelor in Music at Oxford, of whom no less than eleven are members of Queen's College.

ENDOWED chairs of history, founded by the Scottish Universities Commission at Edinburgh and Glasgow, will be filled in the course of the current year.

TWO courses of lectures will be delivered at Gresham College next week, in connexion with the chair of geometry. Mr. J. Larmor will lecture on Tuesday and Wednesday upon "The Aether and its Relations to Material Phenomena"; and Prof. Karl Pearson will lecture on Thursday and Friday upon "The Geometry of Chance," dealing specially with card and colour experiments and with death-rates. The lectures begin at 6 p.m., and are free to the public.

MR. I. GOLLANZ, of Christ's College, Cambridge, has been appointed an examiner in English at London University, in succession to Prof. C. H. Herford.

WE congratulate Mr. Robert Bowes on the completion of his Catalogue of Cambridge Books, of which the two earlier parts have been already noticed in the ACADEMY. It now forms a handsome volume of more than 500 pages, containing just 3000 entries. Though intended primarily as a priced list of the books which Messrs. Macmillan & Bowes have for sale, the industry and accuracy of the compiler have raised it to the rank of a standard work of bibliography, in a very interesting branch of literature. The part that is new covers the nineteenth century, and is arranged in chronological order, with the exception that prize competitions and university sermons are collected under the date of the earliest. The contents of many of the volumes are set out in detail: as in the case of Harraden's Cantabrigia Depicta, Le Keux's Memorials of Cambridge, and the four series of Cambridge Essays—in which Sir H. S. Maine wrote on "Roman Law and Legal Education," and Sir James F. Stephen on "Characteristics of English Criminal Law." Specially interesting are the large number of university and college magazines, beginning with The Snob (1829) and The Gownsmen (1830), for the two of which together no less than £84 is asked. Then we have The Cambridge University Magazine (1840-43); The Oxford and Cambridge Magazine (1853), to which William Morris, Burne Jones, and Rossetti contributed; The Lion (1858), edited by Mr. H. R. Haweis, of which Mr. G. O. Trevelyan brought out a parody, called The Bear; The Light Blue (1866 to 1871), whose contributors include many names now well known; The Light Green (1872), which is full of clever parodies; The Cambridge Tatler (1877), which contains the beginnings of F. Anstey's "Vice Versa"; and The Granta, which only started in 1889. By far the oldest college magazine seems to be The Eagle, which has had a life of thirty-six years. We must not omit to mention that the volume before us contains reproductions of the ornaments used by the early Cambridge printers; and a list, compiled by Mr. F. Jenkinson, University Librarian, of all the books known to have been printed at Cambridge from 1521 to 1650. Finally, we notice in the Appendix a copy of Obsequies to the Memory of Mr. Edward King (1638), in which "Lycidas" first appeared. This is valued at £76.

TRANSLATIONS FROM THE PORTUGUESE.

TWO SONNETS OF BOCAGE.

CXXXVIII.

Oh, Camoens, great Camoens, how I find
Thy fate like mine, when I compare the twain!
The selfsame reason drove us o'er the main
To heed the Giant,* and Tagus leave behind:
Like thee, un pitying poverty doth grind
Me by the murmuring Ganges, and I'm fain
To mourn, poor longing lover, all in vain,
The empty joys on which I fixed my mind:
The sport, as thou wast, of a cruel fate
I pray the Heavens for death, and know full well
That only in the grave doth peace await:
Thou art my model.—But, oh, saddest thought!
If I can copy thy misfortunes fell,
I cannot share thy wondrous gifts in aught.

CCCVII.

I've spent my strength amid the strife insane
Of passions, that have dragged me down to nought;
Ah! blind and wretched man, I almost thought
That Death would ne'er reduce me to its reign:
With countless suns my puffed-up mind and vain
Gilded a life by cheating fancies caught;
But now poor Nature yields herself distraught
To fell disease, with ruin in its train.
Pleasures my comrades, and my tyrants too!
This soul, that once could not a whim deny,
In disillusion's gulf has buried you:
O God! when darkness covers my life's sky,
Let that which years have not one moment do—
Teach him who knew not how to live to die.

EDGAR PRESTAGE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

By far the most important paper in the May number of the Antiquary is Dr. Cox's account of the discovery of an inscribed pig of lead near Matlock, concerning which Mr. F. Haverfield has already written authoritatively in the ACADEMY. Dr. Cox's paper contains not only an engraving of the pig found a few weeks ago, but also of two others, the dates of the discovery of which are respectively 1777 and 1783. These are, we believe, preserved in the British Museum. As Derbyshire has no museum of its own where local relics may be stored and be of service to the neighbourhood, we trust the object recently found may be deposited in the national collection. Mr. John Ward concludes his paper on the Museum at Carleon. It is remarkably rich in Roman remains discovered in the neighbourhood. We gather that, unlike what is to be seen in some other places, they are carefully preserved and arranged with intelligence. Mr. Ward, who is not over much given to compliment, says that "the Carleon Museum is one of the very best antiquarian museums west of the Severn, and that it will amply repay a visit from the student of Romano-British times and culture." Mr. D. C. Parkinson contributes an account of Ennis Abbey. Until quite recent days, this interesting building was utterly neglected, and the condition of the graveyard showed a strange disrespect for the remains of the dead. In 1892 these historic ruins became the property of the Board of Works of Ireland, and are now, we believe, properly cared for. Viscount Dillon continues his account of the Armour in the Tower. When his researches are complete, we trust they may be published in a volume.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BROXON, M. Les Révoltes scandinaves (H. Ibsen, B. Bjornson, etc.). Paris: Grasilier. 3 fr. 50 c.
COMMANVILLE, Mme. C. Mes souvenirs. Paris: Ferroud. 10 fr.
CUNOW, H. Die Verwandtschafts-Organisationen der Australnegier. Ein Beitrag zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der Familie. Stuttgart: Dietz. 8 M.
DESCHAMPS, G. Sur les Routes d'Asie. Paris: Colin. 3 fr. 50 c.
FORBER, R. Die Waffensammlung des Stadtrath R. Zschille in Grossenhain (Sachsen). Berlin: Mertens. 160 M.
GRAMMAYR, K. v. Schuldnöth u. Agrar-Reform. Eine agrarpolit. Skizze m. besond. Berücksicht. Tirols. Meran: Ellmenreich. 2 M. 80 Pf.
GRIGGS, J. C. Studien über die Musik in Amerika. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 2 M. 50 Pf.
HANDAUX, G., & G. VICAIRE. Étude sur l'imprimerie de Balzac 1825-1827. Paris: Ferroud. 10 fr.
KADE, O. Die Musikalien-Sammlung d. grossherzogl. Mecklenburg-Schweriner Fürstenhauses aus den letzten 2 Jahrhunderten. Wismar: Hinstorff. 8 M.
KARPELES, B. Die Arbeiter d. mährisch-schlesischen Steinkohlen-Revieres. Sozialstatistische Untersuchg. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M. 80 Pf.
KUHNA, J. Die Ernährungsverhältnisse der industriellen Arbeiterbevölkerung in Oberschlesien. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M.
KUNSTSCHATZ aus Tirol. 2. Abth. Architektur u. Kunstgewerbe. Mit erläut. Texte v. J. W. Deininger. Wien: Schroll. 40 M.
LEITHAUSER, G. Bilder aus der Kunstgeschichte. Hamburg. 3 M.
LORSCHKE, G. Die Enthauptung der Medusa. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der griech. Malerei. Bonn: Cohen. 2 M.
MÉMOIRES d'une Inconnue, publiés sur le manuscrit original (1780-1816). Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
MONTAILLÉ, L. Le Costume féminin depuis l'Epoque galloise jusqu'à nos jours. T. I. Paris: Malherbe. 5 fr.
POUGIN, A. Verdî: histoire anecdotique de sa vie et de ses œuvres. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
SCHULTZ, S. Der junge Goethe. 7. Hft. Goethe in Frankfurt (1778-4). Halle: Kaemmerer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
TSCHIRKOW, F. Chronik. Schilderung aus dem Leben der preussisch-litauischen Landbewohner d. 18. u. 19. Jahrh. Königsberg: Gräse. 2 M.
VOCKE, W. Die Grundzüge der Finanzwissenschaft. Leipzig: Hirschfeld. 11 M.
WEILL, G. Saint-Simon et son Œuvre. Paris: Perrin. 3 fr. 50 c.
ZÖLLNER, F. Beiträge zur deutschen Judenfrage m. akademischen Arabesken, als Unterlagen zu e. Reform der deutschen Universitäten. Leipzig: Mutze. 4 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- SCHÜRER, E. Die ältesten Christengemeinden im römischen Reich. Kiel: Toebe. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AYERDUNK, H. Geschichte der Stadt Duisburg bis zur endgültigen Vereinigung m. dem Hause Hohenzollern (1666). 1. Abthg. Duisburg: Ewich. 5 M.
BEITRÄGE, staats- u. sozialwissenschaftliche. 2. Bd. 1. Hft. August Comte u. seine Bedeutung f. die Entwicklung der Sozialwissenschaft. Von H. Wäntig. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 8 M.
GRUPP, G. Oettingische Geschichte der Reformationszeit. Nördlingen: Reischle. 3 M. 50 Pf.
LOIR, M. Jean-Gaspard Venet, corsaire et amiral (1747-1808). Paris: Baudoin. 6 fr.
NAUPHAL, I. Cours de droit musulman. 1er fasc. La propriété. Paris: Marchal. 6 fr.
PRIERACE, J. Die Reichspolitik d. Erzbischofs Balduin v. Trier in den J. 1314 bis 1328. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte Kaiser Ludwigs des Bayern. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 4 M. 80 Pf.
SEBASTIAN, Mémoires militaires du Baron. Réimpression illustrée. Paris: Baudoin. 6 fr.

- STARCE, E. v. Palaestina u. Syrien von Anfang der Geschichte bis zum Siege des Islam. Berlin: Reuther. 4 M. 50 Pf.
STUNJEN, Leipziger, aus dem Gebiet der Geschichte. 1. Bd. 1. Hft. Die Kölner Konföderation vom J. 1367 n. die schenischen Pfandschaften. Von E. R. Danell. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M. 80 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ACLOQUE, A. Flore de France. Paris: J. B. Baillière. 12 fr. 50 c.
BERON, R. S. Vorlesungen über die Zelle u. die einfachen Gewebe des thierischen Körpers. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 7 M.
KARLBAUM, G. W. A. Theophrastus Paracelsus. Basel: Schwabe. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LEHMANN, R. Schopenhauer. Ein Beitrag zur Psychologie der Metaphysik. Berlin: Weidmann. 4 M.
MEARL, E. Molluskensuma v. Schlesien. Breslau: Kern. 7 M.
PESTENEER, P. Introduction à l'étude des mollusques. Paris: Carré. 6 fr.
TULLBERG, T. Ueb. einige Muriden aus Hamarun. Upsala: Lundström. 8 M.
WOBELIN, G. Die Phanerogamen- u. Gefäße-Kryptogamen-Flora der Münchener Thalebene. München: Jordan. 3 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BROCKELMANN, C. Lexicon Syriacum. Praefatus est Th. Nöldeke. Fasc. 1. Berlin: Reuther. 4 M.
EICHLES, H. Variationes zu Tacitus' Annalen. 2. Hft. Zu Buch II. Berlin: Weidmann. 1 M. 20 Pf.
TOPOLOVSKY, J. Die basko-slavische Sprachähnlichkeit. 1. Bd. Einleitg. Vergleichende Lautlehre. Wien: Gerdol's Sohn. 8 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SEPTUAGINT versus THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

The Athenaeum Club, S.W.

In the letters which you have permitted me to print I have tried to support two conclusions—one which has had adherents for some centuries, namely, that the Septuagint represents a better text than the Hebrew version of the Bible; the other, which is not so well known, that the Hebrew version, the so-called Masoretic text, is not only inferior to the Septuagint, but is a sophisticated and made-up text due to the Rabbis of the second century. Not only did they create a new text, but they created a new Canon. The notion so widely spread, that the Alexandrian Canon is an amplification of some Canon supposed to have previously existed in Palestine, seems based on the most fragile evidence. The original Canon was an elastic one, and is represented by the Septuagint. This is important in many ways, for it was the introduction of a more rigid Canon by the Jews at Jamnia which was the beginning of a great many of our troubles in criticism. And how did they go to work? We have an interesting tradition on the subject in the Talmud, which has been often quoted and used, but which has been quoted and used as if the rival schools of Rabbis at Jamnia had been discussing the retention in, or exclusion from, some Hebrew Canon of works already there, instead of its being a most interesting episode of the general discussions which took place when the shorter or recognised Hebrew Canon was actually formed.

The discussion as to whether the Song of Solomon, a secular erotic poem, should be retained in the Canon or not has often been quoted, as has the emphatic and hyperbolic dictum of the Rabbi Akiba to the effect that, "The whole world is not worth the day on which the Song of Songs was given to Israel; for all the Kethubim are holy, but the Canticles most holy." The very fierceness of the language of this ultra-partisan of Jewish thought as against Christian thought arouses more than a suspicion that the Book was, perhaps, not contained in the Bible of the early Christians at all, namely, in the Septuagint. It is very remarkable that there should be no reference to it by Josephus or Philo, or by any of the New Testament writers; and it would seem not improbable that the Greek version in the older codices has come from * The Giant is Adamastor, or the Stormy Cape. See Lusiads, Canto V.

Aquila's and Theodotion's translation or both, and not from the Septuagint at all. Origen's devotion to the Book is doubtless due to its affording good materials for his symbolical methods of interpretation.

While the final acceptance by the Jews of the Book of Canticles, after Akiba's strong language about it, is a dramatic incident in the history of the Canon, the corresponding rejection of one of the finest pessimistic sermons in any language—namely, the work known as Ecclesiasticus or Wisdom—on grounds fantastic and uncritical, is an equally instructive story. So remarkable was this rejection that Dr. Edersheim no doubt condenses the view of nine-tenths of modern scholars, when he urges that it was done for polemical reasons, and says that it was probably due to the wide use of the Book in the Early Christian Church. This accounts for the rancorous phrases of Akiba about it, for it has all the earmarks by which in other cases the genuine books were supposed to be distinguished from the apocryphal. It existed in Hebrew, as the author of the Greek translation affirms; Jerome tells us he had seen a copy of the Hebrew original, while the quotations from it in the Talmud are for the most part in Hebrew. An Aramaic translation also existed, which is quoted in the Babylonian Talmud. The author of the Epistle of James, whose surroundings were very Jewish, must have known it, as he apparently uses it often; and it is also quoted in chap. xix. of the Epistle of Barnabas. The Early Fathers, such as Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and Cyprian, all treat it as Scripture; and it is included in the Hebrew Canon as defined by the Synods of Hippo and Carthage. There cannot be the least doubt that it had an unquestioned place in the Septuagint, as it occurs in the Peshitta and in the Pre-Hieronymian Itala. The Septuagint seems to have preserved a more perfect text than the Masoretic one. The principal variation consisted in the addition of a large number of verses in the latter, in regard to which Mr. Margoliouth, in his learned notes on the Book, says:

"Some of them are quoted by very early authorities (e.g., Chrysostom and Clement of Alexandria), or are confirmed by the best collateral evidence (e.g., the Syrian, Latin, and Coptic versions). Many of these verses are translated in the Syro-Hexaplar version, where they are marked with asterisks, the existence of which in the Apocryphal Book is a matter of difficulty (Field Hexapla I., p. lxx.). That they are translations of Hebrew verses is shown by the fact that the sense of many of them only becomes clear after retranslation."

It seems from the attitude of some of the Rabbis, such as Rabbi Joseph, towards it that the exclusion of the Book of Wisdom from the Canon was entirely the work of that very polemical and headstrong fanatic and opponent of Christianity, the Rabbi Akiba, as tradition so uniformly says. The burden of my present argument is that the book was in the Canon as it was understood by the Jews and the Christians of the first century, whose Bible was so largely the Septuagint; and that it ought to be there now.

Let us now turn to another Book, namely, that of Ezekiel, which had to run the gauntlet of those fantastic persons, the Rabbinical critics, and which at one time was very nearly excluded from the Canon also, on the ground of its obscurity and its supposed opposition to the Law in certain places, as xviii. 20, xx. 5, xxxiv. 7. It is hardly realised how very nearly the exclusion was decided upon. If we are to credit the story in the Talmud, which certainly has all the appearance of truth, it was only when the matter was going to be decided against its inclusion that, by the intervention of the Rabbi Ananias, who undertook to reconcile its supposed contradictions with the Law, it was eventually decided to retain it. Upon this slight thread, then, once hung the question of the reception or rejection of this famous Book by the Jew Doctors, which would have meant its rejection by Jerome, and probably by all the Western Church.

The Masoretic text of Ezekiel and the versions dependent upon it are very corrupt. I ought to mention that that acute critic Whiston—some of whose views were doubtless untenable, but who fills a remarkable place in the initiation of a scientific criticism of the Bible text—shows that the first verses of Ezekiel are quite unintelligible as they stand, and point to the text of the Book, as we have it, having been dislocated and rearranged just as the text of Jeremiah has been.

The first two verses of Ezekiel refer to certain visions he had in the thirtieth year of the Captivity. He does not tell us what they were, but begins again in the third verse with the visions he had in the fifth year. These are duly enumerated and described. Chapter viii. begins with the visions of the sixth year; chapter xx. with the visions of the seventh year; chapter xxiv. with those of the ninth year; chapter xxvi. with those of the eleventh year. In chapter xxix. we go back to the visions of the tenth year. In chapter xxxi. we again have visions of the eleventh year; in chapter xxxii. of the twelfth year; in chapter xl. of the twenty-fifth year.

This is surely very curious. Either the two initial verses belong to some other chapter whose heading is lost, or else they were the beginning of an entirely new Book. What is plain is that they have nothing to do with the events recorded in the first chapter; and if they refer to anything in the present Book of Ezekiel, it must be to something which occurred after the events described in chapter xl. It is very probable that, if we could recover the original Septuagint Text of Ezekiel, these dislocations would, as in Jeremiah, disappear, and that they are due to a rearrangement of the Text by the Jamnia doctors. It is a curious fact that Josephus, who used the Septuagint, tells us that Ezekiel left behind him two Books. We only know of one; but it is remarkable that modern criticism has separated the matter of Ezekiel into two sections shewing marked differences, and it is possible that the Book was originally in two sections. A reference to the fact seems to be made in the Athanasian Constitutions. Ewald and others have maintained, further, that in many places the Greek text is more intelligible and serves better to represent the original than the Masoretic text.

I must continue my criticism in another letter. Meanwhile, I ought to add here that in recently reading over some portion of the voluminous works of that very remarkable writer Whiston, I find that he had already at the beginning of the last century warmly championed the Septuagint against the Hebrew text, and had attributed the formation of the Masoretic text (of which he writes very much on the same terms as I have ventured to write) to the time of Barkobas, the famous prophet of whom Rabbi Akiba was the champion. I was unaware of this until quite lately; and it seems to me to strengthen my contention, which was arrived at on quite different grounds, and long before I had seen a line on the subject by Whiston.

H. H. HOWORTH.

SOME BASQUE CUSTOMS, ETC.

Sare, Bases Pyrénées: April 28, 1894.

In reference to the interesting letter of Miss Stokes in the ACADEMY of April 24, there is an instance of small crosses planted round a larger one in the twelfth century Codex Calixtinus of Compostella, published by Prof. Vinson in the Revue de Linguistique (tom. xv., 15 Janv., 1882, p. 15). The passage runs:

"In summitate vero eiusdem montis est locus, quod dicitur Cruz Caroli, quia super illum securibus et dolabris et fossoribus coeterisque manubriis Carolus cum suis exercitibus in Hispaniam pergens olim tramitem fecit, signumque Dominicæ crucis prius in eo elevavit, et tandem flexit genibus versus Gallaciam Deo et Sancto Jacobo precem fudit; quapropter, peregrini, genua sua ibi curvantes versus Sancti Jacobi patriam, ex more orant, et singuli singula vexilla Dominicæ crucis infligunt. Mille etiam cruce possunt inveniri, unde primus locus orationis Sancti Jacobi ibi habetur."

The spot would seem to be at the junction of the old Roman road with the path coming from Valcarlos, near the chapel of Ibañeta. The passage would point to a wider range of the custom than that suggested by Miss Stokes.

The points of resemblance between Basque and Celtic institutions and customs are so few, so baffling, and yet sometimes so curiously minute (e.g., the cat in the ancient Welsh laws and in the Fuero of Navarre; the funeral stones described by Mr. Henry O'Shea in La Tombe Basque), that I may perhaps be excused for mentioning the following custom, of which I have known several examples.

When a death takes place, a fire is lighted, sometimes with the mattress on which the deceased expired, more frequently with a little straw, at the intersection of the cross-roads or paths nearest the house. As long as the fire lasts, every passer-by is supposed to say a Paternoster for the deceased, and in some spots to fling a stone on a heap at one of the angles of the cross-roads. In many places the custom is observed by a few families only, and is fast dying out. In others, when twenty years ago I asked the reason of it, the answer was "pour prier," and my informants were astonished to hear that it was not so done everywhere.

In the list of Basque words given in the Codex above cited we find: "presbyterum, belaterra, quod interpretatur pulchra terra." This word belaterra, for priest, is supposed to be connected with the birretum worn by the clergy; and this interpretation seems confirmed by a letter of institution of a Bishop of Bayonne of the priest of Azpilcueta in Navarre, dated 21 June, 1501. The institution takes place by the delivery of the Bishop's birretum, and placing it on the head of the priest's proctor: "Conferimus et donamus et de eisdem providemus, et te per presentes et per traditionem virreti nostri in caput dicti procuratoris tui per nos apositi te investimus de eadem." The document is printed by Father Fita in the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia (tome xxiii. cuad. 1-3, p. 190) 1893.

Can we compare with the name Belaterra on a Christian monument at Kalabsheh, mentioned by Prof. Sayce in his Letter from Egypt in the ACADEMY of March 17, p. 235?

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

SHAKSPERE'S "DUNSINANE" AND MILTON'S "PHILISTINE."

Hampstead: April 23, 1894.

In his Pronunciation of Scripture Proper Names, Walker shows very intimate acquaintance with "Paradise Lost," but not with Milton's other poems. This is indicated pretty clearly by his treatment of "Philistine." His entries are "Phil-is'tim, Phil-is'tines S, Fi-lis'tins," the accent being placed uniformly on the second syllable, according to his Rule 8, but not supported by any reference to Milton, who uses only the adjective "Philistean" in "Paradise Lost" (9. 1061). Later dictionaries, the Imperial for one, put the accent on the first syllable—whether rightly or wrongly, according to present-day usage, is not the point to which I wish to call attention now. My point is Milton's accentuation; this seems to have escaped Walker's notice. The accent, I contend, is uniformly on the first syllable of the substantive, but on the second of the adjective. Each occurs nine times in "Samson Agonistes": the substantive in ll. 238, 251, &c., with the accent on the first syllable; the adjective in ll. 722, 831, &c., with the accent on the second syllable. In his Psalm lxxxiii. 7 "Philistines" ("Philistims" in some editions) occurs with the accent on the first syllable. Some editions spell the substantive and adjective alike "Philistine," others spell the adjective "Philistian." In the first edition (1671) the adjective is spelt "Philistian"; but this edition, though probably printed at Milton's expense—"printed by J. M. for John Starkey at the Mitre in Fleet-street"—is badly printed, and contains many errata, even the numbering of the lines going wrong at l. 70. The poet's blindness prevented his personal superintendence, and therefore the spelling of the word is not of vital importance, although the accentuation is.

Now this important distinction in the accentuation of the substantive and adjective is, I believe, the simple, and the true, explanation of Shakspeare's hitherto unmastered difficulty, "Dunsinane." In all the eight lines in "Macbeth" in which the accent is on the first syllable, "Dunsinane" is a substantive; in the solitary passage, Act iv., Sc. i., where the accent is on the second, it is an adjective, "Dunsinane hill." In a letter in the ACADEMY of June 3, 1893, I pointed out several reasons why this solitary passage could not be considered sufficient proof that Shakspeare varied his accentuation of proper nouns, which I contend he never did, but I owe it to a friend that I am now able to remove the difficulty; the difference in the accentuation according to the part of speech having previously escaped my notice.

BENJAMIN DAWSON.

THE NAÏVETÉ OF CHAUCER.

College of the City of New York: March 31, 1894.

It has often been remarked, and very generally accepted, that the naïveté of Chaucer is to be ascribed, if not entirely, at any rate very largely, to the archaic language of his poems. Such a judgment appears unwarranted. It is, indeed, true that a critic will sometimes pick out, as poetically beautiful, what was merely a conventional form of speech, as Lowell did in his younger days, when he expressed his admiration for the line in the Knight's Tale, "Alone withouten any companye," a line which the student of the old romances recognises as a stock expression. On the other hand, it must be admitted that naïveté is a poetic quality of a high order. Every poet must at times see with the eyes and speak with the tongue of a child. As Coleridge wisely says, "To carry on the feelings of childhood into the powers of manhood; to combine the child's sense of wonder and novelty with the appearances which every day for, perhaps, forty years had rendered familiar—

'With sun and moon and stars throughout the year,
And man and woman';

this is the character and privilege of genius, and one of the marks which distinguish genius from talents."

Chaucer had this power, and it belonged, not to his age, but to his genius. In what other poet of his day do we find naïveté like his? Gower, who stands nearest him, is childish rather than childlike, and his stories leave with the reader a very dreary feeling. As we read Chaucer's tale of Constance, the infantine charm lies, not in the inconsistencies, not in any mere verbal forms differing from those we use, but in the whole texture of the thought.

"Sche set hir down on knees, and than she sayde
Immortal God, that saved Susanne
Fro false blame; and thou, merciful mayde,
Mary, I mene, daughter of saint Anne,
Bifore whos child aungels syng Osanne;
If I be gultles of this felonye,
My secour be, for elles schal I dye!"

In this stanza it is plainly the thought and feeling that produce the sweet, childlike effect, for there is here but one phrase, "Sche set hir down on knees," which differs in any important respect from modern usage. If we compare a passage from Chaucer's tale with a corresponding one from Gower's, it will be evident how slight is the poetic charm of a merely antiquated phraseology. Alla will have the knight swear that Constance murdered his queen.

"And happed that there lay a boke,
Upon the which, when he it sighe,
This knight hath swore and said on highe,
That alle men it mighten write
Now by this boke, which here is write,
Constance is gultif well I wote.
With that the honde of heven him smote
In token of that he was forswore,
That he has bothe his eyen lore,
Out of his hed the same stounde
They stert, and so they were founde."

Ed. Pauli, vol. i., p. 188.

So Gower tells it, with no lack of archaic language, but where is the charm of naïveté? Listen to Chaucer:

"A Britoun booke, i- write with Evaungiles,
Was fette, and on this booke he swor anon
Sche gultif was; and in the mene whiles
An hond him smot upon the nekke boon,
That doun he fel anon right as a stoon;
And bothe his yen brast out of his face
In sight of every body in that place."

With such an example before our eyes, can we admit that "much of that naïveté which to modern readers seems Chaucer's most obvious literary quality must be ascribed to the times in which he lived and wrote"? (Ward's Chaucer, "English Men of Letters.") Must we not rather maintain that the naïveté of Chaucer is one of the most exquisite blossoms of his genius—of the same kind as the naïveté of Spenser, of Wordsworth, of Tennyson?

LEWIS FREEMAN MOTT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 6, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Morality and Dogma," by Mr. B. Bosanquet.

MONDAY, May 7, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute "Chinese Philosophy," by Surgeon-General Gordon.

5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

7.20 p.m. Carlyle: "Labour," by Col. Maude.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Typewriting Machines," II., by Mr. H. C. Jenkins.

8.20 p.m. Geographical: "The Bakhtiari Country and Upper Elam," by Lieut.-Col. H. A. Rawser.

8.30 p.m. Parke Museum: "Climate in Relation to Health and Geographical Distribution of Disease," by Dr. C. Theodore Williams.

TUESDAY, May 8, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Rubies," II., by Prof. J. W. Radd.

4 p.m. Palestine Exploration Fund: "Future Researches in Palestine," by Major Conder.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Canada in Relation to the Unity of the Empire," by Sir Charles Tupper.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Manufacture of Briquette Fuel," by Mr. W. Colquhoun.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Pewter," by Mr. J. Starkie Gardner.

8 p.m. Irish Literary Society: "The Poetry of Sir Samuel Ferguson," by the Hon. Roden Noel.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological.

WEDNESDAY, May 9, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Telegraphs and Trade Routes in Persia," by Col. Wells.

8 p.m. Geological.

THURSDAY, May 10, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Solid and Liquid States of Matter," II., by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Kinematical Discrimination of the Euclidean and Non-Euclidean Geometries," by Mr. A. E. H. Love; and "Stability of a Tube under External Pressure," by Mr. P. M. Greenhill.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Discussion, "The Cost of Electrical Energy," by Mr. K. E. Crompton.

8 p.m. Viking Club: Conversazione.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

8.30 p.m. Parke Museum: "Fog, Cloud, and Sunshine," by Mr. F. Gasler.

FRIDAY, May 11, 5 p.m. Physical: "Electromagnetic Induction in Plane, Cylindrical, and Spherical Current Sheets," by Mr. G. H. Bryan; "Dielectrics," by Mr. R. Appleyard.

7.30 p.m. Ruskin: "Ruskin as a Letter Writer," by Mr. J. P. Smart; "The Langdale Linen Industry," by Mr. Thomas Hewitt.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "English Folk Song," by the Rev. E. Baring Gould, with Musical Illustrations.

SATURDAY, May 12, 4 p.m. Royal Institution: Tyndall Lecture, "Colour Vision," II., by Captain Abney.

SCIENCE.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

An Old and Middle English Reader. On the basis of Prof. Julius Zupitza's "Alt und Mittel-englisches Uebungsbuch." With Introduction, Notes, and Glossary by George Edwin Maclean. (Macmillans.) Prof. Zupitza's Uebungsbuch has many special merits, and it is probable that teachers in this country would long ago have adopted it for use in their classes if the notes and glossary had been in English instead of German. In adapting the work for English-speaking students, Prof. Maclean has retained the original selection of texts (omitting the four new extracts added in the last German edition, which has in other respects been followed), but has in some instances made a fresh collation of the MSS. The book contains thirty-four extracts in Old English and thirty-six in Middle English, including two chapters from Wycliffe's New Testament, which are printed in connexion with the parallel Old English versions. The passages are fairly representative of the diversities of literary style and of dialect in Old and Middle English, although Prof. Zupitza has intentionally abstained from giving specimens of those important works which the student at a somewhat more advanced stage ought to read in extenso. Prof. Maclean's part of the work deserves the highest praise. The Glossary contains an extraordinarily large amount of etymological information, condensed into small space by means of a highly ingenious system of typographical contrivances. The philology is well up to date; nearly every relevant observation in Brugmann's great work and in Paul's Grundriss is duly noted, and there is evidence that several very recent articles in periodicals have been studied with profit. The Notes and Introduction might perhaps with advantage have been made more copious; but they are sound and helpful, and contain abundant references to the literature of the subject. In the Glossary we observe a few inconsistencies in the notation of prehistoric forms (e.g., some fluctuation between -on, -an, and -anon in the infinitive, between d and ð for the Teutonic antecedent of the English d), and one or two inadvertencies in the use of the typographical symbols; but such things are hardly avoidable in a first edition. The etymologies given for faillen and feallan are doubtful. Brugmann's observations on these words in the last part of vol. ii. of the Grundriss were probably published too late to be available. The text of the extract from the twelfth century Chronicle should be corrected by Mr. Plummer's edition, which retains the punctuation of the MS. and has one or two amended readings.

A First Book in Old English: Grammar, Reader, Notes, and Vocabulary. By Albert S. Cook. (Boston: Ginn.) This book is carefully written, and will, we believe, be found well suited for its purpose, though some features of its plan are of doubtful advantage. The reading lessons, with fairly copious footnotes, fill only 110 pages, nearly half of these being occupied with extracts from "Apollonius" and "Andreas." The remaining passages are from Aelfric, the translation of Baeda's History, and the preface and epilogue to Boethius, with twenty lines of "Beowulf" and about 120 from "Judith." The prose extracts are given in a normalised orthography, according to the forms of Early West Saxon. This seems an unsatisfactory proceeding: in the case of Aelfric it is something like re-writing passages of Tennyson in the spelling of Malory. No doubt it is well for the beginner to work upon texts written in the Early West Saxon spelling. But a sufficient abundance of material might have been found in writings of Alfredian date; and when some practice in reading has been gained, it is desirable that the learner should be made acquainted with the actual forms met with in the MSS. The grammar is brief, and is strictly empirical in method. So far as the classification of nouns is concerned, we do not object to this. The arrangement according to stems is best left until the learner has become familiar with the commoner phenomena of the language; though when that stage has been reached, it is valuable in accounting for many apparent anomalies, which it is almost impossible to remember without its aid. In the case of weak verbs, however, the scientific classification is mnemonically useful from the first, and we wish that Prof. Cook had adopted it. The sections on original and derivative vowels are somewhat wanting in lucidity, and the treatment of u-umlaut is misleading. On the whole, however, the grammar is satisfactory, the brief sketch of syntax being particularly useful. The chapter on prosody is fuller than is needful in so elementary a work, but hardly full enough to be quite intelligible to a beginner. The terms "trochaic," "iambic," and "bacchiac" are undesirable in treating of Old English rhythms. Their current use with regard to modern accentual metres may be tolerated; but as Old English metre depends to some extent on quantity, the misapplication of the classical terms is apt to confuse the mind of the student. The statement that "every hemistich ends either in a stressed syllable, or in a stressed syllable followed by a single short syllable" is incorrect; endings like u dele (where the ictus of a falling foot is resolved) are common enough. Prof. Cook's peculiar use of the tailed e to denote the umlaut of o (as well as that of a) is on several grounds objectionable. In the grammar the tailed e and o are treated as if they formed part of the genuine. Old English alphabet, instead of being (in their current use, at least) mere inventions of modern scholars. In the examples of non-West-Saxon dialects given in the appendix, the tailed e occurs where it is used in the MSS., but the learner is not informed that it does not there represent the same sound for which it stands in the rest of the book, but is merely a graphic variant of e. The vocabulary appears to be very correct, the etymological information given being, so far as we have observed, entirely sound, except that under the word mācreftig an explanation is quoted from Grimm which modern philology does not sanction, at least in the form in which it is given.

PROF. KELLE, of Prague, has just published the first volume of his Geschichte der Deutschen Literatur (Berlin, 1894), of which the second volume may be expected next year. As a general history of the older German literature, this volume of 286 pages, which brings us down to the death of Conrad II. in 1039, will be found most useful by students. On many points, as on Otfrid and Notker der Deutsche, Prof. Kelle is himself one of the great authorities; for other authors he has supplemented his own account by giving full references at the end of the book to special monographs.

THE mention of Notker reminds us of the fact, not yet recorded in the ACADEMY, that a most scholarly treatise on "The Sound-system in Notker's Psalms from the St. Gall MS.," offered by Miss Edith E. Wardale (and accepted) as an inaugural dissertation for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Zürich, has recently been published. This is one of the best pieces of work in Old High German philology yet done in England, and reflects great credit upon the author, and upon the Oxford Modern Language School for Women. Along with it must be mentioned the admirable monograph upon the Phonology and Grammar of the Northumbrian Gloss to the Gospel of St. Mark in the Lindisfarne Gospels by another Oxford student, Miss Elizabeth M. Lea, published in the last two numbers of Anglia (of which it occupies 145 pages): a work which has received the encomiums of the most eminent Anglo-Saxon scholars in England and Germany. Miss Lea was a student of Lady Margaret Hall, where she took a First in the Honours School of English in 1890; she is now lecturer on English to the Oxford Association for the Education of Women. Miss Wardale was a student of St. Hugh's Hall, and took a First in the Modern Language Honours School in 1889; she is now Association lecturer in Old English and Modern Languages at Oxford, resident tutor at St. Hugh's Hall, and lecturer on Old and Middle English and German at Holloway College. The scholarly work of these ladies remind us of Miss Elizabeth Elstob and her Anglo-Saxon studies at Oxford in the beginning of the eighteenth century.

TWO CLASSICAL REVIEWS.

THE last number of the Journal of Philology (Macmillans) again shows the present trend of classical scholarship towards the criticism of MSS. Mr. F. G. Kenyon publishes two more of the treasures that have recently been acquired by the British Museum. These are (1) a fragmentary papyrus, containing the conclusion of Book III. of the Odyssey, accompanied by a few scholia; and (2) a vellum, containing a portion of the De Falsa Legatione of Demosthenes. The papyrus is written in a large, delicate uncial, so carefully that it may well have been intended for sale or for a public library. There are a few accents, breathings, and marks of elision, by the original scribe; the punctuation marks have probably been added later. The date is apparently the first century, A.D.; while the scholia cannot be later than the middle of the second century. Mr. Kenyon prints all of the text that has been preserved, collating the variants with the text of Ludwich. He points out that they deserve attention, as being all genuine variants, not mere errors of the scribe. He also prints the scholia, where legible. The vellum of Demosthenes is said to have been found with papyri in the Fayyum, and appears to be considerably older than any other extant specimen of that material. It consists of four pages, forming the two inside leaves of a quaternion. The interior columns on each page are preserved almost intact. The writing is a small, neat uncial; and there is no sign of the MS. having been touched by any but the original scribe. The hand is unlike that of any known vellum, and must be classed rather with those of the papyri. It is plainly of the Roman period; and both in the size and shape of letters, and in the general appearance of the writing, it bears considerable resemblance to the papyrus of Herodas. It probably belongs to the second century A.D. Mr. Kenyon prints the text in full, collating it with that of Blass, and examining all the variants in detail. His general conclusion is that:—

"We have here a confirmation of the general soundness of the text preserved to us in the much later MSS. on which we have hitherto depended. In this respect the new vellum agrees with all the better papyri of other authors. It is becoming more and more certain that, if our Greek classical texts have been much corrupted since they left the hands of their authors, that corruption must have taken place very early, and must have been due to the deliberate intention of editors rather than to the ignorant blunders of scribes."

Next, there is a paper, by Mr. B. P. Grenfell, on some more Greek papyri, brought from Egypt by the Rev. A. C. Headlam, which have now likewise found a home in the British Museum. They are all contracts for the sale of house property at Apollonopolis Magna, the modern Edfu, not far from Thebes. They date from the first half of the seventh century, and are interesting as having appended the autograph signatures of the parties. Not less important than these accounts of new discoveries is the first paper, contributed by Mr. T. W. Allen, on "The Composition of some Greek Manuscripts." He here deals particularly with the well-known Laurentian MS. at Florence, which is our principal authority for the text of Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Apollonius Rhodius, taking it as an example of the entire class of Greek codices written about the year 1000 A.D. He shows, with great ingenuity, how the MS. was originally written by two scribes under the direction of a third, who corrected their mistakes (sometimes to the extent of cutting away and adding pages) added the scholia, and introduced a new system of numbering the quires. Finally, we must mention two collations of MSS.: (1) by the late W. H. Simcox, of six codices (or portions of them) of the Revelation of St. John; and (2) of excerpts from the pseudo-Vergilian Aetna contained in a MS. in the Escorial, by Prof. Robinson Ellis, who points out that they agree closely with the excerpts quoted by Bährens from two MSS. at Paris, but that they rarely confirm the reported readings of the Codex Gyraldinus.

In the Classical Review for April (David Nutt), Mr. T. G. Kenyon gives the first account in English of the papyri recently acquired by the Bibliothèque de Genève. He comments upon the fragments of Homer, which have been published by Prof. J. Nicole, though without any materials for indicating their probable date. One of them happens to contain part of the same book of the Odyssey as the British Museum papyrus mentioned above; and it supplies a few interesting variants. Another fragment, which covers from xi. 788 to xii. 9 of the Iliad, is of far greater importance, for it adds no less than eighteen lines to the received text, besides diverging more or less seriously from it in other respects. Prof. Nicole states that the handwriting resembles that of the Petrie fragment, which is of the third century B.C. Prof. J. E. B. Mayor draws attention to the prospectus of the new Thesaurus Linguae Latinae, which has been undertaken by the five Academies of Berlin, Göttingen, Leipzig, Munich, and Vienna. The editors-in-chief are Profs. Bücheler, Wölfflin, and Leo. For a few writers, the existing special lexicons are recognised as sufficient. For the remainder, complete indices omnium verborum et locorum, on Meusel's system, are to be compiled. The archaic and golden Latin (including inscriptions) will be reduced to slips in its entirety, the silver Latin for the most part, the later Latin in a selection. When the special indices have been made, they will be sorted alphabetically, statistics taken of the frequency of occurrence of words and forms of words, and the meanings arranged in groups. Thus, the mass of material will be sifted by sub-editors before it comes under the hands of the editors-in-chief. It is calculated that the whole work will not exceed twelve volumes large quarto, containing an average of 1000 pages each. A period of twenty years is allowed for the publication; and the total cost is put at 600,000 marks (£30,000), towards which each of the five Academies will contribute 100,000 marks, the balance being supplied by the sale. Of the reviews, we must be content to mention briefly: Percy Gardner's "Origin of the Lord's Supper," by J. B. Mayor; Goodwin's "Homeric Hymns," by E. E. Sikes; Kaibel's "Style and Text of the Πολιτεία Ἀθηναίων," by H. Richards; Furtwängler's "Masterpieces of Greek Sculpture," by Miss Eugénie Sellers; and Bodesteiner's treatise on the Greek stage, by A. E. Haigh.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following are the subjects of the two evening lectures to be given during the meeting of the British Association at Oxford in August: Prof. J. Shield Nicholson, of Edinburgh, will lecture on "Historical Progress and Ideal Socialism"; and Mr. W. H. White, director of naval construction at the Admiralty, will lecture on "Steam Navigation at High Speeds." Lord Salisbury's inaugural address as president will be delivered on Wednesday, August 8, at 8 p.m.

THE annual meeting of the Museums Association will be held this year at Dublin, from June 26 to 29, under the presidency of Dr. Valentine Ball, director of the Dublin Museum of Science and Fine Art, and formerly of the Geological Survey of India. Among the arrangements are a reception at the Zoological Gardens, and an excursion to the Wicklow Mountains.

DR. H. E. ARMSTRONG has been elected president of the Chemical Society for a second year.

PROF. W. A. TILDEN, of the Mason College, Birmingham, has been appointed to succeed Dr. T. E. Thorpe in the chair of chemistry at the Royal College of Science.

IN connexion with the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, a course of five lectures will be delivered in the lecture room in the gardens of the Zoological Society, Regent's Park, on Saturdays, at 4 p.m., beginning on May 19, by Mr. F. E. Beddard, prosector to the society, entitled "Sketches in Geographical Distribution." The lectures will be illustrated by diagrams; and, so far as possible, the specimens selected to illustrate the course will be animals now living in the society's gardens.

THE philosophical faculty of the University of Göttingen offers for public competition two prizes, of the value of 3400 and 680 marks, for the best investigations of the solubility of mixed crystals. The essays, which may be written in German, Latin, French, or English, must be sent in before the end of August, 1896.

THE paper on "Zoological Regions," read by Mr. A. R. Wallace at the five-hundredth meeting of the Cambridge Natural Science Club last March, is printed at length in the last number of Nature. While accepting the six Scelerian regions, as being both natural and useful, he points out they are more or less conventional, being established solely for the purpose of facilitating the study of the geographical distribution of animals.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. S. ARTHUR STRONG will publish immediately the first part of an edition of an Arabic MS. in the British Museum, containing an account of the Muslim Conquest of Abyssinia in the sixteenth century. Mr. Strong is also engaged upon another MS. in the same collection, namely Alkindi's History of Egypt, in aid of which publication the Secretary of State for India has made a small grant.

THE February number of the Indian Antiquary (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) contains a further instalment of the late Dr. A. C. Burnell's MS. on "The Devil Worship of the Tuluvas," with a coloured plate: and an article on "Traders' Slang in Southern India," by Pandit S. M. Natesa Sastri, giving two lists of conventional numerals: one in which the fractions are all names of flowers or fruit, while the numbers are all derived from philosophical conceptions; the other consisting of entirely arbitrary compounds. He also mentions certain private trade signs, and tells a good story how some traders were enabled, by means of their slang, to turn the tables upon a gang of thieves who had taken them prisoners. Finally, Mr. G. A. Grierson contributes an exhaustive review of Prof. Jacobi's recent work on the composition and date of the Rāmāyana. While accepting Prof. Jacobi's views as to the analysis of the poem—the value of the several recensions, the rejection of the first and seventh book, and of many episodes as later additions—Mr. Grierson contests Prof. Jacobi's date (not later than the sixth century B.C.), as being irreconcilable with the known facts as to the early vernacular use of Prakrit.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

VIKING CLUB.—(Friday, April 27.)

THE Rev. A. Sandison, vice-president, in the chair.—Dr. Karl Blind read a paper on "The Boar's Head Dinner at Oxford and a Teutonic Sun-God." After pointing out that the custom of celebrating Christmas Day by a feast at which the boar's head is a prominent dish was once widely spread throughout Germany and Scandinavia, he described the ceremony still observed at Queen's College, Oxford, as witnessed by himself as a guest some years ago. The boar's head, decked with gilded sprays of bay and rosemary, and with little banners, is brought in in a solemn procession, heralded by trumpeters, when the famous song is sung. The townspeople are admitted to the hall, before the dinner begins, and the gilded sprays and banners are distributed among them. This is a point of great importance, showing that the ceremony was once a public one, concerning the community at large. The legend is that a student walking near Shotover was once attacked by a wild boar. Having no other weapon, he thrust the Aristotle he was studying down the boar's throat, crying "Accipe! Græcum est," whereupon the animal died of such a mass of unwanted learning. In his honour the dinner was instituted. Is there not the bust of Aristotle in the hall of Queen's College to prove the truth of the story? But, unhappily for the legend, it will not bear critical examination; for the ceremony has a much older and more distinguished lineage, being the survival of a sacrificial feast in memory of Freyr, a Teutonic sun-god, representing love, peace, and goodwill. In the Edda it is stated that he owned a bear, Gullinbursti, that is—"Golden-bristles." On this bear, whose golden bristles signify the rays of the sun, he rode daily from east to west across the heavens. In his honour was a feast held at the winter solstice; hence the boar was sacrificed to him in temples and households. A similar custom to that at Oxford, though observed with less ceremony, obtains at St. John's College, Cambridge, on St. John's Day, December 27. It existed formerly at the Inns of Court, in noblemen's houses and yeomen's homesteads, as well as at the court. It has been re-introduced from Germany at the Queen's table. Traces of it are still found in some parts of England, where the boar's head is replaced among the poorer classes by a sucking-pig. In some Christmas carols stress is laid on the fact of the boar "going out of the country" on the twelfth day after Christmas: that is, after the very twelve days of the winter solstice which were hallowed among our Teutonic forefathers when celebrating Yule. The Yule log is itself an emblem of sun-worship, the word Yule meaning "sun-wheel"—perhaps from a root akin to the Greek Helios. The Church, according to her plan of converting heathen festivals and customs to Christian uses, replaced this and kindred winter-solstice festivals by Christmas. In Germany, mumming performances, in which the old deities are still recognisable, precede Christmas even now in villages and small towns. Of Freyr and his sister Freyja, the goddess of love and beauty, it was said that they were received among the Aesir, the gods of the Norse Pantheon, from among the Vanir, on conclusion of a peace between the two formerly hostile divine circles. The word Vanir has perhaps connexion with Venus, and, curiously enough, to her also the pig was sacred. Another Norse emblem of the sun is the boar, Sæhrimnir, who was fabled to be slain and boiled daily for the banquet of the chosen heroes in Valhalla and daily renewed: just as the sun, which is in a boiling state every day and swallowed up every night, uprises whole again each morning. At the Yule festival in Scandinavia a boar was sacrificed, called Sónar-göltr, which may mean either "sun-boar" or "boar of atonement." Upon its vows were made over Bragi's cup, Bragi being the god of poetry and eloquence. In Gothland, in Sweden, a similar ceremony is observed at the present day, though the ancient gods are no longer appealed to. In Sweden, even now, cakes are made at Yule in the shape of a pig; portions of these are scattered over the fields that are to be sown with corn, or given to the ploughboys to eat. In Germany, too, these boar-cakes are used for the Christmas fare. This was of old a sacrifice to Freyr, the ruler over rain and sunshine, who makes the earth fruitful. In Sandwick and Stromness, in Orkney, every family which owns a herd of swine kills one at Christmas. There are traces of a similar custom in France, introduced by the Frankish conquerors who gave that country its name. All these are remnants of ancient religious rites. Freyr was also a god of happiness and good-luck. This remembrance lingers in the modern vulgar German phrase: "Er hat Schwein," "he has luck." In the Edda we read of Freyr's luminous sword, with which he attacked the "Frost Giants." This typifies the power of the sunbeam over the ice of winter. Freyr's character as a solar deity is maintained in the Saga of Gisl, where it is said that the sun always remains on the howe where Thorgrim, Freyr's priest, lies buried. The snow cannot lie there, and vegetation never ceases on that hill. The Eddic Skirnismál tells the story of Freyr's love for the beautiful Gerda; of the mission of his envoy, Skirnir, whom he sent to woo her; and of the harshness with which that servant performed his task. Such apparent harshness is to be accounted for by the fact that Gerda represents the cold, frozen earth, which at first repels the advances of the sun. The nine days of waiting, before his heart's desire could be granted him, which Freyr deploras in the story, symbolise the nine months of the Northern winter. Though the Odinic faith is gone, the old customs still live on among us; and of this the Boar's Head dinner at Oxford offers a striking instance. It is a survival of a rite which many a Viking must have observed at Yule-tide, even when abroad. We are far removed to-day from the ideas which gave rise to such ceremonies, but not farther than from kindred ideas of the Greeks and Romans. "And I therefore believe," Dr. Karl Blind said in conclusion, "that it is well worth our while to study these things, which connect the past with the present. In this way, through a better understanding of the mythological conceptions of our own forebears, we shall derive a poetic enjoyment similar to that which we derive from noble classic sources, but which it would be an error to think could only be derived from them."—After a discussion, in which Mr. Edwin H. Baverstock, Dr. Robert Gwynne, and Mr. Albany F. Major, hon. secretary, took part, the president thanked Dr. Karl Blind for his erudite and eloquent address.

GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Friday, April 27.)

PROF. E. DOWDEN, president, delivered an address on "Werther," as illustrated by the Sentimental Movement in English Literature," of which the following is a brief summary. The direct influence of Werther is seen in the literature of imitation which it called forth in almost every language of Europe. Among English books of the Werther group are three which are of little importance in themselves, but which represent three phases of the English sentimental movement in literature: The Letters of Charlotte during Her Connexion with Werther is sentimental and moral; Eleanora, which tells of an episode in Werther's life before his acquaintance with Lotte, is sentimental, but does not aim at moral teaching, it is written (poor art as it is) only with a view to art; The Slave of Passion, or the Fruits of Werther is of the humanitarian and sentimental school of Henry Mackenzie's Man of Feeling. In the sentimental movement in English literature these were the three chief phases—the moralising, represented by Richardson; the artistic, represented by Sterne; and the philanthropic, represented by Mackenzie. The movement was attended by grave moral dangers; but it was of service in an age of much coarseness and dull sensuality. To trick up fine feelings before the mirror was perhaps better than to be brutal, and unconscious of brutality. But the sentimental movement in the narrower sense was only part of the great enfranchisement of the passions which took place in the eighteenth century, after a period of moral equilibrium, when the ideal aimed at was one of moderation and good sense. It was saved in England from its own dangers and errors by coalescing with the new philanthropy of the second half of the century. Its decline in pure literature is indicated by Mackenzie's novel of warning against emotional self-indulgence, Julia de Roubigne, and still more by Monk Lewis's boyish satire The Effusion of Sensibility. Goethe in Werther studies the malady of his age, as one who was himself infected and had become his own physician.

FINE ART.

MORELLI'S CRITICAL STUDIES OF ITALIAN PAINTERS.

"KUNSTKRITISCHE STUDIEN ÜBER ITALIENISCHE MALEREI."—Die Galerie zu Berlin. Von Ivan Lermolieff; Herausgegeben von Dr. Gustav Frizzoni. (Leipzig: Brockhaus.)

La Galleria Morelli in Bergamo. Descritta ed Illustrata da Gustavo Frizzoni. (Bergamo: Fratelli Bolis.)

"MORELLI'S CRITICAL STUDIES OF ITALIAN PAINTERS."—Vol. II.: The Galleries of Munich and Dresden. Translated by Constance Jocelyn Ffoulkes. (John Murray.)

We must plead guilty to having allowed an unduly long interval to pass since the issue of the last volume of "Morelli's Critical Studies of Italian Painters" in its amended and definitive form; but we console ourselves somewhat with the recollection that the epoch-making volumes dealing respectively with the Borghese and Doria-Panfilii collections, and with the State Galleries of Munich and Dresden, were criticised at great length in the ACADEMY as they successively appeared. The present volume was left in an incomplete shape by the great Italian critic at his death. Copious additional notes were found among his papers on all the main points raised, since the publication of the original volume of Kunstkritische Studien, in connexion with its final section nominally discussing the Gallery of Berlin, but, unfortunately, no complete text. It is owing to the loving care and the unremitting labour of Dr. Frizzoni, the follower and devoted friend of Morelli, that it has ultimately become possible to publish his last and by no means least important work. The groundwork remains the text of the original volume, but the variations and subsequent developments of the original themes are so important that the book practically becomes a new one. Dr. Frizzoni has wisely preserved, wherever he could, the ipsissima verba of the author, supplementing these only where it has appeared absolutely necessary to do so, in order to make the text homogeneous and complete. A certain patchiness, a certain want of absolute consistency in minor detail, is the inevitable result; but we may nevertheless feel deeply grateful to the editor for having attempted and finally accomplished, with a success unlooked for under the discouraging circumstances, a task of peculiar difficulty.

As an appendix to the critical discussion of the Italian pictures at Berlin appear Lermolieff's three essays—by this time familiar to most serious students of Italian painting—on the earliest manifestations and developments of the art of Raphael, and his relations to Timoteo Viti, Perugino, and Pinturicchio respectively. It is true that these essays—respectively headed "Perugino oder Raphael," "Raphael's Jugendentwicklung," and "Noch einmal das Venetianische Skizzenbuch"—go over some of the ground already traversed in the body of the book; but notwithstanding this, we herald with genuine pleasure their reappearance, as showing Lermolieff's critical and controversial methods at their very best. His mode of attacking and persistently heckling an adversary, though it rarely, if ever, oversteps the bounds of fairness, in a text-book often disturbs the equanimity of the student, and obscures the permanent character of his own work. Here, however, where he is replying to adversaries who are tilting at him from all sides at once, one cannot but admire the youthful vigour which he still preserves in his maturity, his bellicose ardour, and above all those closely-reasoned and victorious arguments, derived from his scientific method of approaching the old masters, with the aid of which he faces and checks one foe after another. Meeting scorn with scorn, but also courtesy with courtesy, he throws heavily the eminent archivist, M. Eugène Müntz; he goes far to prove, against the weighty arguments of Herr Lippmann, assertions which must at first have been deemed to savour of audacious paradox; he rightly brushes aside the not very important contribution to the subject of Dr. August Schmarzow, and seeks more completely to convince the already half-convinced Anton Springer—by far the ablest and the least prejudiced among those German art-historians of light and leading who have applied themselves to the special study of the art of Raphael. Into the complicated questions arising out of the relations of Timoteo Viti to the youthful Raphael, out of the famous "Venetian Sketch-Book," and in connexion with influence exercised by Perugino and Pinturicchio respectively over the divine youth during the purely Umbrian phase of his artistic career, it is impossible to enter on the present occasion. Students of Morelli's original work will remember his main contentions: that Timoteo Viti was the first teacher of Raphael, and the artist influencing, not, as formerly held, the artist influenced; that the results of his teaching and example, temporarily obscured by the overpowering attraction exercised over Sanzio by Perugino and Pinturicchio, showed themselves again, in a modified shape, in those works which bridge over the space between the Perugian and the Florentine periods; that during the Perugian period of Raphael's Lehrjahre the influence exercised by Pinturicchio was at least as great as that of Perugino, the head of the studio and the school; that to the less celebrated of the two elder masters belongs almost in its entirety the "Venetian Sketch-Book," and with it a whole series of drawings in the Albertina, at Lille, at Oxford, at the Städelsches Institut of Frankfurt, in the Louvre, and elsewhere, which down to Morelli's time were almost unanimously attributed to Raphael's first period. The too little heeded art of Pinturicchio, whom Vasari did so much to dénigrer, stands forth after Lermolieff's searching demonstrations a much bigger and a more original thing than it did when he was conveniently summed up as a sort of satellite and understudy of Perugino. More and more do these daringly original and ingeniously worked-out theories of the Milanese critic find support and corroboration in the independent researches of unprejudiced students of Italian art. It is quite possible not to be in complete agreement with him on all points of detail, not to be absolutely carried away by all his ascriptions and arguments; but it is difficult, following without parti pris his main contentions and the technical proofs by which they are accompanied, not to be convinced that here we have at last a solid basis for the study of Raphael's earlier career, a classification of his earlier paintings and drawings, resting on something firmer than mere individual conjecture, varying with the eye and the temperament of the particular beholder. And, again, Morelli's views, startling and iconoclastic as they at first appeared, are thoroughly in accordance with the normal development of an artistic temperament such as that of the suave Sanzio, whose genius, with all its force and elasticity, had a very strong admixture of the feminine—not to be confounded with the effeminate—causing him in his beginnings to cling for support to painters of infinitely inferior power, whose art, assimilating and making his own, he then soon left behind in his rapid progress towards maturity and perfection.

Morelli does full justice, now as heretofore, to the splendid artistic treasures contained in the Berlin Gallery, in which he holds the Florentine, Ferrarese, and Early Venetian schools to be more finely represented than in any collection north of the Alps. A juxtaposition in the volume of the two versions of Botticelli's "Giuliano de' Medici"—the one at Berlin, the other formerly in Morelli's own collection, and now with the rest of that collection in the Municipal Gallery of Bergamo—goes further than any words, even those of the author himself, could do to prove the superiority of the Morellian example over that which at Berlin assumes to be the original. Again, to our mind the author convincingly makes out that the curious "Madonna and Child" (No. 104a of the new Berlin Catalogue), ascribed by Dr. Bode to Verrocchio himself, is far too grotesque and altogether too second-rate to be by that master, revealing, as its types do, rather the influence of Antonio Pollajuolo. Here, again, it was a happy idea of Dr. Frizzoni's to give with the text a reproduction of Verrocchio's exquisite terra-cotta "Madonna and Child" in the gallery of the Sta. Maria Nuova hospital at Florence—his very finest production of this particular class. Those who look from the one to the other reproduction will be pretty well-able to solve the question of attribution for themselves, and they can scarcely fail to do so in a sense favourable to Morelli's contention. The author appears to us somewhat less successful in dealing with the remaining pictures belonging to this peculiar group—that is, the three Madonnas at the National Gallery, the Berlin Gallery, and the Städel Institut respectively; the "Tobias and the Archangel" at the National Gallery; and the "Tobias with the three Archangels" in the Accademia delle Belle Arti of Florence. The reason is that he too stubbornly pushes aside the question of the influence exercised upon this group by Verrocchio, apparently because he distrusts the source whence the theory comes. We may assume that in the present state of the controversy very few serious students of Italian art will be found to re-assert that our "Tobias and the Archangel" is from the brush of Verrocchio himself. Nevertheless, that this curious, if not a little grotesque, work, as well as the other paintings above indicated, show, in a varying degree, the influence of the great painter-sculptor is hardly to be denied. Dr. Frizzoni, in his book on Morelli's collection at Bergamo presently to be mentioned, has done fuller justice to the theory started by Crowe and Cavalcaselle and developed by Bode and Bayersdorfer. In discussing our author's beautiful little "Tobias with the Archangel"—yet another variation of this subject dear to the Florentines—he acknowledges the influence of Leonardo's master, as shown in the types, while putting aside any idea of his personal participation in the work.

One of the interesting novelties of the present volume is the suggestion that Credi's beautiful early work, "The Madonna and Child enthroned between two saints," in the cathedral of Pistoia, is in part the work of his master Verrocchio. Certainly, the altar-piece is in gravity and dignity of design so far beyond anything else that Credi has done—even the famous examples in the Accademia of Florence and the Louvre—that such a collaboration of master and pupil appears highly probable. The muscular, sculptural figure of St. John the Baptist is very characteristic of the author of the "Baptism," and is such as Credi has not again reproduced in all its severity. On the other hand, there is much in the delicacy of the finish and the loving elaboration of the detail to confirm the view that, while the general design reveals the master's spirit and hand, the working out and execution are those of the pupil. A famous study of drapery in the Louvre collection of drawings, there attributed alternatively to Leonardo or Credi, but probably by the latter master, appears to us to be the design for that which in the altarpiece covers the lower limbs of the Madonna. The interesting if not a little repellent "Portrait of a Lady" in the Liechtenstein Gallery at Vienna, put forward by Dr. Müller-Walde and other German critics as from the hand of Leonardo himself, is by Morelli tentatively assigned to Verrocchio, while Dr. Frizzoni inclines to the opinion that it may be an early work by Lorenzo di Credi under the influence of his master.

We still feel unable to follow the eminent critic in his ascription of the Montoliveto "Annunciation" (No. 1288 in the Uffizi Gallery, and there ascribed to Leonardo da Vinci) to Ridolfo Ghirlandajo, although in the new volume he much elaborates and strengthens his case. The "Annunciation" appears to us still, to all intents and purposes, a work of the Quattrocento—more precisely of the last quarter of the fifteenth century; and the imitation, if imitation it be, is that of Leonardo in his earlier Florentine phase, not of the transformed and much more Milanese Leonardo who returned to Florence in 1503, and whose artistic relation to the youthful Ridolfo is shown in such productions of the latter as the "Goldsmith" of the Pitti Gallery, long accepted as the work of the greater master. As regards the interesting "Madonna and Child," No. 27 in the Berlin Catalogue—and there, though no longer without a query, ascribed to Mantegna—Morelli furnishes the most convincing grounds for excluding it from the list of the great Paduan's genuine works; but his positive ascription of the panel to Bartolommeo Vivarini, though it has a good deal in its favour, is more open to challenge. It must, however, be preferred to Dr. Bode's hypothesis, that the painting may perhaps be a Mantegnesque work of Giovanni Bellini. To that master's early Paduan productions it appears to us to bear hardly even the most superficial resemblance.

It may be remarked by the way that Lermolieff, in his repudiation of the theory of influences, goes a good deal too far in the opposite direction. Surely if we compare the later with the earlier phase of Muranese art—Antonio with Bartolommeo Vivarini—we can hardly resist the conclusion that the all-pervading influence of Mantegna did make itself felt in the work of the latter. Surely the art of the mighty Paduan asserted its encroaching power, whether at first or second hand, on all the chief schools of North Italy—on the Ferrarese, the Venetian and later Muranese, the Veronese, and the Vicentine. And, again, does not Mantegna's own early career show traces of various distinct influences? In addition to those of his master Squarcione, of Donatello, and perhaps of Jacopo Bellini, do we not find in his earliest productions echoes of the elder Muranese school itself? A comparison of

MESSRS. METHUEN
will issue on Monday,
May 7th, a New Novel by
STANLEY WEYMAN, entitled "UNDER the RED ROBE."

The Third Edition of "The RUBICON" being nearly exhausted, a Fourth Edition is in preparation.

E. F. Benson.—THE RUBICON. By E. F. BENSON, Author of "Dodo." 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"The anticipations which must have been formed by all readers of 'Dodo' will in no wise be disappointed by 'The Rubicon.' The new work is well written, stimulating, unconventional, and, in a word, characteristic. Intellectual force is never absent, and the keen observation and knowledge of character, of which there is abundant evidence, are aided by real literary power."—Birmingham Post.

"We congratulate Mr. Benson upon an exceptional achievement. He has conceived and executed successfully an analytical study of modern life in which a certain salt of humour serves, at least, to keep the pages wholesome. The change and fusion of character amid the fires of passion have been rightly felt and justly depicted from the beginning, events have fallen out in a natural sequence, and the whole story conveys an impression of reality. The hook is a notable advance upon Mr. Benson's previous work."—National Observer.

"'The Rubicon' seems to us more promising than 'Dodo.'"—Literary World.

"An advance upon 'Dodo.'"—Spectator.

"Mr. Benson's very clever and deeply interesting novel—a novel far superior to 'Dodo.'"—Sussex Daily News.

"Mr. Benson's second novel is better artistically than his first. The character-drawing is excellent."—Globe.

Baring-Gould.—THE QUEEN OF LOVE.

By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," "Cheap-Jack Zita," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

[Ready.]
A story of the Cheshire salt region—a new district for the exercise of Mr. Baring-Gould's original and powerful gifts.

Richard Pryce.—WINIFRED MOUNT.

By RICHARD PRYCE, Author of "Miss Maxwell's Affections," "Time and the Woman," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

[Ready.]
A story of society by Mr. Pryce, "whose clever pen," says the Athenaeum, "has the lightness and ease of Octave Feuillet."

Mrs. Oliphant.—THE PRODIGALS.

By MRS. OLIPHANT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Ready.]

Stanley Weyman.—UNDER the RED

ROBE. By STANLEY WEYMAN, Author of "A Gentleman of France," &c. With 12 Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

Gilbert Parker.—The TRANSLATION

of a SAVAGE. By GILBERT PARKER, Author of "Pierre and His People," "Mrs. Falchion," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A story with a powerful and pathetic motive by a writer who has rapidly made his way to the front.

Constance Smith.—A CUMBERER OF

the GROUND. By CONSTANCE SMITH, Author of "The Riddle of Lawrence Haviland." 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

NEW EDITIONS.

EIGHTH EDITION NOW READY.

Marie Corelli.—BARABBAS: a Dream of the World's Tragedy. By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "A Romance of Two Worlds," "Vendetta," &c. Eighth Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

Miss Corelli's new romance has been received with much disapprobation by the secular papers, and with warm welcome by the religious papers. By the former she has been accused of blasphemy and bad taste; a gory nightmare; a hideous tragedy; grotesque vulgarisation; unworthy of criticism; vulgar rant; and sickening details;—these are some of the secular flowers of speech. On the other hand, the religious papers praised the dignity of conception, the reverence and reverence that characterised the book.

E. F. Benson.—DODO: a Detail of the Day. By E. F. BENSON. Thirteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Baring-Gould.—CHEAP-JACK ZITA.

By S. BARING-GOULD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A cheap edition of a story which has been recognised as Mr. Baring-Gould's most original effort since "Mehalah."

Norman Gale.—CRICKET SONGS. By

NORMAN GALE. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Also a Limited Edition on Hand-made Paper, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Also a Small Edition on Japanese Paper, demy 8vo, 21s. net. [In the press.]

METHUEN & CO., 36, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

Mantegna's early polyptychon, with single figures of St. Luke and other Saints, at the Brera, with a polyptychon by Giovanni and Antonio da Murano in the same gallery, should go far to convince the beholder that the younger master owes much to the elder as regards both the general arrangement of his altar-piece and the conception of some of the figures. To us it has always appeared that Mantegna asserted in Upper Italy a power of attraction analogous to that exercised north of the Alps by Roger van der Weyden, whose influence, however, extended itself over a much wider area than that commanded by the Paduan—including, as it did, the Netherlands, Germany, and even the Iberian Peninsula.

In dealing with the Lombard schools Morelli further discusses the art of Boltraffio, and gives the opinion, which we can hardly imagine being called into question by anyone acquainted with the picture, that the beautiful "Madonna and Child" in the gallery of Buda-Pest (there ascribed to Leonardo da Vinci) is really from the brush of Boltraffio, and not from that of an anonymous pupil of Leonardo. In the author's very best manner, because not overlaid with controversial matter, are the passages of the work dealing with the art of Bernardino Luini and Gaudenzio Ferrari. Indeed, Morelli may be said to have been the first to define the true position in North Italian art of Gaudenzio, whose pronounced and often annoying mannerisms should not blind us to the passion and power, to the pictorial splendour, of his works, both in fresco and in oils. Gaudenzio, as presented to us by Morelli, is no longer the exponent of a composite and artificially generated style, the friend and companion of Raphael (!). He stands forth as, even in his most mannered and least admirable performances, an artist of absolute originality. He is shown to have been legitimately and normally developed, on the one side from the parent school of Verelli, on the other from the Milanese Bramantino, and to have imported into his art neither more nor less of the Raphaelian suavity than might be acquired unconsciously and at second hand by any Italian painter flourishing during the first half of the sixteenth century.

Dr. Gustavo Frizzoni's charming volume, reproducing with a commentary, as instructive as it is modest and unassuming in tone, the chief paintings in the choice collection left by Morelli to the city of Bergamo, is as fitting a monument as could be desired to the memory of his revered teacher and friend. While in general adopting and sometimes further developing his master's views, he does not scruple, in the rare cases where the facts of the case appear to call for it, to take up an independent attitude. Thus, he acquiesces in Dr. Bode's classification of the beautiful little "Tobias and the Archangel" in this collection; and elsewhere in the volume he records his newly-acquired conviction that the interesting little "St. Margaret," ascribed by Morelli to Timoteo Viti, and so frequently referred to in his works, is, though unquestionably a design for which Raphael's precursor is answerable, a copy and not an original.

Among the reproductions which grace the book are to be found the "Lionello d'Este" of Pisanello—not a pendant, be it noted, of the portrait just acquired by the Louvre, but a much smaller work than the latter; the "Death of Virginia" and the "Giuliano de' Medici" of Botticelli; the interesting Ferrarese "St. John the Baptist," the author of which is still to seek; the two beautiful "Madonnas," representing successive stages in the earlier practice of Giovanni Bellini; the rare and lovely little work of Moretto's early time, "Christ and the Woman of Samaria," &c. Among the works by Dutch masters may be noted, as especially interesting, the "Peasant's Family with the Satyr," a signed work by Barend Fabritius; the masterly "Smoker" by Jan Miense Molenaer; and the superb portrait of a young Dutch lady, which Dr. Frizzoni thinks may possibly be a likeness of Saskia by Rembrandt, but which appears to us rather the unusually fine production of a follower under the master's immediate influence. Morelli never affected to speak ex cathedra with regard to Netherlandish painting, of which he was, nevertheless, no mean judge. To his unerring instinct for what is fine and true in art, even when it has so few connecting links with that of his own land, these few admirably chosen specimens of the masters of Holland bear witness, even though we may not be able in every case to endorse without question the collector's own attributions.

Miss Constance Ffoulkes, to whose able pen we already owe an excellent translation of Morelli's volume on the Borghese and Doria-Panfilii Galleries, has now given us, with equal skill and accuracy, an English version of the second volume, dealing with the Galleries of Munich and Dresden. The translator had, to start with, a considerable acquaintance with the Italian schools of the golden prime, and she, moreover, enjoyed the advantage of receiving guidance and advice from Morelli himself, so that she found herself in every way well equipped to perform the arduous task so far successfully carried out by the publication of the present volume. We hope that she will be able to devote her energies to bringing before the public in an English dress the final volume with which we have now been dealing. The English translation has certain advantages over the original volume itself, seeing that it brings forward—in more than one instance for the first time in an English work on art—important illustrations not to be found in the German edition. Among these are the "Madonna and Child with Saints," by Giorgione, in the Prado Gallery at Madrid; the now famous "Venus" of the same master at Dresden; the Giorgione portrait at Buda-Pest, now recognised as that of the Venetian poet, Antonio Broccardo; the beautiful "Madonna of Paitone," by Moretto, so coarsely travestied in the Dresden copy first repudiated by Morelli; and the curious "Salome with the head of St. John the Baptist," by Bartolommeo Veneto, formerly put down to the school of Leonardo da Vinci, and first identified by Dr. Frizzoni as the work of this hybrid, puzzling painter.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

THE CHAMPS DE MARS SALON.

Paris: April 24, 1894.

THE Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts has stolen a march on its rival, and will open its exhibition to-morrow; while the original Salon, that of the Champs Elysées, will open as usual on May 1. This artistic coup de Jarnac, and the charge of ten francs for admission to-day (Varnishing-day), afford another example of the mercantile spirit which now reigns in the world of art.

The most notable feature of this Salon is the large addition of foreigners. New-comers have joined the contingent of American, British, German, Danish, and Swedish artists who exhibited last year, and their work generally displays a most pleasing variety of talent and originality.

From a purely artistic point of view, the most novel portion of the exhibition is the collection of 230 gouaches, or water-colour drawings, by M. James Tissot, illustrating the life of Christ, in five parts—"The Childhood," "The Preaching," "The Holy Week," "The Passion," "The Resurrection." In addition, the same artist has sent views of Jerusalem and the country around painted in oils, and some eighty architectural designs, fragments of monuments, and ruins. For the last eight years M. Tissot has been engaged in this most difficult series of "compositions," which has been a labour of love and faith. Two rooms on the ground floor have been specially designed and decorated for him by M. Jambon, so that the collection may be viewed under the most favourable conditions. Chapter by chapter, almost verse by verse, M. Tissot has studied and portrayed the personages, the incidents, and the scenes in the life of Christ. The Apostles, the fishermen, Joseph the carpenter, the Pharisees and Sadducees, all the various types of Jews and Arabs, the Temple of Herod, Jerusalem, Nazareth, and all the familiar spots, are presented to us with life-like fidelity. This collection is a Salon in itself, though the remaining studies and pictures will not be exhibited until next year.

On reaching the galleries upstairs, we are at once attracted by M. Puvis de Chavanne's large decorative panels intended for the staircase and ceiling of the Hôtel de Ville. These splendid pieces of decorative art were exhibited unfinished last year; now they present a most admirable and complete series of highly ornamental pictures. The large panel at the end of Room I., occupied last year by M. Puvis de Chavanne's "Victor Hugo offering his Lyre to the City of Paris," is now entirely taken up with a Provence landscape by M. Montenard. M. Roll has not sent any large canvas like his last year's "Fête à Versailles," but a series of varied and interesting subjects, among which is a very remarkable "Ouvriers de la Terre." It is an early morning effect, the moon not yet set: in the foreground a woman with her child clasped to her breast, while her husband, a country labourer, walks, his head bent, behind her; the tone of the picture is grey and sombre, corresponding with the expression of poverty, toil, and sorrow of the man and his wife. M. Dagnan's "Christ at Gethsemane" is the best of his four exhibits, deeply impressive and simple in treatment. The figure of Christ is wrapt in a dark mantle, which hangs straight from the shoulders, leaving no curves of drapery; the light is centred on the face, which wears a most beautiful expression of resignation and hope. The same artist's portrait of M. Bartet, of the Comédie Française, is an exquisite piece of finished work. Another fine portrait is that of the sculptor, Dampy, by M. Aman-Jean, who represents his friend in his leather apron, seated, his hands clasped on his knees, with a look full of deep thought on his face. The quaintly adorned wooden frame in which the portrait is set adds to the originality of the picture. A splendid piece of painting is M. Gandara's portrait of the Princesse de Chimay, close to which, in strange contrast, hangs Mr. Whistler's full-length of the Comte de Montesquieu-Fézensac, who looks as if he had just been summoned from the world of phantasms. Mr. Sargent's portrait of a pretty young lady in a décolleté velvet dress with spangled silver trimming, seated on a sofa of neutral fawn colour, the curtains behind and the background being of the same tone, is one of the best in the salon.

We miss the names of Watts, Burne-Jones, and Alma Tadema; but Messrs. Henry Moore, Guthrie, Lavery, and Stott of Oldham, are among the English exhibitors this year.

C. NICHOLSON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. E. J. POYNTER, R.A., has been appointed director of the National Gallery, in succession to Sir Frederick Burton, who retires by reason of age.

IN addition to the Royal Academy, the following exhibitions will open next week: at the Fine Art Society's—some paintings and sketches of "Military England of To-day," by Mr. J. B. Beadle; and also a collection of drawings of Venice, by the late Charles E. Herne, together with pictures contributed to the Herne Fund by members of the Royal Anglo-Australian Society of Artists; at Mr. J. Eichenhauser's gallery in New Bond-street, a collection of portraits of beautiful women and famous men, together with a few examples of the old Dutch masters; at the Gallery of Sacred Art (formerly the Doré Gallery), a new picture by Mr. Herbert Schmalz, entitled "Mary Magdalene"; and at the Carlton Gallery, Pall Mall, "The Derby, 1893," by Mr. G. D. Giles.

Royal Academy Pictures, 1894, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. in five parts, as last year. The first of these will be ready early in May. Reproductions of some important pictures will appear exclusively in its pages.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. have in the press, for publication in May, a popular treatise on The Art of Illustration, by Mr. Henry Blackburn. It will contain information on drawing for the press and kindred subjects, with numerous illustrations.

THE Duke of York will preside at a lecture on "Future Researches in Palestine, and the Important Results to be Expected from Them," to be delivered by Major Conder on Tuesday, next, at 4 p.m. at the Westminster Town Hall. The proceeds will be devoted to the explorations at Jerusalem, for which a Firman has just been granted by the Sublime Porte.

THE seventh ordinary general meeting of the Egypt Exploration Fund will be held in the hall of the Zoological Society, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, May 23, at 4 p.m., with Sir John Fowler, the president, in the chair.

THE Dulwich Picture Gallery will be open on Sundays, from 2 to 5 p.m., during the months of May, June and July.

IF the number of persons attending picture galleries when they are opened on Sundays be a proof of the success of the movement—or rather a justification of it—the Sunday opening of the Guildhall exhibition must at least be held to have been justified; for, on the first Sunday, so great was the throng that once, if not oftener, the doors had to be closed until there was some abatement of the crowd. The movement, we observe, is spreading to the provinces, even if it did not originate there. One or more of the large corporation galleries in provincial places are open habitually on the Sunday; and at Cardiff a temporary loan exhibition has lately been organised, with a view of testing the popular demand for the privilege. Several local amateurs have contributed works by English masters of importance—Turner's "Ewenny Priory" and Romney's unusual "Italian Landscape, with Laundresses" figuring in the show—while three living artists—Mr. G. F. Watts, Mr. Albert Goodwin, and Sir E. B. Jones—have lent interesting pictures, in token, it may be presumed, of sympathy with the movement. It may be somewhat amusing to chronicle the fact that perhaps the most important picture shown at Cardiff by Mr. Watts is his portrait of the late Lord Shaftesbury. The irony of Fate has reserved strange treatment for that ever thoughtful and admirable philanthropist; for, while at Cardiff his portrait figures as one of the chief attractions of an exhibition from which he would certainly have felt it his duty to withhold his sympathy, his monument in London—Mr. Alfred Gilbert's Fountain—takes the form of an unabashed and valiant Cupid, directing his gaze, and presumably his arrow, towards the ladies in Piccadilly-circus. Of both these circumstances, let us trust that the shade of the deceased nobleman, in the Elysian Fields, remains unaware.

IS not the craze for Constable in what are, after all, sometimes the least masterly of his manifestations, carried to a length almost as ridiculous as the craze for orchids and postage stamps? On Saturday, at Christie's, over six thousand pounds was obtained for a canvas by this fashionable and potent craftsman, not comparable for one moment with such an admitted masterpiece as that which has for some years been an ornament of the National Gallery. The picture sold at Christie's made some mark at an exhibition at Lille, a few years earlier than the date at which the more memorable "Hay Wain" made its justified success in Paris. The Lille picture, though obviously not without some merits of force and originality, was scarcely in the best sense "representative"; and it is much to be feared that, in the matter of Constable, wealthy or speculative buyers are just now being led away by the clamour of a name.

THE last number of the Mittheilungen of the German Archaeological Institute (viii. 4) contains an elaborate review of Prof. Middleton's Ancient Rome by Dr. Ch. Hülsen, who asserts that it is a dilettante work, disfigured by inaccurate statements and drawings, and characterised by worse plagiarisms than those of which Mr. Middleton has himself complained. In the same number Dr. Hülsen also gives a convenient summary, with illustrations, of the recent discoveries made in connexion with the Pantheon.

WE quote the following from the Athens correspondent of the Times:—

"Some interesting discoveries have just been made in Central Crete by Mr. Arthur Evans. The sites of two hitherto unknown primeval cities have been found, one with an acropolis and a votive grotto containing Mycenaean idols; the other at Goulas, with stupendous ruins, perhaps those of what was once the principal centre of the Mycenaean world, also with an acropolis and the remains of a primitive palace. Traces were also discovered of the Mycenaean system of writing, which seems to have been closely parallel with the Hittite and pictographic systems. Another system, apparently alphabetic, has been discovered, approaching more nearly to the Cypriote syllabary, the objects being reduced to linear forms."

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. MANNS'S annual benefit concert took place at the Crystal Palace last Saturday afternoon, when the programme contained two instrumental novelties. It commenced with the first of the three Overtures ("In der Natur") recently published by Dr. Dvorák under the general title "Triple Overture." The second and third were recently performed at the Palace, but surely they ought to have been all given at the same time; in the very first of the set there is a theme which plays a very tragic part in the third, entitled "Otello." The first has pleasing subject matter and picturesque orchestration; the music, of course, clever, is fresh and healthy, and there is more than one sign in it that Wagner and Grieg rank among Dvorák's favourite composers. The Triple Overture seems as if it required its poetical basis to be known; this is especially the case with the third section, but it is also necessary to establish the connexion between the various sections. Dvorák evidently works in the direction of programme music, and yet, as in his Symphony in G, he withholds the programme. It has been justly remarked that much so-called programme music is not such, while much music, supposed, from the absence of title, to be absolute, has really a poetical basis. The second novelty was a Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra by M. Saint-Saëns, entitled "Africa." The piece is of comparatively loose construction; various themes, more or less characteristic, are heard. It is very fairly described in the programme-book as an "amusing and ingenious" work. It was admirably played by Miss Fanny Davies. The programme included Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, performed by the band under the direction of Mr. Manns with romantic feeling and verve. Miss Rina Allerton made her first appearance as a vocalist. While not successful in Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," she was heard to better advantage in Grieg's Solvejg's song. Miss Brema sang Schubert's "Erl King" with some power, but the song is far better suited for a baritone voice.

Master Bronislaw Huberman (of Warsaw) gave a violin recital at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. It would be interesting to know his exact age. Some press opinions were given on the programme. According to one, Joachim, in June 1892, speaks of him as "the eight years' old boy"; yet, according to a testimonial, signed by a professor of the Paris Conservatoire in April, 1894, Master Huberman is still an "eight years' old" boy. Well, even supposing him to be in his teens, he is wonderful. He first played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, with Mr. Ganz at the pianoforte. At the outset, his intonation was not quite perfect, owing perhaps, to nervousness or excitement; but he soon recovered himself. The performance was remarkable for fine technique, intelligence, and feeling. The reading was modelled on that of Dr. Joachim, with whom, if we mistake not, Master Huberman studied for a while. He afterwards played a transcription of Chopin's early Nocturne in E flat, with astonishing skill and taste. But to our mind he was far more wonderful in a movement from a Bach Suite; the technical difficulties were overcome with ease, but the music was interpreted with marked intelligence, and with an elan quite surprising. Master Huberman will no doubt soon give a second concert. He appears to be a healthy boy, and to play as if he were really fond of music. He has already tried his hand at composition.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

HURST & BLACKETT'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, uniformly bound, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

The AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK
By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS. By MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of
"JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE. By M. E.
LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

NINETTE. By the AUTHOR of "VERA," "BLUE ROSES," &c.

A CROOKED PATH. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

ONE REASON WHY. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

MAHME NOUSIE. By G. MANVILLE FENN.

THE IDES of MARCH. By G. M. ROBINS.

PART of the PROPERTY. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

CASPAR BROOKE'S DAUGHTER. By ADELINE SERGEANT.

JANET: a Novel. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

A RAINBOW at NIGHT. By the Author of "MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE."

IN the SUNTIME of her YOUTH. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

FROM HARVEST to HAYTIME. By the AUTHOR of "TWO ENGLISH GIRLS."

THE WINNING of MAY. By the AUTHOR of "DR. EDITH ROMNEY."

SIR ANTHONY. By ADELINE SERGEANT.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, 6s.

TO RIGHT THE WRONG.

DONOVAN.
WE TWO.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT-ERRANT.

WON BY WAITING.
A HARDY NORSEMAN.

Each Work Complete in 1 vol., price 5s., Illustrated by Sir J. E. MILLAIS, Sir JOHN GILBERT, HOLMAN HUNT, JOHN LEECH, BIRKET FOSTER, LASLETT POTT, JOHN TENNIEL, E. J. POYNTER, F. SANDYS, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

Of Cheap Editions of Popular Modern Works.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX."

John Halifax, Gentleman.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women.
A Life for a Life.
Nothing New.
The Woman's Kingdom.
Mistress and Maid.

Christian's Mistake.
A Noble Life.
Hannah.
The Unkind Word.
A Brave Lady.
Studies from Life.
Young Mrs. Jardine.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAM SLICK."

Nature and Human Nature.
Wise Saws and Modern Instances.
The Old Judge; or, Life in a Colony.
Traits of American Humour.
The Americans at Home.

BY ELIOT WARBURTON.

The Crescent and the Cross. | Darien.

BY F. W. ROBINSON.

Grandmother's Money. | No Church.

BY JULIA KAVANAGH.

Nathalie. | Adele.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Barbara's History. | Lord Brackenbury.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

Adam Graeme.
Laird of Norlaw.
Agnes.
Life of Irving.

A Rose in June.
Phoebe, Junior.
It was a Lover and his Lass.

BY DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

David Elginbrod.
Robert Falconer.

Alec Forbes.
Sir Gibbie.

BY JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON.

The Real Lord Byron. | A Book about Doctors.

BY VARIOUS AUTHORS.

Through the Long Night. By Mrs. E. LYNN LINTON.
Margaret and her Bridesmaids.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. NORTON.
St. Olave's. By the Author of "Janita's Cross."
My Little Lady. By E. F. POYNTER.
Les Misérables. By VICTOR HUGO.
Annals of an Eventful Life. By Dr. DASENT.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Prof. C. D. YONGE.
Sir Bernard Burke's Family Romance.
Freer's Life of Jeanne D'Albret.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.
Dixon's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.
The Englishwoman in Italy. By Mrs. GRETTON.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1149.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. A. H. SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, Second Edition, buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH in these ISLANDS before the COMING of AUGUSTINE. By the Rev. Canon BROWNE, B.D., D.C.L. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d. [Reading shortly.]

THE CELTIC CHURCH in SCOTLAND. Being an Introduction to the History of the Christian Church in Scotland down to the Death of St. Margaret. By the Right Rev. JOHN DOWDEN, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY in the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. A. R. Eagar. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

RELIGION in JAPAN, SHINTOISM, BUDDHISM, and CHRISTIANITY. By the Rev. G. A. COBBOLD. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE OFFICIAL YEAR BOOK of the CHURCH of ENGLAND for 1894. Furnishing a trustworthy Account of the Condition of the Church of England, and of all Bodies in Communion with her throughout the World. Demy 8vo, paper boards, 2s.; cloth boards, red edges, 4s.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo. Printed in red and black on hand-made paper, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

EMINENT CHRISTIAN WORKERS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By G. BARNETT SMITH, Author of "Everyday Heroes," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

[The lives selected are the following:—Archbishop Tait; Patteson, the Martyr-Bishop; the Earl of Shaftesbury; Bishop Daniel Wilson; Arnold, of Rugby; Bishop Wilberforce; George Moore, the Philanthropist; Hannington, the East African Hero; and Bishop Selwyn.]

THE LIFE of GEORGE HERBERT, of BEMERTON. With Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

[A new life of Herbert, in which a minute inquiry into his career, and the times in which he lived, has brought many new facts to light.]

BUTLER'S "ANALOGY" and MODERN THOUGHT. By the Rev. A. R. EAGAR, D.D. T.C.D. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

EARLY CHRISTIAN MISSIONS of IRELAND, SCOTLAND and ENGLAND. By Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

SIDE LIGHTS on CHURCH HISTORY.—HISTORY of EARLY CHRISTIAN ART. By the Rev. E. L. CUTTS, D.D. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

FOUNDATIONS of SACRED STUDY. By C. J. Ellicott, D.D., Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

ANGLICAN ORDERS and JURISDICTION. By the Rev. EDWARD DENNY, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

LIFE in ALGOMA; or, Three Years of a Clergyman's Life and Work in that Diocese. By H. N. B. Post 8vo, cloth, 2s.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS: HINDUISM. By Sir M. MONIER WILLIAMS, M.A., D.C.L. A New and Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

LESSONS from EARLY ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. Three Lectures delivered in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London, by the Rev. Canon BROWNE, B.D., D.C.L. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

EVOLUTION, CREATION, and the FALL. Lecture to Men. By the Ven. J. M. WILSON, M.A., Archdeacon of Manchester. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 2d.

EVOLUTION as a REPLY to MATERIALISM, PESSIMISM and AGNOSTICISM. Lecture to Men. By the Ven. J. M. WILSON, Archdeacon of Manchester. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 2d.

CHRISTIANITY as the CROWN and GOAL of all the ANCIENT RELIGIONS. A Lecture to Men. By the Ven. J. M. WILSON, M.A., Archdeacon of Manchester. Small post 8vo, paper covers, 2d.

SIMPLE EXPERIMENTS for SCIENCE TEACHING. With numerous Diagrams, including 200 Experiments fully illustrating the Elementary Physics and Chemistry Division in the Evening School Continuation Code. By J. A. BOWER. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MANUALS of HEALTH. Notes on the Ventilation and Warming of Houses, Churches, Schools, and other Buildings. By Prof. E. H. JACOB. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s.

ROMANCE of LOW LIFE AMONGST PLANTS: Facts and Phenomena of Cryptogamic Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth boards, 4s.

VEGETABLE WASPS and PLANT WORMS. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S., Author of "Toilers in the Sea," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

FREAKS and MARVELS of PLANT LIFE; or, Curiosities of Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

FLOWERS of the FIELD. By the late Rev. C. A. Johns. New Edition, with an Appendix on Grasses by C. H. JOHNS, M.A. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

WILD FLOWERS. By Anne Pratt, Author of "Our Native Songsters." 2 vols., with 192 Coloured Plates, 16mo, cloth boards, 8s.

THE FERN PORTFOLIO. By Francis George Heath. 1 vol. (16 in. by 12 in.), cloth, 8s. Fifteen Plates, life size, exquisitely Coloured from Nature, and accompanied by Descriptive Text—all the Species of British Ferns, which comprise a large proportion of the Ferns of America and many other parts of the world.

NATURE and HER SERVANTS. By Theodore Wood, F.E.S., Author of "Our Insect Allies," &c. Large post 8vo, with numerous Woodcuts, cloth boards, 6s.

BRITISH BIRDS in their HAUNTS: being a Popular Account of the Birds which have been observed in the British Isles, their Haunts and Habits. By the late Rev. C. A. JOHNS, B.A., F.L.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

MAN and his HANDIWORK. By the Rev. J. G. Wood, Author of "Lane and Field," &c. Large post 8vo, with about 400 Illustrations, cloth boards, 10s. 6d.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES. By Prof. Hulme, F.L.S., F.S.A. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

PICTORIAL ARCHITECTURE of FRANCE. By the Rev. H. H. BISHOP, M.A. With numerous Engravings. Oblong 4to, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH ISLES. By MARY E. PALGRAVE. Oblong 4to, with numerous Engravings, cloth boards, 5s.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
WOLAKLEY'S LIFE OF MARLBOROUGH, by W. P. COURTNEY	387
VILLIERS DE L'ISLE ADAM, by WILLIAM SHARP	388
SPALDING'S THE HOUSE OF LORDS, by J. A. HAMILTON	389
MACCALLUM'S IDYLS OF THE KING, by ARTHUR WAUGH	390
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	391
CURRENT THEOLOGY	392
NOTES AND NEWS	394
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	394
ORIGINAL VERSE: "ON ALL SOULS NIGHT," by PERCY ADDERLEY	395
MACAZINER AND REVIEWS	395
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	395
CORRESPONDENCE—
A Stave MS. of Lydgate, by Robert Steele; Perceba , alla , olliva , ollivani , by H. Bradley; "Grendel," by Thomas Miller; The "Shield-Wall" at Hastings, by T. A. Archer	395
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	396
THE COMMENTARY OF DONATUS ON TERENCE, by Prof. R. ELLIS	396
SANSKRIT LITERATURE IN INDIA, by Col. G. A. JACOB	397
SCIENCE NOTES	397
PHILOLOGICAL NOTES	398
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	398
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, I., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	399
TWO WATER-COLOUR EXHIBITIONS	400
LETTERS FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SATCE	401
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	401
TWO NEW OPERAS AT BRUSSELS	402
THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL AT BONN, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	403

LITERARY, SECRETARIAL, or CLERICAL WORK DESIRED by a LADY, who has had two and a half years' experience in a Government Office. Reads French, German, Dutch, Dano-Norwegian, and Swedish.—Address R. H. Cornwall Street, S.W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture, Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. THE CHAFFEY-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 22, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),

Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEIL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 24, Abchurch Lane, E.C. 4, East Court, Fleet Street, E.C. 4, are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 759. Telegraph, "Africanian, London."

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
• and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to their excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London, or filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

FOR Publication by Subscription, "THE HESPERIA and its TRANSLATION," with a Collection of above versions. Price 7s. 6d. Subscribers' names to the Author, Rev. C. F. S. WARREN, Longford, Co. Wick.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY.

ALTERATION OF DATE.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, in the month of JULY or some subsequent date, proceed to the appointment of a PROFESSOR to occupy this newly-instituted Chair.
For the present, the duties are as follows:—The Ordinary Course will consist of 100 Lectures, the Honours Course of 60 Lectures, and the Professor will not be required to teach for more than six months.
The Normal Salary attached by Ordinance to the Chair is £900.
The appointment will be made ad vitam aut culpam, and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance.
The undersigned will give full information as to the duties, &c., and Candidates are requested to lodge with him twenty copies of their application, and of any Testimonials they may desire to submit, on or before Tuesday, 12th June.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY CHAIR.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, in the month of July or some subsequent date, proceed to appoint a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair in this University, recently rendered vacant. The Professor will be required to enter on his duties from 1st October next, from which date the appointment will take effect.
The Normal Salary of the Chair has been fixed by Ordinance at £800.
The Chair has an official residence attached to it.
The appointment is made ad vitam aut culpam, and carries with it the right to a pension on conditions prescribed by Ordinance.
Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, who will furnish any further information desired, twenty copies of his Application, and of any Testimonials he may desire to submit, on or before Tuesday, 12th June.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON,
Secretary to the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above PROFESSORSHIP.
Applications, accompanied by thirty-six copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than the 26th of May, 1894. The successful Candidates will be required to enter upon their duties on the 1st of October, 1894.

Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing. Further particulars may be obtained from Geo. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL (MEDICAL SCHOOL).

Applications are invited for the
GEORGE HOBT CHAIR OF PATHOLOGY.
Endowment £375 per annum, together with share of fees. Particulars can be procured from the REGISTRAR, University College, Liverpool, to whom applications (with testimonials), must be sent on or before Saturday, June 2.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL (MEDICAL SCHOOL).

Applications are invited for the
DERBY CHAIR OF ANATOMY.
Endowment £375 per annum, together with share of fees. Particulars can be procured from the REGISTRAR, University College, Liverpool, to whom applications (with testimonials) must be sent on or before Saturday, June 2.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF NORTH WALES, BANGOR.

In connection with the Day Training Department (for Men and Women) to be opened next October, the Council are about to appoint a LECTURER IN EDUCATION and MASTER OF METHOD, at a salary of £250 a Year. Fifty printed copies of each application and set of testimonials to be received on or before Tuesday, June 5th, by the Registrar, J. E. LOVY, M.A., from whom all information may be obtained.
May 9th, 1894.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS TO WOMEN.

DIPLOMA and TITLE OF L.L.A. to WOMEN.
The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Perth, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and

advanced Examinations.—STUDENTS PREPARED in Classes connected with North London Collegiate School, under Miss BESS's superintendence. Arrangements made for boarding in neighbourhood.—Address Miss TOLLE, 145, Camden Road, N.W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—

Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect: Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BRYSON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for Clerical and Scholarly Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

NORTHAMPTON and COUNTY

MODERN and TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

A NEW SCHEME having been approved by the Charity Commissioners, the Governors are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT of HEAD MASTER.
Candidates must be graduates of some University in the United Kingdom.

The School Endowments amount to £400 a year, and under the new Scheme the County Council of Northamptonshire and the Town Council of Northampton will contribute each £300 a year, making a total income of £1,000 a year, exclusive of Tuition Fees.

It is proposed to Enlarge the School Buildings, and provide Hostels or Boarding-houses.
There is at present accommodation for about 150 scholars, and there are 90 now in attendance.

The fixed yearly stipend is £150, with a capitation payment calculated at the rate of £3 for each boy in the School, but for the first three years the capitation payment shall not be less than £350 a year.

The Head Master will be required to devote his whole time to the work of the School, and to commence his duties in September. He will have to reorganise the educational work of the School, in accordance with the new Scheme, and advise the Governors as to the proposed extensions.

Applications, giving age, particulars of qualifications, and experience, together with Copies of not more than five Testimonials, must be sent in to me not later than June 14th.
Copies of the Scheme can be obtained at my Office.
Canvassing is strictly prohibited.

By Order of the Governors,
J. L. HENSMAN, Clerk.

6, St. Giles'-street, Northampton,
7th May, 1894.

THE GROVE, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Principal Mrs. LACEY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honorary School of Modern History; Oxford University Extension Lecturer.

Visiting Teachers:—
Miss J. W. KIRKALDY, Somerville Hall, Oxford; First Class in the Honorary School of Natural Science.
Miss A. G. KARR, Newnham College, Cambridge; First Class Natural Science Tripos.

Miss C. M. RINDISO, Girton College, Cambridge; Classical Tripos.
Miss M. R. HOVE, Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford; Honours, Classical Moderations.
Miss LUTIA DREWRY (English Language, Elocution).
Miss ANNE SOMERVILLE, Professor at the Royal College of Music.

Mr. R. CARRODS (Violin).
Mme. OLIVIER (Dancing and Physical Exercises).
Mr. W. McPHERSON (Fencing and Drill).

REFERENCE PERMITTED TO:—
The Lady Laura Ridding; Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, late Principal of Somerville Hall; Mrs. A. H. Johnson, Hon. Sec. Association for the Education of Women; Oxford; Miss Maitland, Principal of Somerville Hall; the Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester; the Rev. Professor Symes, M.A., Principal of University College, Nottingham.

The NEXT TERM will begin MAY 4th.

ROYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE.—

ANNUARY MEETING, April 23rd, the President, the RIGHT Hon. LORD HALSBURY, in the Chair. The following were elected for the year 1894-5:—

PRESIDENT—The Right Hon. LORD HALSBURY.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Major-General Sir Henry C. Rawlinson, G.C.B. F.R.S.; Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart., D.C.L., LL.D.; General Sir Collingwood Dickson, B.A., G.C.R., V.C.; Joseph Haynes, Esq., J.P., D.L.; Rev. the Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, D.D.; E. W. Bradburn, Esq., F.R.S.; J. S. Phené, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S.; William H. G. Ford, Esq., J.P., Major-General, Hon. F.S.A., Hon. A.R.I.B.A.; R. A. Douglas Lithgow, Esq., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. COUSIN—Percy W. Ames, Esq., F.R.G.S.; James Johnson Bailey, Esq., M.D. (Stockport); Mackenzie Bell, Esq., C. H. E. Carmichael, Esq., M.A.; James Curtis, Esq.; William Blackford Gedge, Esq.; Adair Percival Graves, Esq., M.P.; Rev. J. M. Gunning, F.R.S.; J. Henkell Heaton, Esq., M.P.; Robert Barbank Holt, Esq., M.A.; H. M. Imbert Terry, Esq. (Exeter); James Lauder, Esq. (Glasgow); Herbert J. Reid, Esq., F.R.S.; G. A. Tucker, Esq., M.D.; G. O. Williamson, Esq., D.Lit.; Baron D. Worms, F.R.S.

OFFICERS.
Treasurer—Joseph Haynes, Esq., J.P., D.L.
Librarian—Herbert J. Reid, Esq., F.R.S.
Foreign Secretary—R. A. Douglas Lithgow, Esq., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
Secretary—Percy W. Ames, Esq.
Auditors—Samuel Davy, Esq., and F. Woolton Isaacson, Esq., M.P.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in

WATER-COLOURS.—The One Hundred and Twenty-first EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

ALFRED D. FRATER, R.W.S., Secretary.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall.—

The 41st ANNUAL SPRING EXHIBITION of PICTURES by British and Foreign Artists, including "The Meeting of the Waters," by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., and a Collection of Pictures and Studies from Nature by Professor C. HEFFNER, is NOW OPEN. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Catalogue on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are especially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons' PUBLICATIONS.

PROFESSOR PFLEIDERER'S GIFFORD LECTURES.

PHILOSOPHY AND DEVELOPMENT OF RELIGION

Being the Edinburgh Gifford Lectures for 1894.

By OTTO PFLEIDERER, D.D.,
Professor of Theology at Berlin University.

In 2 vols., post 8vo, 15s. net.

This day is published,

THE ARABIAN HORSE:

His Country and People.

By Major-General W. TWEEDIE, C.S.I.,

For many years H.B.M.'s Consul-General, Baghdad, and Political Resident for the Government of India in Turkish Arabia.

In 1 vol., royal 4to, with 7 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations, and a Map of the Country. £3 3s. net.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

RED CAP AND BLUE JACKET.

By GEORGE DUNN.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

LIFE OF SIR HOPE GRANT.

With Selections from his Correspondence.

Edited by HENRY KNOLLYS, Colonel (H.P.)
Royal Artillery.

His former A.D.C., Editor of "Incidents in the Sepoy War," Author of "Sketches of Life in Japan," "English Life in China," "From Sedan to Searbruck."

With Portraits of Sir Hope Grant, and other Illustrations.

Maps and Plans. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT."

This day is published,

IN VARYING MOODS.

Short Stories.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This day is published,

SOUTH SEA YARNS.

By BASIL THOMSON.

With 10 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE RICH MISS RIDDELL.

By DOROTHEA GERARD,

Author of "Lady Baby," "Recha," &c., Joint Author of "Reata," "The Waters of Hercules," &c.

The STORY of MARGREDEL.

Being a Fireside History of a Fifehire Family.

By D. STORRAR MELDRUM.

TIMAR'S TWO WORLDS.

By MAURUS JOKAL.

Authorized Translation by Mrs. HEGAN KENNARD.

New and Cheaper Edition.

THE CITY OF SUNSHINE.

By ALEXANDER ALLARDYCE,

Author of "Earlscourt," "Balmoral: a Romance of the Queen's Country," &c.

New and Revised Edition.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE PROTECTED PRINCES of INDIA. By William Lee-

WARNER, C.S.I. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE AGED POOR in ENGLAND and WALES. By Charles

BOOTH. Condition. Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

EIGHT HOURS for WORK. By John Rae, M.A., Author of "Contemporary Socialism" Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"Deals with a burning question, and deals with it not by means of barren speculations, but by investigation of facts."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"An interesting and almost enthusiastic work.....Mr. Rae has carefully sifted such evidence as he can obtain as to the exact effect of limiting the hours of labour"

ECHO.—"It is a timely contribution to the discussion of the subject, and is sure to make many converts to the cause of the short working day."

A HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH during the First

Six Centuries. By S. CHEETHAM, D.D., F.S.A., Archdeacon and Canon of Rochester, Honorary Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, Fellow and Emeritus Professor of King's College, London. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE GARDEN THAT I LOVE. By Alfred Austin. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 9s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"He has written a charming book, and one that will bring pleasure to many another lover in many another garden."

PRACTICAL BOTANY for BEGINNERS. By F. O. Bower, D.Sc.,

F.R.S., Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow, Author of "A Course of Practical Instruction in Botany." Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE GYPSY ROAD: a Journey from Krakow to Coblenz. By

GRENVILLE A. J. COLE, M.R.I.A., F.G.S. With Illustrations by Edmund H. New. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LETTERS of EDWARD FITZGERALD. Edited by W. Aldis

WRIGHT. 2 vols. New Edition. Globe 8vo, 10s.

DAILY NEWS.—"The correspondence is full of pleasant talk about his friends, about music and musicians, pictures, and, above all, about the numberless books which he was reading."

SELECTIONS from the POEMS of A. H. CLOUGH. Pott 8vo,

2s. 6d. net.

[THE GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.]

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—NEW VOLUMES.

THE SECOND SON. By Mrs. Oliphant. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BARRACKS, BIVOUECS, and BATTLES. By Archibald Forbes,

L.L.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

SOUVENIRS of SOME CONTINENTS. By Archibald Forbes,

L.L.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

Will be ready next week.

CLIMBING AND EXPLORATION

IN THE

KARAKORAM-HIMALAYAS.

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY.

WITH NEARLY 300 ILLUSTRATIONS BY A. D. McCORMICK, AND A MAP.

Super-royal 8vo, 738 pp., cloth, gilt top, 31s. 6d. net.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY—New Volumes.

Edited by the DUKE OF BEAUFORT, K.G. and A. E. T. WATSON.

YACHTING.

Vol. I.—CRUISING, CONSTRUCTION, RACING RULES, FITTING-

OUT, &c. By Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart., Lord BRASSEY, K.C.B., C. E. SETH-SMITH, C.B., G. L. WATSON, R. T. PRITCHETT, "THALASSA," the EARL OF PEMBROKE and MONTGOMERY, E. F. KNIGHT, the Rev. G. L. BLAKE, &c. With 21 Plates and 93 Illustrations in the Text, by R. T. Pritchett, G. L. Watson, J. M. Soper, &c., and from Photographs. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [On Tuesday next.]

Vol. II.—YACHT CLUBS, YACHTING in AMERICA and the

COLONIES, RACING, &c. By the MARQUIS OF DUFFERIN and AYA, K.P., G. CHRISTOPHER DAVIES, LEWIS HERRESHOFF, the EARL OF ONSLOW, G.C.M.G., H. HORN, Sir GEORGE LEACH, K.C.B., &c. With 35 Plates and 160 Illustrations in the Text, by R. T. Pritchett, G. L. Watson, J. M. Soper, &c., and from Photographs. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [On Tuesday next.]

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT

For Mutual

Life Assurance.

Invested Funds	...	...	...	...	£4,700,000
Paid in Claims	...	...	...	...	£9,000,000

ESTABLISHED 1835.

INSTITUTION.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £4,600,000.

At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

THEATRES.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, ARMS AND THE MAN. Messrs. Yorke Stephens, Bernard Gould, James Welch, A. E. W. Mason, O. Barnett; Mesdames Alma Murray, Chas. Calvert, and Florence Farr. Preceded, at 8.10, by THE LAND OF HEART'S DESIRE. Messrs. J. Welch, G. R. Foss, A. E. W. Mason; Mesdames W. Fraser, C. Morland, D. Paget.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, FROU-FROU. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, H. B. Irving, Will Dennis, Crawley, &c.; Miss Vane, Miss Marie Linden, Miss Radclyffe, Miss O'Brian, Miss M. Butler, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.
THIS EVENING, at 8, AN ARISTOCRATIC ALLIANCE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Chas. Groves, J. G. Taylor, F. Worthing, H. de Lange; Miss Fowler (Mrs. Latham Cox), Miss A. Hughes, and Miss Mary Moore. At 8.30, MRS. HILARY REGRETS. Mrs. F. Atherley and Miss F. Frances.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, ELEONORA DUSE IN LA DAME AUX CAMELIAS. Signore Merzanotte, Pero, Iene and Ines Christina; Comm. Cessari Rossi, Signori Rosaspina, Masi, Colombani, Galimberti, Cantinelli, Garavaglia, Piperno, Geri, Sainati.

GAITY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, Willie Warde, Colin Coop; Mesdames Millie Hylton, Louise Montague, Lillie Belmore, Lettice Fairfax, Topsy Sinden, Earle, Monckton, Henderson, Vivian, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Durkin, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Mr. John Hare, Lessee and Manager.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, MRS. LESSINGHAM. Mr. Forbes-Robertson, Mr. Scott Buist, Mr. C. Rock, Mr. G. Du Maurier; Miss E. Robins, Miss H. Luck, Miss D. Drummond, Miss I. Goldsmith, Miss E. Cross, and Miss Kate Rorke.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A BUNCH OF VIOLETS. Mr. Tree; Messrs. Lionel Brough, Nutecombe Gould, G. W. Anson, Holman Clarke, C. M. Hallard; Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Audrey Ford, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8 punctually, FAUST. Mr. Irving; Miss Ellen Terry; Messrs. Wm. Terris, Julius Knight, C. Hague, Hayland, Tyars, Johnson, Harvey, Tabb, Archer, Reynolds, Buckley, Belmore, Espinosa, Seldon, Cushing; Mesdames Kate Phillips, Lacy, Furster, De Silva, M. A. Victor.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, F. Wilson, M. Marsden, M. Bonheur, and Miss May Yohé. Preceded by, at 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A SOCIETY BUTTERFLY. Mrs. Langtry, Misses Rose Leclercq, E. Brinsley Sheridan, Walsingham, L. Morand, E. Norton, E. Williams, E. Vernon, G. Evison; Messrs. W. Herbert, A. Beaumont, E. Rose, H. J. Carvill, S. Jerram, H. Templeton, C. R. Stuart, and F. Kerr.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAILEY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Bradford, Kaye, D'Orsay, Porteous, Rimma, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Mesdames Decima Moore, Juliette Neville, Cutler, Studholme, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Pounds, and Lottie Venne.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Haye, W. Pasmore, Scott-Fisher, Gridley, S. Russell, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. George Alexander.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE MASQUERADERS. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Varing, Elliot, H. V. Esmond, Ian Robertson, A. Vane-Tempest, Ben Webster, William H. Day, &c.; Miss Granville, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Beryl Faber, Mrs. Edward Saker, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, JAUNTY JANE SHORE. Messrs. Harry Paulton, Edward Lewis, Fred Emery, Arthur Nelstone, Alfred P. Phillips, Chas. Lovell; Mesdames Grace Huntley, Emmeline Orford, Florence Daly, Ada Dore, Carrie Coote, Hilda Hanbury, Millie Marion, Nellie and Maggie Bowman, and Miss Alice Atherton. At 8, BEST MAN WINS.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, GO-JANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Maud Lockett, Lydia Flopp, and Letty Lind; Messrs. H. Grattan, George Green Smith, jun., Arthur Playfair, George Crawford, Edgar Stevens, Fred Storey, and John L. Shine. At 7.40, THE SILVER HONEYMOON.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY
OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. . . . We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 6s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."—The Bookman.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 6s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS. And other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published. . . . The book is full of helpful thoughts."—Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 6s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN. And other Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 6s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES. A Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

Uniform with the above, price 6s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST. And other Sermons.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.
AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

A STORY OF THE DISRUPTION AND THE FORMATION OF THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND IN 1843.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d., post free.

CRAIGROWAN:

By W. KENNEDY MOORE, D.D.

THE DUNDEE ADVERTISER.—"The story should help to raise the enthusiasm of the present generation of Free Churchmen at this interesting period of their Church's history, and general readers may peruse it with interest for its faithful pictures of Scottish life and character in 1843."

THE BRITISH WEEKLY.—"The characters are so well drawn, and the Disruption incidents so cleverly and naturally interwoven, that the interest never flags. Dr. Kennedy Moore is thoroughly at home in his subject, and has not only the necessary knowledge for treating it well, but also the requisite sympathy. He has a vein of quiet but genuine humour, and a competent acquaintance with Scottish customs."

THE FREEMAN.—"Dr. Moore not only writes with the pen of a ready writer, but his heart is in closest sympathy with his inspiring theme. His book is full of pathetic incident, and is profusely illustrated with striking portraiture."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, E.C.

This Day, Price One Shilling.

HEBREW UNVEILED. Some Affinities of the Hebrew Language, selected with special reference to Letter "A" of the English Vocabulary.

ASHER & Co., 13, Bedford Street, Covent Garden.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tindall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

365 SHAVES

For 6d.

A STICK OF VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP IS SAID TO LAST A YEAR.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, and 2/6.
VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED. Fine Irish Linen, 2s. or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 8d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 8d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 8d. each.

IRISH LINEN 21 yards by 3 yards, 3s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10yd. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8yd. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4yd. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7yd. per yard; Glass Cloths, 2s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS—Children's, 1s. 9d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS AT BOOKSELLERS
AND LIBRARIES.BIOLOGICAL LECTURES and ADDRESSES by the late ARTHUR MILNER
MARSHALL, Professor of Zoology in Owens College.
Edited by C. F. MARSHALL, M.D. Crown 8vo, upwards of 400 pages, cloth, uncut, 6s.OLD CELTIC ROMANCES. Translated from the Gaelic by P. W. JOYCE, LL.D. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, xx.-444 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.* * Both of these Works are published in the United States by Messrs. MACMILLAN & Co., New York.WELSH FAIRY TALES, and other Stories. Collected and Edited by P. H. EMERSON.
Crown 8vo, 67 pp., boards, 2s.Vol. VIII. MAY, 1894. No. 5.
THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.
CONTENTS.D. G. BITCHIE. On Aristotle's Subdivisions of Particular Justice.

H. RICHARDS. Critical Notes on the "Republic of Plato."

G. W. BOTSFORD. On the Beginning of the Athenian Hegemony.

E. B. ENOLAND. On Stephens's "Vetustissima Exemplaria."

SHORTER NOTES AND REVIEWS.

REVIEWS:—

Wilamowitz-Moellendorf's "Aristoteles und Athen." E. M.
WALKER.

Fraccaroli's Pindar. R. Y. TYRRELL.

SHORTER NOTES AND REVIEWS.

ARCHAEOLOGY:—

W. R. PATON. Inscriptions from Cos and Halicarnassus.
Furtwängler's "Meisterwerke der Griechischen Plastik."
(Second Notice.) E. SELLERS.

G. F. HILL. The East Frieze of the Parthenon.

WARWICK WROTH. Portraits on Mitylenean Coins.

F. HAVEFIELD. Discoveries of Roman Remains in Britain.

C. GARLICK. On the Lotus Symbol.

Monthly Record.

Summaries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Price for Single Numbers, 1s. 6d.; Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 12s.; or, 13s. 6d. post free.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST followed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETYHOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.EPPE'S COCOAINE.*COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

A thin beverage of full flavour, now with many beneficially taking the place of tea. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting
the system.—Sold in Packets and Tins, by Grocers, labelled
"J. & S. Eppe & Co., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,*TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

Price HALF-A-CROWN Monthly.

THE PORTFOLIO.

EDITED BY

P. G. HAMERTON.

The Subject for MAY is

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

By F. G. STEPHENS.

With Four Plates and many minor Illustrations.

JANUARY No.—"THE ETCHINGS of REMBRANDT." By P. G. Hamerton.
"It is difficult to say enough in praise of this excellent piece of work."—SPECTATOR.FEBRUARY No.—"MALTA, and the KNIGHTS HOSPITALERS." By Rev. W. K. R. BEDFORD.
"Most choice and admirable."—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.MARCH No.—"JOSIAH WEDGWOOD." By Professor Church.
"Numerous fine drawings illustrate this admirable monograph."—LEEDS MERCURY.APRIL No.—"JULES BASTIEN-LEPAGE." By Julia Cartwright (Mrs.
HENRY ADY).
"The clever authoress has done her work excellently well."—BLACK AND WHITE.JUNE No.—"FREDERICK WALKER." By Claude Phillips. [In preparation.NEW EDITIONS.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT of WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

By W. J. LOFTIE. New and Abridged Edition. With 30 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo.

Cloth, 3s. 6d.

ROUND MY HOUSE: Notes on Rural Life in France

in Peace and War. By P. G. HAMERTON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo.

LONDON: SEELEY &amp; CO., LIMITED, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

MUDIE'S
SELECT
LIBRARY.For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the House of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

TO AUTHORS AND EDITORS.

NORTHERN NEWSPAPER*KENDAL SYNDICATE,Supplies high-class short and serial fiction;
bright sketches;
articles on general subjects.The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATIONAdopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.AUTO-GRAVUREThe Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving
on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman
Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holi, R.A., Oulss, R.A.; Pettit, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco
in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.;
also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including
H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art
The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

JUST PUBLISHED.

With 6 Illustrations, royal 8vo, 6s. net.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD:Proceedings and Addresses on the Occasion of the Opening of the College Buildings and Dedication of the Chapel, October 18, 19, 1893.

London: LONOMANS, GREEN &amp; CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF JOHN CHURCHILL, Duke of Marlborough, To the Accession of Queen Anne.

By GENERAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.
2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

"It is a distinct gain to historical literature to have this defence of Marlborough on record, especially when it is combined with a brilliant account of his military and political exploits, written with the pen of a competent judge." Graphic.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A work of rare charm and excellence; it is real literature and real life, too—of an out-of-the-way kind, but convincing, and consistent. The strength and beauty of Wrayburn's character, the pure and simple tragedy of his life, the passages of thought, observation, and reflection which arrest and hold attention, the very unusual power of the writer so deeply to interest us in the catastrophe that we want to implore him to change it, even while we recognise that it is inevitable, lend to this novel the importance of an exceptional and most welcome event."—World.

A NEW NOVEL BY MISS BROUGHTON.

A BEGINNER.

By RHODA BROUGHTON,
Author of "Nancy," "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"When all the tendenz-novels we have raved about and quarrelled over shall have ceased from troubling an over-troubled world, that the eternal smiles and tears locked within the covers of Rhoda Broughton's novels will be as fresh as ever they were, is our confident prediction." Manchester Guardian.

READY THIS DAY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOAN VELLACOTT."

The POWER of the PAST.

By ESMÉ STUART.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTERS OF THE WORLD."

THOROUGH.

By MARY A. M. MARKS,
Author of "Dr. Willough Smith," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A remarkable book, written with an unobtrusive quaintness of style, as if it were the record of a chronicler writing soon after its events took place. Apart from its historical value, it abounds in quaint touches of character, humour, and shrewdness, and in exquisite bits of Irish landscape." Scottish Leader.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON,
Author of "A Partier from the West," &c.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Some shadow of Fenimore Cooper's mantle has surely fallen on the author of this novel."—Manchester Guardian.
"An admirably-told, stirring story."—World.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE.

By M. DEANE.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"We are not sure that this is a book which will impress the crowd; many of its effects have too much subtlety of truthfulness for ordinary popularity; but it is a singularly careful imaginative study both of a society and a character." Spectator.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER'S

New and Forthcoming Works.

NEXT WEEK.

By E. W. HORNUNG,
Author of "A Bride from the Bush."

THE BOSS OF TAROOMBA.

Crown 8vo, in 1 vol., 6s.

PUBLISHED LAST WEEK.

With Frontispiece by Sir E. BURNE-JONES, Bart.

THE QUEEN WHO FLEW.

By FORD HUEFFER.

Imperial 16mo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; also a limited Edition de Luxe of 25 Copies only.
Price on application to the Booksellers.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LAME DOGS:

An Impressionist Study.

By WILLIAM BULLOCK-BARKER.

Small crown 8vo, Irish linen, 1s. 6d.

MARCH, APRIL, AND MAY.

NOW READY.

THE COUNTRY MONTH BY MONTH.

Cloth, silk-sewn, inlaid parchment, gilt top, 2s.;
paper, printed wrapper, gilt top, 1s.

PRESS OPINIONS.

TIMES.—"Well adapted to the purpose."

NATURE.—"Interesting and brightly written."

SCOTSMAN.—"Full of observant sympathy and special knowledge."

SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.—"It is altogether delightful reading."

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"Charming gossips—reminding one of Gilbert White and Richard Jefferies."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Should delight the heart of the naturalist."

"CHARMING IN APPEARANCE, LITERARY IN STYLE, ACCURATE IN STATEMENT....WE KNOW NONE WHICH SO WELL DESERVES CREDIT FOR BEING 'UP TO DATE' AS THIS PRETTY LITTLE VOLUME."—SELBORNE SOCIETY'S "NATURE NOTES."

NEARLY READY.

By CHARLES I. ELTON,

Author of "Origins of English History," "The Career of Columbus," &c.

An ACCOUNT of SHELLEY'S VISITS to FRANCE, SWITZERLAND, and SAVOY, IN the YEARS 1814 and 1816.

With Extracts from "The History of a Six Weeks' Tour," and "Letters descriptive of a Sail round the Lake of Geneva, and of the Glaciers of Chamouni," first published in the year 1817.

Including 1 Photogravure Portrait of Shelley (by permission of Lady Shelley), 2 Etchings, 14 Pen and Ink Sketches, and Designed Title-page.

Crown 8vo, cloth, inlaid parchment, gilt top, 10s. 6d.
50 Large-Paper Copies, colomblie 16mo, price on application to the Booksellers.

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

FEDERAL BRITAIN;

Or, Unity and Federation of the Empire.

By F. P. DE LABILLIERE,
Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria."
With Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir GEO. S. CLARKES, R.E., K.C.M.G.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT. By ESTHER WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.
"The best book yet written on Rossetti and the pre-Raphaelites."—Daily News.

TAINÉ'S "LES ORIGINES DE LA FRANCE CONTEMPORAINE."

THE MODERN REGIME. By

H. A. TAINÉ, D.C.L. Oxon., Author of "A History of English Literature," "Notes on England," &c. Vol. II., just ready. Translated by JOHN DURAND. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

AMONG the MOORS. Sketches

of Oriental Life. By G. MONTBARD, Author of "In Egypt," &c. Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

".....What he saw in Morocco gave rich material in the way of incident and colouring both for pencil and pen." Times.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam." Scotsman.

A TRUTHFUL WOMAN in

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. By KATE SANBORN, Author of "Adopting an Abandoned Farm." Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PERSEPHONE, and other Poems. By

K. McCOSH CLARK, Author of "A Southern Cross Fairy Tale." Dedicated, by permission, to H.R.H. the Duchess of York. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Next week.]

PREACHERS OF THE AGE SERIES.—Two New Vols.

Uniform crown 8vo vols., with Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 8s. 6d. each.

By the Rev. E. J. GOUGH, M.A., of DUNDEE.—THE RELIGION of the SON of MAN. [Next week.]

By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES, of LEWISHAM.—A CUP of COLD WATER.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney CHRISTIAN, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. [Ready.]

THE STORY of MY TWO WIVES. By ONE of THEIR HUSBANDS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. [Ready.]

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By EDITH E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. [In a few days.]

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville FENN. Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In a few days.]

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION IN ONE VOLUME.

THE EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MAY NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

A CORNER in a MARKET. Painted by Jules Meunier. PHILIP

GILBERT HAMPTON. (Frontispiece.)

SOME EPISODES of MOUNTAINEERING, by a CASUAL

AMATEUR. EDWIN LOAN WEEKS. Illustrations by the Author.

JOHN MARCH. SOUTHERNER. (Chapter XXX-XXXIV.)

GEORGE W. CARLE. (Begun in January Number—to be continued.)

THE PROVINCIALS: Sketches of American Types. OCTAVE THANET.

Illustrated.

A POUND of CURE: a Story of Monte Carlo. Chapters V-VI.

WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP. (To be concluded in June.)

THE AMERICAN CONGO. JONAS G. BOWMAN, Captain U.S.A. Illustrations from Drawings made in the Rio Grande region by Gilbert

Gaul.

WOMANLINESS as a PROFESSION. ALINE GORREY.

A NEW PORTRAIT of FRANKLIN. PAUL LEICESTER FORD.

Illustration from a recently discovered terra-cotta medallion.

CLIMBING for WHITE GOATS. GEORGE BIRD GRINNELL. Illustrated.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1894.

No. 1149, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Life of John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, to the Accession of Queen Anne. By General Viscount Wolsley, K.P. Vols. I. & II. (Bentley.)

THESE volumes bring us only to the threshold of the Temple of Fame, which the personality of Marlborough occupies now and for all future ages. Up to this date he had schemed and laboured, but his toil and his manoeuvres had alike ended in disappointment. The opportune moment had now arrived. The illness of William had forced him to place on one side the foreign generals whom he loved, and to confide to the English Marlborough the command of the troops in the Netherlands. Almost immediately after this appointment an accident put a close to a life which disease had all but terminated, and the new commander at once became the soldier in whom all trusted. The death of the exiled James had lured the "Grand Monarque" into recognising the Pretender as the lawful king of England, and the insulted country had responded in a torrent of passion with the determined resolve to prosecute the campaign at all risks and at any cost. It was now a national struggle for life and not the war of a Whig majority. Such was the position of affairs at the date when Lord Wolsley brings these volumes to a conclusion. Had Marlborough's life been cut off at this period, his name would not have been connected with the brilliant events which now constitute his glory. He would have been remembered only as the deserter of James and the traitor to William. His life's work was not yet begun. In this respect the present position of Lord Wolsley's labours recalls to memory the brilliant fragment of the Life of Fox which was published by Sir George Trevelyan. Let us hope that, unlike it, the present design may not long remain unfinished.

Rarely, if ever, have two more handsome volumes been offered to an eager public. They are excellently printed and admirably illustrated. To add to their charm, some of the most beautiful miniatures in the possession of the Duke of Buccleugh have been reproduced at Paris by the process of Goupi-gravure. There are illustrations of Ash House, the birthplace of John Churchill, both as it then appeared and in its forlorn state after it had been reduced to a farmhouse. There is a plan of his march through the West of England in 1685 and of the battlefield of Sedgemoor, where his absence from the chief command nearly led to a disastrous defeat. There are charts of Cork and Kinsale, in the expedition which he designed and carried into complete success. All the assistance that printers and engravers can add to the success of a book has been rendered without stint.

A memoir like this, designed on an adequate scale and sustained throughout with exceptional dignity of tone, save in regard to its author's censures of the unprofessional critics of warfare, cannot but add to his reputation. It is the most conspicuous success in English literature—with one exception, but that a great one—which is connected with the name of a military commander. To Napier's History of the Peninsular War it must yield the palm, but to that alone. Lord Wolsley has laboured with praiseworthy industry, and has freely availed himself of the investigations of local inquirers. Some of the most interesting touches in his pages on the scenes of Churchill's boyhood or in the narrative of the families of Churchill and Jennyns—and it is curious to find that the manor of Churchill in Somerset passed by sale in 1652 from the father of Sarah Jennyns, Marlborough's wife, to his cousin, Sir John Churchill, Master of the Rolls, at a time when the families were unconnected by blood and unknown to one another—have been drawn from researches of Western antiquaries. The same indebtedness for picturesque incident appears in the descriptions of the sieges of Cork and Kinsale. In them, as in the details relating to the district around Ash House, Lord Wolsley has realised the value of local knowledge. The reproduction in facsimile at the opening page of the crabbéd entry "in the badly-kept and sorely-neglected parish register of the very old church of St. Mary's, Axminster," of his hero's baptism, and the elucidation of this tangle of handwriting by the aid of skilled experts show at the outset the thoroughness with which these volumes have been compiled.

One general can best appreciate the difficulties of another. The value of a soldier's criticism of military operations is apparent in every sentence of the description of the campaign which terminated at Sedgemoor. In these chapters Lord Wolsley has put his heart into the narrative and has achieved a conspicuous success. The night march of Monmouth's undisciplined forces through the narrow lanes and across the trackless moors of Somerset, under the guidance of Farmer Godfrey, and the subsequent rout of his troops, are described to the life, and are followed by the reader with the closest attention. Victory was on the side of the royal forces; but their success was due to blunders of the invader's colleagues rather than to the skill of the royal leader. When Marlborough was superseded for Faversham, vigour gave way to inertness, and laxity reigned instead of keenness of observation. Under their new commander, the troops of James were left to follow the army of Monmouth without aim and without precision, and the ardour which animated their movements at the start soon flickered out. The impulse drawn from the genius of their first leader ceased to circulate through his subordinates. Faversham could neither anticipate the actions of his opponents nor initiate a plan of his own; but "it was characteristic of Marlborough," says

Lord Wolsley in a passage describing the qualities of the ideal general, "that from apparently small indications he possessed the power of divining the enemies' plans, and was thus enabled to forestall them. From the experience of the recent past, he foresaw with admirable clearness the immediate future, and was able as it were to map out coming events from a study of the position at the moment. He could balance future probabilities with strange accuracy, and could fill in with living figures the sketchy outline furnished by the spy. Without this peculiar gift—one of the instincts that mark the born general—no campaign can be directed with success. To realise what is going on beyond a range of hills, or any other natural barrier to human vision and out of the reach of reconnoitring parties, is one of the problems which perpetually confronts the military commander. On the correct solution of that problem depends greatly the success of all military operations."

Subsequent volumes will supply even more abundant opportunities for a critical examination by one illustrious soldier of the designs of another. Lord Wolsley will be at his best in explaining Marlborough's campaigns in the Netherlands, and in exposing the blunders of his antagonists at Blenheim and Malplaquet. Though we are conscious of the advantages which an expert in warfare possesses in studying the marches and combats of another general, it must be allowed that the gift sometimes carries a drawback with it. The hapless civilian and the politician are the subject of repeated attack. The next battle in England will "be fought in defence of London," and, if it comes in our time, it will be due to "the folly and parsimony of our people." This is the opinion expressed after the defeat of Monmouth at Sedgemoor. On another page comes a tirade against the sentiments of the prosperous citizen and the futility of placing trust in treaties or national honour. More than once there occurs an attack against the system of government by party. Lord Wolsley would have been well advised had he ruthlessly struck his pen through such passages. A biography of such high merit as this should not be used as the medium for the introduction of immature views which will not receive even general assent.

Was Churchill justified in his desertion of the Stuart king, and what was the motive that animated him? His biographer attributes it to a "sincere love for Protestantism, which was ever his strongest conviction, and one of the most remarkable features in his character." Churchill himself put his religious convictions forward as the key-note of his action, and Lord Wolsley adopts this view without reservation. Again and again does he revert to this affection for the cause of Protestantism; and when the time comes for the discussion of the reasons for Churchill's withdrawal from the cause of James to that of the Dutch William, the biographer does not shrink from claiming for him that he was "actuated by lofty motives and a sacred cause." Critics of a less enthusiastic nature can only plead in mitigation of such a shameless act of desertion, that, if Churchill abandoned the cause of James, this change of masters took place only a year or two after his king had openly slighted his services by thrusting him on one side to make way for the incompetent Faversham. Lord Wolseley tries to soften the offence by arguing that "Marlborough was not then in James's confidence and held no military command" (II. 82); but he has forgotten his own statement on a previous page that "Lord Churchill was promoted to be a lieutenant-general before leaving London, and on arriving at Salisbury he took over the command of a brigade of about 5000 men." Such conduct could not be ignored by the new monarch, and was duly rewarded by him. But Marlborough had for many years the mortification of reflecting that he was without influence in his new master's counsels, and without scope in the field for his commanding talents in warfare.

It was no doubt this neglect by William, and the desire to preserve his own life and the fortunes of his family, that prompted Marlborough to ingratiate himself with the exiled monarch in France. A serious disaster to the allied forces in the Low Countries, and a bold landing on the English coast by James, might at any moment have produced a complete revolution in the government. With the victory of the Jacobites short mercy would have been shown to those like Churchill, who had been admitted into their confidence and then betrayed their master. Lord Wolseley labours hard to clear the subject of these volumes from the charge of having been the first to disclose to St. Germain's the secret of the expedition against the dockyard and fortress of Brest. Nor indeed is he without success, although it is on indisputable record that Marlborough did communicate the news to that little court; and even if his information had been anticipated by others, the measure of his guilt is but slightly diminished. His admirers have but little to urge in extenuation of such conduct.

A few misprints arrest the eye in the first volume. Among them are Wottan (p. 19), Eylesford (p. 38), Danch (p. 38), Pointoise (p. 133), Blaque (p. 145), 1562 (p. 155), Sir John Scarborough (p. 246), Caldmay (p. 259). The "village of Lyme Regis" (pp. 273 and 286) unduly belittles a corporate town of the West of England and a seaport of much fame. The expression "at Crewkerne, near Lyme Regis, Devon" (p. 15) is doubly unfortunate, as the former town is in Somerset, and the latter in Dorset. Lord Wolseley remarks that Winston Churchill went to St. John's College, Oxford, "but for some unexplained reason he did not remain long enough to take a degree," language which seems to indicate the biographer's ignorance of the fact that at this period of our history many undergraduates who were not intended for the church did not pass through the whole course of University life. It is an infelicitous phrase (II. 121) that both the princesses, Mary and Anne, "had married Dissenters."

W. P. COURTNEY.

Villiers de l'Isle Adam. By Vicomte Robert du Pontavice de Heussey. Translated by Lady Mary Loyd. (Heinemann.)

THERE is one immediate reflection suggested by the appearance of this book: is there need, with a public unreachd by Villiers de l'Isle Adam, and generally indifferent to, where not ignorant of, his writings, for a volume occupied with so detailed an account of the man and his work? A few years ago it would have been perfectly legitimate, in Paris itself, to deny any real popularity to the strange and brilliant personage who was so intensely Parisian, and yet was less understood by Parisians than almost any other writer of equal eminence. He was worshipped as a master by several young men of mark, including M. Huysmans and M. Maurice Maeterlinck. His name, though it had no weight with the ordinary reader, or even with newspaper critics, commanded respect. In "old France" circles, aristocratic and clerical, he was held in honour, but rather by virtue of his lineage than because of his writings, or, indeed, of his character and life, both of which were far too bohemian to please persons for whom "orthodoxy" and "righteousness" were convertible terms. But the great outside world of readers knew little about him and his work, and for some reason refused to be won to admiration either by his own brilliant performances or by the laudatory disquisitions of his friends. This state of affairs changed for the better before the death of Villiers, though not soon enough to save him from much of the misery which clouded his latter years. For a time it became the vogue to speak of the author of Axel and L'Eve Future as a great master; and one saw these books, or the Contes Cruels, or Tribulat Bonhommet, in most of the shops, and even on many private tables. But this aftermath was of brief duration. To-day, the position of Villiers de l'Isle Adam is at once higher and surer than it has been, but only in the judgment of readers who care for literature of a singularly fine quality. Those who turn with keen delight to the prose of Barbey d'Aureville or the verse of M. José Maria de Hérédia, will inevitably be attracted by the work of Villiers. There is as little in common between any of these and, say, Georges Ohnet, or the still more popular Montépin, as between, for instance, Mr. Walter Pater and the late Capt. Mayne Reid.

It is not yet five years since Villiers, "the last of the aristocrats," died. I understand that, though notices appeared in the leading English literary periodicals, and though one or two of these were of considerable length and importance, there was almost no increase in the demand for the books of Villiers de l'Isle Adam. To-day, I am assured by one of the chief French booksellers in London, a request is made once in a way for Axel, a copy of Tribulat Bonhommet is sold now and again, and the sale of L'Eve Future and even the well-known Contes Cruels is of almost equally nominal character.

I do not know how the memoir of Villiers by the late Vicomte Robert du Pontavice de Heussey has "gone" in France: not very well, I imagine. It is written without any charm of style, and shows little of that sequence in narrative which is of such paramount importance in biography. A few reminiscences, an inadequate acquaintance with the intimate life, a slight familiarity with "the ins and outs" of fin-de-siècle literature in Paris: this is scarcely enough basis to support a "Life and Works" on the scale of the memoir in question. How delightful, certainly how moving a biography, M. Huysmans might give us, comparatively recent a friend of Villiers as he was. Among still younger friends, there is M. Henri Lavedan, an able writer and a worshipper of the genius of the author of Axel. Either of these might produce a volume as authentic as that which Lady Mary Loyd has now translated for English readers, with intimate touches and really illuminating reminiscences which would make the record a living one. Villiers' cousin was a worthy individual, a good friend, and a sincere admirer: his qualifications hardly extended further. As a volume of chit-chat about "the master" and his life and life-work, it may be acceptable: as the authoritative critical biography it falls far short of its aim. True, we are told many interesting details about Villiers, some of them new even to his old admirers; but it is strange, the amplitude of detail considered, how slightly vitalised is the phantasm evoked in this memoir. Moreover, if there be a difficulty for the reader in forming a proper idea of the man, there is a greater difficulty in the way of his obtaining an adequate understanding of the writings. If one should take up this volume, without prior knowledge of any book by Villiers de l'Isle Adam, it is surprising how little definite and satisfactory knowledge of his actual achievement one could gain. Numerous facts, several interesting bibliographical details, are chronicled; but we are left in the dark as to the inner life of his books, how they came into existence, what distinguishes them from others, what is the secret of their appeal, their charm, their strength and weakness. In one way this is as well. It may send readers to the books themselves. Lady Mary Loyd's translation of the memoir is carefully done, though there are occasional lapses in style—as, for example (p. 257): "The illusions of the Marquise were more silent and tenderer, all concentrated as they were on her Matthias." In the main, however, the translation is good. A better plan, in this instance, would have been a critical biography by Lady Mary Loyd, based upon the rambling and diffuse, but often valuable and suggestive, record of M. du Pontavice de Heussey.

In thinking of the work of Villiers de l'Isle Adam, I recall two significant sentences of his. One is from L'Eve Future: "Sans illusion, tout perit." The other is to be found in one of those hitherto unpublished fragments which M. Remy de Gourmont printed in the Mercure de France a year or so ago: "Soyons grands seigneurs, ne marchandons pas. Encourageons là par curiosité. C'est le devoir de tout bon citoyen de l'Humanité moderne." In these two sentences we have the inner Villiers. From first to last he lived upon illusions. True, he was as clear-sighted as any of his contemporaries, and that intellectual quality which we call irony was as native to him as to Heine. None surpassed him in the bitter knowledge got from the fruit of the tree of life. If his faculty of expression was rigidly along the line of his temperament, his insight was not limited by that line. Visionary, even mystical, as he was, he had the searching, pitiless observation of the wide-eyed Balzac, the scrupulous Merimée, the cynical Guy de Maupassant. But, for himself, both as man and writer—an awkward collocation, as, after all, there is no separation possible—life was not only unendurable, but not even a realisable state of active existence, “sans illusion.” In prosperity and in adversity, in youth and in advanced years, in health and in incurable disease, he lived upon illusion. Villiers was his own Bonhommet; and, as mood and circumstances concurred, he wrote a glowing vision, such as Akèdysseril, or a fantastic disquisition “On the Utilisation of Earthquakes.” But, first and foremost, he was the “grand seigneur.” Most emphatically he believed that the ideal implied in these words was one to which it is the duty of every good citizen to aspire. The phrase embodied something of mere rhetoric. No man knew better than he that a rallying cry such as “ne marchandons pas” would fall unheeded upon the ears of the multitude. But for him there was one thing to be thankful for, one thing to be worthy of—his birth, his upbringing, his inner and outer life as a “grand seigneur.” That there was something of pose in his attitude even here is not to be denied, but the sentiment was genuine at bottom. This sentiment led him into extravagances: grotesque, as in his lawsuit in defence of a remote ancestor's character, adversely represented on the stage of a third-rate Paris theatre, or in his half-countenanced candidature for the throne of Greece; fantastic, as in his attempt to become a municipal representative,* a function he thought peculiarly incumbent upon a man of brains, a man of birth, and a man of democratic goodwill; pitiable, as in his hesitation to marry the mother of his little “Totot,” even when he was within a few hours of his death, because, though he loved that faithful friend, he dreaded the revelation of her ignorance and the evidence of low birth involved in her inability to write or read.

There is no book, no short story, by Villiers de l'Isle Adam that has not the sign-manual of a rare literary talent. If his work is not stamped with genius—as most of his later critics aver it to be—that is because the physiological decadence, which began long before the first obvious signs of collapse, had undermined, not perhaps his conceptive or even his concentrative powers, but his faculty of expression. “Sans phosphore, point de pensée.” That saying of Moleschott is a bitter pill for the transcendentalists; but it is as true as “without digestion no sustenance.” And Villiers began early in life to draw wildly upon his vast reserve of “phosphore.” Physically, he paid the last of many penalties in that pitiable end of his; as a man of genius, he paid a worse penalty in the forfeiture of the high place that must surely have been his. For, despite the amount of “phosphore” expended, there is a radical weakness in every production of this extraordinary man. It is sometimes discernible in the thought, more often in the style. He himself estimated L'Ève Future as his masterpiece, and, so far as I know, all his critics agree. To me it seems rather the material for an epoch-making romance of reality than the great book it is held to be. It is crammed with inconsistencies, dramatic and other; it is discursive where it should be quintessential; it is written in a style that cannot endure, not because it is strange or fantastic or unparalleled, but because it is spasmodic—spasmodic in underlying thought, in shaping sentiment, and in expression. Unquestionably, it is a book to be read and pondered. But another decade will probably be a final solvent to it. Even as a work of art it cannot rank with L'Amour Suprême or Contes Cruels. As the expression of Villiers' most intimate self, it falls behind Axel, that remarkable drama which is of so strong appeal for a few readers and apparently of none for the majority. Axel is perhaps the only important writing of Villiers de l'Isle Adam wherein the Ideal he so cherished is not set more remote rather than brought nearer. For the rest, as he says somewhere, “il paraît que pour trouver l'Idéal, il faut d'abord passer par le royaume des taupes”—a phrase practically identical with the “all is vanity” of the Preacher.

WILLIAM SHARP.

The House of Lords: a Retrospect and a Forecast. By T. A. Spalding. (Fisher Unwin.)

WHILE the constitution and powers of the House of Lords continue to be hotly debated, as they are likely to do till some newer fashion touches political taste, no doubt books such as this, at once historical, constitutional, and polemical, will from time to time appear. As such books go, Mr. Spalding's is on the whole to be welcomed. It is careful; it is earnest; it bristles with facts, and it does not abound in fallacies. Still, in this instance, one cannot help regretting the gradual disappearance of the pamphlet, for a pamphlet is a form of publication much more convenient than a book for this kind of disquisition. Mr. Spalding writes avowedly in answer to Mr. Macpherson's recent work, The Baronage and the Senate. He not merely takes the opposite side in general, but attacks Mr. Macpherson in the open, often with very great justice. Being frankly a Radical, he perhaps would hardly lament, what he certainly cannot conceal, his own strong partisanship. He leads up to his concluding project of reform through an historical retrospect seen with Radical eyes, but he wisely does not pretend to offer his scheme as anything but a subject of discussion. He provides a stepping-stone to surer ground: not a bill or the frame of a bill, but something which, whether it perishes or survives, may some day lead to a bill. Mr. Spalding will pass contented to his own place if he can feel that he has helped forward a people's dissatisfaction through the region of notions towards an ultimate and definite proposal of law. This work is therefore ephemeral in its nature, and might as well have been frankly ephemeral in form. But fashion is against it; and so, with some chapters of inconclusive history, some tables showing the fate of half a century of bills in the Lords, and an index of tolerable completeness, the tract is expanded into a book.

Granted, however, that a book it is to be, it is lucidly written; and, in spite of its author's characteristic inability to see any side of a question but his own, it is substantially temperate. Only now and then does Mr. Spalding sink into bombast, though when he does plunge, he shows that he can plunge with as much abandon as another. On his last page he propounds his belief in “the innate political capacity of the English nation,” with a peroration of whirling metaphor.

“That belief is based upon a larger faith and trust, which rises superior to party and to creed—a faith and trust in that race which has ever held aloft the banner of freedom through storm and stress in these beloved islands, and which has spread, like an irresistible flood, over so large a portion of the habitable globe, carrying with it its glorious traditions and its still more glerious aspirations. Not soon, not even in the lifetime of those who strive after them, will those aspirations be realised. The torch of progress will be passed on from many a tired hand to the firmer grasp of a younger generation before the goal can be reached. But if, by word or deed, one unheeded follower in the great onward march may contribute to the removal of an obstacle, which might otherwise have hindered the realisation of the nation's desire, the hand may sink to rest and the eyes may close in peace, soothed with visions of the glory that shall be hereafter.”

This sorry stuff, it is true, only comes at the end, but throughout the book allowance has to be made for its question-begging use of certain terms. The trick is carried so far that the reader almost requires to have the author's terminology defined in the preface, to save him from being led astray. “The will of the nation” appears to be a technical expression for the proposals of the Liberal party. Peers who attend the House of Lords but rarely, are, when they do come down to vote, “untrained hordes, who on these occasions make irruption into the House.” When a Liberal bill is passed, as amended by the Lords, it is “mutilated.” The House of Lords is now only an “effete baronage.” Mr. Spalding calmly observes, in opening his subject:

“When the House of Lords inaugurates the proceedings of a new Parliament by rejecting so small and so reasonable an instalment of reform as the assimilation of the law of intestate succession to real property to that relating to personal property, it is clear that the Peers are in no humour to give a fair and unbiassed consideration to those weightier matters of legislation, upon which the mind and will of the nation are set.”

These matters appear to include Home Rule, Local Option, and Welsh Disestablishment. Accordingly we read:

“No reform will be lasting or satisfactory

* Of all unlikely men, he had, for one of his rivals, the newly-elected “Immortal,” M. Jese Maria de Hérédia! Fortunately both failed.

which does not effect a change in the legislative temper of the second chamber, a change from the attitude of political prejudice to one of judicial impartiality."

But though Mr. Spalding has not as yet suffered this change himself, his real proposals are far more moderate than the strength of his language and prejudices. After surveying the various attempts that have been made to reform the Upper House, from Cromwell's changes and the bill of 1719 to the proposals of 1856, 1869, and 1888, he sensibly comes to the conclusion that neither a unicameral system nor an elective chamber based upon a restrictive franchise, is practicable. Any reform that is to have a chance must proceed on constitutional lines, develop itself upon the present system, and spread over a generation or so the full establishment of the change. Without apparently realising the fact, he points out that any change of moment is either unlikely to happen, or likely, if it does happen, to be destructive or dangerous:

"It is evident that reformers will make a grievous mistake if they put their trust in peers, at any rate so long as the latter are not conscious of the pressure of public opinion. The appeal for reform must be addressed to the people: it can result only from their imperious and united demand."

This may be; but then one asks oneself: is the whirlwind of agitation, which alone can provoke an "imperious and united demand," at all likely to stop at the modest limit Mr. Spalding would set to it? Will a democracy, clamouring at the gates of the gilded chamber, be satisfied with the slow creation of that small house of life-peers, consisting of officials and nominees of the crown, which is Mr. Spalding's ideal? If it should be dissatisfied, what then? Will it not certainly resort to some form or other of revolution: no doubt very interesting, but hardly likely to satisfy Mr. Spalding's own condition that "the innate and ineradicable conservatism of our people must be persuaded"? It is to be feared that his proposal is almost as academic as those of the reforming peers themselves, which have hitherto proved so futile for want of the people's "imperious and united demand" to back them.

The two main features of Mr. Spalding's plan are these: first, to apply the principle of representative peers to the peerages of all three kingdoms, and to do so on an automatically contracting scale till the hereditary members vanish, and thus the vice of the hereditary principle, originally introduced into the constitution by the "legal quibble" of "astute" Plantagenet lawyers, is done away; secondly, to fill up the remainder of the senate with certain officials, ex-officials, and crown nominees selected from special categories (of which the Church is, and Dissent is not, one) and holding their seats for life. It is supposed that the slow disappearance of hereditary peers from the new House of Lords will in some way appease the hereditary peerage, as though a long prospect of impotence is likely to end in a contented dissolution at the last. It is further conceived that a gathering of persons, selected from various public services and class interests, would in the aggregate be neither partial nor faddy, especially if they first pass through the refining medium of membership of the Privy Council. What after all they might finally be would not much matter, as a very brief bound is set to their power of rejecting the proposals of the Commons.

Such is Mr. Spalding's scheme. It seems, one must own, fantastic, if not impracticable. Why should the Privy Council be made an ante-chamber to the Lords, and what would be gained if it were? Why have a kind of committee of experts of the most heterogeneous kind, bound together by no common policy or common tie, to criticise the Commons' bills after they have passed that house and not before? Why subject the bills to criticism at all, if amendment is to be treated as mutilation and rejection is to be allowed twice and no more. These are questions which this book does not answer, and the answers to them perhaps are a sufficient condemnation of the book. Still, the time has not come yet for reforms of the House of Lords which everyone can accept. Plans which everyone can reject are more the order of the day. Those who want reform can use the rejection as a new point of departure; those who do not can feel that it has the better established them in their position. They may say farewell to Mr. Spalding and protest that they, too, "stand where they did." Either way his moderation must be grateful; for this, if not for his history or his prophecy, he is to be thanked. Many will strive and try: the more praise to one who has only reasoned and suggested.

J. A. HAMILTON.

Tennyson's Idylls of the King and Arthurian Story from the XVth Century. By M. W. MacCallum. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

A FEW weeks ago, when reviewing Mr. Cuming Walters' Study of Tennyson in the pages of the ACADEMY, I ventured to remark that perhaps enough had been written already about The Idylls of the King. Certainly, enough in blame; perhaps, enough in praise; and, I think, beyond all question, more than enough in the way of analysis and annotation. But at that very moment the printers were sending home the proof-sheets of the bulkiest volume that has yet been attempted upon this fascinating and overwrought subject; and it has been left to Mr. MacCallum to produce a study of the Arthurian story in special reference to Tennyson's attitude towards it, which is at once the most conscientious and deliberate of any of its kind. More than four hundred and twenty pages are here given to as careful a piece of bibliographical criticism as ever proceeded from a book-lover's study; and it may be said at once that all who take pleasure in the accretion of desk-work around the themes of their favourite poetry will find a royal feast in Mr. MacCallum's pages. The thing could not have been done more thoroughly; nor, on the other hand, could it have been done with less real sympathy, or a more absolute lack of appreciation for the beauties of Tennyson's verse and the requirements of critical comment. As a bibliography, the work is rich in merit; as a piece of literature, it belongs to a class which is widening its borders so universally as to demand, I think, a more serious and judicial condemnation than it is in my power to bestow. It is a perfect example of the sort of uncritical criticism which is, by its influence, destroying all power of individual judgment and all personal enjoyment of the masterpieces of literature, and which is gradually taking the place of luminous and sympathetic utterance in the lecture-rooms of our Universities. It is surely time that such work was generally estimated at its true value, and the system which it advocates discarded as effete and retarding.

The book has a special value as a sign of the times. We have heard a great deal lately about the lack of competent instruction in English literature at our Universities, and Mr. MacCallum's volume is the outcome of a series of lectures delivered by him in the University of Sydney. A comparison of his method with those of other academic exponents of the same form of criticism lends justice to the supposition that, were English literature to be taught academically, it would be taught universally much after this fashion. It is therefore worth while to consider how far instruction of this kind helps to an appreciation of our literary masterpieces. Now, out of four hundred and twenty-eight pages of Mr. MacCallum's book no fewer than two hundred and eighty-eight are taken up with a consideration, very full, it is needless to say, of learning, and very conclusive of research, of the development of the Arthurian story other than Tennyson's own. We are shown how the legend has grown and where it has been modified, and in this way we are prepared for a consideration of its latest and most popular form. And what is the result? Is the student, when he has waded through this vast gulf of bibliography, rendered one whit more prone to appreciate the beauties and the import of Tennyson's version? Is not his brain, on the contrary, so much overclouded with comparison and annotation, that the natural tendency is not to consider what Tennyson has to say, so much as what others have said before him: not to yield to the natural magic of his inspiration, but to run the eye cursorily down the page, while the fingers are itching to jot down variations in the note-book? Surely this kind of collective criticism, this piling of fact upon fact, this summarising of dates with a view to mark-making, is the one thing that renders a sympathetic study of poetry impossible. And when we turn to Mr. MacCallum's estimate of the Idylls themselves, we find the same academic spirit at work. Tennyson once said (and many of his admirers must wish that he had never said it) that the story of Arthur was intended in some wise to typify the conflict of the soul. The parallel is natural enough: all objective poetry bears about it something of a subjective implication. But the thing, once confessed, has given infinite opportunities to the commentator. The parallel has been drawn out to the thinness of beaten wire; and every unconsidered trifle of art has been shown to have its allegorical meaning,

Mr. MacCallum, I think, surpasses his predecessors. A single instance will suffice. He is commenting upon "The Holy Grail."

"On the return of the Grail-questers, they find the city partly ruined. Their horses tread over heaps of fragments, 'hornless unicorns, cracked basilisks, splintered cockatrices,' and Arthur tells them

'So fierce a gale made havoc here of late
Among the strange devices of our kings;
Yea, shook this newer, stronger hall of ours,
And from the statue Merlin moulded for us
Half wrench'd a golden wing.'

In all this the symbolism is very transparent. Camelot represents the gradual accretion of human belief and culture and institutions, the structure that the spirit of man has built for itself in its progress from the brute. But just because it is the work of generations of effort, much has become unsound and may be overthrown; just because it is human, even the newest may be wrenched and endangered. And, meanwhile, the fabrics that have been reared are less important than the aspiration, the ideal, that is raising them."

It is really a dangerous thing for a poet to make any confession about his own work. Browning once confessed that the idea of "The Lost Leader" originated in a certain change of view taken by Wordsworth. The idea which inspired the poem practically passed away with its execution: there was nothing of "handfuls of silver" or "ribands to stick in his coat" about Wordsworth's change of front. But the conscientious commentator has ever since that confession written it in his commonplace book that Wordsworth was "the lost Leader," and that Browning resigned all hopes of a glad confident morning again for their communion. It has fared the same with Tennyson. He once made that admission of a scarcely tangible allegory in the Idylls; and from that day forth the ingenious analyst has revelled in foot-notes. But it is time that we ceased to take such criticism seriously. For the critical faculty can surely be aroused only through the keenest sympathy with the subject it discusses; and when once we begin to impute ourselves to our subject, we have lost claim to be considered sympathetic.

ARTHUR WAUGH.

NEW NOVELS.

Christina Chard. By Mrs. Campbell Praed. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Pamela's Honeymoon. By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Janet Delille. By E. N. Leigh Fry. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

She Shall be Mine! By Frank Hudson. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

The Surrender of Margaret Bellarmine. By Adeline Sergeant. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

Dust Before the Wind. By May Crommelin. In 2 vols. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

England against the World. By John Littlejohn. (Digby, Long & Co.)

In the Meshes. By Florence Severne. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

A Midnight Mystery. By Fergus Hume. (Gale & Polden.)

The Silver Bullet. By P. Hay Hunter. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED's novels are not of a very high order, in the purely literary sense, but they are unquestionably among the most entertaining published. Just as some people never stumble into brilliancy, so she never stumbles into dullness. She has never written a story without a considerable amount of "go" in it, and Christina Chard forms no exception to the rule. The heroine is a very unconventional creature, who takes London by storm on account of her beauty. Her chief attraction is her splendid hair, which was of that red-brown "one associates with the portraits of Lady Hamilton, and with Guido's Magdalens." But she has a past, which is reported to be a dark one. In reality, she has been betrayed while a girl of seventeen, and this has given her an intense hatred for mankind. Meeting with her betrayer in London, one Sir Bruce Carr-Gambier, she resolves to wreak a terrible vengeance upon him. For the record of her intentions and deeds we must refer readers to the book. After causing havoc among her admirers, her nature is softened by the death of her little daughter, Ralda, whom she discovers in a strange way. It is a weak point in construction when the child is first introduced, for she is described in such a manner that the reader instinctively feels who she is. All the other characters are well drawn, though the artist Lexden might well have shown more originality than in always talking about "a fine blot of colour." Sir Adam Chard, Christina's father, is a powerful creation. He is an Australian who began by doctoring cheap grog for miners, and ended by floating companies which were the snare and ruin of English speculators. The story of his last coup, with its disastrous collapse, consumes a large portion of the narrative. It was a strange ancestry for Christina—her father the keeper of a grog shanty, and her grandfather a base-born bushranger. On the mother's side there was Italian blood. Luard, the politician, is good, but his fiancée, Frederica Barnadine, is better still. There is something fine in her renunciation of Luard, whom she passionately loves, when she discovers his infatuation for Christina. Lady St. Helier's is capital. It was not only her dearest ambition to be a wire-puller in the game of politics, but "she had an ambition to found a salon; she had an ambition to improve the status of actors; to start co-operative nurseries for the poor; to organise guilds for furthering the employment of women." Col. Allardyce, another victim of "the destroying angel," is a well-marked individuality, who at length manages to redeem his old estate without marrying the adventuress, which he earnestly strives to do. The whole story is most readable, with its clear, crisp sketches of character; but we would point out to Mrs. Campbell Praed that on p. 232, vol. iii., there is a religious allusion in the worst taste.

Sir John Hamilton, the hero of Pamela's Honeymoon, is burdened with a secret. He knows that he ought to reveal it to Pamela Wentworth before their marriage, but he is so afraid of losing her that he has not the courage. Pamela is so lovely that it may seem hypercritical to note that, at the beginning of the scene in which Hamilton makes his declaration she has "a mass of dark, silky brown hair, coiled in a fashion of its own, round a small shapely head"; whereas, before the scene closes, the impassioned lover looks down upon Pamela's "soft, little natural curls." It is also a mere detail that Sir John's shooting box is called Dalesscourt on p. 147 (vol. i.), and Deanscourt only three pages afterwards. When we came to the mystery of the left wing of Carlingdeane, the keys of which were lost years ago, we knew what to expect. Have not such mysteries appeared again and again in the veracious chronicles of Mrs. Henry Wood? However, Sir John Hamilton's secret was not a terrible one after all. He had only assumed the title and the estates at the wish of his predecessor a little before his time, because the dying heir was an idiot. The widowed Lady Hamilton causes Pamela a great deal of trouble, because she will persist in regarding Sir John as her dead husband; but all is satisfactorily explained, and Pamela's honeymoon turns out a happy one at last. It has given us pleasure to speak warmly of several of Mrs. Jocelyn's novels, but candour compels us to state that her latest effort is exceedingly attenuated. That would not have mattered, however, had the story shown more vigour and originality.

Compounded of about equal proportions of love and art, Janet Delille is quite up to the average fiction of the day. Janet was a Scotch girl who married a French artist named Delille. He seems to have been a brute; but fortunately, although he killed himself by his excesses, he did not kill the love of art in his wife. It was her solace, until by-and-by there came upon the scene a gallant soldier, Capt. Monteith, who had grown up with her in youth. Alas! for the erratic course of human affections; while Janet gave her whole heart to Monteith, the latter gave his to Katie Hilton, a bright, winsome orphan whom Janet had brought up as a sister. To make matters worse, Katie was in love with a young squire, George Armstrong, and after their marriage, Monteith—having no longer any happiness in life—went out to India, and fell gallantly in battle. He knew nothing of the silent affection borne for him by the companion of his childhood. Art was the only consolation left to Janet Delille. This brief sketch by no means exhausts the plot. In some of her characters the author barely disguises persons well known in art and society.

If Mr. Hudson were as clever in construction as he is smart and piquant in style, he would make a capital novelist. But his She Shall be Mine is more like a series of detached pictures than a continuous narrative. However, the story keeps the reader's interest alive, both by its fun, and by its clear delineation of character. Arthur Dolan and Ethol Foyle, and John Langton and Madge Desmond, are two interesting couples, whose devious fortunes furnish some exciting episodes. Captain Tempest, the villain, is rather stagey, but Dr. O'Hara, editor of the Ballyboyle Examiner, is worthy of Lever. There is screaming farce in his methods of manufacturing newspaper sensations. When Mr. Hudson proceeds to give his own views on serious subjects, such as English poetry since the time of Shakspeare, he is not quite so happy. But in the course of the original poems scattered through these volumes, the author occasionally delivers himself of a felicitous stanza amid many which can only be described as indifferent.

Emboldened by the success of "The Story of a Penitent Soul," Miss Sergeant gives us another psychological study in The Surrender of Margaret Bellarmine. As in the case of its predecessor, the chief claim which this new work possesses is in its treatment, and this does not come upon us with the same freshness as in the first instance. Of incident we have very little. The story is that of the development of a human soul, and the evolution of a noble spirit of self-sacrifice. Lady Bellarmine came of an aristocratic family, and ere life had scarcely opened she was contracted in marriage to Sir Edward Bellarmine. It was a loveless union; and before his death Sir Edward had completely crushed the spirit of his wife by his cold, calculating views of life. Afterwards, however, her whole nature awoke to a passionate intensity of affection for a handsome but worthless lover, Victor Dayrolles. He had already betrayed one woman and been forgiven by Margaret, when she found that he had a second victim on his hands, and this proved too much. She broke off her engagement, and "surrendered" her lover to her humbler rival. There is a good deal of play on the religious emotions in the course of this novel; but some of it strikes us as hystorical. The distinct success which Miss Sergeant first achieved in this vein will not bear frequent repetition.

Miss Crommelin's Dust before the Wind is clever, and two or three of the scenes reveal dramatic power; but the whole burden of the story is unpleasant. We can pity a young wife like Stella Morice for her marriage to a stolid Q.C., old enough to be her father; but that is no justification for her conduct with Lord Middlesex, or for her encouragement of the youthful poet Gordon Muir. She is continually asking our sympathy for her wrongs; but it never seems to have occurred to her that a noble endurance of her lot would have lifted her into the ranks of those brave women who command our admiration and reverence. We are not now defending such a marriage as she was drawn into, but there is a higher law in life than the course of selfish enjoyment Stella Morice entered upon by way of avenging her injuries. She treated young Muir worse than her husband treated her; and then, when she saw that he had staked his very life and prospects on her love, she coolly replied, "I perhaps have not acted quite fairly by you." A dramatic retribution overtook her many years later, when the daughter whom she idolised eloped with Muir, but was brought home to die of a broken heart. This scene is really tragic. Mrs. Morice "puts Mrs. Grundy's ideas aside" in order to "get at the eternal laws of right and wrong," and she paid for the experiment dearly in her own person. The characters are well drawn, especially Stella and her daughter, the cold, sensual Lord Middlesex, and the impressionable Gordon Muir; but it is not the kind of book that we desire to see multiplied.

England against the World is a bewildering work. We have read it through, but confess we should not care to be examined upon it. There is a good deal about a Dr. Brown, an ecclesiastical dignitary, who seems to have been equal to all ancient and modern divines rolled into one; and a large space is also given to one Benjamin Franklyn, who "inherited the blood of kings," and who behaves quite as badly as might be expected from such antecedents. There are a good many religious and political speeches in the course of the volume, which are reported exactly as in the daily papers, interspersed with "loud applause," "vehement cheering," &c., &c. Dr. Brown wrote a work entitled "England against the World," which was issued simultaneously in the British Isles, America, and Australia, and was afterwards translated into most of the continental languages. "It was one of those mighty productions that men want to read, therefore the critics were not asked to desecrate the book by giving it their vulgar opinions." Eight editions of ten thousand copies each were issued like wildfire, and the arguments of the work were committed to memory by statesmen, ecclesiastics, and kings. The Prime Minister decided that its author must have a fitting reward, so he was promoted to the deanery of Durham: but we are glad to see that Dr. Brown did not forget his old charge at Billingsley: indeed, in his valedictory address he exclaimed, "only when pale death shall sit upon my brow will I forget thee, oh, resplendent Billingsley!" By the way, if the author should feel it incumbent upon him to continue his literary efforts, might we venture to ask that in his next work he will not continually speak of a countess as "Her Grace"; that he will not have an Earl of Billingsley and a Viscount Billingsley at the same time; that he will not tell us in one place that the "Viscount has been masquerading at Weymouth," and not long afterwards speak of the "Baronet's masquerading"; and that he will not print Pentellicus for Pentellicus, Phydias for Phidias, Propylæa for Propylæa, Gaîpoli for Gallipoli, Sherburne for Sherborne, Carelphs for Carileph, Flamhard for Flambar, metonymies for metonymies, Bernardo for Barnardo, onciromancy for oneiromancy, &c.

Miss Florence Severne's In the Meshes is not a pleasant story, and is too much spun out. Philip Romayne is a despicable young doctor, who marries an unattractive Jewess in order to secure her wealth, which is valued at £100,000. He obtains very little of it, however, and begins a course of systematic cruelty to his wife, while at the same time he makes up to the fascinating Adeline Sinclair. Adeline is loved by a very decent youth, but she chooses the baser man. By an accident, she is made to give the coup de grâce to the injured wife by poison, and for this act she is put upon her trial for murder. The reader must find out for himself the manner of her acquittal. The book is as well written as the majority of its class, but we do not see any necessity why it should have been written at all. It is just an ordinary comment in 347 pages on the text that "Sin is a master who never spares his wages."

We cannot say anything favourable of Mr. Fergus Hume's "Shilling Shocker," A Midnight Mystery. It is extremely thin, and conventional in its villainy. When there is so much good literature easily accessible, such stories are superfluous.

The Silver Bullet, the latest addition to the "Pocket Novels" of Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, is a sketch of life on land and sea. The opening adventures are well told, and John Tressor is a manly young sailor who elicits our sympathies. What was more to him, they attracted first the admiration and then the love of Ada Congreve. After some sharp troubles, they were, in nautical phrase, fairly spliced. Mr. Hunter always writes clearly and to the point.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

East Syrian Daily Offices. Translated from the Syriac, with Introduction, Notes, and Indices, and an Appendix containing the Lectionary and Glossary, by Arthur John Maclean, Dean of Argyll and the Isles. (Rivington, Percival & Co.) This volume makes a valuable addition to our knowledge of Eastern Service Books. The East Syrian Christians, as they are here styled, are more generally known among us as the Nestorians; and although the Nestorian Liturgies (in the strict sense of the term), that is the Eucharistic Services, have been long known to Western liturgiologists through Renaudot's collection, and more recently through Dr. Badger's translation, this, we believe, is the first translation of the Daily Offices. Dean Maclean was for some years a member of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission; and his residence in Kurdistan and Northern Persia has been serviceable to him in getting at a real understanding of the highly complicated and elaborate arrangement of the Daily Offices of the people among whom he lived. The work is marked by the thoroughness of the scholar; and the English reader may confidently rely on his having in this translation in all respects a substantially accurate representation of the Daily Offices as now in actual use, or at least as possessing authority at the present time. Dean Maclean has wisely not attempted to render the technical terms into Western liturgical language, which could but rarely supply true equivalents. A glossary with explanations serves the student's purpose in a much more satisfactory manner. The services here printed abound in interesting and curious features that will well repay study. Their relation to the services of other Eastern churches is not discussed by the editor; but the investigation could not fail to be fruitful, and we may hope that the publication of this volume will stimulate research in this direction. The Catholicos of the East and his People, published by Dean Maclean in conjunction with Mr. W. H. Browne in 1892, contains a chapter on the daily services, which may be read with advantage before entering on the study of this complete exhibition of a very elaborate devotional system. It may be observed that the characteristic doctrinal view known as "Nestorianism," if it is to be detected at all in these offices, is to be looked for rather in expressions that would seem defective to the "orthodox" East and West than in any positive utterance. Thus, the Syriac text printed at Leipzig for the Uniate or Chaldeans in communion with the Roman Church, has been adapted to Western orthodoxy by the change of the expression representing Christotokos into that representing Theotokos. But the interest of the volume lies in its liturgical rather than its dogmatic aspects. The "farcings" of the Psalms and of the Lord's Prayer are curious. The "Martyrs' Anthems" are a very interesting feature; and the martyrology of the East Syrians there embedded needs, we think, explanatory notes, which we do not find in Dean Maclean's work.

Primary Convictions. By William Alexander, D.D. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.) The "discussions" contained in this volume were, for the most part, delivered to the students of Columbia College in New York, and constituted one of a series of "Columbia College Lectures on subjects connected with the evidences of Christianity." Dr. Alexander extracts nine "primary convictions" from the Apostles' Creed; and on these he does not lecture, but rather talks, sometimes eloquently and passionately, sometimes wittily and lightly, but always gracefully and thoughtfully. He has added to his genial lectures notes of varying length, in which the learning and scholarship of the lecturer are at once apparent. We have called the lectures genial, but the adjective ignores too much their essential seriousness. Bishop Alexander has felt it to be a privilege, and at the same time a responsibility, to address his audience of theological students, and throughout his chapters a strain of familiar and fatherly kindness mingles pleasantly with their grave earnestness. The book, of course, deals with topics of great importance, and it is full of matter. Dr. Alexander is easily original, and even when treating of such inevitable themes as the belief in God he is fresh and interesting. We have no space for detailed criticism, but will make one or two notes. The fifth primary conviction shows "reasons why we receive the collection of books called the Bible as exceptional." We venture to suggest that, among young men not theological students, there is a "primary conviction" that literature generally is inspired; but we deny that the conviction, that the inspiration of the Bible is exceptional, is in any genuine sense primary. We contend, moreover, that the neglect by teachers and preachers of the "primary conviction" that great literature is inspired is grievous, and makes of small effect all they have to say about the Bible. Dr. Alexander's discussion of eternal punishment constitutes one of his best chapters. He does justice to the universalists: "I can blame no man whose fears are softened by a hope, and whose hope goes up in a prayer." But he goes on to ask whether punishment is not in part penal, telling the story of a thief who cut off a child's hands to get some tightly-fastened bracelets. "A hundred voices in court cried out, 'Death is not enough.'" But Dr. Alexander would not advocate more than death in such a case. Every case of lynch law which comes to hand from America seems more conclusively than ever to impress upon us that when men begin to make their punishments penal they go beyond their province. We had noted down some of Dr. Alexander's remarks upon German theologians, intending to protest against them; but so much in his book is admirable that we must not extend these small cavils. Readers of all sorts and conditions who pick up the volume will be refreshed and delighted; and the theologian will be taught once more by Bishop Alexander to recognise in the poet's gifts of imagination and fancy qualities of unexpected value to himself.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The First Book of Kings. By F. W. Farrar, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.) An exposition by Dr. Farrar of the varied and dramatic story of the First Book of Kings is necessarily a notable piece of work. Dr. Farrar writes, perhaps, too hastily. We must needs suspect that if he produced his work more slowly his style might gain in precision and grace, and his grasp of character be more intense. And yet this commonplace of criticism probably insists merely upon the defects of the Archdeacon's qualities. It is his pace which explains the energy and vitality and sustained interest of his style. He does not allow his subject to become stale to him, and therefore his books have a nervous energy and fresh enthusiasm which makes them always readable. Moreover, such a strenuous worker as Dr. Farrar acquires a muscle and alacrity unknown to the more luxurious and fastidious artist, and a day's work to him is a week's work to the rest of us. His exposition of the First Book of Kings, containing pictures of the court of Solomon and the court of Ahab, exhibits in happy combination his powers of picturesque description, of dramatic presentation, and of learned accumulation of detail and illustration. The story of the First Book of Kings is full of human and also of literary interest, and Dr. Farrar writes as a literary artist and as a student of humanity rather than as a scholar. He has not the scholar's delight in minute accuracy for its own sake, nor the scholar's dispassionate attitude towards the facts of history; and yet it is mere affectation to deny the thoroughness and the extent of the Archdeacon's erudition. He begins his exposition with some chapters upon the date and structure of the First Book of Kings. His attitude towards the so-called higher criticism is, of course, frankly appreciative, and his account of critical opinion upon the First Book of Kings clear and intelligent. We find, however, in the course of the exposition some weak points. It is surely weak and illogical to take the incident of the feeding of Elijah by ravens as the occasion for a pronouncement on the question of the truth of the miraculous, and to say nothing about the matter when the central and essential miracle of the fire from heaven appears. The miracle of the ravens, like the miracle of Joshua's sun, may be avoided—perhaps it was not intended in the original narrative—but the coming down of the heavenly fire upon Elijah's altar cannot be got out of the story, and the question whether it is fact or myth is of primary importance. There are other points connected with this. An orthodox Christian may, for reasons drawn from a wide survey of both Old and New Testament, accept a miraculous element in the Old Testament, but must he not admit that anything approximating to proof of the historical reality of this miraculous element is probably for ever impossible? And again, if the fire from heaven is myth, what is the actual history which is presumably behind the myth? On such points as these we should have liked the Archdeacon to have spoken out more frankly; but, on the whole, we must thank him for a candid and impressive book.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Book of Joshua. By W. G. Blaikie, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Dr. Blaikie's exposition of the Book of Joshua takes honourable rank in the "Expositor's Bible" as an able and honest piece of work. He is avowedly orthodox; but he faces the unpleasant task of giving his readers some outline of unorthodox criticism of his subject with fairness and courtesy, and adduces arguments on his own side instead of contemptuously ignoring the whole matter. We do not, however, find these arguments either original or convincing; and the exposition which follows, and accepts, practically as it stands, the whole story of the taking of Jericho and the conquest of the Canaanites, is of necessity irritating and useless to any historical student acquainted with modern methods. We do not quarrel with Dr. Blaikie for accepting the miracle of the sun standing still; he is logically right in feeling that this miracle does not differ in kind from the other miracles of his narrative. His book fails because it endeavours to make the story of Joshua the vehicle for edifying exhortation to a modern congregation of Christians, in obstinate defiance of the fact that the Book of Joshua is, perhaps, the book of the Old Testament which most obviously resists such treatment. It is the book in which the theory that the Jews were not like other nations is most glaringly contradicted, in which we get so near a glimpse of the fierce savage of the wilderness that we cannot, without misgivings, confound him with the pious tabernacle-loving hero of popular belief. The story of the conquest of the Canaanites by Joshua is closer to reality than the story of the exodus under Moses, and therefore resists the methods of the orthodox religious expositor more completely. Dr. Blaikie, indeed, contends that the Deity must have given the Israelites supernatural help, or they could not, after their Egyptian slavery, have prevailed against the giants and fenced cities of Canaan. We can understand, he says, the conquests of Alexander or Caesar, but not the success of the disobedient murmurers who mustered under Joshua. This argument illustrates the weakness of the doctor's whole position. In the first place, how can we be sure that there were any giants, and how can we be sure that more than a few fenced cities were taken by Joshua. In the second place, how can we doubt that the Israelites of the Book of Joshua were eager fighters, swift and fierce and remorseless, though unused to siege work? And, finally, how narrow is the religious faith which finds in the wars of Alexander, Caesar, or even Napoleon I., instances of merely natural events in which God had no conspicuous hand. How much more easily can they be "moralised" than the exterminating raids of Joshua. We have pronounced Dr. Blaikie's book able because he does his task clearly, vigorously, and, above all, honestly; but the task is an impossible one, and his execution of it leaves us more convinced than ever that the orthodox view of the book is essentially false to fact.

Early Christian Missions of Ireland, Scotland, and England. By Mrs. Rundle Charles. (S.P.C.K.) The distinguished author of The Chronicles of the Schönberg Cotta Family possesses in an unusual degree the patience and accuracy which ascertain facts correctly and the imagination which sets them forth vividly. Her power of telling a story in an interesting fashion never fails her, but she is too conscientious to allow her imagination to excuse her from the duty of careful historical research. The most striking chapters in the volume before us are those on St. Patrick and St. Columban. For every side of Patrick's character—for the saint, for the writer, for the statesman—Mrs. Charles shows a keen appreciation. She is full of enthusiasm at the picture she raises in her mind's eye, of a civilised prosperous Ireland when the rest of Europe was relapsing into barbarism. We are reminded that St. Patrick was a contemporary of St. Chrysostom and St. Jerome and St. Augustine; and that St. Columban was a contemporary of Mahomet. The work of the missionaries is carefully connected with the central stream of European history, so that we can understand its full importance and significance. The writings also as well as the deeds of Patrick and Columban are described and characterised with practised ability, so that our author's account of them is complete. The book contains, of course, sketches of Columba and the other missionaries to Scotland and England, which are skilfully executed, but do not afford quite the same scope to the author as the chapters on Patrick and Columban. The greater part of the excellent life of Boniface has already appeared. We can heartily recommend the whole volume; its charm and interest are as conspicuous as its ability.

New Testament Difficulties. By the Rev. A. F. W. Ingram. (S.P.C.K.) It is pleasant to note that the Head of the Oxford House, Bethnal Green, is the writer of this "Collection of Papers Written for Working Men," for the reading of it leaves us with the conviction that the writer is excellently fitted for his post. The papers divide themselves into five upon the Gospels and four upon "particular sayings" which have been found hard by hostile critics; there are, also, two Appendices and an Introduction. The earlier chapters, in answering the question, "Are the Gospels Genuine?" give an account of the evidence for their date and authenticity interesting to read and clear in arrangement. Though intended for the unlearned, it will be found a very useful summary of the more important facts and items of evidence by all students. We have only one criticism to make upon it. We think Mr. Ingram would have been wise to add a chapter upon the so-called Synoptic Gospels, summarising shortly the facts dealt with in such a discussion as the article "Gospels" in the Encyclopædia Britannica. Anyone stumbling upon this article after reading Mr. Ingram's chapters would certainly feel that Mr. Ingram had kept from him important facts, which are disconcerting to the Christian who has never tested orthodox opinions. The chapters on "particular sayings" in the Gospels which have been attacked by secularists is, if anything, too indulgent to the stupidities of ignorance; but this is, of course, a fault on the right side. Ignorant critics are often very sincere, and should therefore be dealt with seriously. In the interesting discussion of "that seeing they may see and not perceive," it seems odd that Mr. Ingram should not point out that parables were used to force lazy listeners to use their brains: the saying connects itself obviously with Christ's attack upon those that have ears and hear not. We should also have liked our author to mention that, to some ears, the last few verses of St. Mark do not ring quite true. But Mr. Ingram has produced an admirable little book.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish in the course of the present month Mr. Rudyard Kipling's new volume of Indian stories, entitled The Jungle Book.

MR. J. W. MACKAIL has undertaken to write a volume on Latin Literature for Mr. John Murray's series of "University Extension Manuals," edited by Prof. W. Knight, of St. Andrews.

MR. PERCY PINKERTON is about to publish, through Messrs. Gay & Bird, a little volume of lyrical pieces relating to Venice and Asolo, under the title of Adriatica. Some of them appeared in a half-forgotten book, which was printed at Venice eight years ago; others are new.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY announce for early publication the second volume of Social England, edited by Mr. H. D. Traill. Besides continuations of chapters in the former volume on law, religion, architecture, trade, the navy, &c., there will be the following special articles: "The Growth of a Common English Language," by Dr. Heath; "Travel and Exploration by Englishmen in the Early Middle Ages," by Mr. C. Raymond Beazley; "Mediaeval Town Life," by Mr. C. R. L. Fletcher; "Early English Music," by Mr. W. S. Rockstro; "Alchemy and Astrology," by Mr. Robert Steele; and "Some Episodes in Welsh History," by Mr. Owen Edwards.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE announce for early publication two single-volume novels, each with a title-page designed by Mr. Aubrey Beardsley: The Dancing Faun, by Miss Florence Farr; and a translation of Dostoevsky's Poor Folk, by Miss Lena Milman, with a critical introduction by Mr. George Moore.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish immediately Red Coats, by John Strange Winter, in one volume, with illustrations; A Bachelor's Bridal, by Mrs. Lovett Cameron, also in one volume; and a new edition of For His Sake, by Mrs. Alexander.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co., will publish immediately a new book by Annie S. Swan (Mrs. Burnett Smith), entitled A Foolish Marriage, with illustrations by Mr. Murray Smith. It is a story of Edinburgh student life, but the scene is partly laid in Glasgow.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. will publish early next week a novel, in three volumes, entitled Henry Standon: or Love's Debt to Duty. It is written by a man who is well known in the scientific world.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS announce A Modern Wizard, by Dr. Roderigues Ottolengui, which should prove of interest to those interested in the study of psychotherapeutics as well as to readers of fiction.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. will publish immediately a new edition of Dr. Janet, of Harley-street, by Dr. Arabella Kenealy, with a portrait of the author. The same firm announce as ready for publication a novel, in three volumes, by Dora Russell, entitled A Hidden Chain.

Lux Naturae: a Nerve System of the Universe; a new demonstration of an old law, by Mr. David Sinclair, is announced for immediate issue by Mr. Elliot Stock.

THE success that has attended the publication of the "Temple Shakspeare" makes it more unfortunate that there should be any delay in its issue. The publishers regret that the volumes announced for April 26 will probably not be ready until May 26, on account of some difficulties that the editor has experienced in his work on these plays; but they hope in future to have two volumes ready by the end of each month.

WE hear that the first edition of Mr. R. K. Douglas's book on Society in China has been sold out, and that a second is in preparation.

THE report of the council of the Camden Society, read at the general meeting last Wednesday, apologises for the delay in the appearance of "The Accounts of the Earl of Derby" (afterwards King Henry IV.), which should have been published during the year 1892-3. This has been due entirely to the unexpected amount of labour involved in the production of the work, which, when completed, will no doubt be of special value in consequence. The difficulties in making out the itineraries owing to the conflicting dates given in the MS. have been considerable, and the identification of the place-names has been no less troublesome. It is expected, however, that the volume will be out of the editor's hands this month. A new volume (the ninth) of the Camden Miscellany is also nearly ready; and the second volume of the Clarke Papers, edited by Mr. C. H. Firth, is in an advanced stage of preparation.

THE fourth annual meeting of the British Record Society was held at Herald's College on May 3, with the Marquess of Bute, president, in the chair. The report detailed the amount of work accomplished during 1893, which, briefly, consisted of Calendars of Wills at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, at Lichfield, for Berkshire and for Gloucestershire, together with Inquisitiones post mortem for London and Gloucestershire. The Marquess of Bute was re-elected president for the ensuing year, together with three new vice-presidents—the Earl of Rosebery, Lord Coleridge, and Lord Amherst of Hackney. The council and other officers were re-elected.

THE well-known antiquarian firm of Albert Cohn, of Berlin, will sell on May 21 a large collection of autographs, chiefly of musicians and German authors. There are also letters of Michelangelo and Raphael; and what purports to be a signature of Shakspeare, with the following attestation:—

"Je, sousigné, certifie que la signature ci-jointe de Shakspeare (William) vient de la collection du Révérend Cotton, aumônier de Newgate, vendue par mon intermédiaire à Mr. le Baron de Trémont par Mr. Sainsbury de Londres. Paris, le 25 Avril, 1845. CHARON."

The Ordinary of Newgate! We mistrust the security.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE new Engineering Laboratory at Cambridge will be formally opened by Lord Kelvin next Tuesday. In view of this ceremony, the University has conferred the complete degree of M.A., honoris causa, upon the two demonstrators of mechanism and applied mechanics, Mr. W. E. Dalby and Mr. C. G. Lamb, who both happen to be graduates in science of London.

IN Congregation at Oxford, on Tuesday, the several resolutions for establishing new degrees, to be granted after a course of special study or research, were all adopted, with a single exception. The one proposing that the degrees should be entitled Master of Science and Master of Letters was rejected by the narrow majority of fifty-eight votes to fifty-five. It now rests with a committee to prepare a statute for carrying the scheme into effect.

IT is announced that the total of the subscriptions to the Jowett Memorial Fund now amounts to nearly £10,000. The committee has authorised the application of a sum not exceeding 500 guineas to personal memorials, in the chapel of Balliol and in some public place in the university.

THE general board of studies at Cambridge recommend the appointment of a university lecturer in moral science, at a stipend of £50. It appears that the University is unable at present to fulfil its statutory obligation of founding a professorship in logic and mental philosophy.

MR. F. Y. EDGEWORTH, Drummond professor of political economy at Oxford, announces a public lecture for Wednesday next on "The Appreciation of Gold: its Measure and Significance."

MR. OSCAR BROWNING has been appointed to represent the University of Cambridge at the inauguration of new university buildings at Gen, which will take place in June.

THE family of the late Dean Butler, of Lincoln, have presented, in memory of him, two oil-paintings to the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge: an Entombment, by a Spanish artist; and a portrait, of the school of Holbein.

MR. G. B. LONGSTAFF has presented to New College, Oxford—of which he was formerly a (na-Wykehamical) scholar—the sum of £1000, to be given in exhibitions, "as a reward for excellence in any subjects recognised in the honour schools of the university, preferably to persons of professional men in actual need of pecuniary assistance."

AMONG the communications promised for future meetings of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, we observe one upon "The Tobacco Pips found at Cambridge."

At a general meeting of the Association for promoting a Professorial University for London, held on April 28, with Prof. Huxley in the chair, a resolution was unanimously adopted, expressing general approval of the scheme of the Royal Commission for establishing a teaching university in London. The committee were also empowered to draw up a memorial, to be signed by members of the association and others, urging the Government to appoint a statutory commission to carry out the scheme. We may add that, up to the present, the scheme has received the approval of the governing body and the senate of University College, and of the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons.

UNDER the new regulations of London University, which will take effect in 1896, greater prominence is given to the study of history. In the B.A. examination there will be a special class for honours in history, for which the Deby prize will be awarded; and an historical thesis may be presented for the degree of Doctor of Literature.

THE Rev. Henry Palin Gurney, for some years partner with Mr. Wren at Powys-square, has been appointed principal of the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne, in succession to Prof. W. Garnett.

MR. GOLDWIN SMITH has commemorated his return to England by the publication of a pretty little volume (Macmillans), entitled Oxford and her Colleges: a View from the Radcliffe Library. In design, it is a sort of guidebook for the use of American visitors. But the broad outlook and the historical treatment rather recall the secretary of the first University Commission. There is, happily, nothing of modern academical politics; though it must be added that the author has not quite forgotten his old prejudices. Of the hall of Christ Church, he writes:

"the finest room, barring Westminster Hall, in England, and filled with those portraits of alumni, which, notwithstanding the frequency of pudding sleeves, form the fairest tapestry with which hall was ever hung."

And again, of the Oxford Movement:

"A ritualist element remained, and now reigns, in the Church of England; but the party which Newman left bereft of Newman, broke up, and its relics were cast like driftwood on every theological or political shore."

It is to be regretted that this, like others of Mr. Goldwin Smith's recent works, has been printed in America, and thus deprived of his own careful revision in proof. Otherwise, we should not have had "Radcliffe Library" on the frontispiece, nor "Thomas Wharton" (p. 77), nor "the college founded by the party saint, Keble" (p. 83).

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ON ALL SOULS NIGHT.

THIS All Soul's Night, to solace my desire,
The board with meats and heartening wine is spread,

For I, in joyful terror, by the fire,
Would see some shadowy lover leave the dead.

Lo! I would gather from his noiseless breath
The wisdom stored the further side of death,

While the mysterious, wistful, midnight gloom
Should palpitate with passions of the tomb.

But there's no phantom woos me on this night,
My lover's limbs are strong, his heart is light,
He thinks with lusty songs to please my ear,
He dreams that burning kisses scorch the tear,
Nor does he guess I cheat my eyes to see
The ghost of what I once thought love would be.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for May contains little of special interest. Mr. Chase continues the rather tedious controversy on the Galatia of the Acts, by a criticism of Prof. Ramsay's reply from the point of view of Greek grammar. Dr. Bruce treats of St. Paul's conception of the functions of the Laws, and Prof. Macalister gives a brief notice of Bateson's "Materials for the Study of Variations," a monument of careful and patient observation.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for May is also comparatively barren. Nippold's recent work on the school of Ritschl, which has called forth so much criticism in Germany, is favourably noticed by Herderschē; "Some Pages out of the History of the Doctrine of the Lord's Supper" is the title of an article by Niemeijer. The meaning of Elohim in the "Book of the Covenant" is considered by Eerdmans. There are also the usual notices of books, including Völter's large work on the problem of the Apocalypse.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DUFAUX DE LA JONCHÈRE, E. Traité pratique de broderie et de tapisserie. Paris: Garnier. 8 fr.
GAVET, AL. Le Temple de Louxor. 1er Fasc. Constructions d'Aménophis III. Paris: Leroux. 40 fr.
GOSTHE-JAHNSCH. Hrsg. v. L. Geiger. 15. Bd. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Lit. Anstalt. 10 M.
MÉMOIRES d'une Inconnue (1780-1818). Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
MERLET, L. Poètes Beauceronniers antérieurs au XIX<sup>e</sup> Siècle. T. I. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
NORMAND, Jacques. La Muse qui trotte. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
ORNET, G. Le Droit de l'Enfant. Paris: Ollendorff. 3 fr. 50 c.
PREIFFER, Th. Studien bei Hans v. Bülow. Berlin: Luckhardt. 3 M.
SPULLER, Eug. Figures disparues. 3e Série. Paris: Alcan. 3 fr. 50 c.
VREASCHUR, G. Voyage aux trois Guyanes et aux Antilles. Paris: Hachette. 4 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- SPIRA, J. The Yalkut on Isaiah of Machir B. Abba Mari. (Sæc. XII.) Wien: Lippe. 10 M.

HISTORY.

- BEAUSÉJOUR, G. de. Mémoires de famille de l'abbé Lambert sur la Révolution et l'Émigration. Paris: Picard. 10 fr.
DE LA GORCE, P. Histoire du Second Empire. T. 1 et 2. Paris: Plon. 16 fr.
MEYER v. KNONAU, G. Jahrbücher d. Deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV. u. Heinrich V. 2. Bd. 1070 bis 1077. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 18 M. 80 Pf.
MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Auctororum antiquissimorum tom. XII. Cassiodori senatoris variae, rec. Th. Mommsen, etc. Berlin: Weidmann. 28 M.
NEUMANN, C. Die Weltstellung d. byzantinischen Reiches vor den Kreuzzügen. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 2 M. 40 Pf.
NIESSEN, W. Die Diataxis des Michael Attaleiates v. 1077. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte d. Klosterwesens im byzantin. Reiche. Jena: Pöhlke. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SACHÉ, Leon. Les Origines du Concordat. Paris: Delagrave. 15 fr.
TOURENEUX, M. Bibliographie de l'histoire de Paris pendant la Révolution française. T. II. Paris: Champion. 10 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ERGEBNISSE der Plankton-Expedition. Hrsg. v. V. Hensen. 4. Bd. Kiel: Lipsius. 6 M.

- PILLON, F. L'année philosophique. 1893. Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
WICKMANN, H. Die Entstehung der Färbung der Vögelier. Berlin: Friedländer. 3 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- CORPUS inscriptionum arabicarum. 1<sup>re</sup> partie. Egypte. Fasc. I. Le Caire. Paris: Leroux. 25 fr.
FEZDAICH, C. De libro περί φύσιος ἀνθρώπου pseudippocrateo. Jena: Pöhlke. 50 M.
HALÉVY, J. Mahberet. Recueil de compositions hébraïques en prose et en vers. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
LEITHARUS, J. Galliesimen in niederrheinischen Mundarten. II. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
LEVIN, S. Versuch e. hebräischen Synonymik. I. Die intransitiven Verba der Bewegung. 1. Hälfte. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 20 Pf.
RAYNAUD, G. Les manuscrits précolombiens. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
ROTHER, C. Die Bedeutung der Widersprüche f. die Homerische Frage. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 30 Pf.
SCHACK-SCHACKENBURG, H. Aegyptologische Studien. 2. Hft. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 5 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A STOW MS. OF LYDGATE.

Modern School, Bedford: May 1, 1894.

Among the recent acquisitions of the British Museum is a Lydgate MS. (34360 Add.) which has at one time formed part of John Stow's collection. It contains, among other texts, The Three Merchants, the Dialogue of the Cock, &c., A Dietary, a copy of the Secrees, four roundels of the Earl of Suffolk made when he was a prisoner in France (whose burdens are Lealement: Face vo coer: Puis qualer: and Je vous salue), and some shorter pieces, including the Kings of England with the added stanza on Edward IV., written, as Dr. Schick points out, in a different form to the other stanzas, and the Epitaph on the Duke of Gloucester, which we may now admit to be genuine.

The copy of the Secrees is very similar to that in Ar. 59 and Harl. 2251, and omits Stanzas 353-390, i.e., all after l. 2164. For the doubtful word "inpartye" in l. 160 (used in the sense of imparting), it reads, like those MS. and Laud. 416 and 673, "pourpartie."

On fo. 77b we find the following translation of the couplet, "Vinum lacte lana," attributed to Lydgate:

"Of wine away, the moles may ye wasshe
In mylkes white. The fletynge oyle spote
With lye of beyus, make it clene and fresshe.
Wasshe withe wyne, the fervente ynkes blote;
Al other thynges, is clensed wele ye wote
With water clere, and purged and made clene;
But these ij clensithe; wyne, mylke, and bene."

May I suggest to students that it would be a good deed to get together a list of the MS. once owned by John Stow? We should then have some idea of the debt English literature owes to that collector. Harl. 2251, Add. 29729, and Add. 34360, for example, preserve in some cases the sole copy of little works of the period.

ROBERT STEELE.

PERCOBA, OLLA, OLLIUA, OLLIUANI.

London: April 30, 1894.

These strange-sounding words appear in the Old English "Genesis" as the names of the wives of Noah and his three sons. Whether they have been found elsewhere I do not know,* nor have I been able to ascertain that any attempts have been made to explain them.

I venture to put forward, hoping that it may meet either with confirmation or disproof, a conjecture which occurred to me some years ago, but which I have hitherto refrained from publishing because I feared it might with some reason be thought absurdly fanciful. It is that the 23rd chapter of Ezekiel was somewhere referred to as "Pericopa Oollae et Oolibae," and that some writer of a Noah legend saved himself the trouble of invention by adopting these three supposed Hebrew female names, and altering the last to make a fourth. If the reference to Ezekiel occurred in a commentary on the chapters of Genesis relating to the deluge, the English paraphrast may conceivably have thought in all good faith that he had got hold of the names of Noah's wife and daughters-in-law.

* The names given to these persons in various Apocryphal writings are quite different; see Fabricius Cod. Pseudep., F.T., vol. i., pp. 271, 277.

HENRY BRADLEY.

P.S.—Since the above was in type, Prof. Napier has called my attention to an article in the Revue Celtique (vol. vi., p. 107), from which I learn that the names of Noah's wife and daughters-in-law occur in the Saltair na Rann (according to Thurneysen composed about A.D. 1000) under the forms Percoba, Olla, Olina, Olinane, and in the Leabhar Gabhla and Keating as Coba (or Cobba), Olla, Oliba, Olibana. Hence it seems probable that the Old-English versifier did not himself invent the names; but the likelihood of my hypothesis respecting their origin is neither weakened nor strengthened. The agreement in this particular between Irish and Northumbrian Biblical legend is extremely interesting.

H. B.

"ORENDEL."

Strassburg: April 21, 1894.

There is an interesting approximation of the expressions beowan hammes and grendles mere in Cartularium Saxonium No. 677. The conjunction has been used as an argument to prove the local distribution of the Beowulf legend, and to found an historical generalisation.

I am induced by a recent reappearance of this argument to point out that grendles is not a proper name. The Charter has fugel mere, wudu mere, grendles mere. The word grendel stands alone in C. S. 1103, and gryndeles sylle occurs C. S. 996. In the former it is "the grindle," i.e., drain—see note ad loc. and Halliwell. In the latter the sense is "the grindle dirt pond" (see Grein s.vv. sol, sylian), i.e., the dirty pond into which the drain runs (fram gryndeles sylle to russemere). Hence in C. S. 677, we have a series fugel mere, "the bird pool," wudu mere "the wood pool," grendles mere "the cess pool."

THOMAS MILLER.

THE "SHIELD WALL" AT HASTINGS.

Oxford: May 9, 1894.

Will you allow me half-a-dozen lines in which to correct a misapprehension into which Mr. Round has fallen in the current number of the English Historical Review?

Mr. Round concludes his article with a statement that the specialist who wrote "of the Normans surging for ever 'around the impregnable palisades' now writes of their doing so 'around the impregnable shield wall.'" I am authorised by that specialist to say that he is inclined to believe that there were "barri-cades" or "abattis" of some sort at Hastings; while, in common with other scholars, he does not see his way to accepting a "shield wall" such as that hinted at by Mr. Round in his first article (July, 1892). Nor does he, at present, see his way to accepting Mr. Round's modified position of the axemen's shield wall, as described in the Quarterly Review for July, 1893.

T. A. ARCHER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

THURSDAY, May 15, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Rubies," III., by Prof. J. W. Rudd.
WEDNESDAY, May 16, 8 p.m. Microscopical.
8 p.m. Elizaethan: "The Elizabethan Poor Laws," by Mr. G. Turner.

8 p.m. Meteorological: "The Relative Frequency of Different Velocities of Wind," by Mr. W. Ellis; "Audibility of 'Big Ben' at West Norwood under Certain Meteorological Conditions," by Mr. W. Marriott; "Earth Temperatures at Cronkbourne, Isle of Man, 1880-1883," by Mr. A. W. Moore.

THURSDAY, May 17, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Solid and Liquid States of Matter," III., by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Influence of Moisture on Chemical Change," by Mr. H. Brereton Baker; "Volatile Compounds of Lead Sulphide," by Mr. J. B. Hannay; "A Specimen of Early Scottish Iron," by Miss Margaret D. Dougal; "The Mineral Waters of Cheltenham," by Prof. Thorpe.

FRIDAY, May 18, 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Splash of a Drop and Allied Phenomena," by Prof. A. M. Worthington.

SATURDAY, May 19, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: Tyndall Lecture, "Colour Vision," III., by Captain Abney.

4 p.m. Zoological: "Sketches in Geographical Distribution," I., by Mr. F. E. Beddard.

SCIENCE.

THE COMMENTARY OF DONATUS ON TERENCE.

Il Commento di Donato a Terenzio. Remigio Sabbadini. (Firenze-Roma.)

THIS book, by Prof. Sabbadini, of Catania, is meant not to satisfy, but to stimulate, curiosity on an intricate and much-debated subject—the Commentary of Donatus on the plays of Terence. It opens with a table, to all appearance complete, of the numerous treatises in which the work is discussed: these fill two whole octavo pages.

After this follows the most interesting section of the book—on the origin and nature of Donatus' Commentary. It was unearthed in the fifteenth century by Aurispa, and was instantly received with enthusiasm. Aurispa said of it that no learned man could read it without deep pleasure. Guarino called Donatus "nobilissimus commentator." Calpurnius declared that it was the only key that could unlock Terence and Roman comedy. Parrhasius, in the former half of the sixteenth century, was the first to contradict the prevailing tone of acceptance, and examine the work critically. He picked out in the Eunuchus and Andria a number of contradictory interpretations, and drew the conclusion that if Donatus wrote a commentary on Terence it could not be that which we possess: the text of our Donatus is a combination of two, perhaps of several, distinct commentaries. Nanning (Nannius died 1557) and Wilhelm (the unfortunate Plautine scholar, whose name has been revived in our century, by the labours of Ritschl and the continuators of Ritschl's Plautus, in its Latinised form Gulielmii) in the latter half of the sixteenth century; Lindembrog, Gerard Vos, Caspar Barth, Tanaquil Faber, Fabricius, in the seventeenth, followed Parrhasius in considering our Donatus to be a mere aggregate of confused and undigested fragments of the true.

In the eighteenth century the Commentary of Donatus was treated more kindly. Two men of the highest eminence as critics, Lessing and Bentley, defer to him, the former as a safe guide in matters of literary taste, the latter as a source for reconstituting the text of Terence. In this matter Bentley did but follow the judgment of an early but admirable critic of Terence, John Ravius of Westphalia, whose Castigationes were printed at Cologne in 1532.

The real controversy over Donatus began with the publication of Schopen's two dissertations of 1821 and 1826. Schopen was the first who attempted to sift out the genuine remains of the original commentary as Donatus left it. These he identified mainly in observations on the language of Terence, or on the dramatic economy of particular parts, and in the citations from Greek writers. Schopen was followed by Reinhold and Klotz, who maintained that Donatus did not himself publish the Commentary, but that notes were taken from his lectures by his scholars, which were afterwards worked up as best they could into the promiscuous form we now possess. Könighoff (140) assailed, Richter (1854) defended, the value of the text-variants found in the Commentary. Umpfenbach (1867) thought that from the original text of the Commentary scholia were transferred to the margins of the MSS. of Terence, thence again copied as a continuous whole. Usener (1868) renewed the experiment of Schopen; but, whereas Schopen had traced the true Donatus in those parts of the Commentary which evince special erudition or marked acumen, Usener finds his criterion in the rhetorical or philosophic tone of particular sections, the tendency of Roman teaching in the time of Donatus being more distinctly rhetorical or philosophic than anything else. Usener also gave further development to a view partially supported by Schopen, that Evanthius had a share in the composition of the work as well as Donatus.

It is not possible here to follow out the further development of this subject by Dziatzko, Reifferscheid, Becker, Hahn, Teuber, Leo, Gerstenberg, Weinberger, and others, for which Prof. Sabbadini's volume must be consulted. Enough has been said to show the intricate character of the problem, and the variety of opinions to which it has given rise.

Sabbadini next proceeds to give an account of the discovery, or rather the re-suscitation, of the Commentary in the early part of the fifteenth century. For it must not be supposed that it was entirely unknown in the earlier part of the Middle Age. Servatus Lupus, writing to Pope Benedict III. (855-858) asks of him, among other books, Donati Commentum in Terentium. The earliest MS., A (Paris, lat. 720), was written in the eleventh century; and to the end of the thirteenth century belongs V (Vat. Regin. 1598), in the collection of Queen Christina of Sweden. Both, unfortunately, are imperfect; but for this much might probably have been settled which the interpolated condition of the later MSS. necessarily leaves doubtful. Aurispa, who attended the Council of Basel in 1433, made a tour of discovery in some of the cities of Germany, among them Mainz. It was here he found a MS. of Donatus on Terence, a copy of which was made for him. Later, a second MS. of the same work was discovered at Chartres; and of this also a copy seems to have been in Aurispa's hands by 1451. Sabbadini states that the work began to circulate in Italy at the end of 1434, when Aurispa, then in attendance on Pope Eugenius IV., arrived at Florence. In 1438 Guarino was reading it and explaining the comedies by its help. (For further details see Sabbadini, pp. 18 seq.)

The second chapter gives a detailed account of the MSS., and groups them in four classes. This is followed by a list of the editions.

In chap. iii., Sabbadini gives specimens of a new revision of the text of the Commentary, based on collations to a great degree new. This is one of the most important sections of the work, forming a sort of practical illustration of the preceding chapters. The Bodleian MS. (Canonici Latin 95) I have myself examined for Sabbadini. It is of the fifteenth century, and seems to rank high; it would be far more valuable were it not that the Greek citations are omitted.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

SANSKRIT LITERATURE IN INDIA.

STUDENTS of Vedānta will be glad to hear that the line edition of Suresvara's large vārtika on the Bṛihadāranyaka-bhāṣya, which has been issuing from the Anandāśrama Press at Poona, is now complete. It consists of 2075 pages of text and commentary, with 144 pages of index to first lines. The preparation of the index was a herculean labour indeed, and I am not aware of the existence of another of equal magnitude. It was undertaken at my suggestion, and will prove of great value to students, and especially to quotation-hunters. The publication of the work itself has long been a desideratum, since every writer of the advaita-vādin school has drawn from it freely; and, moreover, it contains important allusions to Dharmakīrti, as my friend Mr. K. B. Pāthak knows. Dr. Burnell made a great mistake, therefore, when (in his Tanjore Catalogue) he wrote regarding it: "This work is of very little interest, as it simply consists of S'ankara's arguments put into rather doggerel verse."

The Anandāśrama Press has already given us Suresvara's vārtika on the Taittirīya-bhāṣya, and his Naishikarmya-siddhi was edited by myself for the Bombay Sanskrit Series, so that the Mānasollāsa and Panchikarana-vārtika are now the only writings of his that remain unpublished. Perhaps Mr. Apte will give us these. Another important treatise recently sent forth from the same press is the Sūta-samhitā, consisting of 1061 pages of text and comment, with 86 of index to first lines. The compiler of the latter, however, would seem to have been a novice at that kind of thing, as is evidenced, for instance, by his method of dealing with the words Yatsvaripam avijñāya, which occur ten times on p. 646. But these are trifles, and merely show that learned Pandits have not yet attained to all the editorial niceties to which we are accustomed here.

It would, perhaps, be heresy to assert that our friends in Calcutta still need extraneous aid or supervision in such trifling matters as politics, for instance, or in the somewhat more weighty concerns of local government; but that they urgently require it in the all-important art of book-making is a self-evident proposition. We should not then have had 1300 pages of demy-octavo put into one unwieldy volume, as in the case of the recently completed Vardha Purāna; or the still greater enormity of 1700 pages of the same size thrust into a single volume of the Chaturvarga-chintāmani. Nor would the highly-esteemed Pandit who edited the Mīmāṃsā Sūtras and Bhāṣya have been allowed to send forth the second volume of the work without a title-page, if an English scholar had been at the helm. I wrote and suggested that that important prefix should be provided, and in due course one arrived; but it was for the whole work, comprising 780 plus 882 pages of text, and 123 of indexes! But the crowning feat of all was the publication of Tārānātha Tarkavāchaspati's grand Sanskrit Lexicon of 5442 pages of royal quarto, without a single break for division into volumes!

A conspicuous example, however, of successful workmanship without foreign guidance is to be found in the publications of the Nirṇayaśāgara Press of Bombay, which, in spite of the lamented death of its energetic founder and of the splendid Pandit who was the chief editor, continues to issue, in capital style, most valuable specimens of the literary treasures of India. It is to this press that we are indebted for really trustworthy editions of the best works on Alankāra and of the minor poems from which their authors drew so many of their illustrations—such, for example, as Haraviṣṇaya, Kuttanāmata, Bhāratasāṭaka, Devīsāṭaka, Gāthā-saptasatī, and others which were never available before. The latest works on Poetics are Ruyyaka's Alankārasarvasva and Appadikṣita's Chitra-mīmāṃsā. Prior to these, we had from the same source Vāmana's Alankārasūtras with vṛitti, Anandavardhana's Dhvanyāloka with Abhinavagupta's Commentary, Rudratas Kāvya-lankāra with the comment of Namisādhū, Jagannātha's Rasagangādhara, and Gevindh's Kāvya-pradīpa, with copious extracts from the Uddharana-chandrikā. To complete the set I would strongly urge the publication of Udbhata's work, discovered by Dr. Bühler in Jessalmir, and deposited in the collection at Poona, and also of Anandavardhana's Prākṛit poem, Panchabāsalīlā, if it can be found. With the aid of such standard works as these, we are able to correct several of Vallabhadeva's mistakes as to the authorship of the passages contained in his Subhāshitāvalī; and this has already been partly done by the late Pandit Durgā Prasad. The other day, however, I met with another statement of Vallabhadeva's which needs investigation. He ascribes his verse 43 to a poet named Amritadatta, who is supposed to have flourished at the court of Shāhbuḍḍin of Kashmir, whose date is given by Cunningham as 1352 A.D. This same verse, however, is quoted by Ruyyaka in his Alankārasarvasva (p. 159), which Dr. Bühler assigns to the beginning of the twelfth century. Will some friend kindly crack this chronological nut for us?

The Bombay Sanskrit Series maintains its high character, and would hold its own anywhere. Among its recent issues is a second edition of Bhīmāchārya's Nyāyakośa, a splendid volume of 1036 pages. As the former edition contained only 267 pages, this is practically a new work altogether. The preparation of such a book could not have been in better hands, the learned compiler having, as he tells us, made a life-long study of works of the Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika schools of philosophy. I never had the pleasure of meeting Bhīmāchārya, but I knew his brother Janārdanāchārya, who was a learned Vedāntist. Another important work just out is vol. i., in two parts, of Parīśara Smṛiti with Śāyana's commentary, edited by Pandit Vāman Śāstri Islāmpurkar. References are given to as many of the well-nigh innumerable quotations as could be traced, and a list of authors and works quoted from is appended to each volume, and an index to the quotations. I have said "an index," but that is a misnomer; for, instead of an alphabetical list of all the quotations in each volume, we have the citations from each author arranged in separate lists. Consequently, part 1 has 136, and part 2 154, distinct lists of quotations. This strange method makes them practically valueless, for, unless one knew the author from which a quotation is made, one might have to examine hundreds of lists. A little European experience here would undoubtedly have been of value.

Let us now turn to Benares, with its three streams of Sanskrit literature. The last number of the Revue de l'Histoire des Religions contained the following disquieting statement in reference to the Benares Sanskrit Series, which is under the superintendence of Profs. Griffith and Thibaut: "D'après une information qui me vient de l'Inde, mais qui, je l'espère encore, ne se confirmera pas, cette excellente publication serait maintenant arrêtée." I fear that this information was correct, and that the streams have been, or will be, reduced to two. It is a thousand pities that one volume at least of Kumārila's Tantravārtika should not have been completed before the series collapsed. As it is, we have ten fasciculi, comprising 960 pages, the last of which breaks off in the middle of a sentence, and no title-page; and so it must remain, unbound, in our bookcases, a melancholy monument to the instability of literary ventures in Benares! The Vizianagram Sanskrit Series, which opened briskly in 1890, under the guidance of Prof. Venis, has, owing to his absence in Europe, experienced a temporary check. Let us hope that it may long hold its ground. The last volumes issued were Vidyāranya's Vivaranaprāmēya-sangraha and Śivāditya's Saptapadārthi with a commentary. Our very old friend, The Pandit, has got into a decided muddle. It used to give us every month portions of four or five works with continuous paging, and a general index for the annual volume. Now, however, each separate portion has separate paging, as is the case with the Kāvyamālā of Bombay, and any ordinary mind would suppose that this was with a view to separate binding, each having its own title-page and index. Nothing of the kind, however, was contemplated; and we have this fearful conglomeration of separately-paged pieces, each breaking off in the middle of a sentence, yet stuck together with a general index as before. What can have happened to the presiding genius of this aged periodical?

G. A. JACOB, Colonel.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. GEORGE HOLT has given £10,000 to endow a chair of pathology in the medical school of University College, Liverpool.

THE Royal Society of Edinburgh has awarded the Makdougall-Brisbane gold medal to Dr. H. R. Mill, the librarian of the Geographical Society, for his researches on the physical geography of the Clyde Sea area, which extended over nearly three years. The main features of his work are—the elucidation of the effect of configuration on the seasonal march of temperature in water, and of the action of large bodies of water in modifying the climate of the surrounding land.

DR. MILL has finished his bathymetrical survey of the English Lakes, by taking systematic soundings in Haweswater during the last week of March. Haweswater is the highest of the English lakes, its surface being 694 feet above sea-level. But it is by no means the deepest, as was formerly supposed; for the deepest sounding in the deepest part, called High Water, is only 103 feet. A complete account of the soundings made in all the lakes, with a discussion of their bearings on the geography of North-Western England, will be presented to the Geographical Society by Dr. Mill at an early date. We may add that a map of the Lake district, with coloured contours of the depth of the water, was exhibited at the soirée of the Royal Society last week.

THE Attorney-General has given his sanction to the appropriation of £25,000, the residue of a legacy of the late Richard Berridge, to the British Institute of Preventive Medicine, for the endowment of a laboratory devoted to the bacteriological and chemical examination of the water supply, with special reference to the best means of preventing the conveyance of disease through water.

At the annual meeting of the Royal Institution, it was announced that sixty-two members had been elected during the past year, that 834 volumes had been added to the library, and that the real and funded property now amounts to over £102,000. The following officers were re-elected: president, the Duke of Northumberland; treasurer, Sir James Crichton-Browne; secretary, Sir Frederick Bramwell. Sir William O. Priestley and Sir David L. Solomons have each given £50 to the fund for the promotion of experimental research at low temperatures.

THE Whitsuntide excursion of the Geologists' Association will be to Cambridge and Ely, under the direction of Prof. T. McKenny Hughes and Mr. John E. Marr.

Johnson's Gardener's Dictionary. New and Revised Edition. Parts VII.-VIII. (Bell.) These two parts of the new edition of the Gardener's Dictionary (Pterandra—Service and Seseli—end) keep up that tone of excellent common sense which has marked the earlier parts. Rock-work, the editors justly remark, is one of the most difficult things to construct tastefully, and it is to be hoped that the sound advice here given may do something to diminish the ugliness and inutility so often found in rock arrangements. Shapeless lumps of stony matter rising out of a dead level of garden are of no decorative value: a rockery should be led up to and made to look natural. Every kind of stony material, too, is not suitable for the purpose. Incredible as it may sound, slag and the refuse of gasworks are sometimes used for rockeries. Natural stone is of course the right thing, and variety of stone will help a variety of ornamental growth. The last two parts of the Dictionary have a good deal of practical advice to offer on other points too. The landscape-gardener may learn something about the construction of ponds. The farmer and the townsman who has an allotment will read with advantage the papers on Potato and Potato Disease. The nursery-gardener and fruitman will be interested in Plums, Rhubarb, Potting, and Pruning. Flower-lovers will read up the Rose, and look to see what makes a Polyanthus or a Ranunculus a good florists' flower; while all of us are interested, directly or indirectly, in the insect-plagues which the gardener has to fight. The new edition of the Dictionary is now complete, and it is a most useful work.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

DR. J. PEILE, Master of Christ's College, Cambridge, has been elected president of the London Philological Society, in succession to Prof. Napier, of Oxford.

THE Ouseley scholarship for Persian, founded in connexion with the school for modern oriental studies at the Imperial Institute, has just been awarded to Mr. E. Denison Ross.

THE two last numbers of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt) contain further instalments of Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie's examination of the Western sources of early Chinese civilisation. He has now reached the first century B.C., when both Greek and Roman influence began to be directly felt. Incidentally, he derives "Tatsin," the old Chinese name for the Roman empire, from "Tarshish," which he thinks may have been applied to the historic mart of Eastern commerce on the Red Sea. He further remarks that the sugar-cane is not indigenous to China, and that the records show sugar from the palm earlier than sugar from the cane. Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen prints the text of a hymn to Gilgames, the hero of the Chaldean epic, whom he maintains to be a solar deity; and he likewise contributes an article suggesting a South Arakian origin for the civilisation of both Babylonia and Egypt. We have also a translation of Prof. D. H. Müller's preliminary report on the inscriptions brought back from Aksum, in Abyssinia, by Mr. Theodore Bent: and a suggestion that some rough carvings from South Africa may possibly be of proto-Arabian origin.

WE may add that Prof. D. H. Müller's definite report upon the Aksum inscriptions has just been published in the Denkschriften of the Imperial Academy of Sciences at Vienna (Tempsky), illustrated with four admirable photographic facsimiles, and a comparative table showing the development of the Aethiopic alphabet from the Sabaean. The work is dedicated to August Dillmann.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, April 30.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. R. J. Ryle read a paper on "Epictetus." Epictetus, the slave of one of Nero's freedmen, probably represents the best traditions of Stoicism, although he never professes to stand as the spokesman of a school. In his doctrine of reason, he asserts the presence in man of a rational self-critical faculty, which (1) distinguishes man from animals, (2) has a natural supremacy over all other human faculties, and (3) is essentially identical with the reason, which is the divine moving principle of the universe. His doctrine of "life according to nature" is, in fact, a two-fold principle, signifying, in the first place, conformity to that character or constitution which is specifically human as explained in his account of the faculty of reason, and signifying, in the second place, conformity to nature in the sense of the reasonable or God-ordained order of nature. In the first of these senses the doctrine was taken up and systematically developed by Bishop Butler. The doctrine of human freedom held by Epictetus may be compared with that which is associated with Kant's doctrine of the Practical Reason. Although it is very crudely stated by Epictetus, it may fairly be considered to be identical with that expounded to English readers by the late Prof. Green. The teaching of Epictetus contains many unreconciled inconsistencies. The aim of his life was to do the work of a preacher, rather than that of a systematic philosopher; and in the fulfilment of this object he has justly earned his reputation as one of the great moral teachers of antiquity.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

VIKING CLUB.—(Friday, May 4.)

PROF. W. WATSON CHEYNE, president, in the chair.—Mr. Edward Lovett read a paper on "The Orkney and Shetland Lamp and its Geographical Distribution," illustrated by magic lantern slides and examples from various countries. After referring to the difficulty of tracing back ethnological subjects beyond a certain point, which compels us to depend largely on theory when we try to account for the origin of customs or appliances common to mankind, the lecturer said that it might be assumed that the lamp was originally devised as a means of keeping fire alight, when fire was very difficult to get. Prehistoric man probably rose and retired to rest with the sun, and did not require the lamp as a source of artificial light. The earliest lamps were probably of stone, as shown in the photograph of a specimen found in a grave. This was an untrimmed flat stone, six inches by four, unworked, except for the hollow for the oil and the gutter for the wick which it contained. Shells had probably a very large share in the evolution of the lamp: in fact, the genus Terebratula is known as the lamp shell, and there are many species of shells which require no adaptation to make them into serviceable lamps. Especially the whelk, Buccinum, which the Scotch know as the "buckle," is actually still used in some instances as a lamp by Shetland fishermen; and it has probably helped to determine the shape of the Scotch "crusie" lamp. But all over the world we find that similar wants evoke similar ideas; and, as far off as Kashmir, there are to be found iron bowls used as lamps in cottages, whose long suspending stems of twisted iron exactly resemble those of the Scotch "crusie." The "crusie" was to be found in many varieties. In its most perfect form it was hand-made, the pans for the oil being beaten out of thin sheets of metal in stone moulds, and comprised two pans, one for the oil and wick, the other beneath it to catch the overflow. The lower pan was affixed to the suspending stem of twisted iron, while the upper one was attached to a ratchet, which allowed its angle of inclination to be varied as the oil burned lower. Various forms of "crusie" were then shown, as well as other early lighting appliances, such as clips for holding the rushlights, and pine-slips which were used as primitive candles. These were known in Scotland as the "puir mon," probably because they replaced the unlucky "hewer of wood and drawer of water" who, in ruder times, among other menial tasks had to serve as candlestick to the household. The lecturer, in referring to the persistence with which the rude appliances of primitive times survive long after the inventions of science ought to have banished them into museums, instanced the fire-stick still to be found in use among savages, and the clip and rushlight which he actually found in use last year in a Yorkshire stable. A great variety of lamps were then shown on the screen, some showing how the principle of the "crusie" was gradually developed and improved until at last, by the addition of a glass chimney, the paraffin lamp with all its modern offspring was evolved. Others showed how lamps of "crusie" pattern were to be found all over the world, and in very various materials, while examples from widely distant lands often showed a marked similarity in design or details of construction. The subject of the lamp of Greece, Rome, and Etruria was expressly avoided, as requiring in itself a whole evening to do it anything like justice.—The president proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Lovett, which was supported by Mr. J. Romilly Allen, who also, on behalf of the meeting, thanked Mr. Kenneth McKean for the very beautiful series of slides, photographed and prepared by himself, which were exhibited in illustration. Mr. Allen mentioned that there was an instance of a chalk lamp, found at Cissbury, in what had evidently been a mine where flints were obtained from the chalk, as an instance where prehistoric man had probably found out the uses of the lamp as a source of light. He also pointed out that the twisted iron suspender of the "crusie," with its characteristic hook, was to be found represented in the catacombs at Rome. Mr. Lovett, in replying, briefly referred to a question which had not yet been determined: How did the "crusie" reach the Orkneys and Shetlands? It was scarcely known in England, except perhaps in Cornwall; and he conjectured that it must have come through Scandinavia in the train of the Norsemen who colonised the islands.

PHILOLOGICAL.—(Anniversary Meeting, Friday, May 4.)

PROF. A. S. NAPIER, president, in the chair.—The president read a paper on a volume of Old English interlinear glosses, which he hopes to send to the press before the autumn. After pointing out the importance of these glosses to modern lexicographers as preserving words not found in the literature, he gave an account of how his attention had been first accidentally called to one or two MSS. with isolated scattered glosses, and how, since then, his materials had gradually grown until he had collected between 8000 and 9000 Old English glosses from some forty MSS. A very large proportion of these glosses (almost fourteen-fifteenths of the total number) are taken from the writings of Aldhelm, more especially from his prose De laudibus virginitalis, and from his poetical De laudibus virginum, in a less degree from his Riddles. An interesting result of these investigations has been to reveal the very important part which the interlinear glosses to Aldhelm's works play in the collected Old English glossaries already published. As has been already pointed out, about five-sixths of the Cottonian Glossary (Wright-Wülcker, p. 474) are glosses to words in Aldhelm, while in another Cottonian Glossary (W.-W., p. 338) these same glosses have been thrown into alphabetical order, and two further quite independent Aldhelm Glossaries have been incorporated (cf. Lübbke, Archiv für das Studium der neueren Sprachen, 85, 399). Prof. Napier's investigations have shown that not only in these, but in other collections, Aldhelm glosses are to be met with, e.g., in the Corpus Glosses, in the Harleian Glossary (W.-W., p. 192), &c. This point will be fully treated in the volume. An alphabetical glossary published in the eleventh volume of the Englische Studien he had recently discovered to be taken entirely from Aldhelm's De laudibus virginum, while a short vocabulary, edited by Zupitza (Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum, 33, 238) proved to be from the same author. He further gave evidence showing that some of these unpublished glosses were known to the older lexicographers, as many words rejected by modern editors as "unauthorised" were taken from them. He then pointed out examples of words from the glosses which had hitherto been recorded only in Middle English, e.g., fledged, flank, hoop, puck, &c., and also spoke of the gloss hopu = igustra and its possible connexion with the fenhopu and morhopu of Beowulf, with the merschopa in a charter relating to the Isle of Thanet (Cart. Sax., ii. 526) and with the Hope of place names. Other examples of rare and curious words were discussed, as also the various kinds of mistakes which lexicographers using such glosses are liable to make. The old scribes, e.g., frequently only wrote part of the gloss, sometimes the first, sometimes the last letters, and such half words have found their way into dictionaries; thus the word lac "medicine" given in Bosworth-Toller, p. 604, has no real existence, the three instances in which it is supposed to occur being merely half-written glosses, lac standing for the common word laecung.—Prof. Skeat read a paper on "The Author of Fragment B. lines 1706-5813, of the Romaunt of the Rose." This man probably wrote about 1400 A.D., and was from Yorkshire, or Lancashire. He imitates or borrows from both Chaucer and Gower; he makes a mess of Chaucer's rhymes and final e; he uses about 300 words not found in Chaucer's genuine works; and he Englishes his French original more diffusely and clumsily than does Chaucer, who generally gives line for line, or couplet for couplet. The B man is also very fond of without tags: "without wine, faile, drede, fable, lesing," &c. He not only confuses the close and open e, which Chaucer keeps distinct, but he rhymes manere, lere, with desire, and were with bare and forfere. He uses the Northern -and (criand, lepard) for Chaucer's -ing, though not consistently; he has thare, mar, hat, wat for there, more, hot, wot, and fand for fond, found. He writes dout vb. for doute, hert for herte, &c.; and brade broad for Chaucer's brood, pl. brode. He uses dool for "grief," fer Chaucer's sorwe or grief, and the Northern grete for Chaucer's wepe. The interpolated passage on "Gentlesse," ll. 2185-2202, is imitated from Chaucer's "Wife of Bath's Tale," while other portions or expressions appear to be taken from Gower. The date of fragment B is probably between 1400 and 1420. The third fragment C is an independent portion of Jean de Meun's addition to Guillaume de Lorris, and forms a complete poem against the Friars.—Dr. J. Pelle, Master of Christ's College, Cambridge, was elected president of the society; the vice-presidents were re-elected, and also last year's council, with the customary change of four members.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

I.

It is pleasant to be able to record that this year's exhibition is one of unusual interest. Not, indeed, that there is wanting that filling in of bad and indifferent work, which can never be absent from a large miscellaneous gathering of pictures such as that which covers the walls at Burlington House. It is that in every direction there is more life than heretofore: there is more to discuss and weigh, even where one cannot wholly approve. Even some of the elders of established position and popular fame see that to remain stationary, though it be in excellence, is not possible, and that he who stands still runs the risk of freezing.

Among the things which will be most hotly discussed and most variously appreciated are Mr. J. S. Sargent's great decoration for the Boston Library, Prof. Herkomer's excursion into the unfamiliar domain of the ideal, Mr. Orchardson's new departure in portraiture, Mr. Luke Fildes's portrait of the Princess of Wales, the pictures of Mr. Frank Dicksee, Mr. J. W. Waterhouse, Mr. Draper, Mr. J. M. Swan, Mr. Albert Goodwin, and the extremely ornate design by Mr. Alfred Gilbert for the tomb of the Duke of Clarence.

The first place, in virtue of its unusual dimensions and altogether exceptional character, belongs to Mr. J. S. Sargent's "Lunette and Portion of Ceiling"—part of a mural decoration for the Public Library of Boston, U.S.A. It is in a spirit of courtesy and generosity to a new member of the Academy that the authorities have stretched a point to admit this vast machine, for which it would be vain to seek a parallel in form or character in any preceding exhibition; and the public owes the Academy and its accomplished president a debt of gratitude accordingly. It is to be hoped that this will constitute a new point of departure in the semi-official encouragement of monumental decoration, a branch of art hitherto sadly neglected by modern England. The absolute novelty of Mr. Sargent's style in decoration, the curious mixture of the most uncompromising modernity with the most pronounced archaism, renders it hazardous to pronounce absolutely on a first inspection with regard to his fascinating and puzzling effort. Les extrêmes se touchent: nothing is more curious than to note how one of the protagonists among the moderns who have issued from the flank of France reaches the extreme point of innovating audacity on the one side, and joins hands on the other with the pseudo-archaic school which has commanded so many adherents in England and has newly gained so many in France. We must not fail to bear in mind that this is but a fragment, though an important one, of the vast scheme of decoration undertaken by Mr. Sargent for the Boston Library, and that it is not exhibited in the exact light for which it was destined. Looking up to the space above one of the main doors of Gallery No. VI., we are in front of a vast lunette which may be regarded as a synthetic presentment of the Spirit of the Old Testament. In the centre kneel, naked and defenceless, the children of Israel, while on one side the Pharaoh, towering above a motley train, seeks to smite them with his golden axe; on the other the Assyrian king, followed by his eagle-headed divinity, lifts against them his mace of might. But out of the clouds stretch forth the hands of the Almighty, and restrain the Pharaoh and the Ninevite from wreaking their fury. The divine presence is not otherwise directly revealed, save by the whir of crimson wings invading all parts of the picture and driving back the attacking hosts. On the left side of the ceiling appears the strangest and most mysterious of hieratic figures, the Syrian Astarte—erect and covered with diaphanous veils, through which are dimly seen her priestesses and worshippers dancing voluptuous ceremonial dances in her honour. As a pendant, appears on the other side the horrid Moloch enthroned, with a sacred disc between his horns, from which are shot forth great solid arrows of golden light; below this grim figure present themselves in semi-obscurity Egyptian divinities imperfectly seen, but which we take to be Osiris in his many incarnations, Isis, and the cat-headed goddess Sekket. This is, however, but a conjectural interpretation, and may quite possibly be only approximate to the truth. Should Egyptian archaeologists object to such an arrangement as unorthodox, Mr. Sargent might fairly reply that the composite art of Phœnicia, based on that of Egypt and Chaldea, shows many hardly less arbitrary assimilations. The audacity of the treatment lies in the adoption of the Egyptian style, as we find it in sculptured relief on the pylons of Luxor and Karnak, for the Pharaoh and his host, and in the balancing of this by the style of Nineveh and Babylonia for the Assyrian aggressors, the rest of the lunette being treated with the unrestrained modernity and with the colour harmonies peculiar to the painter. A wonderful tour de force, and yet not a trick, is this figure of the Syrian Astarte, with her diaphanous, milky veils, half hiding, half revealing her worshippers. A special and altogether novel peculiarity of the treatment is the lavish use everywhere—in the adornments of the goddess, in the emblems of the Egyptians, in the golden rays of the Moloch—of raised and modelled ornamentation in gold, recalling the painted and gilt gesso which forms so important an element in the Italian art of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Looking at the American painter's elaborate effort as a whole, we are struck with his exquisite skill, his inventiveness, his happy audacity in combining elements apparently irreconcilable. At the same time, it is difficult to resist the impression that—in this, as in everything else, pre-eminently a man of his time—he has given proof of transcendent ability rather than of that power and concentration which are necessary to realise from the higher point of view the mighty subject chosen, to give it that majesty and simplicity which belong to it of right. His ingenuity, his fascination, his executive skill, go far to make amends, though the hypercritical might say that they dazzle more than they satisfy. To halt for a moment at a technical detail, it strikes us that pictorially his decoration, wonderfully effective as it is in many passages, does not assert itself on a first acquaintance with sufficient distinctness. It requires unravelling into its component parts, before the pictorial scheme defines itself fully to the interested but puzzled spectator. The decoration in its entirety will comprise another similar lunette treating synthetically the New Testament, and a succession of great spandrels containing single figures of Prophets and Evangelists. It remains to be seen what that highly cultured but not a little conventional city, Boston, U.S.A., will have to say to this brilliant but rather startling innovation in monumental decoration.

Sir Frederic Leighton has nothing very new to tell us this year, though one of his motives is unfamiliar, and his contributions can hardly be said to reach the level of the two preceding seasons. "The Spirit of the Summit" shows on the extremest pinnacle of an ice-crag the white-robed spirit of the mountain, gazing upwards at the stars as she dreams her eternal dream. The design is in its main lines a noble one, but the expression of the dea loci is of a prepared and self-conscious sublimity which does not carry conviction. More purely decorative in intention is the high upright canvas, "The Bracelet," in which the chief motive is the standing figure of a Greek or Anglo-Greek woman, wearing greenish and yellow draperies; she is presented in the act of adjusting a bracelet on her arm, and at her feet sits a little girl holding a jewel casket. Another decorative canvas of similar character is "Summer Slumber," in which the prone figure of a sleeping girl has that studied grace which the President rarely fails to command, but the horizontal lines made by the central portion of the design hardly harmonise with the rigidly perpendicular ones of the architectural framing. Yet another canvas from the same hand is "Fatidica," which represents the Pythian Prophetess, enthroned in a grey stone niche with a silver tripod at her side. This may have been, as to colour, a preliminary effort leading up to "The Spirit of the Summit," for it is an exercise in whites and greys. One finds oneself wondering how such a flood of chalky light can fall on the priestess and her voluminous white robes, just touching the silver of the tripod and the garland on the marble floor, and yet cast so few direct or reflected rays on the surroundings of her figure.

Mr. Hubert Herkomer has made an entirely new departure with his life-size academic study framed in landscape, called, with a certain amount of self-flattery, "All beautiful in naked purity"; and, whatever we may think of the result, his venture is, in virtue of its evident sincerity, entitled to respectful consideration. Mr. Herkomer places his entirely nude but perfectly unobjectionable figure in the open-air, in a sunlit tangled thicket where the eglantine blossoms, by the side of a shallow stream brawling over yellow pebbles. The worst is that the painter in his elaborate study falls between two stools: he neither frankly gives us the woman bathing in the flickering sunlight, as J. F. Millet and Mr. Alexander Harrison have done, nor Biblis at the fountain as M. Bouguereau or M. Jules Lefebvre would have preferred to do. His figure is simply the academic one of an undraped mortal, whose connexion with the summer landscape in which she appears is a seemingly fortuitous one. We feel constrained to note the timid rather than absolutely incorrect drawing of the limbs, the undue hotness of the shadows, the absence of those reflections on the flesh which the conditions of open-air light here deliberately chosen must surely produce. Mr. Herkomer has seen, but he has neither unflinchingly reproduced nor imaginatively paraphrased; so that his work remains without a true raison d'être, save as an exercise. The landscape reveals, like all this year's productions from the same brush, how strongly the artist is allowing himself to be influenced by the style of Mr. J. W. North. A certain lack of humour—or shall we say an excess of vaggishness—has caused the hanging committee to place Mr. Herkomer's picture between the portraits of two elderly gentlemen. There is some little danger of the frivolous assuming a connexion between the three canvases which does not exist, and on the whole a less dangerous neighbourhood might well have been found for these "grave and reverend signiors."

We prefer to pass over without detailed comment the large decorative composition, "Horae Serenae," by Mr. E. G. Poynter, so unworthy does it appear to us of the artist's reputation and of the place of honour which it usurps; and to note that the piece of classic genre, "Idle Fears," is, as a Poynter, a performance of more than average excellence, in which many of the accessories are rendered with great skill. Next to it is "At the Close of a Joyful Day," a really exquisite performance by Mr. Alma-Tadema, for which even those who, like ourselves, do not unreservedly accept his art can find little but admiration. At the summit of a magnificent flight of white marble steps jutting out into the waters of a calm sea or lake, stands in the dying light of sunset a white-robed female figure, dreaming some happy dream, as she leans on the massive balustrade. A delicate rosy flush tinges her upturned face, the marble, the warm sea, the gently-rising wooded shore. Just one touch of true imagination in this figure, a slight departure from the sensuous type of beauty which Mr. Tadema too much affects, would have made of this a perfect thing of its kind. Luckily, however, we escape the sentimentality which is too often made to take the place of imagination.

A most disproportioned flutter has been raised round Miss Henrietta Rae's large decorative canvas, "Psyche before the Throne of Venus," by the statement, which may or may not be accurate, that it has been sold for an immense price. The lady has undoubted talent, she composes with the ease and skill which is not always within the reach of the average English painter—recalling Cabanel rather than M. Bouguereau. A certain unity, in a light decorative key of colour, is obtained by the diluting and the massing of the various gay tints; but these are too much what the French call doucereux, too suggestive of dainty creams and confectionery. And then there has been no serious effort to express from its dramatic side the exquisite subject attempted.

A capacity for taking infinite pains is the chief attribute of Mr. Frank Dicksee. In "The Magic Crystal" the strenuous endeavour to attain to ideality of conception, with the aid of well-ordered design and beautiful colours, is very apparent. The magnificently attired damsel, who seeks to read futurity in the transparent globe which she holds in her hand, sits on a throne of burnished copper and brass, wearing a wonderful robe of peach-blossom hue, over which falls a semi-diaphanous material as splendid in hue as the wing of an exotic beetle. A necklace of deep-hued amber completes the carefully thought-out arrangement, which is brilliant enough in effect, and would be still more so, were the artist capable of painting flesh so as to support the juxtaposition with these accumulated splendours. It is the vivifying spark that is wanting here, the power to infuse some personal charm and distinctiveness into the glittering hollow shell so faultlessly fashioned.

Let us turn from this to Mr. J. W. Waterhouse's "Lady of Shalott," and mark how true imagination differs from the well-meant striving after it. Not that this latter picture is faultless, or that it can claim to take rank with Mr. Waterhouse's higher achievements. His design has not the well-balanced symmetry of Mr. Dicksee's, and he is occasionally overwhelmed by the subordinate accessories of his subject. The moment chosen for representation is that when, the hapless lady starting up to gaze at Sir Lancelot, "out flew the web and floated wide; the mirror cracked from side to side." The mise-en-scène is not happy or suggestive, the Italian fifteenth-century altarpiece on the walls being especially out of place in this vision of remote Northern mediævalism. The Lady herself, with her face of stricken awe, which is yet neither surprise nor craven fear, is admirable.

Mr. Herbert J. Draper's "The Sea-Maiden," is a conception of intense youthfulness and vigour, dramatically and in quite personal fashion expressing a subject which has frequently served before. Rough fisher-folk seeking to rob the azure deep of its inhabitants have caught in their nets a white-skinned mermaid, who, angered and affrighted, makes frantic efforts to escape from their toils. There are here many things to which exception may legitimately be taken—among them, the dominant harmony of chalky white and self-assertive blue, and the drawing of the right thigh of the mermaid. Still there is a singular expressiveness in her whole figure and face, and irresistible dramatic force, too, in the group of fishermen who rush to the edge of the vessel, madly eager to secure their lovely prey. Mr. Draper's picture may be much liked or much disliked, according to the temperament of the beholder: it is impossible to pass it over. "The Argonauts and the Sirens" of Mr.

Hugh G. Rivière, if not a new conception, is a very promising first performance, revealing an unusual academic skill in the rendering, in difficult attitudes, of the half-nude Argonauts, who bend to their oars as Thracian Orpheus with his loud, sweet melody drowns the fatal song of the Sirens. Academic accomplishment, too, of no common kind, though it is too much thrust upon the spectator, marks Mr. Sigismund Goetze's "St. Sebastian." We care but little for Mr. Briton Rivière's too thin and scenic fantasy, "Beyond man's footsteps"—showing a polar bear of abnormal dimensions gazing at the setting sun from the summit of a huge iceberg. Much better is the same artist's "Ganymede," in which he depicts the future cupbearer of Jove—a youth near to manhood—fainting as he is upborne by the eagle and translated to the skies. For once—a rare thing with Mr. Rivière—the man is better done than the bird: the flight of the latter hardly suggests the resistless upward movement of Jove's messenger, or (if it be preferred) his master in disguise. The English painter has surmounted the inherent difficulties of the subject, so far as the composition goes, better than many a Greek sculptor or old master who could be named.

It must grieve the many who admire Mr. Swan's art, and look forward with interest to his future development, to find him struggling—and struggling in vain—with a subject like "Orpheus," which prima facie might have been deemed so suitable to bring out his best qualities. It is not only that the movement and gesture of the naked Orpheus, striking his lyre as he steps across the spotted pards who roll cat-like on the ground, are inexpressive, that the composition lacks harmony, and the beasts of the middle-distance lack atmospheric envelopment; it is that the painter has failed to grasp his subject as a whole, to present what is pictorially and dramatically most significant in it. The colour-harmony is Mr. Swan's own pleasant blue-grey one; the flesh-tones, if too cold and neutral, are delicate; and the slim figure of the bard, apart from its questionable attitude, is modelled with skill.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

TWO WATER-COLOUR EXHIBITIONS.

THE exhibition of the "Old" Water-Colour Society, as it is yet affectionately called by the least immature of its admirers, is characterised in part by the larger number of drawings somewhat inappropriately big, and in part by the unusual prominence of the work of the younger men. It is, on the whole, we should suppose, an exhibition of about average merit. There is nothing by Sir John Gilbert, alas! Mr. George Fripp, while yet agreeable and learned, does not offer us any very novel contribution; but in a society so respectable as the Old Water-Colour Society, the endeavour to do so could scarcely be a recognised aim. By Mr. Hunt there is a spacious drawing of no insignificant theme—Niagara, to wit—and by Mr. Carl Haag there is a very powerful rendering of one of his favourite Oriental subjects. Mr. Albert Goodwin does not entirely satisfy us with his record of St. Hilda's Abbey at Whitby, and the tops of those cliffs, "flaky and fossiliferous, the joy of the geologist," which have already formed an element of literary narrative; but Mr. Goodwin's "Salisbury" is a wonderful piece of composition—a lesson to the gifted youngsters who think composition may be dispensed with, if "values" be but preserved; and again, to name a third work by this most delightful artist, the "Corfe Castle" is a charming arrangement of subtle and low-toned colour. An admirable landscape of late autumn is contributed by Mr. Eyre Walker, who is most of all perhaps at home amidst the masculine scenery of Wharfedale and the Moors. And Mr. Matthew Hale, the never too prolific exhibitor of highly original yet never eccentric work, has made out of the limited material of a lowland pool beside a coppice backed by fir-trees a complete and memorable, since so sure and so refined, a study of Winter. Mr. Lawrence Bulleid's "Morning Greeting," a classical arrangement in crimson and cherry colour, is one of the most satisfactory of the larger drawings. The figure pieces by the members of the "old" Society are not generally the strong point of its exhibitions, and Sir Edward Burne Jones's illustration to the Morte d'Arthur can hardly be accounted a success; the absence of charming colour and of any show of genuine feeling does not, we confess, do anything to convince us that the work is "decorative."

THE especial characteristic of the exhibition of the French Water-Colour Society at the Hanover Gallery is that it makes plain to us that, in the phrase of Coleridge, there is "no vision in the land." With one or two notable exceptions, the really imaginative and poetic, as distinguished from the fantastic and affected, has no place. The work, for the most part, though manually clever, is dreadfully terre à terre; and even in its dexterity it takes little count of the medium in which it is, as it were by accident, produced. "This is, indeed, wrought," so one says to oneself, "in water-colour, but why not in oil instead, since, of the particular medium employed, but little understanding is shown." The truth is, the French have no traditions in water colour: no such pillars of the house exist for them as our great English bygone masters—Girtin and Cozens, Turner and Cotman, Barret and Samuel Palmer, David Cox, Dewint, and Thomas Collier. Hence a confusion of tongues, as it were—a failure, generally speaking (notwithstanding all the cleverness), to do the right thing in the right way. Attention has very rightly been drawn to the contributions of M. Boutet de Monvel. These are, indeed, at the same time original and learned, freshly conceived and exquisitely wrought. They it is, and especially that one of them described as a "Timid Visitor," which constitute the show's most legitimate attraction; and amid the mass of what is ordinary and garish, the drawings of M. Boutet de Monvel shine out with a peculiar and undeniable charm. "Mannered" they are undoubtedly, yet the manner, how varied!

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Dahabiyeh Istar, Cairo: April 25, 1894.

AFTER leaving Assiout last month, I did but little in the way of exploration. At Gebel Shékh Sayyid, however, I succeeded in re-discovering the plan of the temple or palace, which I came across on the walls of a quarry there many years ago. As I had failed to find it again when I looked for it last year, I had supposed that it had been blasted away by the quarrymen who are incessantly working at the cliff; and accordingly, in Prof. Flinders Petrie's Tell el-Amarna, which has just appeared, the plan is reproduced from a rough and hasty sketch of mine. But, after all, it has been thus far spared by the modern workmen. The front of the quarry has been blown away, and the back of it, upon which the plan is drawn, almost entirely closed by huge blocks of stone which have been detached from above. It was this which had prevented me from re-discovering it before. The interest of the plan lies in the fact that it probably represents one of the buildings of Tel el-Amarna, and it was, therefore, desirable to have it accurately measured. It is unfortunate that my copy and measurements are too late to be useful to Prof. Petrie.

I visited Mr. Fraser at Tehneh, or rather at El-Howarteh, opposite Minieh, where he is making an archaeological survey of the country for M. de Morgan. At Tehneh he has cleared out, and placed under lock and key, some very interesting tombs of the Vth Dynasty. In one of them the Pharaohs Userkaf and Men-kau-Hor are mentioned, while in another are a series of life-size figures cut out of the rock and in a standing position. Artistically they are equal to anything that has been found at Saqqarah, and show that the art of the Old Empire attained as high a degree of excellence in the provinces as in the neighbourhood of the capital. Mr. Fraser has also discovered a fragmentary list of nomes, the earliest yet met with. Thanks to a good squeeze which he has taken, as well as to a renewed examination of the stone, I have succeeded in deciphering the Greek inscription on an altar which I found some years ago on the summit of the hill above the village of Tehneh. It is dedicated to Domitian, whose name has been erased, by an officer of the Third Cyrenaic Legion, and shows that the stone for the paving of Alexandria was brought at the time from the quarries of Tehneh. Mr. Fraser has also discovered another altar, on the cliffs to the south of Tehneh. This has upon it a Latin inscription, and was set up by a soldier of the XXIInd Deiotarian Legion. Shortly after leaving Tehneh, I examined the Wadi el-Tér to the north, where the modern village of Zimega has been built. Here there are several fine tombs; but they contain neither inscriptions nor sculptures, and are being rapidly destroyed by the quarrymen. Across the mouth of the Wadi, I found the remains of a great wall of fortification, seventeen feet thick, which must have completely protected the river bank from the Bedouin.

I spent a long and delightful day with M. de Morgan at Dahshur, where for the first time in Egypt official excavations are being carried on in a thoroughly scientific manner under the constant supervision of M. de Morgan himself. The results have been marvellous. At a cost of only £400, some of the finest and most costly antiquities ever discovered have been brought to light. I need not describe the two treasures which the excavator's scientific shrewdness and knowledge enabled him to find, as full accounts of them have already been given in the European papers. I will only say that they are a new revelation of ancient Egyptian art. By the side of them the famous jewellery of Aah-hotep looks poor and degenerate; and they are so perfect and so fresh that it is difficult to realise that they belong to the remote epoch of the XIIth Dynasty. But the treasures are but a part of the discoveries which M. de Morgan has made. Tombs and sepulchral chambers of hitherto unknown princesses of the XIIth Dynasty and of nobles of the VIth, huge sarcophagi of translucent polished alabaster, and shattered fragments of temples long since destroyed, are among the spoils. Since my visit to him, M. de Morgan has attacked the southern brick pyramid, and found in it the tomb of an unknown king, Horus Fu-ab-Ra, who may be the Horus referred to in Manetho's version of the Israelitish Exodus. One of the objects contained in the tomb is an ebony statue of the Pharaoh, nearly four feet in height. Besides this tomb, he has also found another, that of a princess, which had never been opened before. In it there was another treasure of XIIth Dynasty jewellery. Even the golden diadem of the princess was upon her head.

While the director-general has thus been working at Dahshur, a tomb of the time of the VIth Dynasty has been excavated by the authorities of the Ghizeh Museum at Meir. Meir lies due west of El-Kusiye, the ancient Kusae, of which it was probably the necropolis. The tomb was intact, and belonged to an official of Pepi I. It has yielded not only a life-like statue of the owner, but also a large number of painted wooden models of the trades and professions of the time, which remind one of the similar models now made in India, and look as fresh and uninjured as if they had been manufactured yesterday. They are extraordinarily life-like and realistic: one of them, for example, represents a porter, carrying packages on his back and in his arms; another is the model of two bakers who are kneading bread; a third represents a sweetmeat-seller—his basket of sweetmeats is on the ground, and he is squatting behind it, with a whisk in his hand, with which he brushes the flies away from his dainties.

It need hardly be said that, with all these valuable additions to the Museum, the necessity of building a new one, secure from the dangers of fire and robbery, becomes more imperative than ever. As the fall of the late Ministry has removed from office the only persons hostile to the scheme, we may hope that before long it will be possible to transfer the monuments of ancient Egyptian culture to a place of safety.

I have been going through the fragments of Greek papyri recently acquired by the Museum from the excavations in the Fayûm. Among them are letters of the age of the Petrie Papyri, and also a soldier's account of a campaign in which he was engaged. It is similar to the one deciphered and published by Prof. Mahaffy, and it raises the question whether they are not portions of a collection of private letters relating to the Ptolemaic wars. There is also a fragment of Book IV. of the Iliad, which differs a good deal from the textus receptus,* and one of Book XV. of the Odyssey, as well as a magical papyrus full of the names of strange deities. Another fragment seems to come from a Commentary on the Iliad.

A. H. SAYCE.

[Telegrams from Cairo, dated May 7, announce that the Government has decided to expend £150,000 on the construction of a new museum to contain the Ghizeh collection. But it appears that the execution of this resolve is dependent on the approval of the Commission of the Public Debt.—ED. ACADEMY.]

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE directors of the Grafton Galleries have decided to open their summer exhibition, entitled "Fair Women," without a private view. It is their intention, instead of this, to have an "Opening Day," on Friday, May 18, when the price of admission will be half-a-crown.

AN exhibition of water-colour drawings, by Mr. Hamilton Aidé, will open next week at the Goupil Gallery, in Regent-street.

MR. EDWARD PEACOCK is engaged on preparing a new edition of his English Church Furniture in the Time of Elizabeth. That work, which first appeared in 1866, was based upon a MS. at Lincoln, containing returns from one hundred and fifty-three parishes of the "superstitious" objects which were destroyed in 1566, in accordance with the orders of the Queen's Commissioners. A short time ago, the returns of twenty-six more parishes were discovered, containing a good deal of fresh matter. In an appendix the editor will give other documents of various dates relating to local church customs, a brief account of the principal persons and families mentioned, and an explanatory glossary. The publishers are Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co.

* The lines of which the ends are preserved are 191-219. Lines 196, 197, and 215 of the textus receptus are omitted, and line 105 concludes with [ἀπὸ] τὸν ἀρχόν Ἀχαιῶν.

WE learn that the copies of the first part of Royal Academy Pictures (which was published on Monday last) are nearly exhausted. The work will not be reprinted. Part 2 will be ready for issue during the course of next week.

THE Artist, which is now published at 14 Parliament-street, under the editorship of Viscount Mountmorres, has been enlarged from thirty-two to forty-eight pages, and has also been considerably improved in regard to paper and printing.

THE committee of the City of Manchester Art Gallery have published an illustrated catalogue of their permanent collection of pictures, with descriptive notes by the curator, Mr. William Stanfield. It is needless to say that Manchester possesses an admirable collection of modern English art, in which water-colour is well represented. The munificence of the Corporation in buying has naturally stimulated the generosity of donors. The illustrations do credit to the firm of Messrs. A. Brothers & Co.; but the notes leave a good deal to be desired. Apart from much otiose description, we have noticed not a few errors of fact.

WE are glad to see that the American Journal of Archaeology (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) has again overtaken its proper date of publication. The first quarterly part for 1894 contains two important papers on mediæval art. Prof. Allan Marquand, of Princeton, continues his series on Luca della Robbia, by bringing into chronological sequence the Madonnas that may be properly ascribed to him—a few in bronze or marble, the great majority in glazed terracotta. The total number is forty, of which nearly half are figured in photographic plates, ranging from Mr. Drury Fortnum's stucco medallion (dated 1428), now in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, to a medallion of the Adoration of the Child, in the possession of M. Foulc, of Paris, which is the only work assigned to the final period, from 1460 to 1482. The four preceding periods are respectively entitled: (1) 1400-1430, showing strongly the influence of Ghiberti; (2) the decade of the Choir Gallery Reliefs; (3) the decade of the Bronze Sacristy Doors; (4) the decade of the Federighi Tomb. Prof. A. L. Fotheringham, also of Princeton, supplies some additions to a recent article by M. Eugène Müntz, on "Byzantine Artists in Italy from the Sixth to the Fifteenth Century." He draws attention more particularly to the painters Lazarus and Methodius and the sculptor Chrysaphos in the ninth century, and to the picture in the Uffizi at Florence by Andrea Rico of Candia, of the thirteenth century, of which a photograph is given. Finally, we may mention that Mr. Rufus B. Richardson, of the American School at Athens, describes a fragmentary torso, found in the pass of Daphne, representing an ephebus, in which he is disposed to see the hand of the sculptor Myron.

MUSIC.

TWO NEW OPERAS AT BRUSSELS.

M. A. BRUNEAU's lyrical drama "L'Attaque du Moulin" was performed at the Théâtre de la Monnaie on Wednesday evening, May 2. As the work is to be given this season at Covent Garden, I shall only make a few general remarks about the libretto, the music, and the performers. M. Gallet, the librettist, has offered to the composer many strong situations, and yet, somehow or other, the interest is divided. The love story engages principal attention during the first act; but towards the end of the work Merlier, the father of the maiden, becomes the real hero of the piece. Then, again, the episode of the sentinel occupies, relatively, too much space; and the funeral hymn sung over his body, though a stirring piece of vocal music, emphasises that fault. And, further, the noisy events of war do not call forth a composer's best powers. M. Bruneau was surely better suited with the emotional, mystic tale of "Le Rêve."

The music, as a whole, is extremely interesting: it is, indeed, wonderful how the composer has triumphed over the difficulties against which he had to contend. The "betrothal" choruses in the first act are very charming and quaint, and the close of that act is effective. Dominique's soliloquy and the love duet of the second act are very fine. And in the next act all the music connected with Merlier shows dramatic power. The duet between father and daughter in the closing act is impressive, but it seems too long for the situation. M. Bruneau, in his music, shows the influence of Gounod and Bizet, while in his treatment he again adopts, and with considerable success, the Wagner method.

Mme. de Nuovina sang the part of Françoise well, though her voice was not very sympathetic. MM. Leprêtre and Séguin, as Dominique and Merlier, achieved a well-deserved success. The work was well received.

On the following evening was given M. Massenet's "Werther," first produced at Vienna on February 16, 1892. There may be a lack of depth and true passion in the love music; but it must be acknowledged that the composer has displayed cleverness, while in the matter of orchestration the highest praise is due. There are two things specially to be admired—first, the admirable adaptation of the music to the various situations; and secondly, the restraint shown, for nowhere is there over-elaboration. It is a real work of art, though perhaps not of the highest order.

The opening scene in the first act, when the children are practising their "Noël," is pretty, and the first meeting of Charlotte and Werther and the "garden" music are very effective. The excited utterances of Werther in the second act, when he beholds Charlotte with her husband Albert, are full of passion. In the jubilee scene at Wetzlar there are some very striking contrasts: the sorrows of Werther are rendered still deeper by the gay, lively Johann and Schmidt, and by the comic "Klopstock" lovers. As the picture darkens during the third and fourth acts, we have some impressive music, and certain strains which recall Wagner. The death scene in the last act is not remarkable, but the distant voices of the children again singing their "Noël" forms one of those contrasts which lay hold of the public.

The performance was exceedingly good; and M. Van Dyck, as Werther, by his brilliant singing, won a magnificent and well-deserved success. Both operas were ably conducted by M. Flon.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

THE ART OF TAKING A WIFE.

Translated from the Italian of PAOLO MANTEGAZZA. Foolscap 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 5s.
CONTENTS.—Between Scylla and Charybdis; To Take or Not to take a wife!—Marriage in Modern Society—Sexual Choice in Marriage; the Art of Choosing Well—Age and Health—Physical Sympathy—Race and Nationality—The Harmony of Feelings—The Harmony of Thoughts—The Financial Question—Incidents and Accidents—Hell—Purgatory—Paradise.

TWO NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS, 6s. EACH.

THE STORY OF A MODERN WOMAN.

BY ELLA HEPWORTH DIXON.

THE COUNTESS RADNA. By W. E. NORRIS.

A New Edition.

SECOND EDITION.

A DAUGHTER OF MUSIC.

By G. COLMORE. In 3 Volumes. At all Libraries.

"The people who 'yawn over a novel' would not yawn over 'A Daughter of Music' . . . this story of passion and doom. . . . The catastrophe which involves the four actors lift the novel into the realm of tragedy."—The World.

BENEFITS FORGOT.

By WOLCOTT BALESTIER, Author of "The Average Woman." In 3 Volumes. At all Libraries.

"The story is full of fine feeling, subtle appreciation, and careful observation, and the reading of it awakens anew the regret that the author's career should have been so early and so abruptly terminated."—Literary World.

THE SURRENDER OF MARGARET BELLARMINE

By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Author of "The Story of a Penitent Soul," &c. In 2 Volumes. 12s. At all Libraries.

"Absorbing in its intense interest."—Observer.

NOW READY, THE SECOND EDITION OF

THE NEW REVIEW

FOR MAY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Containing the First Part of

SECRETS FROM THE COURT OF SPAIN.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL AT BONN.

Bonn: May 7, 1894.

THE festival, here, just brought to a close has been one of special interest. And yet there was nothing new in the programme, which consisted of the nine Symphonies of Beethoven performed in chronological order, three each day. In an English Festival the music, as a rule, is of good quality, but it seems a fixed law that there must also be a great quantity. At Bonn, not reckoning the long and welcome interval after the second Symphony of the evening, the concerts were under two hours, except the third, when the Choral was given. There was no prelude, no postlude, no song—nothing, in fact, to distract the mind from the main object of the Festival: namely, to show the development of the master from his first to his last Symphony. That development can also be traced in the pianoforte Sonatas and Quartets; but owing to their massive character and magic colouring, best of all in the Symphonies. They have all been given in London during a Richter series, but never in immediate succession. The experiment made at Bonn is well worthy of imitation. There are some happy people content with knowing that a Beethoven Symphony is being played; the music stirs their imagination, even though the orchestra and the conductor may scarcely rise above mediocrity. But trained musicians reverence the body which contains the soul of a great composer, and feel that the latter cannot be fully revealed unless all proper care be taken with the former.

Dr. Franz Wüllner, the conductor of the famed Gürzenich concerts at Cologne, has long been recognised as of high rank, and apart from natural gifts he has had great practical experience in the working of the orchestra. Rehearsal time is the true test of a conductor, and then the Professor showed what is in him: his manner was kindly, and at times, even a joke broke the severity of the exercise, but it was quite evident that he expected and obtained full attention and obedience. With such a conductor, and with the Gürzenich orchestra under the leadership of Herr W. Allekotte, the performances were admirable; but this, of course, was a foregone conclusion. Already in the First Symphony it became clear that the readings of the nine would be thoroughly characteristic. We know, in London, with what feeling, intelligence, and power Dr. Richter can interpret Beethoven; but with Dr. Wüllner there is a certain electric force which comes of past associations, and traditions handed down to him from one who, with all his faults, was a true disciple of Beethoven. Dr. Wüllner studied Beethoven's works for six years under Schindler, the much criticised biographer of the great composer. In his young days, Dr. Richter was directly influenced by Wagner, and is at his best in interpreting that master; and so Dr. Wüllner, indirectly but strongly, and at the most impressionable time of life, by Beethoven. The difference between these two great conductors is merely the result of surroundings.

To enter into detail respecting the Bonn performances would require much space, and hence only special points can be noticed. Dr. Wüllner has a peculiar and striking way, whether in piano or forte, of making the players press, as it were, the notes out of their instruments. In soft, quiet passages, constant effects of light and shade, little freshenings up of the tempo, and perfect attention to all matters of phrasing, make the music pulsate with life and meaning. Then again in moments of triumph as in the Finale of the C minor, in moments of ecstatic joy as in the finale of the A major, or in those ravings of genius in the opening movement of the D minor, it seemed as if a double share of the spirit of the composer had fallen on the conductor: in the last-named movement he seemed as if he were struggling with invisible forces. One felt, at times, the truth of the saying that there is but one step between the sublime and the ridiculous, but with Dr. Wüllner that step was always taken in the higher direction.

In the matter of tempo, it may be mentioned that the second movement of the Pastoral was taken somewhat faster than usual, but not, thereby, spoiled. The Trio of the Scherzo of the Ninth was given at a moderate rate, and the announcement of the theme of "universal brotherhood" faster than the tempo to which we are accustomed. A marked hurrying up of the tempo in the fugato of the Allegretto of the Symphony in A was noticeable. In conversation afterwards with Dr. Wüllner I learnt that this was Beethoven's idea, handed down to him through Schindler. It was indeed pleasant to hear the conductor, with that simplicity which is a sign of true greatness, acknowledge his immense obligation to his master (and also, as he said, in public, at the close of the Festival, to the splendid musicians over whom he had the honour to preside). Dr. Wüllner, by the way, adopted Wagner's modification in the orchestration of the Ninth. The past, with its strong associations, has not prevented him from accepting changes by which a keen-eared musician sought to make the deaf master's music audible. There was not one single bad or even second-rate performance: perhaps the finest of all were those of the C minor and Pastoral, and the contrast between the two, thus performed, is wonderfully impressive. The reading of the Ninth was most interesting, but it was evident that Dr. Wüllner felt the strain of three days' rehearsals and concerts.

One word about the soloists and chorus for the last day. The former were Frau Sophie Röhr-Brajnin, Frä. Huhn, and Herren Kalisch and Sisternans; and they all sang successfully, though the voices did not blend perfectly. The first-named sang the difficult soprano part in a clear, firm manner, and also with feeling; she will soon be heard in London, in the same work. The combined Cologne and Bonn choirs of over 400 sang with wonderful spirit. Reference has been made to the excellence of the orchestra. It would be difficult to praise it too highly; and, as it is impossible to render justice to each member, we will not single out those who had special opportunities for distinguishing themselves. Against a body of nearly sixty strings, the wind was, of course, doubled. There were very large and enthusiastic audiences; on the third night there was not a vacant seat to be had.

A well drawn-up programme-book contained, besides the usual Festival information, remarks on the various Symphonies, extracts from the Sketch-books, notices of the works at the time at which they appeared—among them that remarkable letter of Weber's to the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung of May 21, 1810, in which he speaks of Beethoven's then later works as a "confused chaos," and of his music as an "unintelligent striving after novelty" (though he adds that amid all a few sparks of genius may be detected)—extracts from various letters and works by Hauptmann, Jahn, Wagner; also facsimiles. This is the fifth Beethoven Festival that has been held in Bonn. The first was that memorable occasion in 1845, when the Beethoven monument was unveiled; then came the commemoration of the composer's birthday in 1871 (put off from 1870 on account of the war); chamber-music performances in 1890 under the direction of Dr. Joachim; and a fourth in connexion with the Beethoven-Haus in 1893. The friendly gatherings of artists, friends, and visitors was a pleasant feature of the proceedings. I take this opportunity of thanking Herr Amtsgerichtsrath Degen and Dr. E. Prieger, for the great courtesy and kindness shown to me.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY (11th thousand).
Cloth, crown 8vo, price 6s.

ESTHER WATERS: a Novel. By

GEORGE MOORE.
"As we live the book through again in memory, we feel more and more confident that Mr. Moore has once for all vindicated his position among the half-dozen living novelists of whom the historian of English literature will have to take account."—Daily Chronicle.
"I can only compare it with the best of Flaubert's work—and what greater praise could I give than that? Slowly, patiently, detail is piled on detail, nothing is omitted, till the thing has the complexity of life itself."—Mr. A. B. WALKLEY in the Morning Leader.

OTHER NOVELS BY GEORGE MOORE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

A DRAMA IN MUSLIN. Seventh Edition.

A MODERN LOVER. New Edition.

A MUMMER'S WIFE. Twentieth Edition.

VAIN FORTUNE. 6s. With Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. A few Large-Paper Copies at One Guinea.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.
MODERN PAINTING. By George MOORE.

SOME PRESS NOTICES.

"Of the very few books on art that painters and critics should on no account leave unread, this is surely one."—Studio."His book is one of the best books about pictures that have come into our hands for some years."—St. James's Gazette."A more original, a better informed, a more suggestive, and, let us add, a more amusing work on the art of to-day we have never read than this volume."—Glasgow Herald.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

LATEST VOLUME.—Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS, Author of "The Criminal," "The Nationalisation of Health," &amp;c. With numerous Illustrations.

Altogether, we must congratulate Mr. Ellis upon having produced a book which, apart from its high scientific claims, will, by its straightforward simplicity upon points of delicacy, appeal strongly to all those readers outside purely scientific circles who may be curious in these matters."—Pall Mall Gazette.

VOLUME IN PREPARATION.

READY IN MAY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with numerous Diagrams.

The EVOLUTION of MODERN

CAPITALISM. A Study of Machine Production. By JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A.

NEW VOLUME READY MAY 10.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

SPECIAL EDITION, with Photogravure Frontispiece, price 2s.

POEMS and LYRICS of NATURE.

Edited by Mrs. E. WINGATE RINDER.

This Volume contains Contributions by Arthur Christopher Benson, S. R. Crockett, John Davidson, Lord De Tabley, Norman Gale, Richard Le Gallienne, Alice Meynell, William Morris, Coventry Patmore, Ernest Rhys, A. Mary F. Robinson, Christina Rossetti, Algernon Charles Swinburne, Arthur Symonds, Francis Thompson, Katherine Tynan, William Watson, Oscar Wilde, W. B. Yeats, &amp;c.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, paper cover, price 1s.; cloth, 2s.

FROM BONDAGE to BROTHER-

HOOD: a Message to the Workers. By J. C. KENWORTHY,

Author of "The Anatomy of Misery," &amp;c.

"This little book will certainly inspire with a worthy purpose and a deep human feeling all who honestly read it."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY, New and Cheaper Edition, on antique paper, with Index specially prepared for this Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

AUTHORISED TRANSLATION, COPYRIGHT.

The KINGDOM of GOD is WITHIN

YOU: a Christianity not as a Mystical Doctrine, but as a New Life-conception. With a Preface for this Edition by Count LEO TOLSTOI. Translated from the Original Russian MS. by A. DELANO.

JUST ISSUED, crown 8vo, paper cover, price 1s.

FAMILY HAPPINESS: a Novel. By

Count LEO TOLSTOI.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

DRAMATIC ESSAYS by LEIGH

HUNT. Selected and Edited with Notes and Introduction by WILLIAM ARCHER and ROBERT W. LOWE. With an engraved Portrait of Leigh Hunt as Frontispiece.

This Volume contains the Criticisms collected by Leigh Hunt himself in 1807 (long out of print), and the admirable Articles which he contributed more than twenty years later to the Tatler, and never republished.

Crown 8vo, half antique, paper boards, price 2s. 6d.

The THEATRICAL "WORLD" for

1893. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
"As a record of the changes in the theatres Mr. Archer's volume stands unrivalled."—Daily News.

A NEW ISSUE OF THE

Works of Nathaniel Hawthorne.

In 12 vols. crown 8vo, antique paper, with Frontispiece in Photogravure the Cover designed by Walter Crane, price 2s. 6d. per vol.

LATEST VOLUME JUST ISSUED.

A WONDER BOOK for GIRLS and

BOYS. With a Frontispiece by James Torrence.

Fourth and Revised Edition, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. cloth.

The LAND of the VIKINGS: a Popular

Guide to Norway. By C. JURGENSON. Containing Maps, Skeleton Routes, Tables, and all information useful to Tourists.

COMPACT and PRACTICAL. In limp cloth; for the pocket.

Price 1s. each.

The EUROPEAN CONVERSATION

BOOKS. FRENCH—SPANISH—ITALIAN—GERMAN—NOR-

WEGIAN.
Contents arranged to permit direct and immediate reference. Hints for those unaccustomed to foreign travel.LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, 24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Will be published on May 21, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

AN ESSAY CONCERNING HUMAN UNDERSTANDING. By JOHN LOCKE. Collated and Annotated, with Prolegomena, Biographical, Critical, and Historical, by A. CAMPBELL FRASER, Hon. D.O.L., LL.D.

ALSO, BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

BERKELEY.—THE WORKS of GEORGE BERKELEY, D.D., formerly Bishop of Cloyne; including many of his Writings hitherto unpublished. With Prefaces, Annotations, and an Account of his Life and Philosophy. 4 vols., 8vo, £2 18s.

THE LIFE, LETTERS, &c., separately, 16s.

BERKELEY.—SELECTIONS. With Introduction and Notes. For the use of Students in the Universities. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

Ready in a few days, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

STUDIES in FORESTRY: being a Short Course of Lectures on the Principles of Sylviculture delivered at the Botanic Gardens, Oxford, during the Hilary and Michaelmas Terms, 1893. By JOHN NISBET, D. Oec. of the Indian Forest Service.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with numerous Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

ALTERNATING GENERATIONS: a Biological Study of Oak Galls and Gall Flies. By HERMAN ADLER, M.S. Schleswig. Translated and Edited by CHARLES R. STRATON, F.R.C.S.Ed., F.E.S.

Just published, SECOND EDITION, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of PROJECTIVE GEOMETRY. By LUIGI CREMONA, LL.D. Edin., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Rome. Translated by CHARLES LEUDESORF, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford.

Just published, SECOND EDITION, REVISED, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the MATHEMATICAL THEORY of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By W. T. A. EMTAGE, M.A., Pembroke College, Professor of Physics, University College, Nottingham, late Examiner in the School of Natural Science, Oxford.

HISTORY of the NEW WORLD called AMERICA. By E. J. PAYNE, M.A. Vol. I., 8vo, 18s. Vol. II. in the press.

VOYAGES of the ELIZABETHAN SEAMEN to AMERICA. Edited by E. J. PAYNE, M.A. First Series. HAWKINS, FROBISHER, DRAKE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A HISTORY of FRANCE. With numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables. By G. W. KITCHIN, D.D. In 3 vols. Crown 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

Vol. I., to 1453. Third Edition. Vol. II., 1453-1624. Second Edition. Vol. III., 1621-1793. Second Edition.

Immediately, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 36s.

EDMUND LUDLOW, THE MEMOIRS of, Lieutenant-General of the Horse in the Army of the Commonwealth of England, 1625-1672. Edited, with Appendices of Letters and Illustrative Documents, by C. H. FIRTH, M.A.

* * Three hundred numbered copies only are printed, on Large Paper.

Nearly ready, small 4to, gilt top, half-vellum, 21s. net.

LATIN PROSE VERSIONS.

A Collection of Translations into Latin by Thirty well-known Scholars, including the—

ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Professor ROBINSON ELLIS.
Professor BUTCHER.
Professor GOODHART.
Professor MARGOLIOUTH.
Professor POSTGATE.
Dr. J. S. REID.
A. SIDGWICK, Esq.
Dr. SANDYS.

Dr. EVELYN ABBOTT.
Rev. Dr. WILLIAM HAIG BROWN.
Rev. Dr. W. W. MERRY.
Very Reverend E. C. WICKHAM.
Sir WILLIAM D. GEDDES, LL.D.
The late Professor J. CONINGTON.
The late Professor H. NETTLESHIP.
The late Professor T. S. EVANS.
&c. &c.

Edited by GEORGE G. RAMSAY, M.A., LL.D.

Nearly ready, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

INFAMIA: its Place in Roman Public and Private Law. By A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A., Hertford College.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A TREATISE on the FOREIGN POWERS and JURISDICTION of the BRITISH CROWN. By WILLIAM EDWARD HALL, M.A., Barrister-at-Law.

This book raises several questions of importance with regard to protectorates, &c., which have not hitherto received sufficient attention, and is exceedingly important in connection with the recent adjourned debate in the House of Commons with respect to Uganda.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 11s.

THE PRINCIPLES of MORALS. By Thomas FOWLER, D.D., President of Corpus Christi College, and sometime Wykeham Professor of Logic in the University of Oxford; and JOHN MATTHIAS WILSON, B.D., late President of Corpus Christi College, and sometime Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford.

THE HISTORY of SICILY from the EARLIEST TIMES. Vols. I. and II. 8vo, £2 2s.

Vol. III. The Athenian and Carthaginian Invasions. £1 4s.

HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST of ENGLAND: its Causes and Results. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L. In 6 vols., 8vo, £5 9s. 6d.

THE REIGN of WILLIAM RUFUS and the ACCESSION of HENRY the FIRST. 2 vols., 8vo, £1 16s.

A SHORT HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST of ENGLAND. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1150.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

REMINISCENCES OF AN INDIAN POLICE OFFICIAL. By T. C. Arthur.
Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. [Next week.]

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and Federation of the Empire. By F. P. de Labilliere, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." With Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir George S. Clarke, R.E., K.C.M.G. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just ready.]
Professor Sir J. R. SEELEY says: "Incomparably the greatest question which we can discuss."

DANTE G. ROSSETTI AND THE PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT.
By ESTHER WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.
"The best book yet written on Rossetti and the pre-Raphaelites."—Daily News.

THE MODERN REGIME. By H. A. Taine, D.C.L. Oxon., Author of "A History of English Literature," "Notes on England," &c. Vol. II. just ready. Translated by JOHN DURAND. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

AMONG THE MOORS: Sketches of Oriental Life. By G. Montbard, Author of "In Egypt," &c. Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.
LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.
"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."—Scotsman.

CHINA to PERU: Over the Andes. A Journey through South America. By Mrs. Howard Vincent, Authoress of "Forty Thousand Miles over Land and Water," "Newfoundland to Cochin China," &c. With Appendix by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In preparation.]

IN the LAND of the TUI: my Journal in New Zealand. By Mrs. Robert Wilson. Illustrated.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Shortly.]

A TRUTHFUL WOMAN in SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. By Kate Sanborn, Author of "Adopting an Abandoned Farm." Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney Christian, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE STORY of MY TWO WIVES. By One of THEIR HUSBANDS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By Edith E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

FRA PAOLO SARPI: the Greatest of the Venetians. By the Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy." With Illustrations and Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TALES from WESTMINSTER ABBEY TOLD to CHILDREN. By Mrs. FREWEN LORD. With a Portrait of Dean Stanley, and a Plan and View of the Abbey. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville Fenn, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In a few days.]

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION IN ONE VOLUME.
THE EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark Russell, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

PREACHERS OF THE AGE SERIES.—Two New Vols.
Uniform crown 8vo vols., with Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.
By the Rev. E. J. GOUGH, M.A., of Dundee.—THE RELIGION of the SON of MAN.
By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES, of Lewisham.—A CUP of COLD WATER.
"Mr. Morlais Jones has the fervour of the best Welsh eloquence. His book is well worthy to take its place with the best of the list."—British Weekly.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS BY POPULAR WRITERS.

In Uniform Crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN each.

BY WILLIAM BLACK.

A DAUGHTER of HETH. With Portrait of the Author.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a PHAETON.
A PRINCESS of THULE.
IN SILK ATTIRE.
KILMENY.
MADCAP VIOLET.
THREE FEATHERS.
THE MAID of KILLEENA.
GREEN PASTURES and PICCADILLY.
MACLEOD of DARE.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.
WHITE WINGS.
SUNRISE.

THE BEAUTIFUL WRETCH.
SHANDON BELLS.
ADVENTURES in THULE.
YOLANDE.
JUDITH SHAKESPEARE.
THE WISE WOMEN of INVERNESS.
WHITE HEATHER.
SABINA ZEMBRA.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSEBOAT.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA.
STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

BY R. D. BLACKMORE.

LORNA DOONE. Thirty-ninth Edition. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author, specially prepared for this New Issue. Also Illustrated Edition for Presentation, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.
CLARA VAUGHAN.
CRIPPS the CARRIER.
TOMMY UPMORE.

CRADOCK NOWELL.
CHRISTOWELL.
ALICE LORRAINE.
MARY ANERLEY.
EREMA.
KIT and KITTY.
SPRINGHAVEN. (Also Illustrated Edition, 7s. 6d.)

BY THOMAS HARDY.

FAR FROM the MADDING CROWD. With a Photogravure Portrait of the Author from a Photo by Wheeler, of Weymouth.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.

A LAODICEAN.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
TWO on a TOWER.

BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

THE WRECK of the "GROSVENOR." With Photogravure Portrait of the Author.
AN OCEAN FREE LANCE.
THE FROZEN PIRATE.
A SEA QUEEN.
LITTLE LOO.
THE LADY MAUD.

MY WATCH BELOW.
JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE.
JACK'S COURTSHIP.
A STRANGE VOYAGE.
A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.
BETWIXT the FORELANDS.
MRS. DINE'S JEWELS.

BY GEORGE MAC DONALD.

THE VICAR'S DAUGHTER. With Portrait.
ADELA CATHCART.
MARY MARSTON.
WEIGHED and WANTING.

GUILD COURT.
A DISH of ORTS, and other Essays. By Dr. Mac Donald.
STEPHEN ARCHER.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, ST. DUNSTON'S HOUSE, FETTER LANE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF NAPOLEON, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	409
TWO BOOKS ON GREEK LITERATURE, by CAMPBELL DOBSON	410
THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER, by Sir GEORGE COX	411
MEMORIALS OF OLD HAILEYBURY, by H. G. KEENE	412
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	413
SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE, by NORMAN GALE	414
NOTES AND NEWS	415
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	416
ORIGINAL VERSE: "ON A BOAT OF TRYCHÉ," by A. W. BENN	416
OBITUARY: THE REV. DR. RICHARD MORRIS, by J. S. C. ; PROF. HENRY MOBLEY, by FRANK HEATH and T. GREGORY FOSTER	417
HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE	418
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	418
CORRESPONDENCE— A Primitive Disarrangement of St. Luke iv. 23-24, by the Rev. R. H. CHARLES; "La Seconda Morte," Inf. 1, 117; Transylvania and Hungary, by Prof. A. J. PATTERSON; The "Shield-Wall" at Hastings, by J. H. ROUND; The Two M.M. de Heredia, by F. de Pressensé	418
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	419
WILLIAM AND JOHN HUNTER, by A. H. MILLAR	419
SCIENCE NOTES	420
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	420
DISCOVERIES AT KUPITS, by Prof. FLINDERS PETRIE	421
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	422
STAGE NOTES	422
OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	423
RECENT CONCERTS	423

POPULAR WRITERS of FICTION
wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirtieth Street, New York City.

FOR Publication by Subscription, "THE DIES IRÆ and its TRANSLATION," with a Collection of above 200 versions. Price 7s. 6d. Subscribers' names to the Author, Rev. C. F. S. WARREN, London, Coventry

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 45, North Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

PREPARING.

CATALOGUE of an interesting collection of Antiquarian, Architectural, Classical, and Miscellaneous BOOKS published in the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, from the Radcliffe Library, Oxford, ON SALE by B. H. BLACKWELL, 50 and 51, Broad Street, Oxford.—Gratis.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, NELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2729. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 21, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to their excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling on the most favourable terms orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

PROFESSORSHIP OF CHEMISTRY AND METALLURGY.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above PROFESSORSHIPS.

Applications, accompanied by thirty-six copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than the 26th of May, 1894.

The successful candidate will be required to enter upon their duties on the 1st of October, 1894.

Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing. Further particulars may be obtained from

Geo. H. MOBLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF NORTH WALES, BANGOR.

In connection with the Day Training Department (for Men and Women) to be opened next October, the Council are about to appoint a LECTURER IN EDUCATION and MASTER of METHOD, at a salary of £250 a Year. Fifty printed copies of each application and set of testimonials to be received on or before Tuesday, June 5th, by the Registrar, J. E. LLOYD, M.A., from whom all information may be obtained.

May 9th, 1894.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and
advanced Examinations.—STUDENTS PREPARED in Classes connected with North London Collegiate School, under Miss Foss's superintendence. Arrangements made for boarding in neighbourhood.—Address Miss TOPPIS, 145, Camden Road, N.W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained free of charge by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYRON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholarly Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

TUESDAY NEXT (May 22), at 3 o'clock—the Rev. W. H. DALLINGER, D.D., D.C., F.R.S.—FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "THE MODERN MICROSCOPE: AN INSTRUMENT FOR RECREATION and RESEARCH." Half-a-Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY (May 24), at 3 o'clock—Professor W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE, D.C.L.—FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "EGYPTIAN DECORATIVE ART." Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY (May 26), at 3 o'clock—ROBERT W. LOWE, Esq.—FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "THE STAGE and SOCIETY." Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, 24th MAY, at 8.30 P.M.

The following Paper will be read:—
"THE EDUCATIONAL ORGANISATION OF THE MENDICANT FRATERS IN ENGLAND," by A. G. LITTLE, M.A.
25, Hanover Square, W.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The One Hundred and Twenty-first EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, 5, PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.
ALFRED D. FRERE, R.W.S., Secretary.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall.—The 41st ANNUAL SPRING EXHIBITION of PICTURES by British and Foreign Artists, including "The Meeting of the Waters," by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., and a Collection of Pictures and Studies from Nature by Professor C. HEFFNER, is NOW OPEN. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

EXHIBITION of Mr. A. D. MCCORMICK'S Original DRAWINGS, illustrating "Climbing and Exploration in the Karakoram-Himalayas," in CLIFFORD'S INN HALL, 187, Fleet Street, E.C., MAY 21st to 26th, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Admission, 1s.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nimrud Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

This Day, Unpriced One Shilling.

HEBREW UNVEILED. Some Affinities
of the Hebrew Language, selected with special reference to "Letter 'A'" of the English Vocabulary.
ASHER & Co., 13, Bedford Street, Covent Garden.

365 SHAVES

For 6d.

A STICK of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP
IS SAID TO LAST A YEAR.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, and 2/6.
VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/-.

THEATRES.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, ARMS and THE MAN. Messrs. Yorke Stephens, Bernard Gould, James Welch, A. E. W. Mason, O. Barnett; Mesdames Alma Murray, Chas. Calvert, and Florence Farr. Freed, at 8.10, by THE LAND OF HEART'S DESIRE. Messrs. J. Welch, G. R. Foss, A. E. W. Mason; Mesdames W. Fraser, C. Morland, D. Paget.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, FROU-FROU. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, H. B. Irving, Will Denby, Crawley, &c.; Miss Vane, Miss Marie Linden, Miss Radclyffe, Miss O'Brien, Miss M. Butler, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, AN ARISTOCRATIC ALLIANCE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Chas. Groves, J. G. Taylor, F. Worthing, H. de Lange; Miss Fowler (Mrs. Latham Cox), Miss A. Hughes, and Miss Mary Moore. At 8.30, MRS. HILARY REGRETS. Mrs. F. Atherley and Miss F. Frazer.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.
THIS EVENING, at 8, ELEONORA DUSE in LA DAME AUX CAMÉLIAS. Signora Mezzanotte, Pero, Ione and Ives Christina; Comm. Cesare Rossi, Signori Rosaspina, Masi, Colombani, Galimberti, Cantinelli, Garavaglia, Piperno, Geri, Sainati.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, Willie Ward, Colin Coop; Mesdames Millie Hylton, Louise Montague, Lillie Belmore, Lettice Fairfax, Topsey Sinden, Earle, Monckton, Henderson, Vivian, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Durkin, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A BUNCH OF VIOLETS. Mr. Tree; Messrs. Lionel Brough, Nutcombe Gould, G. W. Anson, Holman Clarke, C. M. Hallard; Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Andrew Ford, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8 punctually, FAUST. Mr. Irving; Miss Ellen Terry; Messrs. Wm. Terris, Julius Knight, C. Hague, Haviland, Tyars, Johnson, Harvey, Tabb, Archer, Reynolds, Buckley, Belmore, Espinosa, Seldon, Cushing; Misses Kate Phillips, Lacy, Forster, De Silva, M. A. Victor.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, F. Wilson, M. Marsden, M. Bonheur, and Miss May Yohé. Freed by, at 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A SOCIETY BUTTERFLY. Mrs. Langtry, Misses Rose Leclercq, E. Brinsley Sheridan, Walsingham, L. Morand, E. Norton, E. Williams, E. Vernon, G. Erisson; Messrs. W. Herbert, A. Beaumont, E. Rose, H. J. Carvill, S. Jerram, H. Templeton, C. R. Stuart, and F. Kerr.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Haye, W. Passmore, Scott-Fisher, Gridley, S. Russell, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE MASQUERADERS. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, Elliot, H. V. Emond, Ian Robertson, A. Vane-Tempest, Ben Webster, William H. Day, &c.; Miss Granville, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Beryl Faber, Mrs. Edward Saker, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, JAUNTY JANE SHORE. Messrs. Harry Panlton, Edward Lewis, Fred Emney, Arthur Nelstone, Alfred P. Phillips, Chas. Lovell; Mesdames Grace Huntley, Emmeline Orford, Florence Daly, Ada Doré, Carrie Coote, Hilda Hanbury, Millie Marion, Nellie and Maggie Bowman, and Miss Alice Atherton. At 8, BEST MAN WINS.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Maud Lockett, Lydia Flopp, and Letty Lind; Messrs. H. Gratton, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, George Crawford, Edgar Stevens, Fred Storey, and John L. Shine. At 7.40, THE SILVER HONEYMOON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processors in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

JUST READY. THE STRAND MAGAZINE For MAY.

EDITED BY GEORGE NEWNES.

CONTAINING

1. LÖIE FULLER, the Inventor of the Serpentine Dance. By Mrs M. GRIFFITH.
  2. STORIES from the DIARY of a DOCTOR. XI.—Trapped. By the AUTHORS of "THE MEDICINE LADY."
  3. A BOHEMIAN 'ARTISTS' CLUB. By ALFRED T. STORV.
  4. MARTIN HEWITT, INVESTIGATOR. III.—The Case of Mr. Foggatt. By ARTHUR MORRISON.
  5. THE OXFORD and CAMBRIDGE UNION SOCIETIES. I.—Oxford. By J. B. HARRIS-BURLAND. II.—Cambridge. By ST. J. BASIL WYNE-WILLSON, M.A.
  6. ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEWS. XXXIII.—Mr. Charles Wyndham. By HARRY HOW.
  7. ANTONIO'S ENGLISHMAN. By W. L. ALDEN.
  8. FROM BEHIND the SPEAKER'S CHAIR. XIV. By HENRY W. LUCY.
  9. THE THREE GOLD HAIRS of OLD VSEVEDE: a Story for Children.
  10. PORTRAITS of CELEBRITIES at DIFFERENT TIMES of THEIR LIVES: The Rev. Canon Scott-Holland, Lord Rosebery, Mr. Justice Wills, Sir Charles Dilke, M.P., Lady Dilke.
  11. BEAUTIES: Children.
  12. ZIG-ZAGS at the ZOO. XXIII.—Zig-Zag Simian. By ARTHUR MORRISON.
  13. THE QUEER SIDE of THINGS. I.—Mr. Hay. By J. F. SULLIVAN. II.—Off to the Station. By J. A. SHEPHERD.
- 112 pages, with 138 Illustrations. Price 6d. post free, 9d.

ALSO READY.

THE PICTURE MAGAZINE For MAY.

CONTAINING

PORTRAITS OF ROYAL ACADEMICIANS
And about 200 other Pictures. Price 6d., post free 8d.

GEORGE NEWNES, LTD., LONDON, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY 74, New Oxford Street, London,

